One of the pleasant features of these concerts is the generous help the orchestra has always received from great artists. Among those who have appeared in the past as soloists have been Paderewski, Elman, Melba, Schumann-Heink, Sembrich and Samaroff. At the first concert this year the orchestra had the co-operation of Signor Constantino, and at the concert tonight Josef Hofmann gives his services. The program will comprise works by Beethoven and Wagner. It begins with the "Egmont" overture of Beethoven, which will be followed by the Beethoven concerto for piano in G-major No. 4. The second part of the program will be devoted to Wagner, comprising the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the bacchanale from "Tannhauser," the "Ride of the Valkyries," the "Waldweben" and the "Rienzi" overture.

Bach's Passion Music Good Friday Night

The performance of the Matthew Passion by the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Max Fiedler, conductor, in Symphony Hall on next Friday evening will mark the 182d anniversary of its first performance, that historic event having taken place in Leipsic on Good Friday, 1729. The concert will be the last of the three given by the combined forces of the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In addition to the 175 voices of the Cecilia Society, there will be a boy choir of fifty from the Emmanuel Church.

The soprano soloist, Marie Zimmerman of Philadelphia, first came into prominence eight or ten years ago, when she was the principal soprano at the famous Bach Festivals given in the old Moravian Church in Bethlehem, Penn. Janet Spencer, the contralto, is well known in Boston, both as a singer of oratorio and as a singer of songs. George Hamlin is the leading American concert-tenor of today, while David Bispham needs no introduction. The performance will begin promptly at 7.30 o'clock.

Symphony Novelties

Two novelties by two Boston composers are the principal items on this week's Symphony programme. George W. Chadwick will be represented by his "Suite Symphonique," which has just taken the prize offered by the Federation of Musical Clubs. The other novelty will be a "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes," by Henry F. Gilbert, late of Harvard University. This also is in manuscript and will be played for the first time in Boston. The other numbers on the program will be the prelude to "Parsifal" and Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead." Following the usual custom of not playing on Good Friday, the rehearsal will be given Thursday afternoon instead of Friday.

'MANFRED' GIVEN BY SYMPHONY

Tschaikowsky's Work Heard Here After Six Years at 21st Rehearsal.

"TE DEUM" FOR ORCHESTRA

Sgambati's Paraphrase Played Here for First Time—Miss White in Opera Arias.

By PHILIP HALE.

The 21st public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Fiedler, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Miss Caroline White, soprano, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

"Manfred" Symphony.....Tschaikowsky
Air from "La Wally," Act I.....Catalani
Te Deum for orchestra and organ.....Sgambati
Marguerite's Prison air from "Mefistofele".....Boito
Overture to "Leonora" No. 3.....Beethoven

Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" had not been played here since March 11, 1905. He composed it at Balakireff's solicitation; it might be said command; for though Tschaikowsky was often at sword's points with Balakireff and at times wrote contemptuously about him [illegible] nevertheless appeared to stand in awe of him. He composed "Manfred" according to the program drawn up by Balakireff, and that made him unhappy. "No!" he wrote to Taneieff: "It is a thousand times pleasanter to compose without any program. When I write a program symphony, I always feel I am not paying in sterling coin, but in worthless paper money." He groaned in spirit while he composed the symphony. We find him wondering whether the labor was worth while. "My 'Manfred' will be played once or twice and then disappear; with the exception of a few people who attend symphony concerts, no one will hear it." And he thought of the happier lot of the successful operatic composer. He wrote to his publisher—for, strange to say, Tschaikowsky and his publisher were on friendly, intimate terms: "Even were 'Manfred' a work of the greatest genius, it would still remain a symphony, which, on account of its musical intricacy and difficulty, would be played only once in ten years." After the rehearsals he was sure that "Manfred" was his best symphonic work; but later he had a high opinion only of the first two movements and placed the other two among his poorest compositions.

We have all heard too much of Tschaikowsky's music during the last 10 years for the reasonableness of our judgment concerning its merits and for the composer's own reputation. His musical speech is too familiar; his mannerisms have been dinned into us. What wonder if some are weary of Tschaikowsky's endless repetitions of a phrase, given to successive instruments or groups of instruments; of his sentiment that is at times sentimentalism; of his passion that is often only hysteria? His piano concerto has been played at these concerts six times within the last 10 years; his violin concerto has been heard the same number of times within the same period. It might be said that Tschaikowsky's music is too personal in expression to endure such familiarity.

"Manfred" has been more fortunate in this respect. Six years have passed since it was performed at these concerts; to the majority of the audience the work was comparatively fresh; to many it was unknown. The symphony shows indisputable talent; there is marked individuality; there are also weaknesses, dull stretches, pages that seeking to be impressive are dangerously near bombast.

Let the ingenious analyses be forgotten with the fine phrases of commentators. We are informed that in the first movement Tschaikowsky endeavored "to portray the soul of Manfred." It was Mr. Barrie who replied to a "character actor" who insisted that everything could be expressed facially: "Then will you kindly go to the back of the stage and express it in your face that you have a younger brother who was born in Shropshire, but is now staying in a boarding-house on the South Coast!" In spite of the program "Manfred" is on the whole an imposing composition with lofty thoughts; truly emotional passages, as those associated with Astarte; brilliant pages, as in the second movement; and the suggestion of free out-of-door life, as in the Pastorale. But in no one of his works does Tschaikowsky so clearly show the influence of Berlioz.

The performance was enthusiastically applauded, and the manner in which the last movement was played richly deserved the applause. Mr. Fiedler gave the most impressive reading of this movement that has been heard here. There were sluggish moments in the first movement, and there was a certain rigidity in the performance of the second, which should have been more capriciously sparkling and fantastical. On the whole, the performance should be ranked among the conductor's best.

Sgambati's paraphrase of the plain song Te Deum had been heard here in the arrangement for organ and orchestra of strings. The version for full orchestra and organ ad lib. was played yesterday in Boston for the first time. The composition is short and sonorous, carefully worked and without any quality of striking distinction.

Miss Carolina White sang for the first time at these concerts. Not long ago she made a successful appearance at the Boston Opera House in "The Girl of the Golden West." She then pleased by her dramatic intelligence and fervor, and sang the music that falls to Minnie with the appropriate dramatic expression. It was not easy to judge at that time of her vocal art, for the music gives little opportunity to a singer. Her selections yesterday were not well suited to a Symphony concert, and she was handicapped in the air from "La Wally," for, as the orchestral parts were not at hand, she was obliged to sing with a piano accompaniment played by her husband, Mr. Longone.

The two arias demand the dramatic situation for their full effect. Miss White sang them with considerable force; but as a singer, pure and simple, she disappointed even those who were most kindly disposed toward her. The voice itself is a fine one, full of color and character.

The program of next week will be as follows: Wagner, Prelude to "Parsifal"; Rachmaninoff, symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead"; Chadwick, Suite Symphonique; Gilbert, Comedy overture on Negro Themes. The pieces by the two Americans will be played for the first time in Boston. The public rehearsal will be on Thursday afternoon instead of Friday afternoon.

MUSIC NOTES

The performance of the Matthew Passion by the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Max Fiedler, conductor, in Symphony Hall, next Friday evening, will mark the one hundred and eighty-second anniversary of its first performance, that historic event having taken place in Leipsic on Good Friday, 1729. The performance in Symphony Hall next Friday (Good Friday) evening will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock.

The concert will be the last of three given by the combined forces of the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a very interesting experiment the results of which have quite justified the effort made to put choral music on a thoroughly sound basis in this city. The soloists have been very carefully chosen.

* * *

Two novelties by two Boston composers are the principal items on this week's Symphony program. George W. Chadwick will be represented by his Suite Symphonique which has just taken the prize offered by the Federation of Musical Clubs. It has been played only in Philadelphia. It is in manuscript and is dedicated to Frederick Stock and the Theodore Thomas Orchestra of Chicago. The other novelty will be a Comedy Overture on Negro Themes by Henry F. Gilbert, late of Harvard University. This also is in manuscript and will be played for the first time in Boston. Other numbers on the program will be the Prelude to "Parsifal" and Rachmaninoff's Symphonic poem "The Island of the Dead."

* * *

The last opportunity of the season for the general public outside of the regular patrons of the Symphony Orchestra to hear that organization under Max Fiedler will come this evening, when the Orchestra will give its second concert in aid of the pension fund. At the first concert this year the Orchestra had the co-operation of Signor Constantino and at the concert tonight Josef Hofmann gives his services. The program will comprise works by Beethoven and Wagner.

[209]

MISS CAROLINA WHITE THE SYMPHONY SOLOIST

PRIMA DONNA'S DEBUT IN CONCERT WELCOMED

Great Performance by the Orchestra of Tschaikowsky's Difficult "Manfred" and "Leonora" No. 3

By Louis C. Elson.

PROGRAMME.
Tschaikowsky. "Manfred" Symphony.
Catalani. Aria from "La Wally."
Sgambati. "Te Deum Laudamus."
Boito. Aria from "Mefistofele."
Beethoven. Overture to "Leonora," No. 3.
Vocalist, Miss Carolina White.

"Manfred" as set by Tschaikowsky is not so much a symphony as a symphonic poem. It carries out a personal idea (or a personification) as definitely as "Childe Harold," who was turned into a viola by Berlioz. Of course Manfred is dyed in a deeper gloom than Childe Harold, but he has his musical figure, in quite as definite a manner, which growls forth in the depths of the woodwind, in the true Russian manner of dejection. There is, of course, also an Astarte figure, but, although both are impressive, neither of them are so appealing as the two figures in Schumann's "Manfred" overture.

There is the Spirit of the Alps, also, which appears to Manfred in the rainbow of the waterfall, but here again the witchery of Schumann's "beautiful spirit with the hair of light" is not achieved. The episode of Alpine life seems to us better than the Schumannesque treatment of spoken voice against English horn. The finale, in the hall of Ahrimanes is at times beyond the Schumann treatment, and the first movement, too, even if the themes in themselves are not as graphic as those of Schumann, has a grandeur which places this symphony on a very high level. The work is very long, but not too long for the music-lover, for Tschaikowsky has something to say at almost every point of the colossal composition. It is furiously difficult, but that was not very noticeable in the great performance of yesterday afternoon.

Perhaps comparisons with Schumann in this work are not quite fair. Schumann was moved by "Manfred" as by no other poem. He wept when he read it. Not even Goethe's "Faust" made such a deep impression upon his emotions. If we leave Schumann out of the question altogether, Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" symphony becomes an incomparable work. We must note also that Tschaikowsky's passion does not lead him away altogether from melodic thoughts. This is the truest phase of modern music; form is treated rather freely, but beauty is not discarded. Some modern composers seem to imagine that in order to express mental torture they must torture all their auditors.

That Tschaikowsky has brought forth a rather spasmodic and highly nervous Manfred may be frankly admitted. It is not the high philosopher, who says—

"Grief should be the instructor of the Wise:
Sorrow is knowledge."

Manfred's agonies of remorse take on an earthquake character in the end of the first movement.

If ever there was iridescent music it is found in the second movement of this symphony. Playful skips, shimmering flute figures, spraying-like runs, all combine to picture the fairy of the waterfall. But this movement was played in too careful a manner. The vagueness disappeared. It was as if one had attempted to take a rainbow to pieces.

The third movement gave an adequate picture of Swiss pastoral life, although the hunter was not as clearly in evidence as he might have been, Tschaikowsky contenting himself with a general portrayal of rustic enjoyment. The oboes did excellent work here.

We could not quite see the necessity of a fugato in Hades (in the last movement), unless it be intended to intimate that many contrapuntists have gone there. The piccolo was of course prominent at this fashionable winter resort. But the climax of the Finale was most majestic, and the organ blended its tones with the orchestra magnificently. All in all this symphony was very impressive and splendidly scored. It received great applause, and after two recalls Mr. Fiedler allowed the orchestra to rise and acknowledge the enthusiasm.

Miss Carolina White had already made a very favorable impression in Boston in the new Puccini opera. It is always a crucial test for an operatic star to forego all the advantages of costume, scenery and dramatic action, and appear in the white light of the concert platform. Miss Farrar has always been somewhat of a disappointment under these circumstances, and so has Mme. Calve, and others that could be mentioned.

Miss White had only piano accompaniment to her first number, which was an added handicap, although the instrument was well played. Nevertheless the young vocalist won a triumph. She sang with breadth and with a sympathetic quality of tone, although a suspicion of tremolo was more than once apparent. In her second number, the prison-song from Boito's "Mefistofele," the orchestra gave the support. The strong contrasts of this aria were finely brought out and the climaxes given with a fervor that aroused enthusiasm on the part of the audience, for Miss White was recalled several times with much heartiness. With operatic adjuncts there would have been still greater results.

Sgambati's "Te Deum" is an effective work. The organ is blended well with the orchestra, the "Cantus Firmus" is very telling upon the violins, while the constant pizzicato of the contra-basses is of a very impressive character. The counterpoint is good, flowing and unforced, and the work is attractive from first to last. We are glad to see the organ used in connection with the orchestra. The instrument sounds finely in Symphony Hall and its effect is enhanced by union with the orchestra. It has made a few obstreperous breaks in the recent past, but on this occasion it behaved in a commendable manner, and Mr. J. P. Marshall played it with

The concert ended with Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture, the noblest of all dramatic overtures, except possibly a couple of Wagner's. We prefer the above title to the prosaic "Leonora No. 3," which suggests a tug-boat or a fire engine rather than a great musical work. That possibly Beethoven did not write it third of the series would not invalidate its title. Mr. Fiedler read this with all the strong contrasts that the composition demanded. There is a delirium of joy in the final triumph of virtue over vice, which was taken in a frenzied manner, and needed to be. No! It was not taken too fast!

The trumpet calls were very steady and effective. They are not very difficult, judged by modern standards, even though very important. In fact, Beethoven never wrote an extremely difficult trumpet passage, for that instrument was at low ebb during his lifetime. The trumpet was much more brilliantly used both before and after the so-called "classical" epoch.

The third "Leonora" overture made a fiery ending to a concert that fairly bristled with orchestral difficulties. But our orchestra has passed the point where technical difficulties are apparent to the general auditor. If only our orchestra could make a European tour! What a waking-up London, Paris and Berlin would have!

The interesting musical feature of next week will be the performance of Bach's Matthew Passion in Symphony Hall on next Friday (Good Friday) evening. This concert will be the third and last of the series which have been given this winter by the combined forces of the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony under Fiedler as conductor, and in this concert there will also be a choir of 50 boys from Emmanuel church.

The last opportunity of the season for the general public outside of the regular patrons of the Symphony to hear that great organization under Max Fiedler will come tomorrow evening, when the Orchestra will give its second concert in aid of its Pension Fund. At the first concert this year the Orchestra had the co-operation of Constantino and at the concert tomorrow night Josef Hofmann gives his services.

HOFMANN PLAYS AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

By EDITH BURNHAM.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its second and last pension fund concert for the season in Symphony Hall last night before an audience that was both large and enthusiastic, there always being a peculiar appreciation manifested at these concerts. They are given for the benefit of the orchestra as an institution, since no orchestra of the standard of the Symphony could possibly be maintained without a retiring fund. The hard work put in by the orchestra at last evening's performance alone certainly spoke volumes for the strain placed upon these players. A succession of Wagner numbers which kept every player at the top notch of his ability in execution and taxed both mental and physical energy to its utmost demonstrated the skill requisite for such orchestration.

The programme opened with the Beethoven Overtures to Goethe's "Egmont." The fusion of two of the greatest minds in the history of music and literature in this work has resulted in a composite of extraordinary intellectuality and emotion. The clash of arms and the song of the romance are in it, the music forecasting the varied emotions, the clash and the harmony of the poetic drama. Mr. Fiedler conducted it with the spirit and understanding of one relating an oft-told and much-loved story.

The appearance of Josef Hofmann, who gave his services for the occasion, was the occasion of tremendous applause. Mr. Hofmann selected the Beethoven G Major concerto. This concerto affords him only slight opportunity to display his "Rubenstein" playing, but rather affords chance for the play of his own individuality in the elucidation of the harmonic material.

The greatest of interest was attached to the Wagnerian group played, opening with the overture to "The Flying Dutchman." It is safe to say that the Dutchman never flew harder, faster or higher than at last night's concert. Mr. Fiedler kept him in swift aerial flight that was almost breathless and exciting to the last degree. The "Tannhauser" Bacchanale following was an instrumental test that even Bacchus himself would have deemed a marvelous tribute to his power as a god. The orgie of the strings is a Bacchanalian transport and last night it was played to its utmost. But this bacchanalia of Wagner's is not all an orgie, it has moments of wonderful beauty, when the strings and flutes wander far off away from the orgie and into the realm where sensuous beauty meets spiritual, and is for the moment led away by it. The "Ride of the Valkyries" was a madcap ride last night, the mystic creatures almost tearing their way through space—but it was gloriously exhilarating.

There is no composer so fine as Wagner in his finest moments, he lives on the outer sphere of the universe of harmony, in an outer circle which others have not quite touched. In the "Waldweben" from Siegfried we are with him in a few of these moments, in this weaving of forest thoughts and sounds he carries us to that outer circle with him. The "Rienzi" overture closed the Wagner group, which was a rare treat in these days of forgetting the great composer.

The allegro movement, with its brilliant and at times delicate passages for the solo instrument, was played with scintillating touch, the dramatic moments being stressed with Mr. Hofmann's customary incision and decision. The lovely hymnal like theme of the andante he played with fine sympathy; there was a bit of the "over-soul" in his touch, a corresponding over-tone lingering in its path. Mr Hofmann was many times recalled and was presented with a huge laurel wreath tied with many decorative ribbons. He responded generously with encores, one of them being a Chopin waltz, which was delightfully played. Mr. Hofmann's Chopin playing has already been remarked on as being exceedingly individual, and last night's slight hearing of this composer was no exception.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

History of Bach's "Passion Music."

Last of the Season's Pension Fund Concerts Tonight.

[redacted] Opera

[redacted] Concerts.

On Good Friday of this week, at 7:30, the Cecilia society and the Boston symphony orchestra will unite in a performance of Bach's "Passion Music, according to St Matthew." The soloists will be Marie Zimmerman soprano, Janet Spencer contralto, George Hamlin tenor and David Bispham baritone. The full personnel of the orchestra will be used. The chorus will number 175. There will be a boy choir of 50 from the Emmanuel church. Mr Fiedler will conduct.

"The Passion of Christ" was celebrated as a part of the liturgical service of the church at an early day, and is a surviving evidence of the birth of dramatic music in its ritual.

There is record of a dramatic representation of "The Passion" in the 4th century by St Gregory Nazianzen, bishop of Antioch. From the 13th century it was chanted to plain song melodies by the clergymen in Roman Catholic churches during holy week. In the Reformed church the performance of "The Passion" did not take place earlier than the last half of the 16th century.

Music had been set to it by various composers before Bach's time. There were settings according to St Matthew by Keuchenthal (1573), to St John by Selneocer (1587), by Gese (1588), by Schuet (1585-1672), by Vopelius (1682).

In "The Passion" of Sebastiani (1672) we find the first artistic use of hymn tunes and the biblical narrative and recitative, accompanied by two violins or two violas and bass, the first example of instrumental accompaniment in the Passion.

Handel and Matthewson brought forward Passion oratorios at Hamburg, introducing the regular song forms of the opera in recitative, arias and duets. Keister, who was associated with them, wrote in 1704 three cantatas or dramatic scenes, in which the words were not taken from the Scriptures, nor was there an Evangelist. Its first performance took place in Holy week, 1712. Bach used parts of the text of the arias in his St John "Passion."

Bach's Matthew "Passion" follows that of Sebastiani, adding new forms derived from the drama. The text was written, probably with Bach's aid, by Picander, not a poet of great creative talent, but with facility and imbued with the spirit of the subject. The words were not all chosen from the Scriptures, but Bach considered the soliloquies in which biblical characters speak unbiblical words, too theatrical to be used.

First Performance in 1729.

Bach is usually considered to have written five "Passions." After his death his sons, Friedemann and Emanuel, divided the cantatas between them and the Passions were doubtless included. Emanuel had the original scores of the St John and the St Matthew "Passions." He kept them faithfully and they still exist.

The original manuscripts of the three others fell to the drunken Friedemann, who grew more dissipated. They were sold for a trifle and two have disappeared. A possible "Passion" of St Luke in Bach's handwriting may be a third.

According to Spitta, five lyrical pieces of the St Mark "Passion" are apparently transposed into the funeral ode for Queen Christiana Eberhardine (1727), for Picander wrote the text for both, as he had for that of the St Matthew.

The first performance of the Matthew "Passion" took place on Good Friday, April 15, 1729, at an afternoon service in St Thomas' church, Leipzig, of which Bach was cantor. Enlarged as in its present form, it could hardly have been brought out before 1740.

This masterpiece of religious music was then allowed to fall into neglect and disuse, perhaps through the attempt of the sons and pupils of Bach, who tried to introduce lighter Italian methods and thus to mar its noble dignity and chastity of spirit.

As by a miracle it was to be raised as from the dead by the youth Mendelssohn and a group of friends and saved to the world henceforth, to be an imperishable source of spiritual ennoblement.

It is usually supposed that Mendelssohn took the initiative in this revival. As a matter of fact, he was first persuaded by another, and not easily, that a public performance of the Matthew "Passion" would be feasible.

Eduard Devrient, when he first met Mendelssohn, then a boy of 13, was himself a youth of 20, and had been engaged as baritone at the Royal opera nearly three years. When he wrote his "Recollections of Mendelssohn" (1869), which relates the story, he was then "official director of the opera at Carlsruhe."

Score Bought as Waste Paper.

It was at the home of Zelter that Mendelssohn first heard a few pieces from Bach's "Passion" music, according to Matthew. Carl Zelter, director of the Berlin singakademie, deserves the gratitude of all lovers of musical art. Master of theory, composer for the church, teacher of Mendelssohn and friend of Goethe, he was moreover the first promoter of the faith and study of Sebastian Bach.

It became Mendelssohn's ardent desire to possess a copy of this music, a wish which was fulfilled by his grandmother on Christmas, 1822. It was not easy to obtain permission from Zelter for a transcription, for he was a zealous collector. He had bought the score, according to one account, years before as waste paper at an auction of goods of a deceased cheese-monger.

Mendelssohn confided with the ardor of friendship his wish to Eduard Rietz, an excellent young violinist, to whom he dedicated the octet, a sonata for violin and piano and the andante in a quintet. Devrient writes of the joy with which Felix showed to him on Christmas day Rietz's admirably-written copy of the sacred masterpiece, which now became his favorite study.

During the winter of 1827 Mendelssohn formed a select choir of 16 voices, which met at his house on Saturday evenings for the practice of rarely heard works. The Matthew "Passion" was then taken up.

Devrient, who was a member, writes: "The impersonation of the several characters of the gospel by different voices struck us as being the pitch of the work, the antiquity of this practice in old church music being long forgotten. The dramatic treatment that arose from it, the overwhelming majesty of the choruses, above all the wondrous declamation of the part of Christ, were to me a new and sacred Bible speech, and increased with every time of hearing our reverence and astonishment at the greatness of the work."

The same writer later relates of the growing absorption of the choir in the work, of his desire to see it publicly performed and himself to sing the music of Christ. He tells how in January, 1829, he passed a sleepless night after a rehearsal, devising a way for a public presentation; how the next morning he went early to the Mendelssohn home and awoke Felix out of a sound sleep to convince him of the feasibility of the project, and that it was their duty to the musical world to revive Bach's work.

Young Mendelssohn the Conductor.

Felix was inspired with confidence, and the two set off to beard Zelter in his den, who first considered them "a couple of young donkeys," but later consented to the trial of offering the public music which he feared it did not understand or care for.

Mendelssohn, 20 years old at the time, was out of pocket-money, and Devrient loaned him a thaler to buy [illegible] gloves then fashionable, which were part of a most carefully composed attire, alike for both, in which they set out to invite the solo singers. They termed it a "Bach" uniform, consisting of blue coats, white waistcoats, black neckties, black trousers and the aforesaid gloves. Felix evinced his usual sparkling humor in the remark that "it was an actor and a Jew that were to give back to the people the greatest of Christian works."

The four principal singers heartily seconded the scheme and the rehearsals elicited increasing interest on the part of soloists, chorus and orchestra. Youth that he was, and this his first serious conducting, Mendelssohn carried on the preparations with a firm hand as though he were long accustomed to leadership.

His conducting revealed traits which might be followed profitably today and in Boston by those intrusted with a baton. Instead of incessantly beating the air in passages of regular tempo, where there was no need of marked assertion on the part of the conductor, he would allow his pantomime to become less obtrusive, as though he should say, "Here they can go very well without me."

The first resuscitation of the Matthew "Passion" occurred in Berlin March 11, 1829. The success was instantaneous and memorable. There were between 300 and 400 in the Academy chorus. Stuemer sang the Evangelist, and the air "I will watch with my Jesus," which was too high for Baden, who took the parts of Peter and Pilate. The women soloists were Mme Milder and Fraulein von Schaetzel. Rietz played the violin obligato.

Devrient himself took the part of Christ. He wrote of it: "The music lay well in my voice; I had long rehearsed it with Felix and he approved of my reading. Deeply affected by the work as it proceeded, I sang with my whole soul and voice. Never have I known a performance so consecrated by one united sympathy."

The people of culture and learning in Berlin were profoundly impressed by the work and a second performance was demanded. It occurred March 21 and attracted as great an audience as had the first.

The proceeds of both concerts went toward founding a sewing schol for poor girls. After Mendelssohn's departure for England there was a third concert under Zelter on Good Friday, April 17.

Last Boston Symphony Pension Fund Concert.

The last opportunity of the season for the general public outside of the regular patrons of the Symphony orchestra to hear that great organization under Max Fiedler will come this evening, when the orchestra will give its second concert in aid of the pension fund.

Next year there will be more than 20 ex-members of the orchestra receiving pensions, and the drain on the capital will increase each year. Practically the only method the orchestra has of adding to its principal is through the two concerts it gives each season, for the sum total of the annual dues that the members pay is not nearly sufficient to pay the pensions.

At the concert tomorrow night Josef Hofmann gives his services. The program will comprise works by Beethoven and Wagner. It begins with the "Egmont" overture of Beethoven, which will be followed by the concerto for piano in G major No. 4.

The second part of the program will be devoted to Wagner, comprising the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the "Bacchanale" from "Tannhauser," the "Ride of the Valkyries," the "Waldweben" and the "Rienzi" overture.

American Works to Be Played at Symphony Concerts.

Works by two Americans, George W. Chadwick and Henry F. Gilbert, will be played at the Symphony concerts this week. Mr Chadwick's new symphonic suite in E flat which he recently conducted in Philadelphia at its first performance anywhere, will be heard. It is dedicated to Frederick Stock and the Theodore Thomas orchestra. The piece was awarded the first prize in the orchestral class by the recent convention of the National federation of musical clubs. Its characteristics were noted in the Globe two weeks ago today.

Mr Gilbert has been identified with the Wa-Wan press movement of Newton Center, and the American music society. He has composed piano music and songs, among the latter his enlivening "Fifteen Men on a Dead Man's chest" sung by David Bispham.

According to Arthur Farwell in the Wa-Wan Press monthly, Aug, 1907, Mr Gilbert had then written a "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes," which is the work to be heard this week, and an Americanesque, compounded upon American inventions as "Zip Coon," "Rosalie, or Don't be Foolish, Joe," "Dearest Mae" and other ingredients.

The same program is to also include the prelude to "Parsifal," and Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead," already gladly heard in Boston.

Following the usual custom of not giving the public rehearsal on Good Friday, the rehearsal this coming week will be given on Thursday afternoon.

[210]

Cambridge Composer Wins Symphony Hearing

George W. Chadwick and Henry F. Gilbert Authors of Important American Works

The programme of the Symphony concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening has uncommon interest on account of Mr. Fiedler's praiseworthy proceeding in placing upon his list two compositions by American composers, and, incidentally, composers of this city. George W. Chadwick, one of the most important of the American composers of this day, will be represented by his "Symphonic Suite" in four movements, which recently won the prize offered for symphonic composition by the National Federation of Musical Clubs, and was played with success by the Philadelphia Orchestra, in that city, on the fourth of this month. The other work will be Henry F. Gilbert's "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes," one of the latest and most significant compositions by a gifted composer of the younger generation, who has been living in Cambridge, working quietly, and steadily growing in his art, for some years.

The "Comedy Overture" has an interesting origin. It was originally composed as the overture to an operetta, of which the libretto was based upon the "Uncle Remus" stories of Joel Chandler Harris, which are so justly popular and are perhaps the most typical and authentic folk-tales yet produced by this country. It was the composer's hope to compose an opera which should bear the relation to the folk-lore of America that Humperdinck's "Hansel und Gretel" bears to the folk-lore of Germany. The opera, which was then partially sketched forth in manuscript, could not be completed on account of copyright complications in which the heirs of Mr. Harris concerned themselves. The overture, now extended to stand by itself as a piece for grand orchestra, is, however, available, and it will serve to introduce Mr. Gilbert as a composer of large orchestral compositions to the audiences of this city. The overture has thus far had three performances—under Franz Kaltenborn, on the 17th of last August, in New York; under Modest Altschuler, leading the Russian Symphony Orchestra in two performances, at the Pittsburg Exposition. The first performance was given by regular schedule on the 17th of October. The music was repeated two weeks later at the request of the president of the exposition.

Mr. Gilbert describes his work as follows: "The overture is not at all in the accepted form. The thematic material I have taken from various collections of negro folk-lore, 'lifting' a motive here and there. My 'lifting' has not been very extensive, however. The negro themes which I have employed amount altogether to but 20 measures. The whole overture is developed from this material.

"The piece opens with a light and humorous movement. The theme was manufactured from two-four measure motives which I found in that interesting book, 'Bahama Songs and Stories,' by Charles L. Edwards. Next comes a broad and somewhat slower movement, the theme of which (eight measures in length) is a wild and mysterious sounding bit of melody. This tune, and many like it, were formerly sung by the deckhands and 'roustabouts' on the Mississippi steamboats in the old days. It is the only theme which I have used in its complete form in the overture. It is to be found in 'Slave Songs of the United States,' by W. F. Allen and others. The original words were as follows:

"Ise gwine to Alabammy, Ah——
For to see my mammy, Oh——

"Then comes a fugue. The theme of the fugue consists of the first four measures of the Negro Spiritual, "Old Ship of Zion," as noted by Jeannette Robinson Murphy in 'Southern Thoughts for Northern Thinkers.' The fugue ends in a broad and 'quasi maestoso' statement of the theme, in augmentation. It is given out by the brass instruments and is interspersed with fragments of the roustabout's song; also in augmentation. After this there is a return to the first theme and after considerable recapitulation and the development of a different ending or coda, the composition ends in an orgy of jollity and rag time."

HENRY F. GILBERT,
Composer, of Cambridge,

In the Post of Sunday, Oct. 10, 1909, an article was published which related the life and the artistic leanings of Henry Gilbert. He was born in Somerville in 1868. His first musical studies were made by means of a violin which his grandfather fashioned for him from a shingle and a cigar box. Later he studied violin—legitimately—under Emil Mollenhauer, and became proficient enough to take part in a performance of Verdi's "Otello," conducted by Arditi, in Mechanics Hall. Gilbert studied harmony with George Henry Howard of this city and later became a pupil of Edward A. MacDowell in composition. In 1890 he left music for business, and became connected with music publishing firms, the F. H. Gilson Company and the C. C. Birchard Company. He worked with those firms in various capacities covering a period of 10 years. In 1901, during a vacation, he journeyed to Paris with the object of hearing Charpentier's "Louise." In the course of the first act of that opera he discovered, in his own words, "462 new sensations," and he resolved to devote his time uncompromisingly to music, thereafter. In 1903 his Prelude and Incidental music to "Kathleen ni Hoolihan" and other Yeats plays was heard at a production by the Irish Literary Society in Carnegie Lyceum in New York. In 1904 music of similar character, a Prelude and Incidental music to Synge's "Riders to the Sea" was played at the 20th Century Club production in Chickering Hall, Boston. In 1905 he became associate editor of the Wa-Wan Press, which has published so many compositions by American composers in past years. In the following year the Russian Symphony Society performed his piece for voice and orchestra, "Salammbo's Invocation to Tanith" in Carnegie Hall, March 10, 1906. Miss Elise Stevens was the singer. Gilbert was the editor in 1910 of a volumne of "100 Folk-Songs," published by the C. C. Birchard Company, and for this work he wrote an admirable preface on the subject of folk-song. Mr. Gilbert has made a very exhaustive study of this topic, and has done a good deal of valuable editorial work along these lines. His latest efforts in this direction have been connected with Edwin S. Curtis' valuable publication, The North American Indian, now in process of completion.

Mr. Gilbert has published a number of interesting songs, among them a "Pirate Song," after Stevenson's verses, "Fifteen men on a dead man's chest," which is well known in concert halls; four Celtic Studies of considerable individuality; some music hall ditties of which the general sentiment need not be printed; a "Fish-Wharf Rhapsody"; "The Seven Daughters of Orlamonde," after Maeterlinck, and so forth. For orchestra he has written two short "Episodes," an "Americanesque on Negro Minstrel Tunes" ("By Old Dan Tucker"), and three "American Dances," originally written as piano duets, but recently scored for full orchestra. In addition to these compositions there are a number of piano pieces.

Of Mr. Chadwick's "Symphonic Suite" the Philadelphia papers spoke highly. Here is one estimation:

"It is a finely written, skilfully constructed and interesting piece, in four movements—an opening allegro, a romanza, which constitutes the andante; an intermezzo, which takes the place of the classic scherzo, and a spirited finale, and of these four the third is perhaps the most striking and original. All, however, are well conceived and cleverly executed. Although the texture of the opening allegro is so loose that it communicates an impression of fragmentariness and incoherence which would probably be removed by a better acquaintance with the music, it contains much that is ingratiating and sympathetic. The romanza embodies a beautiful theme which undergoes a variety of effective and illuminating transmutations. There is genuine humor as well as fascinating melody in the intermezzo, and the brilliantly ebullient finale brings the whole to a logical and convincing close. It is all highly attractive."

And here another:

"It is nobly conceived and written with deep and true musicianship on a foundation of pure melody. It has few complexities, for, while by no means superficial, it preserves, in all its most impressive effects, the charm of simplicity and directness. Harp, strings and woodwinds are the prevailing voices, and are used with alluring melodiousness, particularly in the second movement—the Romanza, which is the most beautiful part of the composition. The Humoreske (the intermezzo) has a blithesome touch, being true to its classification in a marked air of whimsicality, having for a moment a suggestion that it is about to sing 'Yankee Doodle,' but, with a touch of mischievous playfulness, quickly turning to some thing else before the tune can be clearly defined. The finale is on broader lines than the preceding movements, and in its climax proves that Mr. Chadwick is capable of producing the bigger effects, though the brasses, as he handles them, never become blatant, and through all and pervading all still shines the radiant beauty of the melody."

In the same Symphony concerts this week Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," which made such a profound impression when it was given last season, will be played

CECILIA-SYMPHONY IN PASSION MUSIC

The performance of the Matthew Passion by the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Max Fiedler, conductor, in Symphony Hall on next Friday evening will mark the 182d anniversary of its first performance, that historic event having taken place in Leipsic on Good Friday, 1729. The performance in Symphony Hall on next Friday (Good Friday) evening will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock.

The Matthew Passion is considered by many of the greatest of the works left by the man "to whom," to use Schumann's words, "music owes almost as great a debt as a religion does to its founder." It was one of five similar works, two of which are lost, but the others, those according to St. Luke and to St. John, antedate the Matthew Passion and are considerably inferior to it, although the Matthew Passion came at the height of Bach's creative genius, and although it had its first performance in 1729 later it was revised and the work in its present form was first heard in Leipsic in 1740.

Exactly 100 years after its first performance Mendelssohn gave it in Berlin on March 12, 1829, and this was really the beginning of the great Bach revival which has brought due recognition to the master. The first performance in the United States was in Boston by the Handel and Haydn Society on May 8, 1874, Carl Zerrahn conducting.

The concert on next Friday evening will be the last of the three given by the combined forces of the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a very interesting experiment, the results of which have quite justified the effort made to put choral music on a thoroughly sound basis in this city. Rehearsals have been in progress for several weeks and the performance should be a very good one. In addition to the 175 voices of the Cecilia Society, there will be a boy choir of 50 from the Emmanuel Church.

The soloists have been very carefully chosen. The soprano, Marie Zimmerman, of Philadelphia, first came into prominence eight or ten years ago when she was the principal soprano at the famous Bach festivals given in the old Moravian Church in Bethlehem, Penn., under the leadership of J. Fred Wolle, now at the head of the music department of the University of California. Janet Spencer, the contralto, is well known in Boston, both as a singer of oratorio and as a singer of songs. George Hamlin is well fitted for Bach music, while David Bispham needs no introduction. As said before the performance will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock in order that it may be over by 10.

LAST PENSION CONCERT

The last opportunity of the season for the general public outside of the regular patrons of the Symphony Orchestra to hear that great organization under Max Fiedler will come this evening when the orchestra will give its second concert in aid of the pension fund.

One of the pleasant features of these concerts is the generous help the orchestra has always received from great artists. Among those who have appeared in the past as soloists have been Paderewski, Elman, Melba, Schumann-Heink, Sembrich and Samaroff. At the first concert this year the orchestra had the co-operation of Signor Constantino, and at the concert tomorrow night Josef Hofmann gives his services. The programme will comprise works by Beethoven and Wagner. It begins with the "Egmont" overture of Beethoven, which will be followed by the concerto for piano in G major No. 4. The second part of the programme will be devoted to Wagner, comprising the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Bacchante from "Tannhauser," the "Ride of the Valkyries," the "Waldweben" and the "Rienzi" overture.

(Copyright, 1908, by B. J. Falk.)

JOSEF HOFFMANN,
Pianist, who plays tonight at Pension Fund concert in Symphony Hall.

JOSEF HOFMANN
PIANIST

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Two novelties by two Boston composers are the chief items on this week's Symphony program, the 22d of the series. George W. Chadwick will be represented by his Suite Symphonique, which has just taken the prize offered by the Federation of Musical Clubs. It has been played only in Philadelphia. It is in manuscript and is dedicated to Frederick Stock and the Theodore Thomas orchestra of Chicago. It is in four movements.

The other novelty will be a comedy overture on negro themes by Henry F. Gilbert, late of Harvard University. This also is in manuscript and will be played for the first time in Boston. The other numbers on the program will be the Prelude to "Parsifal," and Rachmanioff's symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead."

Following the usual custom of not giving the public rehearsal on Good Friday, the rehearsal this coming week will be given on Thursday afternoon instead of Friday.

PENSION FUND CONCERT.

The last opportunity of the season for the general public outside of the regular patrons of the Symphony orchestra to hear the orchestra under Mr. Fiedler will come this evening at the second concert in aid of the pension fund. The public which the Symphony orchestra reaches at its regular concerts is necessarily limited for few "rush" seats are sold for the season for the rehearsals and only a comparatively few seats are for sale for the Saturday evening concerts. Next year there will be over 20 former members of the orchestra receiving pensions and the drain on the capital will increase each year. The only method the orchestra has of adding to its principal is through the two concerts it gives each season, for the sum total of the annual dues that the members pay is not nearly sufficient to pay the pensions. In order to avoid drawing on the principal the income must be increased each year, at least in proportion to the increased number of pensions.

One of the pleasant features of these concerts is the generous help the orchestra has always received from great artists. Among those who have appeared in the past as soloists have been Paderewski, Elman and Mmes. Melba, Schumann-Heink, Sembrich and Samaroff. At the first concert this year the orchestra had the co-operation of Mr. Constantino and at the concert tonight Josef Hofmann gives his services. The program will begin with the "Egmont" overture of Beethoven, which will be followed by his Concerto for piano in G-Major No. 4. The second part of the program will be devoted to Wagner, and comprise the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," the "Ride of the Valkyries," the "Waldweben" and the overture to "Rienzi."

BACH'S "MATTHEW PASSION"

The performance of Bach's "Matthew Passion" by the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Fiedler, conductor, in Symphony Hall on next Friday evening will mark the 182d anniversary of its first performance in Leipsic on Good Friday, 1729. The performance next Friday (Good Friday) evening will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock.

The "Matthew Passion" is considered by many the greatest of the works left by the man "to whom," to use Schumann's words, "music owes almost as great a debt as a religion does to its founder."

Exactly 100 years after its first performance Mendelssohn gave it in Berlin on March 12, 1829, and this was really the beginning of the great Bach revival which has brought due recognition to the master.

The concert on next Friday evening will be the last of the three given by the combined forces of the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony orchestra. The experiment was interesting and the results have justified the effort made to put choral music on a thoroughly sound basis in this city. Rehearsals have been in progress for several weeks and the performance should be a good one. In addition to the 175 voices of the Cecilia Society there will be a boy choir of 50 from the Emmanuel Church. The soloists have been carefully chosen. The soprano, Marie Zimmerman of Philadelphia, first came into prominence eight or ten years ago when she was the principal soprano at the famous Bach festival given in the old Moravian Church in Bethlehem, Pa. Janet Spencer, the contralto, George Hamlin and David Bispham are well known

[211]

TIGHT BINDING

TON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

WAGNER AND MR. HOFMANN FOR THE PENSION FUND

Wagner's Music in Concerts and the Peculiar Conditions Here in Boston—Pieces and Performance Last Night—Mr. Hofmann's Penetrating and Beautiful Performance of Beethoven's Fourth Concerto—An Opera by Rousseau Disinterred in Germany — Charpentier's New "Lyric Trilogy"—Prospectus and Programmes at the Symphony Concerts—Honors to Mr. Hofmann—Mr. Dippel's Novel Operas—Items of the Day

POOR Wagner must not only be limited to the concert-room in Boston, but he must also have his music reserved for the most part for the two concerts that the Symphony Orchestra undertakes annually for the increase of its Pension Fund. Even at them the choice of pieces, and especially of operatic fragments, is narrowly circumscribed. Dr. Muck, who had long been an operatic conductor and who had ordered many performances of Wagner's music-dramas at Berlin and Baireuth, would make no excerpts from them in which the action on the stage or the setting of it was significant. Wagner's music, he held, was insistently of the theatre; most of it had its true life, its true power and beauty there only. In the concert-room he would play only the preludes and the overtures, and the orchestral glorification of the dead Siegfried in "Götterdämmerung." Mr. Fiedler, who has never been an operatic conductor, shares these scruples, but he is a shade more liberal in the application of them. He will play "arrangements" for the concert-room authorized by Wagner himself, like the "Waldweben" from the second act of "Siegfried," even though there be no sunlit forest, no yawning cavern and no fluttering bird on the stage. He will even go so far as the "Venusberg music" in "Tannhäuser," perhaps because he knows from experience that all the arts of scene painter and stage manager, dancers and mimes are but poor and pale beside its tonal passion and picturing.

There, however, Mr. Fiedler also stops. His own belief and practice and Dr. Muck's as well would be wholly justifiable, wholly laudable, were Wagner's operas—or even three or four of them—duly represented here each year as they are in every musical capital and nearly every musical township in western Europe. Wagner wrote for the theatre. Only in the theatre is his music wholly and characteristically itself. Yet before his later music-dramas were established there, he sanctioned and encouraged the performance in concerts of fragments. So long as Boston is in like case with the European cities that then heard these excerpts, in lack of Wagner on its operatic stage, even the austere artistic consciences of conductors might relax enough—and pardonably—to play them at the Symphony Concerts. They need have no doubt of the approval of the audiences.

As it was, the second part of the concert, last evening, for the profit of the Pension Fund, fell to Wagner's music, within these limits of choice—to the overtures to "Rienzi" and "The Flying Dutchman," to the "Venusberg" music from "Tannhäuser," the "Waldweben" from "Siegfried" and "The Ride of the Valkyrs," permissible, presumably, because it is the introduction to the third act of "Die Walküre." Except the "Waldweben," all the pieces were of Wagner's most familiar music and one, the overture to "Rienzi," was very early and, except in its clanging instrumental sonorities, very un-Wagnerian Wagner. The orchestra played them with its wonted richness of tone, largeness of style and energy of accent. The horns outdid themselves in the music of "redemption" in the overture to "The Flying Dutchman"; the brass was mightily strident and sonorous in "The Ride of the Valkyrs"; the wood-winds achieved prodigies of expressive and still euphonious tone in the music of Venus's cavern; and the strings were all excitement with the Warrior Maids and all brightness, hum and resiliency in the music of the noonday forest.

Of course, Mr. Fiedler overdrove his orchestra. The temptation to do so is always strong upon him at the end of the season, and the hot eloquence of Wagner's music feeds it. He took the music of the Venusberg, until the frenzy of the orgy begins to die into its languors, at such a pace that it came and went as a tumultuous blur of sound, whereby it lost much of its sensual tang and much too of its dartings and recoils of instrumental color from the sheer inability of even the virtuosi of the orchestra to do more than "keep up." His passion for sonorities made the overture to "Rienzi" even more coarse-fibred than it is; and the overture to "The Flying Dutchman" much more thunderous than Wagner could possibly have imagined it in the thirties. As the Venusberg music was written by the mature Wagner into the earlier "Tannhäuser," so Mr. Fiedler by doubling of instruments and a general energy and exaltation would rewrite the overture to "The Flying Dutchman" in the terms of the later music-dramas. Sometimes it does, sometimes it does not bear this translation well. The "Waldweben" might have been a little more closely, a little more luminously knit; and only in "The Ride of the Valkyrs" did Mr. Fiedler achieve the illusion of the theatre in the concert-room, which is the life and soul of Wagner's music there, and leave some of his hearers breathless with the foolish expectation that the curtain was at last to rise, even here in Boston, upon the cloud-swept rocks of Wotan's daughters. With Wagner, Mr. Fiedler wants the instinct of the theatre.

As Wagner might have liked, the first part of the programme fell to Beethoven. Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra played the overture to "Egmont" very largely, eloquently and contrastingly. Mr. Hofmann, Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra played the concerto in G minor for pianoforte to an exceeding beauty of tone and justness of expression; and finally, many times recalled and departing from Beethoven, Mr. Hofmann played Rachmaninoff's Prelude in G minor and Chopin's waltz in C-sharp minor. His performance of the concerto crowned his playing here this winter, from the recital through the concerts with the orchestra. For Mr. Hofmann has the faculty that seals the conductor, the singer, or the virtuoso as an artist of discerning mind, of discriminating imagination as well as of high technical skill and of quick emotional and communicative sensibility. To each piece that he plays, to each composer whom he approaches, he brings a penetration of thought and imagination, a justice of revealing and recreating style that gives the music its particular and individual voice, so that it lives again in its own image of ordered and expressive sound.

Now, this concerto of Beethoven, written though it was a hundred years ago, and written rather carelessly as he usually composed, is curiously modern in the shifting tonalities and in the pervading freedom of form and of the relation of the orchestra and the piano in the first movement. It is scarcely less so in the slow movement that is like an intermezzo with its poetically imagined plan of the harsh and iterated orchestral interjections silenced at last by the beautiful insistence of the pianoforte upon its gentler melody. It is even a little modern in the lightly rhapsodic vein of the long final rondo. The pianist may fancy that he can make the music yet more modern if he drive it and his instrument to the utmost. Mr. Hofmann is wiser. He played the concerto with a perfect clarity, as though the varying tonalities of the first movement were the most natural thing in the world even in a concerto of 1808, as though ejaculation and answer in the andante were a part of an ordered whole; as though the rhapsodic play of the finale was but the freedom of a mastery of form so complete that it could have sport with it.

Hearing Mr. Hofmann, the listener felt the individuality of the music and not of the pianist. He felt it still more in the warm and rich tone, the sustained breadth of deeply imagined yet reticent song that Mr. Hofmann brought to Beethoven's melody. He has searched out the richness, the glow, the fine masculinity of it. He did not sentimentalize the lovely melody of the andante, and it is so easy to do so; he did not sophisticate it in excess of modulation; yet he gave to each phrase, almost to each note, an exceeding beauty that gradually suffused the whole until the pianoforte, like some new Orpheus, had made the harsh interposing orchestra gentle and submissive to its will. Mr. Hofmann might have made the rondo glint with a hard and sparkling virtuosity. He chose to make it like crystals of tone that catch twenty lights and half lights in delicately changeful reflections. By the blessing of the muses of music (especially at the end of a long season), the concerto in G minor does not "mean" anything but its own beautiful freedom, loveliness of voice, and crystalline shimmer of ornament. Mr. Hofmann, playing it, was as the transforming fire that melted and welded it anew into a clearer beauty of contour, of surface, of myriad reflections, that awakened anew its gently rhapsodic voice. Was it an eighteenth-century singing-teacher that told his pupils that tone and tone and tone was the secret of song? It is the secret also, as Mr. Hofmann has discovered, of piano-playing.

H. T. P.

HERALD, MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1911.

SYMPHONY CONCERT FOR PENSION FUND

Second of the Season Given, with Josef Hofmann as Soloist.

The Boston Symphony orchestra gave last night in Symphony Hall the second concert of this season in aid of its pension fund. Josef Hofmann, who kindly gave his services, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Beethoven, overture to Goethe's "Egmont," concerto in G major, No. 4, for pianoforte, op. 58; Wagner, overture to "The Flying Dutchman," bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," "Ride of the Valkyries" from "Die Walkuere," "Waldroeben" from "Siegfried," overture to "Rienzi."

As is customary on such occasions, the size and enthusiasm of the audience proved that there was a public to whom this object made a strong appeal, and that a response to the appeal was neither perfunctory nor devoid of reward. Mr. Fiedler has before now offered at these concerts programs of similar structure. At the one given a year ago, when Mme. Sembrich was the soloist, there were also five excerpts from Wagner, all different from those of last night.

Mr. Hoffmann has already several times this season given proof of the mature excellence of his playing, both as technician and interpreter. The concerto he choose for performance last night, though it was written at the same time that Beethoven's mind was much occupied with "Fidelio," is richer in qualities that make an instantaneous appeal than many concertos which seem primarily constructed for a display of virtuosity. The technically exacting allegro, the deeply emotional andante, the fresh and jocund rondo were all played in a masterly way by Mr. Hoffmann. He aroused the warmest enthusiasm and responded most generously with two charmingly contrasted encores.

MONITOR, BOSTON, APRIL 10, 1911.

SYMPHONY PENSION CONCERT.

The Boston Symphony orchestra gave a concert Sunday night in aid of its pension fund. The program was made up from the works of Beethoven and Wagner—of the former the overture to "Egmont" and the pianoforte concerto in G major, op. 58 No. 4; of the latter the overture to the "Flying Dutchman," bacchanale from "Tannhauser," "Ride of the Valkyries" from "Walkure," "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," and the overture to "Rienzi." Josef Hofmann, whose services were volunteered, was soloist.

The contrast between the two Beethoven numbers which led the program and the Wagner music, of which the first bar sufficed to establish the effect, might provoke two thoughts,—first one of comprehension of the shock Wagner's compositions were to his contemporaries, not as yet used to the vagaries of Schumann, and second that we are privileged to hear both the classicist and the one-time iconoclast in the same program and both neatly labeled and tucked away each in his own particular niche as having tried, with Kipling's men, to paint the thing as he saw it.

Then the problems are settled and the last word spoken. But softly—is there not a man named Strauss and another named Debussy, prophets of rival sects, more or less unconvinced of each other's greatness, and each hailed as a genius by a generation oversophisticated in musical history and as loth to condemn the new or strange as their predecessors were to praise it?

But present day perplexities did not intrude on last night's program. All enjoyed everything—the overture, the concerto with its melodramatic ending, and the wonderful instrumentation of Wagner's bacchanale, wherein the strings rejoiced, the Valkyrie music, the "Waldweben," all magnificently played, not forgetting the "Rienzi" overture which in content showed how easily Wagner could have succeeded in the older style of Meyerbeer or Rossini and yet in treatment revealed thus early a mighty protester against rules of limitation.

Mr. Hofmann showed again his splendid technical command of his instrument and skill in ensemble playing. He secured a very large tone without pounding or harshness and his runs and trills had musical quality. As encores he played an unfamiliar piece in the grand manner and achieved delicacy in a Chopin waltz. He was much applauded.

JOURNAL—MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1911.

HOFMANN IS GIVEN CUP BY SYMPHONY

Ovation for Polish Pianist at Pension Fund Concert.

Josef Hofmann, foremost of the younger pianists, and those who heard him play Beethoven's fourth concerto and two encore pieces, including the titanic Rachmaninoff prelude in G minor, all have cause to keep green the memory of last night's pension fund concert in Symphony Hall.

An ovation was the popular tribute to the little giant of the piano after the concerto; and the orchestra publicly contributed the customary wreath. Then, after the encores and during the intermission, the Symphony players invited the Polish prodigy to their room back of the stage and further honored him with a beautiful loving cup. Otto Roth of the first violins made the presentation speech. It was a fitting testimonial from the great orchestra to the great artist.

Hofmann's playing was a superb exhibition of absolute artistry from beginning to end. Ravishing beauty of tone, power and brilliancy of technic and a rare interpretive talent that revealed the music in the clearest of lights characterized the performance of the concerto. There were no distracting mannerisms; no tossing of head and waving of hands after the fashion which some pianists seem to have copied from the prestidigitators. It was art of the highest and purest order, full of power and beauty and understanding; and it gave the large audience the greatest possible pleasure. The Rachmaninoff prelude, the first encore piece, was a blazing burst of virtuosity, and audience and orchestra rose together to demand more. The enthusiasm was reminiscent of the palmy days of Joseffy and Paderewski.

It was a Beethoven-Wagner program. The first number was Beethoven's overture to Goethe's "Egmont." After the piano numbers came the Wagner pieces, beginning with "The Flying Dutchman" overture and continuing on through the Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," the "Ride of the Valkyries," the forest scene music from "Siegfried" and ending with the thrice popular overture from "Rienzi."

[212]

ADVERTISER, MONDAY APRIL 10, 1911

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S PENSION FUND CONCERT

JOSEF HOFMANN, SOLOIST, PLAYED BRILLIANTLY

Aroused Enthusiasm of Large Audience by His Masterly Reading of Beethoven's Concerto.

Beethoven, Wagner and Josef Hofmann—a distinguished trio—monopolized the programme of the second and final concert, last night, of the Symphony orchestra, for the benefit of its pension fund.

Wagner devotees revelled, for the first time this season, in half a programme of overtures and excerpts from the music dramas of the master. We have heard scarcely any Wagner this year. There has not been a single representation of a Wagnerian opera—except by an itinerant company—while concert performances of his works have been rare enough. Mr. Fiedler, discriminately and sensibly respects Wagner's intentions, realizing that such music cannot receive the same vital and vivid meaning in the concert-room as on the stage. Hence, Mr. Fielder's range of selection is limited to a few chosen fragments which are heard year after year.

The pieces chosen last night were the overtures to "Rienzi" and to the "Flying Dutchman"; the Venusberg music from "Tannhauser"; the "Ride of the Valkirs"; and an arrangement of Siegfried's musings in the forest, the Waldweben."

To prove the statement that "one works best when he works for himself" we can refer to the playing of the Symphony men last night. So hearty and so sincere a programme,—into the spirit of which every player entered as never before during this season,—has not been heard here in years. The "Dutchman" overture's appalling climaxes and roaring avalanches of sound became almost overwhelming; the fearful and avowedly immoral music of the "Bacchanale" became doubly sensuous and voluptuous. Luckily for the orchestra and Mr. Wagner Mayor Fitzgerald was not present. More passionate, fiery and startling music has never been penned than that of the "Venusberg" scene.

For the first part of the programme there was the "Egmont" overture and the fourth Beethoven piano concerto in G.

"Egmont" is Beethoven's greatest dramatic overture. But it, too, has met its fate in the hands of the analysts, who must needs dissect every composition the moment that a composer indicates its general trend or its most marked characteristics. And this they have done ad nauseam in "Egmont." At any rate, the hero of Goethe is the hero of Beethoven—noble, magnanimous, over-confident. Mr. Fiedler's reading, when he does not over-emphasize and over-accentuate, is superb.

Last December Josef Hofmann was fain to play the Beethoven concerto, but it was unfortunately replaced by another. Mr. Hofmann is a pianist after Beethoven's own heart—broad, vigorous and strong, and, as anticipated, he played his piece with a clear, calculating logic, besprinkled here and there with an emotional appeal which lived but for a moment, and melted again into the intellectual content. He does not perform an Indian war dance at the keyboard and yet does not play with a too velvety hand. The Andante of the G major concerto is a dialogue between piano and orchestra, stormy and imperious for the latter, but soothing and placid for the former. Every chord, every tone, be it ever so humble, received its especial hue and its individual shade. Mr. Hofmann neither plays to or "at" his audience, and there is never the straining after effect or the desire to startle, which is almost universal nowadays.

A huge floral wreath and thunders of applause attested to the pianist's popularity. Like the soap advertisement which tells us that "he won't be happy until he gets it," so the audience felt about encores. Mr. Hofmann added the Rachmaninoff "Prelude in G minor" and the Chopin "waltz in C sharp minor." In the latter, especially, it was pleasing to note that the graceful arabesques which follow the chief theme were not played a la sewing machine, as is usually the case.

Conductor, soloist, players and the large audience were aroused to great enthusiasm during the course of the evening.

G. S. M.

HERALD, TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1911.

Certain American composers who are never so happy as when complaining that the American is systematically ignored by imported orchestral conductors are respectfully reminded that Mr. Fiedler this week will produce at a Symphony concert a suite by Mr. Chadwick of Boston and an overture by Mr. Gilbert of Cambridge.

...ON POST.
APRIL 10, 1911

HOFFMANN AS SOLOIST

Memorable Performance at Pension Fund Concert

BY OLIN DOWNES

A very brilliant concert was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Josef Hoffmann, assisting soloist, for the benefit of the pension fund of the orchestra last night in Symphony Hall. Mr. Hoffmann, as is the custom of the artists who play on these occasions, had donated his services, and he made the concert memorable by his rarely poetic performance of the Beethoven G major concerto. He was rewarded with thunderous applause, and he played two "encores." There was a large audience.

The G major concerto, indeed, is now apparent as the most romantic and individual of Beethoven's compositions for piano and orchestra. It represents with especial felicity the romantic side of the composer who stood at the parting of the ways and blended, as they never will be blended again, the architectural strength and beauty of classic art and the glowing richness of color and imagination of the new age.

This concerto is best heard with a small orchestra and with a harpsichord, or with the excellent compromise between a modern piano and a harpsichord, which Arnold Dolmetsch, now, unfortunately, on the point of leaving us, presented to the public when George Proctor gave a masterly performance of the concerto, heard last night, two seasons ago in Chickering Hall. But this is not disparagement of the performance last night.

Despite the inflated orchestra and the big solo instrument, the music, which is such a compound of young poetry and lion-like virility of thought, was interpreted as only a master of music and of his instrument might hope to do.

Mr. Hoffmann, for a comparative rarity, was in the vein, and when he is in the vein few pianists surpass him. The technic of this concerto is deceptive. A glance at the pages seems to imply comparatively slight demands on the performer, and the average student views with more awe the massive passages of the fifth concerto; but let a mediocre pianist attempt to equal yesterday evening's exhibition, execute those innocent scales and prim arpeggios, and chords which, saving two or three passages, may be grasped by the hand of a child. Then, if he is reflective and self-critical, he will turn his back to the concert platform and retire with the G major concerto to the quiet of his studio and ponder and labor for a few more years.

The G-major concerto could hardly be presented in a more advantageous light than by Mr. Hoffmann yesterday evening. Such was the beauty of his tone and the perfection of his execution that every note was a joy to the ear. The subtle shades of expression which this composition demands as much as anything that Beethoven wrote were exquisitely perceived. It is so easy to dispel the wonderful and mysterious beauty of the slow movement, and thi beauty was so admirably preserv first movement was a perfect chain of precious musical thoughts, which reached a climax in the splendid cadenza.

No wonder that the audience was rapturous. Mr. Hoffmann added two pieces to the programme, a prelude of Rachmaninoff and the Chopin Waltz in C-sharp minor. He played the prelude more brilliantly than it has ever been played here—even by the composer himself—and he was as successful in capturing the poetry of the waltz as he had been in translating the message of Beethoven.

HERALD, THURSDAY,
APRIL 13, 1911.

Rehearsal patrons of the Symphony orchestra should take notice that the regular rehearsal will be given this afternoon instead of tomorrow afternoon. The program will include a suite by Mr. Chadwick and an overture on Negro Themes by Mr. Gilbert. The other numbers will be Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," and the overture to "Parsifal."

Attention is called to the fact again that the concert of the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony orchestra, in Symphony Hall (Friday) night, when Bach's Passion Music will be given, will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock.

MONITOR, BOSTON,
APRIL 13, 1911

The performance of the Passion music by the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony orchestra on Friday evening begins at 7:30 o'clock. This early hour is necessary on account of the length of the work.

GLOBE—MONDAY.
APRIL 10, 1911.

HOFMANN SOLOIST.

Pianist Plays at Pension Fund Concert.

Gives Remarkable Performance as Technician and Interpreter.

Josef Hofmann, the pianist, contributed his services as soloist at the concert given last night by the Symphony orchestra for the pension fund. Mr Hofmann played Beethoven's concerto in G major, No. 4.

The orchestra played Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and the following group by Wagner: Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," "Ride of the Valkyries" from "The Valkyrie," "Waldweben" from "Siegfried" and the "Rienzi" overture. Mr Fiedler conducted.

While there was true appreciation shown for the orchestral numbers, and justly so, the feature of the concert was naturally the performance of Mr Hofmann. It aroused the audience to applause which exceeded the demonstration usually made at Symphony concerts.

Mr Hofman's playing combines to an extraordinary degree the virtuosity of a technician, the penetration, refinement and repose of style of a scholar, and the emotional and spiritual exaltation of a poet. One is puzzled whether to let his interpretative power sway the senses or to lose something of the import of his playing in admiration of his sovereignty over musical effects through pianistic technic.

This artist's judgment is unerring in his choice of style, in the manner in which he approaches a composer and his work, and in the atmosphere which he at once creates. He played the concerto with a simplicity and reverence which submerged the individuality of the performer in the spirit of the work.

There was brilliance in the florid development of the first movement, quiet, penetrating beauty, and true poesy in the romantic andante, in which Beethoven took the precaution to warn the player by a note in the score to use the soft pedal insistently except in the cadenza. In the rondo there was instant lightness, fleetness and exhilaration, which grew to a quickening intensity of brilliance in the concluding fast movement.

It would be a pleasure to speak in greater detail of the beauty and apt variation in color of his tone, of the singing of his melody, of the exquisite and elusive graduation of his nuances, of the chastily and sculptured finesse of his phrasing and the continence, yet the vast span, of his style. Here was playing that seemed to penetrate some inner, hidden and mystic shrine. There was a hallowed, a transcending spirit within it, and its appeal to those who heard was swift, sure and commanding.

Mr Hofmann was impelled by the applause to add two extra numbers, Rachmaninoff's Prelude in G minor and Chopin's waltz in C sharp minor. He was presented after the concert a huge laurel wreath, and during the intermission with a loving cup, a gift of the members of the orchestra.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
APRIL 13, 1911

The regular rehearsal of the Symphony Orchestra will be given this afternoon, instead of tomorrow afternoon. This is the usual custom when the orchestra is in town Holy Week. The program will include two American novelties, a suite by Mr. Chadwick and an "Overture on Negro Themes" by Mr. Gilbert. Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead" and the overture to "Parsifal" will also be played.

The Symphony Orchestra and the Cecilia Society will give Bach's "Passion" music in Symphony Hall tomorrow night, beginning promptly at 7.30.

GLOBE—THURSDAY.
APRIL 13, 1911

The concert of the Cecilia society and the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony hall tomorrow night, when Bach's "Passion Music" will be given, beginning promptly at 7:30 o'clock.

The Symphony orchestra rehearsal will take place this afternoon, tomorrow being Good Friday. The program will include two American novelties, a suite by Mr Chadwick and an overture on negro themes by Mr Gilbert. The other numbers will be Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead" and the overture to "Parsifal."

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY.
APRIL 12, 1911

MR. FIEDLER purposes to end the Symphony Concerts of the year with a performance of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony. In the course of the season, he has already played two more of Tschaikowsky's symphonies, at least one of the overture-fantasias and sundry smaller pieces, while a fortnight ago, Miss Parlow chose his violin concerto for the concerts at which she appeared. Turn to the tables at the end of the twenty-fourth programme-book for many a season, and hardly one has lacked what Mr. Pecksniff might have called its "plenitude" of Tschaikowsky. The virtuosi have repeated time and again his concertos for violin or pianoforte. The conductors have gone the round of his fourth, fifth and sixth symphonies with occasional "side-trips" into his "Manfred." The overture-fantasias and many of the miscellaneous pieces have been played time and again. Except Beethoven, no composer, living or dead, classic or modern, has had so large a share of the music played at the Symphony Concerts.

The reasons are clear enough. Audiences like to hear Tschaikowsky's music. His melodies are often obvious; his rhythms cut the air; his musical design is easy to follow; the "emotional content" of his pieces is vivid, high pitched, candid, dramatic even of his own intimate emotions. Nearly all his music is obvious, surcharged, rich in contrasts, exciting in accent. As audiences thrill to it, so conductors can make "effects," especially "large effects" with it and drive their orchestras in the playing to yet one more inch of shrieked or muttered utterance. On the stage or in the auditorium it is very dependable music to play. And yet there have been and there are other interesting Russian composers—Rimsky-Korsakoff, Borodin, Balakireff, among the dead, and Glazounoff, Taneieff, Gliere and Rebikoff, among the living—whose music appears seldom or not at all upon the programmes of the Symphony Concerts. Often it is interesting music; often it is of the sort and effect that makes Tschaikowsky's so "dependable." It deserves more frequent hearing according to its kind, and, as it happens, the more will Tschaikowsky's shine beside it. His music needs such contrast and comparison. When a particular public hears too much too often of the music of one composer, it grows to be as sensitive to its shortcomings and its trick of manner as it was to its merits and its peculiar eloquence.

H. T. P.

Mr. Gilbert's "Negro" Overture

AT the Symphony Concerts of Thursday and Saturday, Mr. H. F. Gilbert's "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes" will be played for the first times in Boston. It will put upon the programmes the name of an American composer, hitherto unplaced there, who has long lived and worked in and around Boston, keeping his faith in American folk-tunes—Negro, Indian or of popular balladry—as the source out of which an American music could be written in American moods and to the responsive stirring of American spirits. This particular overture he designed for an operetta drawn from Joel Chandler Harris's stories of "Uncle Remus." For various reasons, the composition of the operetta was abandoned, and Mr. Gilbert re-shaped the overture into its present form in which it has been played already in New York and Pittsburg. He describes it as follows: "The overture is not at all in the accepted form. The thematic material I have taken from various collections of Negro folk-lore 'lifting,' a motive here and there. My 'lifting' has not been very extensive, however. The Negro themes which I have employed amount altogether to but twenty measures. The whole overture is developed from this material.

"The piece opens with a light and humorous movement. The theme was manufactured from two-four measure motives which I found in that interesting book, 'Bahama Songs and Stories,' by Charles L. Edwards. Next comes a broad and somewhat slower movement, the theme of which (eight measures in length) is a wild and mysterious sounding bit of melody. This tune, and many like it, were sung by the deckhands and 'roustabouts' on the Mississippi steamboats in the old days. It is the only theme which I have used in its complete form in the overture. It is to be found in 'Slave Songs of the United States,' by W. F. Allen and others. The original words were as follows:

For to see my mammy, Oh—,
Ise gwine to Alabammy, Ah—

"Then comes a fugue. The theme of the fugue consists of the first four measures of the Negro Spiritual, 'Old Ship of Zion,' as noted by Jeannette Robinson Murphy in 'Southern Thoughts for Northern Thinkers.' The fugue ends in a broad and 'quasi maestoso' statement of the theme, in augmentation. It is given out by the brass instruments and is interspersed with fragments of the roustabout's song, also in augmentation. After this there is a return to the first theme and after considerable recapitulation and the development of a different ending or coda, the composition ends in an orgy of jollity and ragtime."

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1911.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC IS GIVEN

Cecilia Society and Symphony Enthrall Large Audience.

Bach's Passion music was given at Symphony Hall last night by the Cecilia Society and the Symphony Orchestra, assisted by a chorus of boys from Emmanuel Church and a notable group of soloists, including Mrs. Maria [illegible], Miss Janet Spencer, Mrs. Alice Bates Rice, George Hamlin, David Bispham and Earl Cartwright. J. P. Marshall played the organ and Malcolm Lang the piano. Max Fiedler conducted.

Striking proof of the enduring spiritual charm of the Bach setting of the Passion according to St. Matthew and of the attractiveness of the Cecilia-Symphony Orchestra combination, was seen at the outset in the audience that filled the huge hall. To many present no doubt it was the same as going to church. Mr. Fiedler and the well known soloists were applauded when they appeared, but after that there was no applause until the first part of the oratorio was over. Then there was no more until the end. The Good Friday mood predominated.

This mood was strongly sustained by the performance. The interpretation was well nigh perfect. There was a rare co-ordination of skill and spirit. Mr. Hamlin, upon whom fell the bulk of the solo work, exhibited consummate artistry. He sang with grace, with exceptional beauty of tone, with that unfailing intelligence which distinguishes the comparatively few finished singers. Mr. Bispham, too, was as impressive as usual. Mrs. Zimmerman revealed accomplishments well suited to the trying arias which Bach has assigned to the soprano, and Miss Spencer by her sympathetic singing enhanced a reputation which has already given her a place among the foremost singers on the concert stage. Mr. Cartwright and Mrs. Rice lent distinction to the minor solos.

The choristers fairly rivaled the soloists, and the concluding double chorus, which brings the great oratorio to one of the grandest climaxes in the whole wide range of sacred music, was sung with supremely elevating effect.

Concert Master Witek played the solo accompaniment to the contralto aria, "O pardon me, my God," beautifully.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY
APRIL 13, 1911

News of Music

DEBUSSY'S new orchestral piece, "Iberia," is to be played after all in Boston this spring, and Mr. Fiedler announces it as the chief item in his programme for the Symphony Concerts of next week. When "Iberia" was first performed in Paris, a year and more ago, an article about it by Mr. Lalo, the fair and wise reviewer of music for Le Temps, was printed in this place. Now, when we in Boston are so soon to hear the piece, it is worth while to reprint two of his descriptive paragraphs. Yet Mr. Lalo, as usual, will mingle description and comment: "At the Chatelet, by the Colonne Orchestra, a new suite by Claude Debussy was played for the first time. The suite is one of a group of three compositions assembled under the general title of 'Images.' The other two, 'Gigue Triste' and 'Rondes de Printemps,' are still unpublished and unperformed. (The latter has since been played in Boston). That which we have just heard and which Debussy labels 'Iberia,' is itself composed of three subdivisions, 'Along the Byways and the Streets,' 'The Odors of Night,' and 'The Morning of a Fete Day,'" and no pause separates the last two. The whole piece is not 'programme music,' but pictorial music wherein the sub-titles, as Debussy's way is, primarily serve to quicken the hearer to a particular atmosphere and environment. . . . The first of these descriptions, 'Along the Byways and the Highways,' evokes no kindling sensation, no absorbing vision of earth and sky, of men and things beyond the Pyrenees. The music abounds in curious rhythms, in ingenious play with instrumental timbres, in sedulously far-fetched details, but it yields no unified and collective impression. Details, effects, diversified sounds, noise, tumult fill the piece to superfluity. The listener may not discover what the music would suggest. It can hardly be the silent Spanish byways. It seems much more the racket of a sham Spain of a world's fair. The second subdivision, 'Odors of Night,' has much more charm and significance. It begins alluringly and it contains passages of true poetry; but there are disconnected episodes separated by music much less fortunately imagined that sometimes by the instrumental voices and sometimes by the contours of the design recall, without approaching, the incomparable night-picture of 'The Clouds.' The transition to the third piece and the measures with which it begins are exquisitely written. In the low rustling murmur of the distant and faintly stirring fete, in the light tinkle of the bells, in the fluid air of the morning are the delicacy, the rarity, the precision of sensation that are of Debussy's most inspired moments. The fete waxes; the composer draws nearer; and there is another riot of sounds, distinct from that of the first 'picture,' but akin in its lack of individual savor and in its flavor of conventionality."

Mr. Zach, once of the Boston Orchestra, and now the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra of St. Louis, has returned to this town for a spring holiday. The season in St. Louis has ended, and Mr. Zach speaks in this wise of the result of his work there: "At first, the task I undertook when I was given charge of the orchestra disheartened me. At times it seemed as if we were making progress too slowly, but this year I have felt that our foundation has been well laid and, with the advantage of having a largely increased number of local symphony concerts, we have been able to cover a truly representative list of compositions and the public interest has quickened gratifyingly. The 'pop' concerts, which formerly seemed to be the most important things we did, according to the public's way of expressing its appreciation, are still popular, but they do not overtop the more serious subscription concerts. I used to think that I was conducting a series of 'pop' concerts with an occasional symphony programme thrown in. Now I feel as though I am conducting a series of serious symphony concerts with an occasional 'pop' included. The two novel pieces of the season which made the best impression were Franck's symphony and Sibelius's second symphony. I find, however, that 'absolute music' is much more difficult to introduce to popularity than 'programme music.' The people want a story in their music. They want their music to represent something definite."

Dr. Muck labored in vain with Leoncavallo's new opera, "Maria," when it was performed a fortnight ago for the first time in Berlin. The piece is a fierce drama of love, jealousy and filial resistance to paternal command among the peasants of Provence and the Provençal folk-tunes often suggest or color the music. Audience and reviewers, however, were alike cold and the opera narrowly escaped immediate failure. Italy long since became doubtful of Leoncavallo. Now Germany is seemingly like-minded.

[213]

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

TWO NEW PIECES OF AMERICAN MUSIC

Mr. Gilbert's "Overture on Negro Themes" and Mr. Chadwick's Second "Symphonic Suite"—The Freshness, Spirit and Ingenuity of Mr. Gilbert's Novel Piece—The Paler Qualities of Mr. Chadwick's in Its Long Course—The Prelude to "Parsifal" and Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead" for Contrast

HITHERTO, at the Symphony Concerts this season, Mr. Fiedler has played no music by American composers. Yesterday he gave half his programme to them, while both the chosen pieces were new and one of the composers little known. When he, Mr. H. F. Gilbert, found that his "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes" was to end the concert and that Mr. Chadwick's "Symphonic Suite" was to precede immediately his own piece, he naturally feared lest new music by an established composer might overshadow that of a newcomer to Symphony Hall. On the contrary, Mr. Gilbert's overture held its own not only against Mr. Chadwick's suite, but against the other and the familiar items of the programme—the prelude to Wagner's "Parsifal" and Rachmaninoff's tone-poem, "The Isle of the Dead." With hardly a departure, the audience stayed to hear Mr. Gilbert's music. It manifestly enjoyed it, and as is not the Bostonian way, it lingered applauding until it had discovered him in pleased bewilderment in an obscure seat and made him bow his appreciation. Mr. Gilbert has waited long and patiently for such reward. His way in the practice of the art of music has not been a smooth one. He is not well-to-do; he has not been able to live by music alone; he has been no tarrier at the doors of conductors or in the ante rooms of the musically or the socially influential. He has even had a faith—a rare thing in these days—and lived, worked and waited by it. He believes that in American folk-songs, in Indian tunes (if tunes they can be called), in Negro melodies, and in the balladry of the living-room and the street, is a store of musical material out of which can be recreated and developed a body of characteristically and unmistakably American music. In prefaces and the like, he has written warmly of this faith; in sundry orchestral, pianoforte, and vocal pieces he has composed according to it. He has preached and practised it, not as a "crank" who can see naught else in the world, but as a sane believer who had found in his gospel the outlet for his own expressive powers.

"The Comedy Overture on Negro Themes" justifies the faith, the practice, the individual ability behind. Mr. Gilbert goes straight to "nigger tunes" for his melodic material and not to idealized and sophisticated memories and echoes of "Negro melodies." A song of the blacks of the Bahamas, another of the roustabouts sweating on the river steamers of the old days, and a "spiritual" as the Negro dialect called such tunes, provide him with his material. He has taken these tunes as they are, for what they are, and out of them he has composed an overture of becomingly modern freedom of form—a lively introduction on the Bahama theme, a slower section of soberer feeling on the roustabout song, an eloquent fugue on the "spiritual," the usual working-out, recapitulation and coda. Of course, Mr. Gilbert has used plentiful imagination and ingenuity and a due musical scholarship in his treatment of these melodies, but never to the devitalizing and the dechracterizing of them. From their first appearance to their last in the music they are Negro melodies. The "handling," however, as the painters would say, is all of Mr. Gilbert himself. The overture begins robustly, the humorous suggestion of the music is as rich as it is lively. It is of primitive folk at lusty play. The finale is of like and stronger mood, a riot of "ragtime," as the musical comedies might call it. Yet never once is this music vulgar or common. It keeps its distinctive note. The music that springs from the roustabout tune is of ampler voice and deeper mood; primitive longing is in it; while the fugue upon "the spiritual" is, as all good fugues should be, a dramatically eloquent little episode in sound. Once done with it, Mr. Gilbert is off upon all the robustness and variety of voice and mood that his material yields him, until he is ready for his ragtime revel. From beginning to end, he carries his hearers with him, answering at every turn to his will. Here, at last, is music of American folk-tunes that meets every musical test, except, possibly, that of adroit instrumental coloring, that keeps the matter, the voice, and the spirit—the difficult item—of its origin; and that interests and stirs those that hear. So far as this overture goes, Mr. Gilbert has not waited, believed or practised in vain.

The truth is that in any retrospect of the concert Mr. Gilbert's overture, unknown and unheralded as he and it were, distinctly overshadows Mr. Chadwick's new suite. Mr. Chadwick did not write it for the competition, arranged by the Federation of Musical Clubs in which it lately won a prize. Having the music finished and in hand, he merely submitted it. Yet more than once it does not escape the easy obviousness of prize music, and still more does it suggest an effort to do again what Mr. Chadwick did so interestingly, individually and stirringly in his first Symphonic Suite. That suite, last played at the Symphony Concerts in Dr. Muck's time, was rich in American spirit and American voice. The listener might hear in it much that was of American sentiment, American humor, American jubilation, of the quick shiftings of mood that are very American, of the frankness of one feeling crowding upon another. Mr. Chadwick's melodic invention was fresh and felicitous; his development and clothing of his material alert, imaginative, high-spirited. The first suite was good to hear in itself, and it was very American music besides.

The Symphonic Suite of yesterday brought no such agreeable stimulation. Mr. Chadwick's invention of melody flags, and the slow movement, a Romance, barely escapes a rather thin and commonplace sweetness in matter and in manner. It is simplicity and sentiment carried to the perilous verge, even though the instrumental turf be velvety. The "Humoreske," the other middle movement after a pretty little intermezzo, does not much heighten the quality or the interest of the music. Neither the rattle of the xylophone nor the tinkling of the triangle, nor yet again the mockery of Debussian and Puccinesque dissonances and progressions is in itself amusing. "The treatment is everything and Mr. Chadwick's treatment did not seem musically fresh or musically witty. He took thought and pains at his humor. In the finale, he would "jubilate" American-wise, as he did in the lusty vagabond song and the mockery of Bach in the finale of the first Symphonic Suite. The second thoughts do not match the first; the jovial, lusty, tumbling inspiration will not come. The first movement, distinctly a lyric piece, pleasantly invented, ingeniously and fancifully ordered, relieves, too early, the tameness of the whole. It is the sort of sentimental yet spirited song that American composers from MacDowell onward have sung agreeably, imaginatively. Elsewhere, Mr. Chadwick's music needs freshness, needs spirit, and, above all, brevity.

No "unifying" programmatist could explain the juxtaposition of these two American pieces, lively, robust, even gay of mood, with the two that preceded them—the prelude to "Parsifal" crying its anguish, hymning its faith, whispering its mysticism, proclaiming its splendors of ritual; and Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead," music of the infinite solitude and the infinite calm of their sepulchre, of the whisperings and perchance the stirrings of their spirits, of the great longing that may quicken them, as it quickens those that mourn, of the hint of the Judgment Day that shall roll these stones away, and recalls these spirits, perchance again to the life that they have lived and rightly loved so well. Subduing his instrumental voices, taking the slow pace in the prelude that Wagner liked in "Parsifal" in his last years, Mr. Fiedler made the music sound as remote, mystic, awed and anguished as it sounds when it comes from the orchestra pit at Baireuth. It was the prelude to "Parsifal" in its true voice and spirit; it did not sound excited, neurotic, as too many conductors nowadays are eager to make it sound; but it did sound—and the more in contrast to Rachmaninoff's tone-poem—like music of the theatre, very carefully and astutely designed for its place there. The Russian's music gives no hint of such design and contrivance. It seems to exist of itself—as the voice of this sanctuary of dead souls, lapped by the sea, where no other sound stirs; where the air is stiller than silence; where the light changes not, it is so soft and clear. It is the voice, too, of the mourning that is still because it is deep; of the longing that whispers its intensities; of the mystery of ends and partings; of life that dies and may be is renewed. There is no programme for it; the spirit, not the mind, answers to the music—to its grave, subdued yet noble voice; to the rich and deep monotony of its coloring; to the whisperings that pierce the one, to the lights that for an instant shade the other. Rachmaninoff has his kinship to Brahms. Not even the German's Requiem is such music of death, its solitudes and its mystery. More nearly yesterday than usual Mr. Fiedler let it speak itself.

H. T. P.

Miss Parlow, the violinist, has not only been engaged for a pair of Symphony Concerts next autumn in Boston, but also for one of the "trips" of the orchestra to New York, Philadelphia and other cities. To no other new violinist, except Mr. Elman, has the orchestra been so deservingly hospitable. Nearly every metropolitan city in America now knows Miss Parlow, in a single season and without preliminary heralding, as a remarkable violinist. Her victory has been o[illegible]

SYMPHONY IN GILBERT PIECE

Overture on Negro Themes by Cambridge Composer Is a Viril Work.

SUITE BY MR. CHADWICK

By PHILIP HALE.

The 22d public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Fiedler conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Prelude to "Parsifal".....Wagner
"The Island of the Dead," symphonic poem after Boecklin's picture..Rachmaninoff
Suite Symphonique in E flat major...Chadwick
Comedy Overture on Negro Themes....Gilbert

Mr. Chadwick's suite and Mr. Gilbert's overture were played in Boston for the first time. Mr. Chadwick conducted his suite. The two pieces were performed from manuscript.

Henry F. Gilbert, born at Somerville in 1868, now lives in Cambridge. He studied the violin with Mr. Mollenhauer and composition with Edward MacDowell. He has been known in Boston chiefly by his songs and piano pieces, although incidental music to plays of the Irish Theatre has been performed here.

Mr. Gilbert has indisputable talent and marked individuality. As will be seen by looking at a list of his compositions, he is interested in folk-songs and in the Irish renaissance. The overture on negro themes was performed for the first time at a concert in Central Park, New York city, last August, and soon afterward played at the Pittsburg Exposition. It was originally intended as a prelude to an opera based on the Uncle Remus stories. The libretto of this opera is by Charles Johnson, formerly of the Bengal Civil Service, known to students of Indian literature by his "From the Upanishads" and his translation of the "Bhagavad Gita" with commentary and introduction.

The thematic material of the overture consists of phrases from tunes published in Edward's "Bahama Songs and Stories"; a nobly romantic tune, "I'se Gwine to Alabammy, Oh," sung by roustabouts on Mississippi steamboats in the old days; and a negro "Spiritual" called "Old Ship of Zion."

The first section of this overture is irresistible by reason of its frank liveliness, its appealing rhythm, its riotous good humor. The theme is well developed until the entrance of the broad and characteristic roustabout song. Then comes an admirably written and engrossing fugue built on the first four measures of the negro "Spiritual." The peroration is impressive, with a skilful use of phrases from the "Spiritual." The first theme is brought in again and there is an ingeniously exciting coda.

The overture stirred the blood of the audience. All rejoiced in hearing a new voice, a voice with something to say and an original way of saying it. The fugue did not dampen the interest of the hearers, for the old form was used with dramatic spirit. No wonder that the audience, surprised and delighted, was for once in no hurry to leave the hall. It remained, applauding, until the composer, found somewhere, appeared and modestly bowed in answer. Mr. Fiedler conducted in full sympathy. It is to be hoped that other compositions of Mr. Gilbert will be heard here at these concerts. The overture is distinctively, but not bumptiously, not apologetically, American.

Mr. Chadwick's Suite took the prize recently offered by the National Federation of Musical Clubs for the best orchestral work by an American composer. The Suite was played by the Philadelphia orchestra in Philadelphia at a concert in honor of the federation March 29 of this year. But Mr. Chadwick did not write his suite for this competition. He sketched it in Switzerland and Italy in 1905-'06 and completed it in Boston two years ago.

The suite is in four movements, and the work might well be called a symphony. The first movement is in sonata form. It is thematically interesting; it is carefully and ably worked with fine harmonic and orchestral effects. It has the most distinction of the four movements. The second, a Romanze, a song in three verses, has a melodic expression that no doubt will make an immediate and popular appeal, as it did yesterday; but the theme is inherently commonplace; nor does the Gaelic flavor save it; the embellishments are of a bygone time, and the movement is too long drawn out. The third movement is entitled Intermezzo and Humoreske. The Intermezzo has a certain grace and is more interesting than the Humoreske, which seems to include a parody of ultra-modern French music. The humor is rather heavy, and this may be said of nearly all compositions entitled "Humoresque." The Finale stands next in structure and expression to the first movement. Mr. Chadwick was heartily applauded and recalled.

The pieces by Americans were in strong and strange contrast with the two that preceded. The Prelude to "Parsifal" is more effective in the opera house than in the concert hall, and its full contents are better appreciated in the Bayreuth theatre than elsewhere. Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem made a profound impression when it was conducted here for the first time by the composer. Mr. Fiedler no doubt appreciates the work, but he is not wholly successful in the expression of the dominating spirit of remoteness and sadness. The sea that surrounds the island of the dead was too quickly stirred.

There was not the monotonous and awful quiet that Boecklin portrayed in his famous picture. Yet Mr. Fiedler's reading was interesting in other ways, and if Mr. Rachmaninoff had not visited us it might well be called eloquent. The "Dies Irae" was brought out with dramatic force and the climax of lamentation was overpowering. The composition is a singular one. It would be interesting to know what Rachmaninoff had in mind when he wrote the stormier sections. As a whole, the concert gave much pleasure to an audience smaller than usual, but not less enthusiastic.

The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Curry, Symphonic poem "Atala," after Chateaubriand (first performance); Beethoven, aria, "Ah, Perfidio!"; Debussy, "Iberia" (first time in Boston); Weber, Agata's grand air from "Der Freischuetz"; Mendelssohn, overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage." Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey, soprano, will be the soloist.

RECORD, SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1911

THE POPS.

The usual nine weeks' season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will begin on Monday, May 1. They will be given on every evening except Sundays up to and including Saturday evening, July 1. As last year the conductors will be Gustav Strube and Andre Maquarre.

TWO NOVELTIES BY SYMPHONY

Gilbert and Chadwick Contributed to Programme

BY OLIN DOWNES

The 22d public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall presented a programme of unusual significance, and enthusiasm ran high: the prelude to "Parsifal"; Rachmaninoff's masterpiece, "The Isle of the Dead," after the celebrated picture of Arnold Bocklin; a "Suite Symphonique" by George W. Chadwick and Henry F. Gilbert's "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes," both latter compositions played from manuscript for the first time in this city. Music of an old and a young continent and music that reflected very clearly its national as well as artistic origin. It is good to say that both of the new compositions by composers resident in Boston and in Cambridge were welcomed with great acclaim. Mr. Chadwick, who conducted his own work, was recalled three or four times. Mr. Gilbert was long in appearing, but the audience, which usually flies to the doors at the sound of the last chord, stayed and applauded until after many minutes the composer bowed from the stage.

The "Parsifal" prelude was given a very impressive performance, and so was Rachmaninoff's tone-poem, which now seems one of the great masterpieces of modern music. This piece is superb in its proportions and in the masterly development of the material, the big lines of the structure, and the splendid continuity of the thought. Moreover, and in spite of his formal achievements, Rachmaninoff has written as freely as though he were improvising alone before the great picture of Bocklin. The emotional current is continuous, the expression of moods that vary from human terror and protest to the most exalted hope and faith, and the loftiest contemplation. The composition is colored with wonderful richness and "atmosphere," and its form is so tremendous, so durable, that it seems as though the tone-poem should live for a thousand years. When Bocklin had finished the second sketch of his "Todteninsel," at the wish of the Countess Marie von Oriola, he wrote her that his picture "must produce such an effect of stillness that any one would be frightened to hear a knock on the door." Rachmaninoff has captured this mood with unexplainable success. A moment during the performance might have been prolonged. This was at the place where, after immense surges of tone, the orchestra subsides, a horn emerges from the mass of rich sound with a single note, sustained very softly, and then the violas take up this note, and from it commence to vibrate with indescribable effect the "Dies irae." This motive is used throughout the composition in a number of forms, and with exceeding effect.

Prize Composition

Mr. Chadwick's "Suite Symphonique" took the prize of $700 for an orchestral composition offered by the National Federation of Musical Clubs, which was awarded last month. The suite was first performed in Philadelphia on the 29th of last March. The suite is in four movements, and it is on the same lines as the "Symphonic Sketches," first played here under Dr. Muck, and in which Mr. Chadwick accomplished what he has tried to accomplish in the composition heard yesterday. The "Suite Symphonic" is the pale ghost of the "Symphonic Sketches." It is hollow. The orchestration is skilful, but it does not suffice to conceal a lack of potential musical ideas. One of Mr. Chadwick's most valuable attributes has been his strong native vein of humor and a healthy, rather sentimental sentiment. In this suite the humor is either not humor or it is broad farce. The second movement consists of the smooth evolving of a theme which has superficial characteristics of Scottish folk music, mixed up inexplicably with other material in the form of an intermezzo that is oriental in character.

Mr. Chadwick probably had his own ideas and good reasons for inserting this contrasting section, but the reason is not obvious or admissible at a first hearing. The first and third movements of this suite are labored. In the last movement there are occasionally delightful passages, but it is not the opinion of this writer that the composition increases Mr. Chadwick's reputation as a composer.

Sort of Potpourri

Next, Mr. Gilbert's comedy overture—a different story. This overture has 10 times the vitality of the work which preceded it, but, as Mr. Chadwick has dressed to the utmost advantage—at least as far as instrumentation is concerned—things which as a rule are impotent—Mr. Gilbert choking with enthusiasm and sheer musical feeling, has not been entirely happy in welding together the different sections of his overtrue, in balancing and juxtaposing them. It should be remembered that this overture was not originally intended as a concert number. It was conceived as a prelude to an operetta based upon the charming "Uncle Remus" folk-tales of Joel Chandler Harris, and it was—it is, to a certain degree—a potpourri of folk tunes of America. Yet this does not wholly excuse sins of omission and commission. Mr. Gilbert, thanks to Mr. Fiedler's initiative, will hear his music played and he will rapidly gain the faculty of presenting his ideas in their best light.

But it may be said that this work amply sustains Mr. Gilbert in his faith in the availability of the folk music of this country for artistic treatment, and that, in spite of its defects, it appeared to make an excellent impression yesterday. No wonder!

The humor of the opening theme is irresistible; perhaps Mr. Gilbert's hum also, is a little broad in the rollicki imitations of the theme by the bra Yet this ripping humor, and the romar and the real pathos of the theme th used to be sung, according to the co poser, by the stevedores and "rous bouts" on the Mississippi, are exceedin ly potential and worthy of extenc treatment. The composition is burst with the most exuberant life and ener Its laughter is reckless and unpolish its poetry is of haunting sweetness. Th is then the vigorous fugal treatment the first theme in "ragtime" rhythm, a the golden proclamation by the br when the fugue reaches its climax. T is, indeed, a splendid burst, though could be scored with still more splen and sonority. The recapitulation is t ing, but not well proportioned, and as overture stands, there is perhaps op much insistence upon the stirring op ing theme—a theme which might s stand as it is if the rest of the overt were better balanced.

When all is said and done, how Mr. Gilbert has written a piece worthy of a hearing on a symphony gramme. It is always the case that appreciate least what is closest to and so a composer who dares to em a tune of frankly "ragtime" quality lay himself open to censure, but it w be interesting to compare this tune t the best folk-tunes of Europe, which so frequently treated by European c posers, and see which melodies had most inherent strength.

[214]

MONITOR, BOSTON, MASS., FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 1911

IN THE REALMS OF MUSIC

AMERICANS HAVE ORCHESTRAL DAY

Those who in the presence of painters feel obliged to confess they know very little about art should take more time from their business to visit the galleries. A common observer's acquaintance with plenty of good pictures will save anybody the necessity of making such a confession. Those, too, who feel constrained when in the company of musical temperamentalists to disclaim any knowledge of Strauss and Debussy, could in a short time win standing among lay orchestral critics by becoming regular Symphony listeners. We are all self-constituted judges of city architecture and landscape gardening. Almost any man would readily speak his opinion about the beauty of public building or park, even before a state commission of experts, just because familiarity with the city beautiful gives him confidence in his opinions.

Start a man on a course of orchestral listening by taking him to the twenty-second Symphony concert. His respect for the musical reputation of the city and his trust in the engaging comments of the programme book will take him pleasurably through the "Parsifal" prelude. But how will he enjoy the Rachmaninoff tone poem "Todteninsel?" Perhaps much as an old frequenter of Symphony hall enjoys the clatter of a contractor's wagon—qualities, not quantities of sound being compared—in the company of which the exigencies of his daily walking throw him. There is music for some one in "Todteninsel," the new listener will persuade himself, else there would not be so many people of good sense shut up in the same room with it. There is music in the jolting of the gravel-loaded four-wheeler for some one, thinks the temperamental pedestrian, else so many people would not be enclosed in the same narrow street with it.

Have a care during intermission time about pressing the question of Rachmaninoff's merits too hard upon your Symphony guest, else you will surely bring from him the old confession that he has small knowledge of music. Wait until the concert is over and let him talk uninterrogated. He will then take the reins of criticism in his own hands. He will insist that the managers should have compositions by American composers presented oftener. Surely Mr. Chadwick in his piece with four divisions all so different in feeling, and yet so well planned that each helps to make the others interesting, has the advantage of the Russian composer, who refuses to let you know where one chapter of his story ends and the next begins. Furthermore the American, without pretending he can translate into tone the color and action of famous paintings, makes you imagine more things actually happening than the Russian does.

And now you have to answer a disconcerting question. The new listener asks if the last piece on the program, so like military band music, is the kind of selection commonly applauded by Mr. Fiedler's audiences. You are somewhat at a loss to explain why you think it an appropriate work to be performed in the serious company of Wagner and Rachmaninoff, though you come through somehow creditably by making a mild call on your resources of mysticism; you maintain that there is genuine orchestral idea in Mr. Gilbert's little narrative, an unfearing, wholly unpedantic effort at national expression. Conceivable, you add, that Edgar Allan Poe could have written such a score, had musical composition been in his line.

Wagner, prelude of "Parsifal"; Rachmaninoff, "The Island of the Dead," symphonic poem to the picture by A. Bocklin, op. 29; Chadwick, suite symphonique (ms.) first time in Boston; Gilbert, comedy overture on negro themes (ms.) first time in Boston.

THE BOSTON TRAVELER, FRIDAY, APRIL 14

CHADWICK DIRECTS HIS 'SUITE SYMPHONIQUE'

By EDITH BURNHAM.

The Symphony season draws to a close, there being but five more concerts, tomorrow night's concert and those of the two weeks following. Yesterday might also be called Boston day at the Symphony, for two local composers were represented on the programme—George W. Chadwick by his "Suite Symphonique," in E flat major, which won the $700 price awarded by the National Federation of Musical Clubs, recently, and Henry Franklin Belknap Gilbert's "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes." Mr. Chadwick conducted the orchestra in his suite. The first movement, the allegro, is full of light and airy grace, seldom soaring high, but never touching earth. Long sweeps of melodic color fill its atmosphere, and a delicacy and refinement of color and sentiment irradiate it. Mr. Chadwick never descends to the banalities of other American composers, eschewing the common and the tricky, which is the ruin of some of the best of Victor Herbert's music and others of the American school. Mr. Chadwick does, however, show a distinctly American ingenuity in the treatment of his themes, inverting them and turning them over at a new angle, making them always into something new and even more lovely, with the ingenuity of the frugal New England housewife that makes one black silk gown fill the need of several. In the Romanze Mr. Chadwick gives us some of his wonderful song melody, which has made him one of the greatest song writers that America has ever had, and he has augmented it with full, rich orchestration. He deepens the melody at one point with the saxophone, while at another he converts the strings into a romantic choral of fresh, simple beauty, like the fragrance of a newly-opened rose. The Humoreske, following this, is pert and jaunty, the delight of a joke lurking all through it, particularly in the spot where it sounds a few notes of the one truly Yankee tune, and then quickly jumps off from it as if afraid that it might be caught. The finest moment of the suite is in the horn melody of the finale allegro. It is sung by a single horn, and is intensified by the melancholy notes of the stopped horns, with something the same value as Puccini uses the stopped horns for the Minnie motif in his last act of "The Girl." The suite ends in a rollick, when figuration and configuration of themes disport freely. Mr. Chadwick was greeted with great applause.

Mr. Gilbert's "Negro Comedy" was certainly a revelation in simple beauty of the peculiar melancholy heart melodies of the negro. The warm and feeling note of the southern negro was all through them, and the fanciful, grotesque figure of the negro himself cake-walked with freedom and abandon. But more than this, Mr. Gilbert in certain moments took these simple melodies out of the common sphere entirely and elevated them to the realm of thinking, feeling music of a high order—these moments seemed to be the composer's comment, his soul-speculation on what had preceded. Mr. Gilbert was called for and bowed his acknowledgment to the audience.

The other two numbers on the programme were the Parsifal overture of Wagner and Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem "The Island of the Dead." Mr. Fiedler, in the Parsifal overture, gave the audience just a few more of the wonderful moments of Wagner, the orchestra playing into the three great themes of this overture their deep spiritual meaning. The 'cello, in the opening theme of "The Lord's Supper," was full of the note of pending tragedy and sorrow. This instrument, better than any other, can express such a meaning. The Grail motif of Parsifal is more tangible than the Lohengrin Grail music, symbolizing as it does the body and not the spirit of the Saviour; but even then it has subtly interwoven in it the spiritual feeling of the other. Wagner knew so well how to bring his subject close to the gazer's eyes or how to remove it to the sphere of the aurora, where it is half in this world and half in the next. The Belief motif of the Parsifal overture has all the largeness of a great soul in it—the overture was played with its best and fullest meaning.

The Rachmaninoff symphonic poem was just what its name signifies, the "'Island of the Dead." The instrumentation presents perfectly an island entirely barren of human life. Even nature is stifled in its expression, for want of a human soul in its midst, but gradually life and beauty creep into the landscape, the human note of longing and of life is heard in the water that laves the shore of the island and in the occasional sound of creature life. One almost feels the "Creation" take place in this music, for before it closes there is abundance of life—but one feels as if the very earth had gone through the throes of this creation—as if the "Island of the Dead" had suffered its way to life. The "Dies Irae" is the struggle note of the poem.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, APRIL 16, 1911

Symphony Concert To Offer Two Novelties

For his twenty-third program, which will be played on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Mr. Fiedler will have as soloist Madame Corinne Rider-Kelsey, who will sing the Beethoven aria, "Ah, Perfido" and the familiar "Freischutz" aria "How Tranquilly I Slumbered."

Interest in the program, however, will be centered upon the first performance in Boston of the long-expected "Iberia" of Claude Debussy. Earlier in the season Mr. Fiedler played the third of these Images, "Rondes de Printemps."

Another novelty will be a symphonic poem entitled "Athala" (after Chateaubriand), by the American composer Arthur M. Curry. This work is still in manuscript and will then have its first performance anywhere. The other number on the program will be Mendelssohn's overture "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage."

GLOBE—FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 1911

AT THE SYMPHONY.

Rachmaninoff's Tone-Poem Repeated at Concert.

Chadwick and Gilbert Represented by Novelties on Program.

Owing to the fact that today is Good Friday, the 22d public Symphony rehearsal was held yesterday afternoon. The program was as follows: Prelude to "Parsifal," Rathmaninoff's "The Island of the Dead"; Chadwick's Symphonic suite in E-flat major, MSS, first time in Boston, conducted by the composer; Henry F. H. Gilbert's Comedy overture on Negro Themes, MSS, first time in Boston.

Mr Fiedler is to be thanked for the repetition of Rachmaninoff's noble tone-poem. At each hearing it grips the thought and feeling keeper; it penetrates the spirit further; it declares itself a power to exalt the soul higher.

Here is music that is intensely, vitally human; yet it transports one far from the haunts, the pettynesses and the turmoil of men. Here, too, is music that is universal in its reduction of all formulas to the great verities, for it is not easy to listen merely to its technic, yet any men may hear recreated within it and made poignant the great, the serious moments of his life. Its speech transcends that of language or of tongues. Its appeal is searching, unescapable.

There are pages which are awesome, terrifying, stupendous, not by their assault upon the ears, but by the noble seriousness of their emotional thought, shrouded as by a darkly-luminous veil of grave and mystical colors. There are pages that might serve as a dirge for the dead of the nations, whose closed lips had locked away the secrets of great deeds, which had waited for a eulogy and a requiem.

Mr Fiedler made the "Parsifal" impressive and in keeping with the season. Rachmaninoff's music is in no obvious sense religious, either in source or purpose, but over it broods the eternal mystery of infinitude.

Mr Chadwick's suite was played for the first time anywhere by the Philadelphia orchestra at Philadelphia, March 29, at a special concert in honor of the national federation of musical clubs, whose prize of $700 the composition had won.

It is in four movements. Their general temper is one of genial, at times lusty jocundity. There is alleviating venture into sentiment which becomes tender anon, as though to palliate the touches of a frank, even bucolic humor, but which does not seek to explore the depths of tragic passion.

There is a use of sharply pointed and incisive rhythms, even to frequent syncopation, and contrasting rhythms are made a source of vitality. There are but few if any quotations from an exotic or reconstructed scale, unless it be the shimmering descent of elusive chords in the humoresque, wherein the composer perchance pays his respects to Debussy.

Meanwhile he reveals a clever use of contrast which will doubtless hit the mark, for by preceding this whole-tone will-o-the-wisp by a very bald and very American piping and blaring of "Yankee Doodle" he etherealizes the more exquisitely the shimmering and elusive Mr Debussy, and perhaps takes a smart jab in the ribs at Mr Puccini the while, by the lush and fragrant passage which follows, all of which was provocative of merriment in the audience.

The first movement is perhaps the most closely knit in construction, its themes sharper in profile and their development more evenly sustained. The contrasting section gives to the cello a suave melody of warm and ingratiating curve.

The slow movement is frankly, naively songful. The chief theme played yesterday by the cello would be well suited to the haunting voice of the saxophone for which it was intended. The movement is not altogether of childlike unsophistication in its simplicity, for the horn sings a broad and masculine melody, about which the clarinet weaves embellishment with appropriately feminine grace.

Mr Chadwick as conductor appeared to make the orchestra do his bidding with ease. He was applauded during the intermissions and was twice recalled to the platform at the end of the piece.

Mr Gilbert's themes are not expurgated derivations of negro tunes, as are some of Dvorak's, but are the unblushing tunes themselves. They are made to sound with a vigor and tang which should find obedient feet in Georgia, perhaps in Boston, if they had the floor.

There is no particular attempt at development, or at the metamorphosis of figures. Shortly before the enlivening finale, which enlisted the attention of the more august statuery for the first time since the last appearance of Geraldine Farrar in her youth, there was a songful passage vouchsafing more than one leading voice and a rich palette of harmony.

Mrs Gilbert was called to the front by applause. The jaded were seen to leave the hall with a quicker, more elastic step. Anyway, there shall now be no more justice henceforth in the lament for the downtrodden American composer.

Next week the program will be Symphonic Poem, "Athalia," by Arthur M. Curry (of Boston), Debussy's "Iberia," Mendelssohn's "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," overture and aria by Beethoven and Weber ("Der Freischutz"), sung by Mme Corinne Rider-Kelsey.

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 1911

WOMEN LEAD IN CHAMPAGNE RIOTS

Chant Revolutionary Airs and Defy Soldiers as Property Is Sacked.

Epernay, April 13.—Owing partly to the unrelaxing vigilance of 15,000 troops and partly to the vote in the Chamber of Deputies last night, nullifying the action of the Senate with reference to the delimitation of the champagne district, comparative calm now prevails in the Department of Marne, and there is every indication the populace will act with more moderation from this on.

The fury of the wine growers has subsided as suddenly as it rose. The manifestants are now offering no resistance to the troops. The last marauding band from Rilly-la-Montagne, which was marching in the direction of Rheims, was intercepted and broken up by the soldiers before any damage was done.

The leaders of the movement issued a manifesto tonight, appealing to their adherents to await in calm confidence the deliberation of the council of state, to which Premier Monis decided to refer the question. They affirm the incendiarism and pillaging of last night, which they deplore, was the work of a foreign element, composed of anarchists and thieves, who worked in bands in the hope of making profit out of the disturbances they created.

The leaders also say the march to Ay and the subsequent scenes of vandalism were instigated and directed by some unknown persons, who made fraudulent use of the name of the vice president of the Wine Growers' League to induce the people to follow them.

With infantry and dragoons bivouacked throughout the night at almost every village in the champagne district, renewed rioting occurred today. At Vinay the rioters hastily threw up barricades with barrels, cases and debris of all sorts, and succeeded in holding back the advancing troopers, while another group of manifestants armed with torches entered the vast champagne depot.

The mob smashed all the bottles of champagne they could find, wrecked the wine presses and then set fire to the buildings.

Women were foremost in the work of destruction, chanting snatches of revolutionary airs and urging on the men to the work of destroying the wine property. When the troops reached Vinay the women lay down on the roads and defied the cavalry to ride over them. Eventually the troops succeeded in getting control of the situation and dispersed the manifestants.

The government officials assert the work of sacking and burning of wine property was led by criminal elements which are flocking into this region from other districts.

The public prosecutor at daylight this morning proceeded to Ay, a noted champagne depot, where a conflagration started by incendiaries threatened for a time last night to destroy the entire village, and made twenty arrests among the ring leaders of the manifestants.

HERALD, BOSTON, APRIL 16, 1911.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

For his 23d program which will be played on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Mr. Fiedler will have as soloist Mme. Corinne Rider-Kelsey. She will sing Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" and the familiar air from "Der Freischuetz" "How tranquilly I slumbered." There will be the first performance here of the much-discussed "Iberia" by Claude Debussy. Mr. Fiedler earlier in the season produced the third of these "Images," "Rondes de Printemps." "Iberia" was played in New York this season. Another novelty will be a symphonic poem, entitled "Atala" (after Chateaubriand) by Arthur M. Curry. The work is in manuscript and will be performed for the first time. The other piece on the program will be Mendelssohn's overture, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage."

"POPS" AT SYMPHONY HALL.

The usual nine weeks' season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will begin on Monday evening, May 1. They will be given on every evening except Sundays, up to and including Saturday evening, July 1. As last year, the conductors will be Messrs. Gustav Strube and Andre Maquarre. Mr. Strube will conduct the first half of the season and Mr. Maquarre the last. They have in the past year accumulated new music which they feel certain will please the public. The season of Pops last year was the most successful since these concerts were organized, and there is every reason to believe that the coming nine weeks will show an improvement over last year. Full details concerning the plans will be announced in due time.

[215]

TISER, FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 14, 1911

CHADWICK'S NEW SUITE PROVES GREAT SUCCESS

ITS AMERICAN SPIRIT CLEAR AND RECOGNIZABLE

Henry F. Gilbert's Comedy Overture Also Played by the Symphony Orchestra This Week.

By Louis C. Elson.

PROGRAMME.

Wagner—"Parsifal" Prelude.
Rachmaninoff—"The Island of the Dead." Symphonic Poem.
Chadwick—Suite Symphonique.
Henry F. Gilbert—Comedy Overture on Negro Themes.

The concert of yesterday afternoon was remarkable in many respects. It began in the odor of sanctity and ended in the humor of America. The solemn was divided from the playful by ten minutes intermission. We suppose that the "Parsifal" Prelude was upon the programme in view of Eastertide, while Rachmaninoff's sombre "Isle of the Dead" was there to suit to the Good Friday mood, although Wagner's "Char-Freitags Zauber" would have been yet more in line with the climax of the Lenten season and would have been less bombastic.

We do not consider the "Parsifal" Prelude nearly as great as that to the "Meistersinger" or the overtures to the "Flying Dutchman" or "Tannhauser," but the world in general will never look at "Parsifal" through secular spectacles; the work will always derive a fictitious glamour from its religious libretto. When one thinks, however, that Wagner was anything but a believer in the dogmas he was celebrating, one can better understand the indignation of the more honest Nietzsche. Yet everyone may revel in the inspired counterpoint (quite diatonic too) of the Melody of Faith, which is not worn threadbare in the Prelude, as it is in the later parts of the opera. The Prelude received a performance in which just the right loftiness and mystery were blended. But in spite of the spirit of adoration and mystery in the work we cannot but think it an artificial and affected number, although it may be very heterodox to say so.

Rachmaninoff's stately tonal picture fitted well to follow this somewhat exaggerated loftiness, and made a much stronger impression with its repeated hearing.

The impressive rhythm which is carried on as a ground bass and pictures either the sweep of the oars or the ceaseless surge of the waves (probably the former) had a weird power and impressiveness. The long organ-point of the coda increased this picturesque monotony. The work is certainly one of the powerful ones of the modern repertoire, but the gloom of the northern composers is now becoming a well-known effect and requires no further chronicling.

There is, however, something besides gloom in the "Island of the Dead." There is grandeur and sustained power. There are climaxes in it that are as noble as anything in the entire field of modern music.

The work cannot at once appeal to the general public. It was but a minority that kept up persistent applause and recalled Mr. Fiedler. But we feel sure that this wonderful composition will hold its place upon the repertoire, and will yet be recognized as one of the great things that have been created in this generation. The performance was something superb. Mr. Fiedler and his orchestra deserved a whirlwind of applause for the manner in which the work was read and executed. All the instruments did well, but the brasses were especially fine. It was one of the most thrilling of recent interpretations.

When we returned from our customary stroll in the corridor the vein of the performance changed most abruptly. George W. Chadwick does not revel in the growls and sorrows of the Muscovite. His is a hearty, genial American nature, and this speaks forth spontaneously in the Suite Symphonique with which he recently won the $700 prize of the American Federation of Music Clubs, at Philadelphia. At present we may rank Mr. Chadwick as the very head of American composition and certainly the most characteristically American. Let us emphatically say that such music as this composition is far more "American" than all the works which present Indian themes, dug out of research books, which not a single American can recognize. Here we have the clear and recognizable American spirit, and this work should be heard abroad as a proof that our native orchestral works are not merely reflections of German or French thought.

The opening movement is not the most striking of the work, but it is full of energy and power nevertheless. It has a nervous crispness which is national enough. At one point the composer shows that he is not afraid of "rag-time." Why should he be? Ragtime is only extreme syncopation. Beethoven uses it in the slow movement of his sonata, Op. 14, No. 2, and in many other works, and Mr. Chadwick makes much better use of it than Puccini in the figure of Johnson in the Girl who failed in the Golden West. The scoring of this movement and of the entire work is full enough, but not extreme, nor does the composer take an eternity to express himself, as so many moderns do.

The slow movement is a beautiful melody. Mr. Chadwick can, upon occasion, be quite as learned as any composer we possess. His canons for organ show that the most crabbed paths of counterpoint have been thoroughly explored by him. But he has never allowed his learning to hinder him from writing delicious melodies. He does not disdain to write a tune which shall have an antecedent and a consequent phrase and a cadence that shall be according to Richter. If only some of our top-heavy American Wagnerettes would take this to heart we might have more common sense in music.

The chief theme of this Andante Cantabile is as simple and as beautiful as a folk song. There is some obbligato work for solo violin upon the G and D strings which makes a good foil to the principal tune. The velvet-toned Saxophone is prominently used in the melody. This movement won the most applause and it is the most direct and tuneful of the suite.

Then comes a little of the untrammelled American humor.

If any one would like to get the spirit of this native devil-may-care element of our make-up, let him look up Prof. John A. Lomax's "Cowboy Songs" and he will see that Mr. Chadwick's unrestrained rollick is a vein of American life that has not been much exploited as yet, but which is as characteristic as the plantation music which we sometimes consider our only typical "school" of music. Xylophone and triangle are there, and the violinists smite their strings with the back of their bows (coll 'Legno) occasionally. "Yankee Doodle" peeps forth in a most humorous fashion, both in squeaks and growls, and the xylophone gives a "ting-a-ling-a-ling" motive with persistency and effect. The finale is also most energetic. Hugo Wolf once said that the true test of a musical genius lay in the question: "Can he exult?" There is not the least doubt that Mr. Chadwick can and does exult in this work. It is a most spontaneous and characteristic addition to the American repertoire, something that is as native in music as Bret Harte is in literature. He was greeted with much applause when he took the conductor's stand, and with much more at the conclusion of the work, when he was recalled twice, very heartily.

Henry Franklin Belknap Gilbert is a new name in music. It is not yet to be found in the musical encyclopaedias, but he who knoweth all things, we mean Philip Hale of the Programme-book, informs us that he was born in Somerville and is now in Cambridge. This is near enough to Boston for us to claim him as our own.

His overture is allied to the tales of Uncle Remus and is frankly popular and founded on negro rhythms and tunes. Mr. Gilbert plunges into "medias res" at once and gives a startling beginning. There is much reiteration of figures, but scarcely much that can be called development except a fugato which indicates that the plantation had temporarily entered the musical conservatory. The overture was enjoyable, although it suggested the "Pops" rather than the Boston Symphony Concerts. It evoked great applause.

Both the American works were badly placed in coming after the infinite grandeur of Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead."

SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 16, 1911.

More Novelties Announced For Week's Symphony Concerts.

For another novelty Mr Fiedler will play at the Symphony concerts this week, for its first hearing in Boston, Debussy's "Iberia," the second of his three "Images for orchestra," the third of which, "Roundelays of Spring," was performed Nov 25 and 26 last for the first times in Boston. The first of the set, "Gigue Triste," is as yet unpublished.

The new suite was played under Mr Pierne at the Colonne concerts, Paris, for the first times, Feb 20 and 27, 1910. It was played for the first time in America by the Philharmonic society, New York, Jan 3 last. There are three movements: 1, "In the Streets and by the Wayside"; 2, "The Odors of the Night"; 3, "The Morning of a Fete Day."

The piece is not "program" music. The purpose of Debussy's titles is said to be the quickening of the hearer's imagination to a sensing of Spanish environment.

Another Boston composer will be heard in the person of Arthur M. Curry, whose "Athalia," a symphonic poem in MSS. after Chateaubriand, will be performed for the first time. Mr Curry studied the violin with Franz Kneisel, and has had an orchestral tone poem performed at the Worcester festival.

The closing orchestra number will be Mendelssohn's overture, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage."

Mme Corinne Rider-Kelsey, that admirable soprano who is acquainted with the art of song, will sing as solo-ist, Beethoven's aria, "Ah Perfidio" and the aria "How Tranquilly I Slumbered" from "Der Freischutz."

Symphony Hall "Pops" Will Begin Monday, May 1.

The usual nine weeks season of pop concerts in Symphony hall will begin Monday evening, May 1, and will be given every evening, except Sundays, up to and including Saturday evening, July 1. As last year the conductors will be Messrs Gustav Strube and Andre Maquarre. Mr Strube conducting the first half of the season and Mr Maquarre the last.

Both of the conductors have in the past year accumulated a lot of new music, which they feel certain will please the public. The season of "pops" last year was the most successful since these concerts were organized, and there is every reason to believe that the coming nine weeks will show an improvement over last year.

HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1911

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC GIVEN

Performed in Symphony Hall by Cecilia Society and Symphony Orchestra.

LIKE RELIGIOUS SERVICE

Reverent Applause Shows the Appreciation of the Large Audience.

By PHILIP HALE.

Bach's Passion Music according to Matthew (not St. Matthew, as stated by the program) was performed last night in Symphony Hall by the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Mr. Fiedler. The solo singers were Mmes. Marie Zimmerman, Alice Bates Rice, Janet Spencer and Messrs. Hamlin, Bispham and Cartwright. J. P. Marshall was the organist and Malcolm Lang the pianist. A chorus of boys from Emmanuel Church selected and trained by Weston S. Gale assisted. There was a very large audience and many stood.

It is unnecessary to say that the whole work was not performed. A performance of the whole would necessitate, as in the past, two concerts with a long intermission. When selections are made there are some who miss this aria or that choral. Some are always disappointed, as others are when they run through an anthology.

A performance of Bach's Passion Music on Good Friday is in the nature of a religious service. It is heard reverently and criticism seems out of place. To some Bach is a fetish, and this music, performed on any day, without special stress laid on the sacred character of the text, and judged only as music, is a colossal masterpiece, a work of plenary inspiration. To others the chorals are beautiful and the final chorus wonderful, while the great majority of the recitatives are angular and dull, and many of the arias are mere formalism wholly devoid of religious sentiment. And to them certain figures in the well tempered Clavichord, as those in E major and in E flat major, have a far more devotional spirit.

While some believe the Passion Music to be the true expression of the text, others regard it as Gothic and find more religious expression and a deeper and sublimer spirit of devotion in the music written for the church by Italians and Spaniards of the 16th century. It may be said, and justly, that the Passion Music of Bach should not be heard outside of a church or cathedral; that it loses in character when it is performed in a concert hall, brilliantly lighted and without religious atmosphere. The performances in the church of the Moravians in Bethlehem, Pa., necessitated a pilgrimage. The village was quiet and remote. The chorus was so thoroughly drilled that it sang without notes. The congregation joined in the chorals. The performance was indeed a religious service and the chorus was as it were consecrated for its work—to say task would be to imply that the singers were conscious of laborious endeavor. Heard with these surroundings, Bach's music must have made a far different impression on the visiting strangers than when they heard it performed as any oratorio or cantata in a concert hall, and in what might be called concert form.

It is enough to say of the performance last night that it was listened to with the utmost attention by the great audience. Applause was manifestly out of place after any chorus, choral, air or recitative, however greatly the hearers may have been disposed to show appreciation of the singers; but at the end of the first part there was applause, not boisterous, but hearty and sincere. The solo singers had been carefully chosen, and they are widely known as students and exponents of Bach's style. Their task was an arduous one, and much of the music allotted to them was ungrateful.

There are many difficulties to be considered in the preparation of the Passion music, and some of the problems are still unsolved. The experiment was recently made in England of substituting a spinet for the piano in the accompaniment of the Evangelist's recitatives; but it is said that the tone of the spinet did not carry. There is still a dispute over the English text, whether that by Miss Johnston is not after all the best. At the Leeds festival, last fall, Sir Charles Stanford went back to her translation and was therefore praised. Then there are questions of instruments, of the dynamic force appropriate to this chorus, or that choral, and others that are still perplexing. It is not likely that a modern audience would be satisfied were it to hear the music as it was performed in St. Thomas's Church, Leipsic, on Good Friday, 1729.

[216]

GLOBE—SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1911.

ST MATTHEW PASSION

Given by Cecilia Society and Symphony Orchestra.

Mr Bispham Distinguished Both as Singer and Interpreter.

The Cecilia society and the Boston Symphony orchestra gave a performance of Bach's St Matthew Passion Music at Symphony hall last night. The soloists were Mmes Marie Zimmerman and Alice Bates Rice, Miss Janet Spencer, George Hamlin, David Bispham and Earl Cartwright. There was a chorus of boys from Emmanuel church, selected and trained by Weston Gales. Mr Marshall was at the organ and Malcolm Lang at the piano. Mr Fiedler conducted.

Every seat in the hall had been disposed of. It was not altogether easy to perceive the temper of the audience by obvious signs, although there was some attempt at hand-clapping.

There should be, and doubtless is, an informing spirit pervading a large body of people when truly moved that would make it possible to detect rapt contemplation or the experience of a profound, if quiet, emotion, by other sources of sensibility than by applause.

Applause is incongruous and illtimed at a rendering of this music. It pleads for sobriety of thought, for an appreciation of a certain sweet and chaste austerity of style, and furthermore for singers who know something of the dignity of its school, and of the true sublimity of its spirit.

Interpretive Power.

The performance last night disclosed at times excellent singing by the chorus, but was notable chiefly for the singing of Mr Bispham, both in the beauty of song and in the power of interpretation.

The would-be singer of dramatic moods today appears to be thinking less and less of the true sovereignty of tonal emission, of vocal craftsmanship in general and of the ability to take a musical phrase, a line of melodic thought, sculptured as clearly as though in marble, to expend labor, intelligence and art upon it and to endow it with a serene, a purifying loveliness in which the mind and the soul may bathe.

The equipment of the average concert singer is inadequate to both the construction and the import of this music. It is unequal to the continence, the majesty, the repose, the sweet and cool abstinence from excess and intrusion, from broken lines, from the obvious or the artificial in any form.

In Mr Bispham we had last night a survivor from that school of singers whose members learned to expend care upon the craftsmanship of song, the control of the breath, the cultivation of overtone, the use of color in vowels and of accent in consonants, the ability to mold a phrase as a unit of thought and to saturate the significant words within it with their true emphasis and individuality.

Such singing as Mr Bispham offered may serve as a model, not wholly because of sheer beauty of tone, and he was in unusually good voice, nor wholly because he vitalized and preached the text, but because of both. The pity was he had not more to do. The humanness of the Christ in his pleading in the garden, the compassion for the weakness of the disciples, the agonized cry upon the cross were a few of the pages which the singer made memorable.

Mr Cartwright, too, gave a dramatising, a communicating intensity to certain of the few and scattering utterances of Peter and of Pilate, which he sang, phrases that had distinction.

The narrator's task is most ungrateful. Bach wrote for a tenor voice as for a viol d'amore. The part lies high continually and often without dramatic necessity. Mr Hamlin tended to favor the notes of G and A, but with good warrant. He sang with confidence and in the air "He will not speak," and in the narrator's repetition of the death cry, he distinguished between the styles of recitative and aria.

The singing of the soprano and alto solo parts was disappointing. Mrs Zimmerman possesses a certain brilliance in the upper register, but she was tremulous of voice, and often insecure in the part and the pitch. Miss Spencer sang invariably flat, and both gave little evidence of knowledge of style. Mrs Rice sang the few measures acceptably.

Chorus Performed Creditably.

The qualities essential for the singers in their interpretation are the more needful for conductor. The chorus performed the difficult music creditably, and often beautifully, in the more sustained passages, as in the last of the five appearances of Bach's favorite choral, but the entrances in the dramatic choruses were often halting and insecure and Mr Fiedler's conducting disclosed no marked sympathy or power to produce unified interpretative effects.

The performance of this music at least will remind the world that whereas Bach is celebrated as a contrapuntist, he was in advance of some moderns as a dramatist, in the use of an emphasizing, responsive second chorus in the distinction between recitative and ariosa in the words of Christ, and in the accompaniment of a string orchestra always to be found with them. This music should be revived—but in the spirit.

BACH FOR GOOD FRIDAY

A PERFORMANCE OF THE MATTHEW PASSION-MUSIC

The Contrasting Moods of the Audience—The Difficulties That Beset It, the Singers and the Music Nowadays—Mr. Fiedler's Condensed Version—The Airs and the Orchestral Part—The Chorals That Animated the Performance—The Chorus and Its Work—The Share of the Narrator and of the Individualized Voices—The Obstacles in the Way of Full Expression for the Music

NOWADAYS, perhaps, appreciation of Bach's Passion-Music, whether it follow the narrative of Matthew or of John is primarily a matter of mood. To those that regarded the performance of the Passion-Music according to Matthew, last evening in Symphony Hall, as a religious exercise appropriate to Good Friday and constrained by circumstance into a concert-room instead of a church, there is nothing to be said, except to envy them their point of view. There were many such in the house; many had come indeed from no other motive and with no other expectation. At the end of the first part and of the whole concert, their presence made the applause hesitating as though the applauders were not quite sure whether their clapping was in place; and there was curious suggestion of a performance of the Passion-Music as a quasi-religious ceremony in the black dresses that Mrs. Zimmerman and Miss Spencer, of the solo singers, wore. Now religious ceremonies are not subjects for review in the critical departments of newspapers and the reviewer may only address himself to those that came like him to hear the music. Before the concert, as they regarded it, and through it they also needed to exercise their imagination persistently and vigorously.

For Bach's setting of Matthew's narrative of the death of Jesus was not designed for performance in the spring of 1911 by an orchestra and a choral society, in the course of their regular concerts in a familiar and a highly secular concert-room. The Passion-Music was a part of the service on Good Friday in the Thomas-Church at Leipzig, of which Bach was the organist and choirmaster. At certain places in the music, there was pause for the part of the clergy in the service; while Bach's whole design assumed the presence of a congregation apart from the choir of the sanctuary. That choir unfolded the narrative as vividly and dramatically as Bach could write music for it. The choir even expressed the more intimate and poignant emotions that the telling might evoke in a bystander that heard and saw and yet had received the Christian teachings and faith of the ages. The congregation little by little entered into these emotions and when the time was meet for responsive utterance they sang their chorals. Thus, those immediately concerned in the narrating of the Crucifixion were quite apart from those that listened and were stirred, and the purpose of the whole service was primarily churchly. The surroundings, however familiar, were bound to make atmosphere; the voice of the narrator, the voice of Jesus, the interjections and ejaculations of the chorus, the awed or pitying comment of the bystanders, all proceeding from the choir in the sanctuary while Bach led his little band of stringed and wind instruments or wove his accompaniments to the recitative, must obviously be one thing as parts of a church service on the most solemn fast day of the year, and quite another on the naked and glaring platform of a concert-hall, sung by singers and played by an orchestra in the evening clothes of 1911. Fortunate those who could substitute for the mood that these conditions evoked the mood of Bach's congregation in 1729.

Obviously, then, a performance of the Passion-Music nowadays must limp. If the music is to be performed at all, it can seldom be sung in connection with a church service or with the service for which Bach intended it—the only conditions in which it keeps its true voice, proportions and environment. If it is to be performed "in its entirety," a world busy with many other things, even on a Good Friday, must be asked to give an afternoon and an evening to the hearing of it. The risk is perilous; and conductors prefer a condensed version that shall bring the performance within two hours and a half or three, and that is necessarily fatal to some of the proportions and the contrasts of the music. The conductor may out the recitatives that carry forward the narrative, the airs of the solo singers that comment upon it or express its intimate emotions or the choral responses of the congregation — undistinguishable in the concert room, except by their form, matter and designation for the participation of the same chorus in the progress of the narrative. Whatever he cuts, he will be blamed.

Mr. Fiedler chose to be severe with the airs, to be sparing with the chorals, but to retain with sufficient coherence, march and fulness the narrative of the betrayal and the crucifixion of Jesus. When he did retain the airs, he made no cuts in them. He kept them the airs "da capo" that Bach wrote in the fashion of his time, by which to all intents and purposes each air was sung thrice. Whatever the intrinsic beauty or the emotional suggestion of the music, these repetitions are grievously monotonous to the ears of an audience in 1911, which, with the best will in the world, cannot return to a dull musical fashion so academic that even with two centuries on its head it does not sound even quaint. No conductor hesitates nowadays to cut the arias "da capo" of Händel; he himself sometimes abbreviated the form. There is no obvious reason, unless it be in the precedent that makes the Passion-Music a ritual, why Bach's similar airs should not be cut. Besides, they were not too expressively sung last evening by Mrs. Zimmerman and Miss Spencer, experts as they are presumed to be in the music. They lacked due sense of [illegible] and large melodic line, they could not sufficiently diversify it; and they and the true pitch were often and long at odds.

Again, Bach wrote the orchestral part of the Passion-Music for a little band of strings and wood-winds that emerge after Franz's retouching of the score as violins, violas, violoncellos, double basses, flutes, oboes, clarinets and bassoons, and once the kettle-drums. Bach had his organ and his harpsichord (for the recitatives of the narrator) as Mr. Fiedler had his organ and his pianoforte. To hear the music is to appreciate throughout Bach's feeling for the emphasizing, the dramatizing, the pictorial, the commenting, the generally enhancing and expressive possibilities of his orchestra. Since the means by which he could make those strokes are meagre, they are often necessarily small—the merest suggestion. Yet often how imaginative and how telling, once the ear becomes accustomed to the little orchestra, they are! What feeling, for example, Bach had for the beauty and the significance of the tone of the wood-winds, for the nearly infinite suggestion of which the tone of the strings is capable! With all our advance in instrumentation, the eighteenth-century composers searched out the secrets of the oboe and the flute as have none that have come after them.

Yet the pervading impression to many a young ear that heard the Passion-Music last evening was of the thinness and the monotony of the orchestral part. It was as though it were only half articulate. Why, then, should not the Passion-Music be retouched orchestrally by an adept, understanding and sympathetic hand? It is quite true that the purists will foam at the mouth at such suggestions, and in all probability they will leap into the air at the further suggestion that no man is so fit for the task as Mr. d'Indy. He is rare among composers in the possession of a truly religious mind, a genuinely devout temperament, and, as his revisions of Rameau's operas have proved, he is delicately sensitive to the substance and the spirit of the music of the eighteenth century. As it was, last evening Mr. Fiedler doubled instruments and rearranged the seating of his orchestral choirs, but to no apparent enhancing results. The quality of tone of the wood-winds was beautiful to hear; Mr. Maquarre with his flute and Mr. Longy with his oboe caught the very voice of Bach; but the strings, as it seemed, might have been more pliant.

The choruses, when they came, animated the performance, but they would have animated it still more had the choir been far more numerous and had the men in it been less hesitating in attack, more sure of their phrasing and better grounded generally in their music. The women of the Cecilia are its glory. The men, the winter through, have not been creditable to it and have often hampered and blurred its performances. Bach uses his chorus dramatically when he makes it fling its interjections into the narrative. "Barabbas" shouts the chorus when the grave Roman master of the Jerusalem mob asks whom he shall deliver to them. "Let him be crucified," it cries when he asks what shall be done to this Jesus. Even in the reticent idiom, as it now seems, of the eighteenth century and in church, Bach has made these ejaculations dramatically eloquent. Mr. Fiedler did his best to heighten that eloquence but the chorus, in numbers generally and in the deficiency of its male voices, lacked the declamatory power, the impassioned tone that the music demands.

Bach wrote more reticent, more personal music than Händel. Händel's oratorios, "sacred" as tradition now makes them, are often showy pieces for large and sumptuous performance. Bach wrote his Passion-Music for the ear and the spirit of intimate personal faith. They believed as they heard and sang in the Thomaskirche and Jesus of Nazareth was crucified that he might be their personal Saviour. No one that can discriminate would have Bach's choruses sound like Händel's; but they need more body, more eloquence than the Cecilia could bring to them last night. Händel's move in majestic vocal line and structure. Bach's are of an affecting or a dramatizing beauty. Of course, the distinction between the chorals of the congregation and the choruses of the narrating choir lay only in the music last night, but it was in the singing of these chorals that the Cecilia, with the boys of the Emmanuel Church, gained a very rare beauty of tone, a large simplicity of utterance, an unforced and contemplative sincerity that were of the true voice and spirit of Bach's musical congregation. It had heard and was moved; and it expressed its emotions very honestly, simply and beautifully. These chorals are indeed the voice of the people, as the prayer-book says, made music by a composer who could look in their hearts and write.

It is the custom to rebuke the composers of our time because they sometimes treat the human voice as though it were merely another instrument added to their orchestra. In the music that Bach wrote for the narrating evangelist, they have an illustrious and a classic predecessor. He must bear the whole burden of the narrative, except as the voice of Jesus or the occasional voices of Judas or of Pilate become parts of it. He has naught but the chords of the harpsichord—a pianoforte yesterday—to sustain him. Bach wrote this narrative for a tenor voice, but he clearly thought of it as a sublimated viola. He keeps this tenor insistently in the upper ranges of his voice. He bids him traverse intervals that Berlin and Paris in these days can hardly make more exacting. Under these conditions, he sets him to the declaiming of a narrative every word of which should be "understanded of the people," that is poignant simplicity itself, that is charged and surcharged with an emotion so deep and so sincere that it seems unconscious of itself. The English text of the Passion-Music is not the text to the King James's version, but no translator can much lessen the simplicity, the power, the beauty of Matthew's narrative of the betrayal and the death of Jesus. It summons the scene, the voices, the actions. There is sense of a great, a divine tragedy in the telling, yet how humanly it is told. The artistry of inspiration vivifies, glorifies it.

Mr. Hamlin sang the music of the narrator yesterday; Mr. Bispham, the words of Jesus; and Mr. Cartwright the incidental speeches that fall to Judas and to Pilate. Here in America, there is none but Mr. Hamlin who can so sing it, with a voice that endures for two hours this relentless tax upon its upper ranges, that is capable of the exacting intervals, that can keep the diction clear and that can give the narrative simple and sincere emotion without inflating it into the sentimentality, the exaggerated vowel sounds and final cadences of the oratorio dialect. Into that unhappy and unhuman speech, Mr. Bispham from excess of zeal did often fall. He understands that Bach's music to modern ears requires much expressive aid, that it is better to make it significant and moving than to treat it with a dull and methodical deference. He knows how to vary the vocal line significantly, to enhance the phrase, to color the emphasis. But he overdid last night; too often he made what should be simple sound stilted, and excess as well as deficiency of emotion has its perils, even to singing insistently flat. Mr. Cartwright was nearer the golden mean. He kept to Bach's large simplicity, yet he made the words of Judas and of Pilate eloquent of the divine tragedy. Yet at bottom Mr. Bispham was right. Bach's Passion-Music, if it is to stir the emotions of an audience of 1911 in the concert-room as it stirred the congregation in the Thomaskirche in 1729, must be emphasized, dramatized. It must be made articulate to new ears and new spirits in new conditions. The difficulty is to find the way. Mr. Hamlin's and Mr. Cartwright's declamation, the singing of the chorals, the voice of the wind instruments in the orchestra pointed it last night.

H. T. P.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Debussy's "Iberia" for the First Time—Mr. Curry's "Atala" for Another New Piece — Mrs. Kelsey to Sing with the Symphony Orchestra — "The Creation" by the Haendel and Haydn Society

ORCHESTRAL and choral music—the Symphony Orchestra and the Händel and Haydn Society—will divide the new week. At the regular Symphony Concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the outstanding item of the programme is Debussy's new "Image" for orchestra, "Ibéria," music of Spanish picturing through the composer's peculiar eyes and ears, to be heard here for the first time. Another novel piece will be Mr. Arthur Curry's tone-poem, "Atala"; and Mrs. Rider-Kelsey, now and for long an ornament of American concert-rooms, will be the singer. Tomorrow evening the Händel and Haydn Society, for its annual concert on Easter Sunday, will perform Haydn's oratorio, "The Creation," unheard here for six years. Mr. Mollenhauer, of course, will conduct, and the solo singers, Mrs. Williams and Messrs. Miller and Martin, are capable of the music.

/ / + / /

Symphony Hall: Symphony Concerts

DEBUSSY'S "Ibéria," the more important new piece that Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra will play next week, was originally performed in Paris fourteen months ago. It is the second and the longest of the three "Images" for orchestra that Debussy has long had in hand. The third, "Rondes de Printemps" has been published and was played last November. The first, "Gigue Triste," is still unpublished and unplayed. "Ibéria" has already been heard in New York under Mr. Mahler, and the piece was of the striking "novelties" of the present season that Mr. Fiedler has been compelled to defer until he had time for the exacting preparation the music requires. "Ibéria" runs in three divisions: "Along the By-ways and the Streets," "Odors of Night," and "Morning of a Fete day," and between the second and third there is no pause. The music, described in this place a year ago, is of Debussy's present matured style. It is of stouter body and more outspoken voice than his earlier pieces. The general musical design is firmer; the melodic contour clearer. Yet the music is intrinsically of Debussy in its juxtaposition of phrases, its transitions, progressions, and harmonic and instrumental coloring. Indeed he has carried both his orchestral imagination and his orchestral idiosyncrasies farther in "Ibéria" than he has in much of the music that preceded it. In Paris, the piece was variously received. The original generation of "Debussyites" believed it inferior to his earlier music. The newer generation heard his present maturity in it.

The other novel piece is "Atala," a symphonic poem suggested by Chateaubriand's like-named romance and written by a resident composer, whose music has not hitherto been heard at the Symphony Concerts, Mr. Arthur Curry. "Atala" is one of the romances of the Mississippi Valley in which Chateaubriand professes to describe with luxuriant imagination and word the life of a primitive folk there. Few read it nowadays; yet it is not without Chateaubriand's opulence of description and divining insight. Mr. Curry has certainly gone far afield for his "literary material." The familiar orchestral piece is Mendelssohn's overture of the Calm Sea and the Lively Voyage; and Mrs. Kelsey will sing Beethoven's dramatic air "Ah! Perfido!" and an air from Agatha's music in Weber's "Der Freischütz." In both, she excels, and it is long since she has been heard at the Symphony Concerts.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC FINELY PRESENTED

CECILIA-SYMPHONY CONCERT NOTEWORTHY

Chorus and Orchestra in Good Proportion and Soloists in Excellent Voice—Masterly Interpretation.

By Louis C. Elson.

The cast: Mrs. Marie Zimmerman, soprano; Miss Janet Spencer, contralto; Mr. George Hamlin, tenor; Mr. David Bispham, baritone; Mrs. Alice Bates Rice, soprano; Mr. Earl Cartwright, bass; Mr. Marshall, organ, and Mr. Lang, piano. Chorus of 175. Orchestra of 100. Boy Choir of 50.

That is a good proportion for Bach's vocal-orchestral works, a chorus not very much larger than the orchestra. The master had even a less proportion of singers when he directed his own works. The orchestral parts must be brought into greater prominence than is generally the case when our great modern choral societies give a Bach work. The auditor is prone to follow the voices rather than the orchestral counterpoint and thus loses a large part of Bach's musical message.

The work was not given entire last night—it very seldom is. Two centuries ago musical audiences craved length and repetition, and this work, and the "Messiah", are flagrant instances of tonal prolixity. Given complete the Passion Music, St. Matthew Version, takes about four hours and 30 minutes for its performance. Even in the abbreviated performance the work makes some demands upon the patience of the auditor. One must put oneself into the proper attitude towards the oratorio to really appreciate it in its entirety. One must recall that it was not intended for a concert, but was to be regarded as a Church service at the holiest season of the year. Heard in the sacred edifice, with all its proper surroundings, even the dull numbers of this oratorio would make a different impression from that given in Symphony Hall.

The honest auditor, who does not bend before Bach in mere fetich worship, will probably confess that there are moments of dullness in the Passion Music. These are chiefly in some of the solos and recitatives. Bach was not a dramatic composer. Handel was, in this, his very opposite, and some of his solos reach an operatic power of dramatic effect, even in oratorio. Again, the old "Da Capo" form of aria, with its literal and long repetition, is thoroughly antipathetic to the spirit of the 20th century. When Handel uses this form in its greatest length and rigidity, as in "He Was Despised," or "The Trumpet Shall Sound," we cut the Gordian knot and leave out the entire second and third parts of the form. But in Bach this is not so easy of accomplishment, and we generally get the arias in their entirety, much to the disadvantage of the soloists.

Of the soloists the tenor is handled the most mercilessly, his recitatives being almost constantly in high register and of quite trying modulations. Therefore one may speak of George Hamlin first and give to him the greatest credit. It takes more than a singer to give the part of the Evangelist, it requires a good musician, and we cannot recall any of those who have sung this part in Boston in the past (Ben Davies, Wm. H. Rieger, etc.) who did as well as Mr. Hamlin in the trying and thankless recitatives. In the few solos he had some recompense and in "Oh Grief, here throbs the racked and bleeding Heart," with its flute and oboe da Caccia (English horn) obbligato, there was beauty as well as skill displayed, and the chorus here formed a noble background to the solo. In "I'll watch with my dear Jesu," he was not so perfect in phrasing.

Since we have mentioned the obbligato effect here we may at once add that the many obbligato effects scattered through the work were in every case most excellently done by the soloists. The flutes against the alto solo, "Grief and Pain", the violin in the alto solo, "Oh Pardon me My God", (finely played by Mr. Witek,) the two English horns and flute in "From Love unbounded", and many other effects might be cited to show the excellence of the orchestral support.

Of course in effects of larger combination there was less to interest, at least as regards tone color, but the rich counterpoint made ample amends for the simple orchestral scoring of Bach's time, simple even when added to by Robert Franz. And when the chorus was added to the forces then Bach was glorified and every music lover was exalted. There is nothing in the entire repertoire of music more noble and uplifting than the first and last choruses of this work. "Come ye Daughters, weep for anguish", began the concert grandly, and here the 50 boys' voices from Emmanuel Church gave good account of themselves. The final chorus, "Around Thy tomb here sit we weeping", was equally great, and here we find that calm, serene melodic power which allies Bach's music to the loftiest Hellenic poetry. Compare this with Gounod's Theme of Redemption to appreciate the difference between diamond and paste.

The chorales, too, were majestic, and were accompanied with organ, as was done when Bach directed in the Thomas Kirche.

TIGHT BINDING

...ONITOR, BOSTON, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1911

IN THE REALMS OF MUSIC

BACH'S "PASSION" SUNG.

Mendelssohn revived the singing of Bach's oratorios nearly a century ago and gave them a place in the concert repertory which they hold firmly, despite all progress in the vocal and orchestral departments of composition. The success of Bach's "Passion" music today, with its old contrapuntal writing, which only the profoundest students comprehend, should be a challenge to composers to take the subject of this oratorio and treat it in the choral and orchestral language of today. The vitality of Bach's "Matthew" music for an audience which may be supposed to know much about Strauss and to have, perhaps, some share in shaping present musical tendencies, should make somebody wish to create for modern orchestra and chorus an enfranchised type of religious expression.

Composers doubtless can see their way to the technical accomplishment of such a task. But the question of technique is the least part of it all. In what style of solo vocal line, instrumental color, tone massing and coloring to declare the gospel narrative; in what general scheme of structure to cast the story, are the seemingly insoluble problems.

We readily confess, when we hear Cecilia Society and Symphony orchestra, and with them such competent associates as Mmes. Zimmerman and Spencer and Messrs. Hamlin and Bispham, interpret the "Matthew Passion," that the musical style of a great part of it is Greek to us, that the English text for the most part fits awkwardly with the notes, that only a few hymn tunes and some choruses having melody developed from the congregation-sung tune seem in the slightest degree contemporary with us. And yet we respond at every measure to feeling genuinely expressed; to sentiment universally, permanently expressed. We are aware of standing before a masterpiece of painting, one that lives by the nobility, the strength of its purpose; one that we understand at sight, regardless of its antiqu formulas of workmanship.

Mr. Fiedler in conducting the "Matthew Passion" on Friday evning adjusted the quaint German s...e to his twentieth century American means of interpretation with a tact which is his peculiar gift. If the Cecilia singers did not thank him after the concert was over for restoring to them their rank as a musical power in the community of Boston, they do not know what gratitude is. Mr. Fiedler showed himself the same master of difficult choral rendering that he has twice shown himself in performances of Beethoven's ninth symphony. He chose the passages on which he should lay stress and those which he should slight with the taste that only a Teuton master, one of extraordinarily wise musicianship, at that, could have.

The "Passion music" was a searching test of the powers of the tenor and bass soloists in reciting English. In this connection a thing more remarkable, perhaps, to meditate upon than Mr. Hamlin's efficiency in reading the narration and Mr. Bispham's in reading the words of Jesus, was the effect the work of these two men must have on the whole question of the national speech as declaimed in song. These artists by their example are laying the foundations of an authoritative singing of the American vernacular. Music mechanically adapted to English syllables were more desirable, possibly, than Bach's recitatives of the "Passion" for the two exemplars of a new art to appear to good advantage; and at the same time better music than this would be hard to find, because of its association with familiar scriptural text. English as sung by tenor and bass on Friday night necessarily will be long retained by listeners in memory and guarded there as a standard; and for that reason Mr. Hamlin and Mr. Bispham may be said to have decided for Bostonians for the time being just where they stand on an important, pressing question of art.

...RANSCRIPT. MONDAY, APRIL 17, 19...

It is a pity that Mr. Fiedler should have let excess of zeal so far master his better judgment as it did in his conducting of Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead" at the Symphony Concert of Saturday night. By every sign that the music itself gives, by every recollection of the composer's own conducting of it—and he is a very able conductor—the music should be kept low-voiced. It should suggest the repose of the dead in the isle of stillness and only the mysterious stirrings of their spirits. There is repose in the music, and contemplation, and whisper—monotony even. Yet Mr. Fiedler would have it large, eloquent, highly accented. He kept emphasizing, where repression was better and where it certainly was the composer's way. Of ccurse the music sounded, but it did not, as it should, search the listener's heart and touch his spirit. Rightly, on the other hand, was Mr. Fiedler as brilliant and incisive as he could be with Mr. Gilbert's "Nigger" overture. It gained by such a performance and again the audience lingered to call the composer to the stage.

...MONITOR, BOSTO...

...PRIL, 20, 1911

DEBUSSY SENDS INSTALMENT.

Debussy's "Iberia," which will be played in Boston for the first time at the Symphony concerts of April 21 and 22, is the second part of the orchestral group "Images," which is coming to us one division at a time. "Rondes des Printemps," the third of the group, was performed in Boston in November. The first division will be sent us some fair day, as will the composer's operas on Poe's stories, promised for New York production two years ago.

...ERALD, THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1911.

...Corinne Rid...r-Kelsey, soprano, ... the soloist at the concerts of ...ston Symphony orchestra tomor... afternoon and Saturday evening, ...ill sing arias by Beethoven and ... Mr. Curry's symphonic poem, ..." will be performed for the first ... and Debussy's brilliant "Iberia" ... performed for the first time in ...

POST, SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1911

BACH "PASSION" MUSIC SUNG

Cecilia Society, Boy Choir and Symphony Join

BY OLIN DOWNES

J. S. Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew" was performed by the Cecilia Society and the Symphony Orchestra, assisted by a chorus of boys from Emmanuel Church, who had been selected and trained by Weston S. Gates, and various soloists, John P. Marshall, organist, and Malcolm Lang as pianist. Mr. Fiedler conducted. The soloists were Mrs. Marie Zimmerman, Mrs. Alice Bates Rice, Miss Janet Spencer, George Hamlin, David Bispham, Earl Cartwright. It is good to say that the excellent enterprise of the Cecilia Society, in finishing its season with this monumental work, so difficult to perform and so seldom heard, was rewarded by an audience that packed the hall to its capacity, some standing in the aisles and a number being turned away after the sale of the last ticket. It was Good Friday night, so that the performance was especially in season.

The soloists were well selected. The chorus, numerous as it was, was under good control, and the voices of the boys added materially to the effect of the work. Each, as well as lesser men, was trammelled to a certain extent by the traditions of his time, so that many of his recitatives are stiff and strained today, and many of his devices, such as the delightfully naive setting of the speeches of Jesus, are entirely antiquated. But under the shell there is at least a great deal of music that seems written for all time. The chorales are as mighty and as rich and sonorous as they ever were, as monumental in the expression of great thoughts of life and death. The final chorus will always be one of the most impressive in existence.

Some passages of the work are very modern and dramatically very effective, such as the chorus which follows the duet of the soprano and alto in the first part: "Ye lightnings, ye thunders, in clouds are ye vanished." The work is indeed monumental, but it is to be feared that this generation is more rapid than Bach's, and far more desirous of musical food as concentrated as the various essences extracted for the good of modern nerves and muscles. So when the "Matthaus Passion" is performed, it might be best for it and for the audience if there were frequent "cuts," and if but one part of the work, inconclusive though it might be, were heard at a single concert.

The performance, as far as one might judge from a stupendous work not as well known as more recent and less important music—the last performance of the "Matthew Passion" was in 1902—was of high general excellence, and a worthy conclusion of what has developed into a successful season. Nearly all of the soloists fulfilled their difficult tasks with unusual sincerity and musicianship. Both Mr. Hamlin, Mr. Bispham and Mr. Cartwright enunciated the English text very clearly. Mr. Hamlin made his lines very musical and very expressive, even when they were not inherently so. Mr. Bispham sang broadly and sonorously and beneficently, as he always does.

Mr. Cartwright gave a superb vocal performance as far as his fragmentary passages permitted. Mme. Zimmerman displayed to advantage her knowledge of the traditions of the great old music. Miss Spencer was well received. There was the most cordial appreciation throughout on the part of the audience.

GLOBE—THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1911

Mme Corinne Rider-Kelsey will be the soloist at the Symphony concerts this week. The program will include compositions by Debussy and Arthur M. Curry, played for the first times here.

BOSTON SUNDAY POST, APRIL 16, 1911

SYMPHONY'S ENCOURAGEMENT OF YOUNG NATIVE COMPOSERS

New Compositions by Chadwick, Gilbert and Curry Within a Week—The Life and Virility of Some of the New Music

The Symphony concerts of last Thursday night and yesterday evening were significant in more than one way. Mr. Fiedler constructed a programme which contrasted two of the most representative compositions of modern European music, the prelude to "Parsifal" and Rachmaninoff's great tone-poem, "The Isle of the Dead," with two compositions by American composers, the first work the creation of a composer who has done much to establish this country as a land where important musical development is in progress, and the second by one of the young generation, whose music was heard for the first time on a Symphony programme.

The compositions by Wagner and Rachmaninoff were very effectively interpreted, and one had occasion, anew, to marvel at the refinement of their spirit and the magnificent art with which the composers expressed themselves—such art, such mastery, as may hardly be hoped for in America until a century or two has rolled by. Then the Americans were heard, and both compositions, whatever their shortcomings, had the decided and vital merit of saying things in a manner that was American in the best sense of that word so much abused by young composers resident in these States. There was in both works an attitude of healthy vigor and humor and optimism, and in the last composition, which Mr. Fiedler had the fortunate daring to insert on a Symphony programme, there was new poetry and young life that prophesied tremendous things for the future of the "national" music so much sought after and so little achieved up to date in this country.

Mr. Chadwick's "Suite Symphonique" need not be discussed at length. In his lifetime Mr. Chadwick has written much excellent music and some pretty mediocre stuff. The "Suite Symphonique," which probably won the last prize offered by the National Federation of Musical Clubs on account of its admirable feature and the effective orchestral writing, is not one of Mr. Chadwick's great inspirations, but its workmanship, at least, proved that American composers have at this time considerable to show to Europe in the matter of the technic of composition. Mr. Chadwick said nothing almost as well as it could possibly be said, and his composition, though of superficial content, would in itself be of sufficient quality to give him an estimable position among contemporaneous composers.

Now Mr. Henry Gilbert of Cambridge has long believed in the availability of the folk music in this country for artistic purposes. He has not gone to work by rolling up his sleeves and shouting "Amurrica" at the top of his voice, for Mr. Gilbert has interested himself at least as much in the folk music of Ireland as in the folk music of America, but as an artist with a well developed seleo- tive faculty, he has chosen fragments of negro melodies found in different collections, and he has treated these melodies in an exceptionally appreciative and creative manner. He has proved two very important things; that the hue and cry of many American composers about the available musical material to be found right here on our own soil has real justification; and then he has proved that the first requisite for the re-birth of this material is a composer of true creative ability and skill in composition. The fact that Mr. Gilbert's "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes" was a success is of little value beside the fact that it is prophetic of greater things to come, and that it is one of the very first real evidences of a genuine native art which has its root deep down in this fertile soil. The overture fairly bursts with the potency of its spirit and its theme.

In this place it is worth while to quote some of Mr. Gilbert's own words concerning folk music. They are taken from his excellent introduction to a volume of "100 Folk Songs," selected and arranged by Henry F. Gilbert, and published in 1910 by the C. C. Birchard Company of this city:

"Deep in the heart of a people lie many wonderful and beautiful things. Fragments of great poetry, traditions of god-like heroes, and legends of many a noble deed are enshrined in story and song. Every race has an accumulation of tradition, which, as it has passed through many minds and been thereby unconsciously moulded, can be said to express the spirit of the people rather than that of an individual. Running like a golden thread through this mass of tradition are many beautiful melodies; melodies of an elemental simplicity akin to that of the wild flower, and having a directness of appeal which touches our hearts at once. These are Folk-songs; the songs of a Folk or People.

"The true folk-song has travelled a long way. Beginning possibly with the extemporization of some ancient minstrel, it was caught up by some of his hearers and treasured in the memory as a dear reminder of a happy time. As it was sung by the people to one another it lost much of its original character, but in turn it gained some characteristic common to all the minds through which it passed. Dimly, and often inaccurately remembered, it passed from generation to generation, unconsciously altered a little here, a little there. Gradually it was perfected until every note became golden in melodic value. Only those notes of the melody were retained in the popular mind which were absolutely necessary to express the musical idea. All superfluous ones dropped silently away. So at last we have a product which is far more expressive of the mind of the people than of the mind of the ancient minstrel who first sang the song. Thus is a true folk-song born; and the secret of its wonderful appeal and heart-touching power lies in the fact that it has been practically composed by the spirit of a people, which is deeper and more sincere than the spirit of an individual. . . .

"There is usually a distinction drawn between art music, so-called, and folk music. Art music is complex in structure as compared with folk music, which is simple. It addresses itself more to the intellect than folk music, which speaks almost wholly to the heart. The fundamental difference, however, appears in the fact that art music is regarded as individual expression, whereas folk music is the expression of the race. But in so far as the music of the individual composer is truly great, it will be found to have drawn its deepest inspirations from that spirit of the folk which gave birth to the folk-songs, and to bear a deep and fundamental relationship to the latter. When we hear the music of a truly great composer we become conscious that herein is the flowering of the spirit of a race of which the spirit of the individual composer is an integral part. In the music of Beethoven, for example, we find expressed in a mighty and wonderful manner the same spirit which breathes in elemental simplicity in the German folk-songs. For it is the function of genius to contribute to the growth of that folk spirit from which it sprang, that the folk may ever rise to broader horizons of power and beauty."

The foregoing words not only represent one of the best, shortest and most deeply comprehensive essays on this subject known to the writer, but they are very apropos as illustrating Mr. Gilbert's spirit in writing his "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes." Mr. Gilbert's work, as described last Sunday, is based on five scraps of melody which he has found or evolved from different collections of negro tunes, and he has treated these melodies—not perhaps with the entire maturity that will be his later on—but with the happiest and most virile effect. He has proved his case.

It is natural that the second hearing of a work should reveal more of its real nature, its defects and its virtues. Mr. Fiedler gave a very sympathetic performance of the work when first it was heard on Thursday afternoon in Symphony Hall, but his very conviction and enthusiasm, perhaps, led him a little astray. Thus, the fugue should have commenced at a slower tempo than it did on Thursday, while its climax could and should have been more stupendous when it came. And what a vigorous fugue it is! What life and energy and bounding humor! And not at all bad for a composer who was told by MacDowell in his student days that he might never hope to write good counterpoint! The negro themes, as the composer himself has said, are surcharged with reckless laughter or the most romantic tenderness and pathos. The effect on the audiences last week was instantaneous. Just as soon as the initial theme leaped out with its riotous vigor, and from that time on, the audience was visibly engrossed. The composition, whatever its corners—later hearings, which it is to hoped will soon occur, will ultimately reveal its true and exact worth—took the people by storm. Mr. Gilbert already shows a rare talent and intuition for orchestral combinations. His composition glows with color, though he will score even more "colorfully," splendidly, poetically, later on. Certainly he merits compliments of the season for his initial success in an important concert of serious orchestral music, and as certainly Mr. Fiedler is to be most heartily com- mended for his initiative in introducing such a pithy and unconventional work t Symphony audiences, a work made righ here, which most conductors would hav ignored. At the concerts of last wee two American composers resident in th city and the suburbs got excellent hear ings. Next week Mr. Arthur M. Curry' symphonic poem, "Athala," will be playe from manuscript, for the first time any where. Mr. Curry was a student wit MacDowell at the same time that Mr Gilbert studied there. He is a native of Boston or its vicinity and he has studied the violin with Charles Loeffler of this city. He now directs musical edu cation in the public schools at Whitins ville, Mass. In the last weeks of the sea son the Boston Symphony is giving rar impetus to the efforts of near-by com posers. No greater stimulus can be giv en; none is more necessary and more generally lacking for the furtherance of native effort. Mr. Fiedler has added an other enviable record to the history of his stay in Boston.

Symphony

For his 23d programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be played on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Mr. Fiedler will have as soloist Madame Corinne Rider-Kelsey. She will sing first the Beethoven aria "Ah Perfido" and then the familiar "Freischutz" aria, "How Tranquilly I Slumbered."

Claude Debussy's "Iberia" will be played for the first time in Boston. Earlier in the season there was played the third of his "Images" for orchestra, "Rondes de Printemps." "Iberia" has been played in New York during the past winter.

Another novelty will be a symphonic poem entitled "Athala" (after Chateaubriand) by the American composer Arthur M. Curry. This work is still in manuscript and will then have its first performance anywhere. The other composition on the programme will be Mendelssohn's overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage."

"POPS" AT SYMPHONY

The usual nine weeks' season of "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall will begin on Monday evening, May 1. They will be given on every evening except Sunday evening up to and including Saturday evening, July 1. As last year, the conductors will be Messrs. Gustav Strube and Andre Maquarre, Mr. Strube conducting the first half of the season and Mr. Maquarre the last. Both of the conductors have in the past year accumulated much new music which they feel certain will please the public. The season of "Pops" last year was the most successful since these concerts were organized and there is every reason to believe that the coming nine weeks will show an improvement over last year.

[218]

TRANSCRIPT, THURSD... APRIL 20, 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

DEBUSSY, "IBERIA" AND AMERICAN AUDIENCES

Our Polite Curiosity Toward His Music—His Scheme to Visit America and Conduct in "Iberia"—German and French Music and American Appreciation—The Musings of a "New Wagnerite"—The Queerness of Operatic Illusion—Mme. Tetrazzini Engaged for Six Weeks at the Boston Opera House—Miss Farrar's Concert Tour—Minor News of the Day

TOMORROW afternoon and Saturday evening Debussy's "Iberia" — an "Image" for orchestra—will be played for the first times in Boston, within a year after the original performance in Paris. "Iberia" is the longest orchestral piece that Debussy has written since the "symphonic sketches" of "The Sea," heard here five years ago. The music is very characterstic of his matured and more robust style at which these "sketches" hinted and that sundry subsequent piano pieces and the other "Image" for orchestra—"Rondes de Printemps"—have affirmed. In Paris some of the composer's earlier following mistrusted and disliked "Iberia," while the new generation of admirers, who have caught up with the musical fashions, loudly acclaimed it. There was much preliminary discussion. Hisses and catcalls from one quarter of the house followed the first performance of "Iberia" at the Colonne Concerts, and applause and cheers contradicted it from other corners of the auditorium. On both sides the reception of the piece was "ardent" and also "mixed," while the reviewers, in due course, were like minded, according to their predilections, with the divided audience. Here in Boston we do not dispute about music in public—and not too often in private. Alike on Friday and Saturday, Debussy can count upon a polite curiosity and a polite applause. Nobody will hiss "Iberia," however much he may dislike it. Heads, but not fists, may be shaken. And those who like it will wait sensitively to be sure it is music they "ought" to like. They are sure of the "Nocturnes" and "The Afternoon of a Faun" now.

Plainly, however, Debussy is neglecting his opportunities. Nowadays he likes to go about Europe conducting in his own music, acclaimed by the youth of Budapest, whom he counsels about Hungarian music, or surveyed by a thousand British lorgnettes to discover whether he is as different from British composers in aspect as his music is different from theirs in substance and spirit. Debussy would have liked to come to American last autumn to conduct in "Iberia" and other pieces with the established symphony orchestras. The managers hesitated at his terms and in the hesitation Debussy lost his opportunity. Not for another five years, perhaps, will he write an orchestral piece "of large dimensions." Perhaps the two new operas "after Poe" will bring him to America. Mr. Gatti is quite ready to invite him—if Debussy ever sends the completed manuscripts.

H. T. P.

TRAVELER, SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Mr. Fiedler has made the last Symphony programme of the year, which is to be played on Friday afternoon, April 28, and Saturday evening, April 29, decidedly popular in character. The first part will be given to Beethoven and Tschaikowsky and the last part entirely to Wagner. Beethoven will be represented by the "Coriolanus" overture, and Tschaikowsky by the ever popular "Pathetic" symphony. The Wagnerian excerpts will comprise the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," the funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremburg." There will be no soloist.

FINAL SYMPHONY CONCERT IN CAMBRIDGE.

The final Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given on next Thursday evening, April 27, in Sanders Theatre. The soloist will be Alwin Schroeder.

PLANS FOR THE COMING POP CONCERTS.

As was the case last year, Mr. Strube will conduct the first half of the Pop concerts, which will begin on Monday night, May 1. The entire season will last for nine weeks, ending on Saturday, July 1. Mr. Maquarre will assume the baton on Thursday evening, June 1. The orchestra will have at least 55 men. Special nights include Amherst night, May 10; Tech night, June 6; Williams night, June 16. Harvard night has not been settled. The National Hotel Men's Association, which is to meet in Boston, will have a special night, and presumably the Boston City Club and the Clover Club will have nights as last year.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

DEBUSSY'S "IBERIA" IN FIRST PERFORMANCE

A Remarkable Piece Worthy of the Composer of the Nocturnes and "The Afternoon of a Faun"—The Earlier, the Later and a New Debussy in It—The Design and the Means—The Beauty of One Movement and the Vivid and Varied Suggestion of the Other Two—The Rare Qualities of the Whole—Mr. Curry's Elementary "Atala"—The Pleasures of Mrs. Kelsey's Singing

Two novel pieces stood on Mr. Fiedler's programme for the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon, and they could hardly have made sharper contrast. One, played from the composer's manuscript and with the composer conducting, was "Atala," a symphonic poem suggested by the likenamed, but now unread romance of Chateaubriand. Mr. Arthur Curry, a composer, pianist and teacher, long resident in Boston and its suburbs, wrote the music. The other new piece was Debussy's long anticipated "Iberia," by common consent, the musical world over, one of the important "novelties" of the year. Mr. Curry is not too well known in Boston, while Debussy is of international note and curiosity. None of Mr. Curry's previous music comes readily to mind. The list of Debussy's is illustrious. Mr. Curry's "Atala" seemed often of an extreme musical innocence; Debussy's "Iberia" was always of an extreme musical sophistication. Mr. Curry's music exposed various melodic ideas, some of which were rather happily invented; Debussy's was usually play with instrumental timbres and rhythms. The American had written meditatively and arduously a conventional piece. The Frenchman made a very intricate, exotic and "ultra-modern" piece seem wholly spontaneous. Who shall say that the conductors of the Symphony Concerts do not keep to the high precedent—it is almost a tradition now—of catholicity of programme? And who shall say that the audiences are not of as liberal mind, when that of yesterday seemed to applaud the two new pieces in almost equal measure? As for the orchestra, which has its little ways of hinting its state of mind, it showed plainly that it counted Mr. Curry's piece rather beneath its powers, while it spent its skill and imagination to the utmost upon Debussy's.

"Iberia" is worthy of the composer of The Nocturnes, "The Afternoon of a Faun," and "The Sea." Like "The Sea," it is often more stoutly written than the earlier orchestral pieces; yet it has usually no such definite melodic contours as the recurring folk-tune gave to the recent "Rondes de Printemps." Debussy's design in "Iberia" is stouter than has sometimes been his wont; he is prone, on occasion, to use the instrumental voices more sonorously; and here and there in the final movement there are hints, or the shadows of hints, that he knows other characteristic French musical idioms as well as his own—Chabrier's for example, and Charpentier's. Debussy has stretched a large canvas for the tone-painting of "Iberia"; he has set vigorously to the task of filling it; the hand, the imagination, the means, the resulting colors and "values" are bolder, surer, and richer than they were in his earlier years. By so much, "Iberia" is of the mature Debussy. On the other hand, it is more of the cherished Debussy of the earlier years than have been some of his recent pianoforte pieces. Side by side with these bolder and richer instrumental colors and with these more decisive and pervading rhythms, go often an exceeding fineness of harmonic background and an almost superhuman delicacy in the shading, the blending and the contrasting of timbres. Again is Debussy searching and discovering the intimate secrets, the recondite possibilities of instrumental voices. By all these means he has again achieved the glamour and iridescence, the exquisite fineness of imaginative suggestion, the vague but haunting images and impressions of his earlier music. He can still translate the filaments and the breath of fancy into the filaments and the breath of sound.

In a third respect, however, "Iberia" differs in quality from either the "earlier" or the "mature" Debussy. Much of Debussy's early music seemed music of impalpable dream and of fleeting vision. It had no local habitation but in the realms of fancy, no name but dream-picture. Of such were The Nocturnes and "The Afternoon of a Faun." The later sketches of "The Sea" were not so much dream-fancies as the impressions that the wind and the waters, the skies above them and the lights playing over them, made upon the composer's imagination and then translated into tones. Like "The Afternoon of a Faun," in some respects "The Sea" was music of sublimated nature and of the composer's emotions before it. Akin are "Rondes de Printemps" because the very breath and lights and colors of the spring stir through the music. "Iberia," in contrast, is music of life. Spain lives in itself and in Debussy's imagination—lives with a myriad life. Out of this life rises an endless variety of sounds that are its voice. They kindle Debussy's imagination. He transforms them and the emotions that they awake in him into music. In the process he heightens this vitality, even thrills to it. With all its moments of exceeding delicacy, "Iberia" is more ardent than any of Debussy's preceding music—more vital. It lives not with the fitful life of dreams, but with the vivid life of Spain and of the sounds that are its voice. There is curious impression from it that Debussy wrote because he must.

"Iberia" is a relatively short piece, since Debussy has never cultivated the excessive lengths dear to his brethren across the Rhine and the Channel. (It is Gallic to be brief and pointed). And the music is subdivided into three realms—"In the Streets and Along the Roads," "Odors of the Night," and "The Morning of a Fete Day," though there is pause between the second and the third of these divisions. Each section has a perceptible melodic contour; the second indeed in the song of the oboe a fairly clear one; there is besides a perceptible, though a very delicate and intricate, development of the melodic idea in Debussy's own idiom. Thereby there is form, but the structural soul of the first and the third sections is the pervading and determining rhythms. Varied as it is, intricate as it sometimes becomes, the ear follows it and yields to it. Soon it sways and kindles imagination. The persuasiveness, the decisiveness, the insistent and insinuating suggestion of these rhythms is the first clear impression, at a single hearing, of "Iberia." The second and the most lasting of all, is of the exquisite and haunting beauty—and the more as Mr. Longy played it—of the song of the oboe in the second sections, with the celesta sprinkling its little silver notes upon it, with the strings now and then lightly accenting it, with its swell into soft climax, like the moentary rising of a night breeze. It is hard to recall when Debussy has invented such a song—surely not since the days of "The Afternoon of a Faun." The sensibilities melt at the penetrating beauty of it. The voice and the contour of the melody are of an exquisite sensuousness. The breath, the fragrance, the softness and the opulence, the velvet and the silver, of a semi-tropical night are in the song that the oboe sings. Fortunate Debussy that odors may so stir his imagination. Across the voice of the [illegible] singing in its still garden, float the sounds or rather the echoes of the sounds of the distant world without. Sometimes, they hush, though they cannot quite still, the song. Oftener they do but point, by contrast, its beauty. tI is thrice distilled music.

The first and the third sections, in their keenest impression upon the ear and the imagination, are of the play of instrumental voices, and of harmonic suggestion enhancing them, in which Debussy delights and of which he is a unique master. He has seen the lights of Spain—the sun glaring upon red brick and yellow stucco; the afternoon wanness of bare brown plains and hills, the moonlight filling the darkest corners of the patios. He has heard the sounds of this Spain—the clatters or the languors of the dances that echo out of the doors of the taverns in the side streets by night; the notes of the bells as they ring for the mass at morning; the march of a festive troop streaming to the city along the open ward; the monotonous whirr of the life of towns as it comes to the solitary listener on the hillside above them; the crazy din of a day of popular merry-making when the aristocratic solitary shuts himself tightly within his hourse. He has walked the streets of this Spain—looked into grave Spanish faces, peered under Moorish turbans, caught the glance of invitation in gypsy eyes. A very kaleidoscope of impressions and the stirrings of fancy to them to be translated into a kaleidoscope of tones. And as an impressionistic picture falls upon the eye so the resulting music falls upon the ear. Or rather like a series of impressionistic pictures, and the musical equivalent to it is the pervading yet changeful rhythm. As slide succeeds slide, the colors and the values are ever changing and the musical equivalent of them are the instrumental voices, now shaded, now blended, now contrasted, or again, as the impressionistic way, merely juxtaposed for the instant. The kaleidoscope turns again, as it were, upon the pivot of the rhythm and again there is a new juxtaposition of instrumental voices and a new picture or a new echo in them. Sometimes the music glares; again it is as cool as the patio. It dances; it marches; it sings, it sighs, it merely clatters, it is a mere reflection even—and each for one passing instant. And that is the wonder of it: music that answers in its kind to any just test of form and means, since their purpose to express, and that is still music that imparts and points all these kaleidoscopic impressions. "Iberia" is music at the nth power of fluidity. It is of Debussy's utmost mastery and imagination with instrumental voices and their coloring. It is tonal picturing and suggestion made now of an exquisite delicacy, again of a vivid richness, and pausing for an instant at every note of the long scale between. To hear it is a sort of tonal intoxication.

Symphony Hall: Symphony Concerts

MR. Fiedler has no choral symphony—Beethoven's, Mahler's or Liszt's—with which to end the Symphony concerts of the year unusually. Instead, he has picked a programme of five pieces, all familiar to his audience, all well liked by it. Three of the pieces—to make the second part of the programme—come from Wagner's music-dramas: "The Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," music of the soft beauty of the spring, if ever such music was written; the orchestral lament and glorification for the dead "Siegfried" from "Gotterdämmerung," and the sonorous and songful prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Beethoven and Tschaikowsky have the first part of the concert—Beethoven with the overture to "Coriolan," and Tschaikowsky with the "Pathetic" symphony. Decidedly a "mixed" programme, but mixed ingeniously of some of the best-liked music of symphony concerts, and of music in which some of Mr. Fiedler's best traits as a conductor have freest play. In spite of the "Pathetic" symphony and the so-called "Trauermarsch" from "Gotterdämmerung," he and his public will take a cheerful leave of each other until next autumn.

The final concert of the Symphony Orchestra for the season in Cambridge falls on Thursday evening in Sanders Theatre. The purely orchestral numbers are Liszt's tone-poem, "Les Préludes," Enesco's novel, individual and interesting suite, recently played at the concerts in Boston, and Schumann's "bridal" symphony in D minor. The solo piece is Tschaikowsky's variations "on a rococo theme" for violoncello and orchestra, with Mr. Schroeder for the 'cellist.

MONDAY, May 1, in Symphony Hall, the beginning of a new series of "Pop" Concerts by a large part of the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Strube and other conductors—to continue for two months, to follow the ways of previous summers, and to renew the pleasures of them.

[219]

GLOBE—SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1911.

AT THE SYMPHONY.

Debussy's "Iberia" Played For a Novelty.

Mme Rider-Kelsey Heard as Soloist First Time at These Concerts.

The program of the 23d public symphony rehearsal yesterday afternoon was as follows: Arthur M. Curry, "Atala," symphonic poem (after Chateaubriand) MS (first performance); Debussy, "Iberia," (first time here); Mendelssohn, overture, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage," and Beethoven's recitative and aria "Ah! Perfidio" and the aria "Leise, Leise" and recitative from "Der Freischutz," Mme Corinne Rider-Kelsey soloist.

Debussy's "Iberia," the second number of his suite "Images," was played for the first time in Boston. It was first heard in this country during the past season at concerts of the Philharmonic society. "Ronde des Printemps," the third number of the suite, was first played here in November and December. "Gigue Triste," the first of the group, is still unpublished.

The three movements of "Iberia" are "In the streets and wayside," "The odors of the night" and "The morning of a fete day." It is said they are intended to suggest pictures of Spanish life, apparently that of the peasantry.

It is now a truism to say that in the substance and contour of his musical ideas, in their sequence and development and in their harmonic and orchestral dress, Debussy has held traditional form of little consequence in the attainment of color and atmosphere. His "Pelleas and Melisande," the "Blessed Damozel," the dances sacred and profane, and "The Afternoon of a Faun," challenged and enthralled the senses by their exquisite elusiveness, which ravished the imagery while it may have perplexed the judgment.

There were pages in them which breathed forth the fragrance that bursts through the petals of the budding rose, the pure exaltation that is born with the dawn, spontaneous, inevitable. They were created not of determination nor intent, but of inspiration.

The stars of the love watches of the night cannot sing forever and that first bloom was missed in much of the music played yesterday. Its idiom may not have been read with entire sympathy, but there are passages wherein the ability to create a subjective world out of pure fancy and make idealism by mere illusion, seems to have become clouded so that what was once spontaneous and inevitable is now contrived.

The last movement was more intelligible in profile. There were striking bits of impressionism in rhythm and there were bright and flashing scarlet daubs of color which heightened the picture; the picturesque abandon of the dancing, the strumming of the guitar, the tuning of the badly tuned fiddle, the pastoral of the piper.

Debussy has used the bells here upon three adjacent tones to heighten the emotional emphasis by sheer nervous stimuli. The music is worth a repetition, which unfortunately is impossible now for this year. There was pronounced enthusiasm and applause.

Mme Rider-Kelsey has been known in Boston, through her appearances with the choral societies, for the haunting beauty of her singing and for her intelligence in the art of song. As an instrument, her voice is neither large nor imposing. The middle and lower notes suggest reservation and husbandry rather than resource. It is the head voice that is the glory of this singer and of the teacher whose monument it is.

Mrs Kelsey's tones above D are an exposition in their bell-like, spiritual purity upon the value of overtone in the voice. Theirs is not the breadth nor sheer physical prowess needed by the dramatic singer, but there is a wondrous power of penetration to compensate and a plasticity in color for emotional purposes.

The Beethoven aria is to be delivered in the grand style, to be finished with a burst of bravura that will yet suggest a reserve of power. Mrs Kelsey delivered the recitative with authority, with excellent enunciation and dramatizing accent. She imparted an interpretative value to the alternating rebellion and plaint and distinguished between recitative and cantilena, but it was in the finely-sustained lines of the Weber aria that she was at her best. Both her voice and the purity of her style find her happiest in lyric rather than dramatic song.

Her management of the breath, attack, use of the soft voice, modification of the vowels to enhance tonal beauty and her facility in florid passages are commendable traits of a singer and of an art that are too rare in a day when to sing loudly and give obvious manifestations of temperament are highly estimable with the multitude.

Mr Curry, who now lives in Newton Highlands, wrote his symphonic poem three years ago. It is dedicated to Mr Kneisel. The composer is fortunate in the choice of themes. Whether they are Indian tunes transcribed, or of his own invention, is not of great importance, for they have identity, a certain atmosphere and melodic amenability. The subject which is apparently called the heroic theme offers possibilities for elaboration.

There is evidence of some skill in the combination of orchestral timbres, but the development seems at times prolix and illogical. There are two climaxes, the first of considerable power. There was cordial applause.

At the 24th and last pair of concerts next week the program will be: Beethoven, overture, "Coriolanus"; Tschaikowsky, symphony No. 6; Wagner, "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods" and prelude, "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg."

NOVELTIES BY SYMPHONY

Debussy's and Curry's Newest Works Performed

BY OLIN DOWNES

Debussy's "Iberia," the second of his "Images" for orchestra, and Arthur Curry's "Atala," symphonic poem after Chateaubriand, were performed for the first time in Boston yesterday afternoon at the 23d public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall. True to his praiseworthy enterprise in producing new works by native and resident composers, Mr. Fiedler interpreted from manuscript the music of Mr. Curry, now living and teaching in Newton Highlands. The soloist was Corinne Rider-Kelsey, who sang the Beethoven scena and aria, "Ah! Perfido," and the recitative and aria from Der Freischutz, "Wie nahte der Schlummer" and "Leise, leise." Mendelssohn's overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage" completed the programme.

Mr. Curry completed his tone poem three years ago. It was at first his intention to write an opera upon the theme of Atala, but while looking about vainly for a competent librettist, Mr. Curry became persuaded that his subject was of doubtful value for the operatic stage. In his tone poem he has employed Indian themes to express the Indian nature and the ill-fated love of Chactas and Atala. At the last there is a pastoral and with the entrance of the organ there is the thought of the priest and his preachments. The theme of Chactas brings the conclusion.

Secures Happy Results

Mr. Curry shows surprising talent for orchestral color. In the handling of his instruments he has accomplished some admirable results. There are frequent beautiful passages in the tone poem, but the piece is not too strongly constructed. In certain passages one thinks rather of the stage than of music of symphonic development. Mr. Curry does develop his ideas, or, at last, manipulates them often, with happy results, but he is prone to repeat figures and passages with somewhat redundant effect, to prepare climatic moments, which do not arrive. His work has interest and a measure of individuality, but the thematic material is hardly of sufficient hardiness to stand the orchestral treatment which it receives.

The music, however, was warmly received, and the composer, who had conducted the performance, was recalled to the stage three times to acknowledge the applause.

Debussy's music made a strong impression upon many who were present. Certainly that composer has seldom turned out a more remarkable score, as far as the most rich and subtle and delicate effects of harmony and instrumentation are concerned. In this respect, in all that concerns the art of the impressionist, Debussy is skilled beyond measure. He is in the fortunate—or unfortunate—position of a man who can set down on paper absolutely any musical sound that he can conceive and almost any unmusical sound!

And unfortunately, complete expression such as this seems to coincide with a slackening of the creative power. It is not the man who completely expresses himself, who expresses most.

Marvels of Tone Coloring

The new pieces are marvels of impressionistic tone-coloring. The first is an impression of the highways and byways of Spain, in the night and the morning. The second and the third, called respectively "Perfumes of the night" and "The morning of a fete day," are faithful in spirit to their titles. Again Debussy delights in vague and exquisitely mingled sonorities, and here and again is a fleeting glimpse of that rarest of melodies which he would capture—or have us capture for ourselves. The first movement of "Iberia" is a very clever treatment of what seem to be real Spanish street cries. To this reviewer little of the music rings true.

Mme. Rider-Kelsey's interpretations were very musicianly, and her vocal performance was almost invariably of a highly creditable description. As a singer and a musician—for the two qualities are so comparatively seldom combined—she won the admiration of her audience.

The concerts of next week will be the last Symphony concerts of this season. The programme will consist of the overture, "Coriolanus," of Beethoven, of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," the funeral music from "The Dusk of the Gods," and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremburg."

MR. CURRY CONDUCTS HIS OWN "ATALA"

SYMPHONIC POEM WELL RECEIVED BY AUDIENCE

Mme. Corinne Rider-Kelsey Vocalist of the Concert — Debussy's "Iberia" New and Enduring.

By Louis C. Elson.

PROGRAMME.

Arthur M. Curry—"Atala." Symphonic Poem.
Beethoven—Aria, "Ah Perfido."
Debussy—"Iberia." "Images pour Orchestre," No. 2.
Weber—Prayer Scene from "Der Freischuetz."
Mendelssohn—"A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage."
Vocalist, Mme. Corinne Rider-Kelsey.

Decidedly Boston has no reason to complain of bad treatment at the hands of Mr. Fiedler. He is showing a praiseworthy tendency to boost the local composer. At this concert Mr. Arthur M. Curry was represented by a Symphonic Poem founded upon Chateaubriand. Chateaubriand is not a writer upon whom the deepest musical inspiration can be founded. He is brilliant but insincere. His "Atala, or the Love of two Savages," written in 1801, gives rather absurd refinements of thought to two savages of the "Paul and Virginia" type. There are fine descriptions of Nature in the work, but the human element is inconsistent and artificial. Whether the work is sufficiently meaty for a musical "Filet Chateaubriand" may at least be open to argument.

At a first hearing we believe "Atala" to be very difficult but not very inspired. It is a pity that, in modern music, so many mistake difficulty for greatness. Nevertheless "Atala" is a skilful and legitimate use of the modern orchestra. It is sometimes grand, sometimes dragging. A little too prolix, but easy to follow in its interweaving of themes. Its figure treatment is interesting and ingenious. Its climax of the combat between Christian and Pagan ideas was thundering and mighty.

The work received a reading that was beautiful. Not only did the conductor, the composer himself in this case, bring out the points well, but the orchestra played in a manner that indicated many hours of rehearsal. Had the work been simpler and shorter it would have been better. It received great applause, and Mr. Curry was twice recalled. If the composition had borne the name of Scriabine or some other foreign extasist it would have been yet more rapturously received. As it is, our Bostonian has little to complain of regarding the performance or the reception of his work.

We could have wished Mme. Rider-Kelsey some other work for her first number than the scena by Beethoven. It is an artificial form this forcing of recitative, cavatina and impassioned climax into an independent number. One cannot thrill to the woes of the condensed heroine as one might in a scena in an opera. That the scena is very difficult and at times also unvocal, may be admitted, and also that Mme. Rider-Kelsey overcame the difficulties bravely. We gather from the text and the music that somebody had deserted the singer and that she was more or less annoyed about it. In shading, intonation, expression and breadth, Mme. Rider-Kelsey was commendable in the scena, and she was recalled twice with much spontaneity. She gave a beautiful "Canto Spianato" in the aria "Per Pieta," and a fine climax at the end. But the "concert-scena" form is fading away rapidly, and has an old-fashioned effect upon the modern programme.

Recitative, "Bel Canto," and dramatic display, are also bunched together in Weber's "Wie nahte mir der Schlummer," but here there is something more tangible than in Beethoven's deserted one. Anxiety, prayer, the tranquillity of night, the sight of the approaching lover, the ending in rapturous joy and hope, were all pictured in turn by Mme. Rider-Kelsey. Even if it all hinged upon the slender foundation of a young man returning from a target-shooting match, it was nevertheless more human and natural than the high pressure agony of "Ah Perfido."

Yet we do not consider that Mrs. Rider-Kelsey made as fine a vocal display in this as in the more ambitious and more difficult Beethoven number. She gave the recitatives, both free and measured, with good declamation, but both the music and the singer had a tendency to go to extremes in this varied and theatrical number.

"Iberia" is from the same series of pictures which recently yielded us the "Rondos of Spring," which were quite as unspringlike as if they had pictured the present infernal, or at least un-vernal, season in Boston. The work gives three "images," —"Along the highways and streets," "Odors of Night" and "The morning of a Festival." The two last are joined together. The new work is scarcely as comprehensible even as Debussy's thoughts about Spring. It is long and throughout ultra-modern.

That Spain should inspire such tonal trouble is very unusual. Generally the music associated with Iberia is rhythmic, melodic and spicy. But here again we obtain the maximum of difficulty, or subtlety, with the minimum of inspiration. There are plenty of people existing nowadays who reverence all music that is incomprehensible. But even these may have suspected, yesterday afternoon, that Debussy is straining hard to achieve something that shall not be mere repetition, in the little school that he has invented.

This is the composer who bragged of his intention to set "Tristan and Isolde" to music that the world at last might see the true meaning of that love-poem! This is the musical reviewer who criticized the concert of French music recently given in Germany, under M. Rhene-Baton's baton, saying that French music was for the French, Italian for the Italians, etc., as if the boundaries of art were to be found at the frontier custom-house.

Why should such a man be treated with gloves. He has evolved something new, and he seems to have exhausted his field, a narrow one at best. Judging by "Iberia" this frog cannot swell himself into an ox.

Yet there are beautiful moments in the work. There was a delicate oboe solo in the second movement, which M. Longy played gloriously. In such a movement much, everything, depends upon perfection of shading, and this was achieved on this occasion. "The Odors of the Night" in Spain are usually supposed to be of Garlic, but here there was something really fragrant in Music, a mood that was delicately pictured.

The first and last movements were suggestions of rhythm and of rollick. It is rhythm chiefly that straps this bundle together. The effects were often more Oriental than Spanish. The Xylophone had its innings in the last movement and seemed to be playing "Yankee Doodle" translated into Spanish. Debussy's later music does not dominate the auditor's mood, as that of a great master might, but if one comes to it in just the right mood it has a certain power. A prolonged hearing of this school breeds a sense of sameness and becomes somewhat wearisome. Yet no animadverter can take away from Debussy the credit of having evolved something new and something that will probably endure.

At the end of a programme that contained more of artificiality than of inspiration, came Mendelssohn, with a proof that musical compositions may sometimes be made attractive by containing musical ideas. Yet this overture too has its weak point. It is a living proof of the unreliability of "programme-music." It pictures desolation at sea, in a dead calm, and then the wind arising and a prosperous voyage ensuing. The first picture deals with the following words of Goethe:—

"Deepest stillness on the waters,
Without motion rests the sea.
And the sailor sees around him,
Only flat monotony."

"Not a breath of air is stirring,
Awful silence, as the grave.
In the whole wide, vast horizon,
Moveth not a single wave."

Because of the misleading title—"Calm Sea,"—many an auditor has mistaken the introduction to be a picture of quiet serenity upon the ocean. Truly, with much "programme music" one might make a request, at the beginning of the work, as Rufus Choate once did of his daughter, before a concert: "Tell me what all this is about, that I may not dilate with the wrong emotion." We wonder how many times, in the mystifying modern music, the rabid enthusiast dilates with the wrong emotion.

The Mendelssohn overture was finely played. Mr. Fiedler is particularly great in triumphant climaxes, and this work ends with a mighty flourish, to illustrate the Goethe line:—

"Schon seh' ich das Land."

Which may be the German equivalent for "Land Ho!" The trumpets rang out splendidly here. And so, after considerable wandering, the audience were at last brought into port and landed with a good old-fashioned cadence. It reminded us that Mendelssohn's "ocean," and Debussy's "Mer," were two quite different ponds of water. But when we want the salt sea in music we shall still go to Wagner's "Flying Dutchman."

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1911.

RECORD, SATURDAY, APRIL 22 1911

WORK OF BOSTON COMPOSER HEARD

Symphony Novelty Is Composition by Arthur M. Curry.

Again local talent shines at the Symphony concerts. The first novelty on this week's program is a symphonic poem by Arthur Mansfield Curry, a Boston music teacher, and it is conducted by the composer himself.

The piece, which is called "Atala," is based on the celebrated Chateaubriand story concerning Atala and Chactas, and it is intended to portray in particular the loneliness of Chactas, the Indian captured by the Spaniards, and his love for Atala, the chief's daughter, and the tragedy involved in her vow never to marry.

The music is highly romantic, and it is written with a skilful hand and with marked imaginative power. Nor is it striking on account of eccentricities, but rather on account of its straightforward appeal to the ordinary understanding. It is music that will be heard over and over again with interest. Mr. Curry yesterday conducted expertly and he was warmly applauded at the close of the number.

The other novelty played at yesterday's rehearsal was Debussy's "Iberia," one of the three parts of his "Images." The third, "Ronde des Printemps," was played twice early in the season. No doubt there will be a demand for a second hearing of "Iberia." It would take many hearings to fathom half its dark, discordant mysteries. The second section, "Les parfums de la nuit," seems like the last word in musical impressionism. The composition, like most of Debussy's work, is strangely fascinating. It was magnificently played yesterday. The prolonged applause was justifiable, if only on that account.

Mme. Corinne Rider-Kelsey the soloist, sang Beethoven's "Ah! Perfido" and the recitative, "How Tranquilly I Slumber'd" and aria "Softly Sighing," from Weber's "Der Freischuetz." She possessed a great deal of enthusiasm with her fine voice and her artistic style. She is a gifted dramatic soprano, who deserves success not merely because she happens to be an American, but because she is an artist.

Mendelssohn's overture, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage," closed the concert.

A. M. CURRY CONDUCTS HIS 'ATALA'

Decidedly Boston has no reason to complain of bad treatment at the hands of Mr. Fiedler, says L. C. Elson in his Symphony review. He is showing a praiseworthy tendency to boost the local composer. At this concert Arthur M. Curry was represented by a Symphonic Poem founded upon Chateaubriand. Chateaubriand is not a writer upon whom the deepest musical inspiration can be founded. He is brilliant but insincere. His "Atala, or the Love of two Savages," written in 1801, gives rather absurd refinements of thought to two savages of the "Paul and Virginia" type. There are fine descriptions of Nature in the work, but the human element is inconsistent and artificial. Whether the work is sufficiently meaty for a musical "Filet Chateaubriand" may at least be open to argument.

At a first hearing we believe "Atala" to be very difficult but not very inspired. It is a pity that, in modern music, so many mistake difficulty for greatness. Nevertheless "Atala" is a skilful and legitimate use of the modern orchestra. It is sometimes grand, sometimes dragging. A little too prolix, but easy to follow in its interweaving of themes. Its figure treatment is interesting and ingenious. Its climax of the combat between Christian and Pagan ideas was thundering and mighty.

The work received a reading that was beautiful. Not only did the conductor, the composer himself in this case, bring out the points well, but the orchestra played in a manner that indicated many hours of rehearsal. Had the work been simpler and shorter it would have been better. It received great applause, and Mr. Curry was twice recalled. If the composition had borne the name of Scriabine or some other foreign extasist it would have been yet more rapturously received. As it is, our Bostonian has little to complain of regarding the performance or the reception of his work.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

As was the case last year Mr. Strube will conduct the first half of the Pop concerts, which will begin on May 1. The entire season will last for nine weeks, ending on Saturday, July 1. Mr. Maquarre will assume the baton on June 1. Both of these conductors are great favorites with the public.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, APRIL 23, 1911.

Schroeder as Soloist

The final Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given next Thursday evening in Sanders Theater. The soloist will be Alwin Schroeder, who will play Tschaikowsky's "Variation on a Rococo Theme," for 'cello.

The orchestral part will comprise Listz's "Les Preludes," the suite by the Franco-Rumanian composer, Enesco and Schumann's "Wedding" symphony.

Symphony Concerts

The thirtieth season of Symphony concerts comes to an end next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. There will be no solist, but Mr. Fiedler has a program which is decidedly popular in character. The symphony will be Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," and this will be preceded by Beethoven's overture, "Coriolanus." The second part of the program will be devoted entirely to Wagner, the excerpts being the "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal;" the funeral music from "The Dusk of the Gods" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

Pop Concerts Begin On Monday, May 1

As was the case last year Mr. Strube will conduct the first half of the Pop concerts, which will begin on Monday night, May 1, at Symphony Hall. Mr. Maquarre will assume the baton on Thursday evening, June 1. Both of these conductors are great favorites with the public and both of them have been preparing new and attractive numbers to put on the programs.

A number of good operettas and comic operas have come to the front during the past season and excerpts and medleys from these will be heard, besides which there are a number of lighter pieces for orchestra that will be played at the concerts. The orchestra will have at least fifty-five men in it and for the greater part of the season it will contain more.

During the two months there will be the usual "special nights." Some of these already arranged for are "Amherst night," which is set for May 10; "Tech night," June 6; "Williams night," June 16; "Harvard night" has not yet been finally settled.

The National Hotel Men's Association will have a special night on June 7. The Boston City Club and the Clover Club will probably have nights.

A number of improvements have been made which will add to the comfort of the patrons.

SYMPHONY'S REHEARSAL

Debussy's Strange, Subtle "Iberia" and New Poem by Curry.

By PHILIP HALE.

The 23d public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Fiedler, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mme. Corinne Rider-Kelsey was the soloist. The program was as follows:

"Atala," symphonic poem (after Chateaubriand).....Curry
Scene and Aria, "Ah! Perfido".....Beethoven
Iberia: "Images" for orchestra No. 2..Debussy
Agata's Recitative and Aria from "Der Freischuetz".....Weber
Overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage".....Mendelssohn

Debussy's "Iberia" was performed for the first time in Boston. It is in three sections. The titles of them are as follows: "In the Streets and Byways;" "The Odors of the Night;" "The Morning of a Festival."

The "Images" of which "Iberia" is the second, were composed in 1909, and "Iberia" was performed for the first time in Paris a year ago last February. The three movements are remarkable in many ways, and one may be ranked among the first compositions of this genius. They are impressionistic, but there is a sense of form; there is also the finest proportion. This music is conspicuous for exquisite effects of color. There are combinations of timbres and also contracts that were hitherto unknown. There are hints at Spanish melodies; melodies not too openly exposed; there are intoxicating rhythms, sharply defined, or elusive and then they are the more maddning.

This music is pleasingly remote from photographic realism. The title might be "Impressions of Spain." There is the suggestion of street life and wild strains heard on bleak plains or savage mountains; of the music of the people; of summer nights, warm and odorous; of the awakening of life with the break of day; of endless jotas, tangos, seguidillas, fandangoes; of gypsies with their spells brought from the east; of women with Moorish blood. "Iberia" defies analysis and beggars description. What phrase-mongering, however ingenious, would impart the beauty of "Odors of the Night" to him that did not hear the music? It is enough to say that pages of more subtle beauty have not been played at these concerts. The music that haunts should not be lightly or openly talked about. The impression made by it should be guarded or confided only to the closest friend.

To speak of Debussy's use of instruments to gain effects, of his ability to reproduce what had not been heard by others though they may have felt it feebly and had the wish to hear it clearly and put it in notation, would be a class room task. To write of it for the general reader would be only to rhapsodize. Now Debussy is a rhapsodist of the rarest nature, and his musical speech is not to be translated by a rhapsody in words.

The performance showed that Mr. Fiedler had taken great pains in the preparation. He is to be heartily thanked for introducing this suite, which should be often played here.

Mr. Curry, born in Chelsea and now living in Newton Highlands, has composed three or four orchestral pieces. One of them, an overture, was performed at the Worcester Festival of 1902. In the symphonic poem played yesterday for the first time, he has attempted to express the emotions of Chactas and Atala. He has naturally followed episodes in Chateaubriand's romantic tale. The story itself, with its flowing and sonorous sentences, is strangely eloquent, and the few pages descriptive of the burial of the maiden are more musical than many labored symphonies. There are some poetic ideas in Mr. Curry's composition. The opening measures hold the attention, and the dancelike Indian theme is successfully exposed; there are also some fortunate instrumental effects. The remaining themes are either without distinction or too suggestive of Dvorak and others.

The general structure of the work is not to be commended. The thematic development is crude, amateurish. Ineffective measures are found in long stretches. There is little continuity in the thought, and the expression is often vague and futile. This symphonic poem, in a word, is not of the rank that is expected at the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Mr. Curry conducted his piece. It is wiser for a composer without great experience as an orchestra leader to allow the regular conductor to present his symphonic poem, suite or overture, to the audience, and this holds good even when the composer happens to be an American by birth. A friendly audience applauded Mr. Curry and recalled him.

Mme. Rider-Kelsey sang at these concerts for the first time, although she has been favorably known here for nearly six years. The arias were too heavy for her voice. "Ah! Perfido!" surely calls for a dramatic soprano, and so does the descriptive portion and exultant ending of Weber's aria. Mme. Rider-Kelsey is a lyric soprano. Her voice is of an unusually pure quality. It is agreeable, but it is not sensuous, nor has it what might be called virginal warmth, nor does the singer charge her tones with emotion. As a mistress of vocal art, Mme. Rider-Kelsey deserves high praise. Her tonal emission, her control of tone, her maintenance of a long melodic line, her vocal intelligence, shown in every way, are wholly admirable. And yet a woman may have all desirable qualities as a singer, and excite admiration for her art but no lively personal interest when the music she sings is in itself strongly dramatic and does not find full Mendelssohn was represented at these concerts for the first time in the season. The overture is not one of his best. The second section reminds one too vividly of the return of a harbor boat bearing an excursion party, tired of paper bags and singing "Home again! Home again, from a foreign shore!"

The program of next week's concerts, the last of the season, will include Beethoven's overture to "Coriolanus," Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony, Wagner's "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," Funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers."

SUNDAY POST, APRIL 23, 1911

Last Symphony Performances

The 30th season of Symphony concerts comes to an end on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening with the 24th public rehearsal and concert respectively. There will be no soloist, but Mr. Fiedler has made a programme which is decidedly popular in character. The symphony will be Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," and this will be preceded by Beethoven's overture, "Coriolanus." The second part of the programme will be devoted entirely to Wagner, the excerpts being the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," the funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods," and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

Final Cambridge Concert

The [illegible] bridge will be given [illegible] Thursday evening, April 27, in Sanders Theatre. The soloist will be Alwin Schroder, the distinguished solo violoncellist of the orchestra. He will play Tschaikowsky's variations on a Rococo Theme.

THE "POPS"

As was the case last year Mr. Gustave Strube will conduct the first half of the coming season of Pop concerts, which will begin on Monday night, May 1. The entire season will last for nine weeks, ending on Saturday, July 1, Mr. Maquarre will assume the baton on Thursday evening, June 1. Both of these conductors are great favorites with the public and both of them have been spending not a little time during the past year in preparing new and attractive numbers to put on the programmes. A number of good operettas and comic operas have come to the front during the past season and excerpts and medleys from these will be heard, besides which there are a number of lighter pieces for orchestra that Messrs. Strube and Maquarre have found which will be played at the concerts. The orchestra will have at least 55 men in it and for the greater part of the season it will contain more.

During the two months there will be the usual "special nights." Some of these already arranged for are "Amherst night," which is set for May 10, "Tech night," June 6; "Williams night," June 16. "Harvard night" has not yet been finally settled. The National Hotel Men's Association, which is to meet here in town, will have a special night, the 7th of that month. Moreover it is likely that the Boston City Club and the Clover Club will have nights as last year, these being among the most pleasant affairs of the season.

Immediately after the end of the concert on next Saturday evening, the transformation of Symphony Hall will begin, the false floor will be taken out and instead of the formal seats, the informal tables and chairs will be placed. A number of improvements have been made which will add to the comfort of the patrons.

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, APRIL 24, 1911

Debussy's new "Iberia" was very warmly received at the Symphony Concert of Saturday night. At the pause in the piece, the applause seemed a little hesitating, but at the end it was very hearty and very long for new music by a much-doubted composer. Twice or thrice Mr. Fiedler acknowledged it, and finally he called the orchestra to its feet and deservedly. Another season, it is safe to predict, we shall hear "Iberia" again. Mrs. Kelsey, in turn, sang more expressively than she had on Friday afternoon, and apparently a threatening cold no longer hampered her. She has not altogether the amplitude of voice and the breadth of style that her pieces from Beethoven and Weber exacted, but she has what is rare in the singing of them—a sense of their beauty of contour and of phrase, upper tones that are very limpid and edgeless, even if they are not impetuous; while the lower and the middle ranges of her voice are full of delicate and lovely shadings. Usually the singers at the Symphony Concerts bring their operatic ways with them. Mrs. Kelsey is of the pure vocal art of the concert-room.

MUSIC NOTES

DEBUSSY BUILDS IN SPAIN.

Night falls on the valley that divides you from the neighborhood of hard toilers. The hill whereon the toilers live, the hill whose helter-skelter housetops you have so often compared, and not unfavorably, either, with the geometrical zigzag of roof lines on your own street, is as indeterminate in contour as a cloud; every last fluttering hoist of linen from backyard porch has lost its gleam. The factory chimneys stand up plain on the valley floor, but objects beyond them are indistinguishable. Since you turned into your yard at 6 o'clock the scene of the sloping bank of houses has been rolled up; a back drop dull in hue, with points of light pricking through, has been lowered in its place; the wing illumination has been switched off.

You see the hill no longer. You hear it though. The homeliness of the toilers' demesne, a memory now to the eye, has become a pleasantly insinuating picture to the ear.

There are no such things as tone pictures, do you say? Then why, as you sit on your evening piazza, do you reconstruct the life of the hill from the sounds that come so clearly through the cool night air? You hear a footfall on the distant flagging, you hear the bark of the dog that it startles; you hear a bandman run the scale on his cornet, you hear a boy shout the last cadence of the day's play. You see a flash in a doorway; you hear voices of revellers who meet and set out on adventure; and you wonder at the strange harmony, the quaint coloring which the distance gives their speech.

In five minutes of listening and reverie you have thought out the whole evening program of the hill folk. Yes, and the locality you are dreaming about is more like somewhere in Spain than in industrial America. In fact it is the "Iberia" of Debussy.

You are in Symphony hall, not on your piazza; you are hearing Mr. Fiedler's orchestra meditate on some new pages of French scoring: "Night perfumes."

An example of American tone architecture was exhibited along with the French work at the Friday Symphony rehearsal. The architect himself, Arthur M. Curry, was there to set forth its meaning. Indian sentiment, decidedly classicized, finds expression in the "Atala" symphonic poem. An effect of spaciousness, in agreement with the large ground area on which the structure is reared, is successfully attained. A cold imagination has the composer? Yes, but not narrow. Poverty of idea? No, no; economy of resource. Conducted with skill by Mr. Curry and performed with earnest purpose by the symphony men, the new native piece made a good impression on the listeners.

Mme. Rider-Kelsey has come to her two appearances as Symphony soloist in the same manner that her American soprano predecessors in the season, Miss Farrar and Miss White came, with every detail of her program conscientiously studied. Her singing of her two florid arias is irreproachable in technique and [illegible]putably truthful in expression. In [illegible]arge ways as well as in the small her performance must win the approbation of any critic who stands behind the scenes with chalk and slate. Listen to her as Beethoven's unnamed heroine in the "Ah! Perfido" aria and then as Weber's Agatha on the balcony; compare the two interpretations and see if you have not the classic and the romantic in music as well illustrated as you ever hope to have them. A conscious artist is before you, you feel sure of that; an artist, however, who is independent of coach and studio, an artist who has made every technical difficulty own the interpreter's mastery.

Curry, "Atala," symphonic poem, after Chateaubriand, first performance, conducted by the composer; Beethoven, scene and aria, "Ah! Perfido," op. 65; Debussy, "Iberia," "Images" for orchestra No. 2, first time in Boston; Weber, Agatha's recitative and aria from "Der Freischutz"; Mendelssohn, overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," op. 27. Soloist, Mme. Corinne Rider-Kelsey.

NOTES.

Mr. Fiedler has made the last Symphony program of the year, which is to be played on Friday afternoon, April 28, and Saturday evening, April 29, popular in character. The first part will be given to Beethoven and Tschaikowsky and the last part entirely to Wagner. Beethoven will be represented by the "Coriolanus" overture and Tschaikowsky by the "Pathetic" symphony. The Wagnerian excerpts will comprise the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parcifal," the funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg." There will be no soloist.

The Symphony concert season in Cambridge closes Thursday evening, April 27, with Alwyn Schroeder appearing as soloist in Tschaikowsky's rococo variations for violoncello and orchestra. The Enesco orchestral suite, lately given its first Boston performance, Liszt's "Preludes" and Schumann's symphony in D minor, No. 4, will be played.

* * *

SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 23, 1911

Final Cambridge Symphony.

The final Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given next Thursday evening in Sanders theatre. The soloist will be Alwin Schroeder, the distinguished solo 'cellist of the orchestra. He will play Tschaikowsky's "Variations on a Rococo Theme." The orchestral part will comprise Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," the suite for orchestra by the Franco-Roumanian composer, Enesco, which had such a success at the Symphony concerts in Boston a few weeks ago, and Schumann's fourth symphony.

Symphony Hall "Pops" to Begin a Week From Monday.

As was the case last year Mr Strube will conduct the first half of the "Pop" concerts, which will begin in Symphony hall Monday night, May 1. The entire season will last for nine weeks, ending Saturday, July 1, and Mr Maquarre will assume the baton Thursday evening, June 1. Both of these conductors are favorites with the public and both of them have been spending not a little time during the past year in preparing new and attractive selections to put on the programs.

A number of good operattas and comic operas have come to the front during the past season and excerpts and medleys from these will be heard, beside which there are many lighter pieces for orchestra that Messrs Strube and Maquarre have found which will be played at the concerts. The orchestra will have at least 55 men in it and for the greater part of the season it will contain more.

During the two months there will be the usual "Special nights." Some of these already arranged for are "Amherst night," which is set for May 10; "Tech night," June 6; "Williams night," June 16. "Harvard night" has not yet been finally settled.

The national hotel men's association, which is to meet in Boston, will have a special night and it is likely that the Boston city club and the Clover club will have nights as last year.

Immediately after the end of the concert next Saturday evening the transformation of Symphony hall will begin, the false floor will be taken out and instead of the formal seats the informal tables and chairs will be placed. A number of improvements have been made which will add to the comfort of the patrons.

End of the Symphony Season.

The 30th season of Symphony concerts comes to an end next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening with the 24th public rehearsal and concert respectively. There will be no soloist, but Mr Fiedler has made a program which is decidedly popular in character.

The symphony will be Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," and this will be preceded by Beethoven's overture, "Coriolanus." The second part of the program will be devoted entirely to Wagner, the excerpts being the "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal"; the "Funeral Music," from "Dusk of the Gods," and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 1911

News of Music

FROM several letters and inquiries by telephone that have came to this department and from the general temper and curiosity toward "ultra-modern" music of the audiences at the Cambridge concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, it seems a plausible deduction that it would like to hear Debussy's "Iberia" in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening in lieu of Enesco's Suite that the programme announces. Enesco is indeed an interesting composer and his Suite deserves repetition, but there is inevitably more curiosity over Debussy and over a new piece that impressed its two audiences in Boston as did "Iberia."

POST, THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1911

FINAL SYMPHONY CONCERT

The final public rehearsal and concert of the Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1910-1911 will be held in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, respectively. The programme begins with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, which will be followed by Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony. The second half of the programme is devoted to Wagner, the pieces being the Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," funeral music from "Gotterdammerung" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

OPENING NIGHT OF POPS

Monday night, which will mark the opening of the season of the Pops at Symphony Hall, promises to be as brilliant as usual. Large numbers of tables have been taken, and there will be several brilliant parties. Gustav Strube will be the conductor.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1911

THE coöperation for a season of the Symphony Orchestra and the Cecilia has by no means solved the intricate problem of the maintenance of choral music in Boston. In fact, the tangible results of the alliance have only complicated it the more, and made the continuance of the partnership debatable and uncertain. In the first place, it is clear that the conductor of the 120 concerts that the Symphony Orchestra undertakes in a musical year has not sufficient time and energy for the training of a choir like the Cecilia, even though he be as diligent and enduring as Mr. Fiedler himself. For the Cecilia to sing in a single season Bantock's "Omar," a new piece, Pierné's "Children's Crusade," and Bach's Passion Music—for years outside its working repertory—required long rehearsal Mr. Fiedler had not time for such work; yet the conductor, who is finally to lead the choir, ought to do it. The "finishing touches" that he may put to others' preparations will not suffice for wholly satisfactory performance. Moreover, the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra will always be an orchestral rather than a choral conductor—the latter function requires peculiar talents—and he will always be a man accustomed to deal masterfully with highly expert professional musicians and not persuasively with a body of amateurs giving their services in their own way like the Cecilia. The obvious conclusion is that since the Cecilia needs much training and since it has a discipline of its own, it needs also its own conductor.

On the other hand, the concerts of the year now ending have made plain that the Cecilia is not a sufficiently numerous choir to be well mated with the Symphony Orchestra. In all the four parts, there are too few singers; the deficiency among the tenors is so large that they are scarcely audible in any considerable ensemble; while the baritones and the basses yield no sufficient body of tone. The quality of the soprano and alto voices rather than their volume saves them from this reproach. The expectation was that the alliance would materially increase the numbers of the Cecilia; but the result has been wholly disappointing. To judge by the numbers and the eagerness of the audiences at the three concerts of the season, the public prefers to hear choral music, like Bach's, that requires masses of tone that the present forces of the Cecilia cannot yield. The Cecilia was to coöperate in the performance of music at the regular Symphony Concerts that enlisted an incidental choir. Mr. Fiedler has happened to choose no such music this year, except at a Pension-Fund concert, in part because he had no time to rehearse it and in part because the men of the Cecilia, having their regular work to do, are an uncertain quantity at afternoon concerts. And here, again, the difference that separates amateur and professional bodies, hamperingly arose. Neither party to the alliance has profited as much by it as there was reason to expect, and the actual workings of it have opened new difficulties that must be adjusted if it is to be maintained. Yet the alliance has developed a larger public for choral concerts here than at first it seemed likely to win. That is the encouragement that should counsel the future. H. T. P.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1911

The final public rehearsal and concert of the Symphony Orchestra will be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening. Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, the Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," the funeral music from "Gotterdammerung," and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" make up the program.

Monday night, which will be the opening of the season of Pops at Symphony Hall, promises to be as brilliant as usual. Large numbers of tables have been taken and there will be several brilliant parties. Mr. Strube will be the conductor.

HERALD, THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1911.

CONCERT NOTES

The final Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given in Sanders Theatre this evening at 8 o'clock. Alwin Schroeder will play Tschaikowsky's Variations on a Rococo Theme. The program includes Liszt's "Preludes," Enesco's Suite and Schumann's D Minor Symphony, No. 4.

The final public rehearsal and concert of the Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1910-1911 will be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, respectively. Mr. Fiedler has made a popular program: Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony and Wagner's Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Funeral Music from "Goetterdaemmerung" and the Prelude to "The Mastersingers."

Monday night, which will mark the opening of the season of Pops at Symphony Hall, promises to be as brilliant as usual. Large numbers of tables have been taken. Mr. Strube will be the conductor.

MUSIC NOTES.

The final Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given in Sanders theatre this evening at 8 p.m. The soloist will be Mr. Alwin Schroeder who will play Tschaikowsky's Variations on a Rococo Theme. The orchestral part of the programme comprises Liszt's "Les Preludes," Enesco's Suite, which had a success at the Symphony concerts a few weeks ago and Schumann's D-minor Symphony No. 4.

The final public rehearsal and concert of the Symphony orchestra for the season of 1910-1911 will be given in Symphony hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening respectively. Mr. Fiedler has made a programme decidedly popular in character for all the works on it are well-tried favorites. It begins with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overtures, which will be followed by Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony. The second half of the programme will be devoted to Wagner, the pieces being the Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," funeral music from "Gotterdammerung" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Wuremberg."

Monday night, which will mark the opening of the season of Pops at Symphony hall, promises to be as brilliant as usual. Large numbers of tables have been taken and there will be several brilliant parties. Mr. Strube will be the conductor.

APRIL 28, 1911

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY

at this change of custom, though not so long ago it was upsetting the habits of years. Every hat will be off as though hats had never been worn "from the earliest times" at the Symphony Concerts. Yet five short months back warning posters on the walls of the lobby insisted that hats should be no longer worn, and ushers sped up and down the aisles to make the insistence urgent. A courteous management explained by circular; the "special officer" of the hall put on his "official" cap. There were entreaties, repinings, threats, momentary refusals. In the end, after a fortnight of mild combat, all the hats came off and stayed off. The long, if intermittent, battle of years ended at last in the victory of those who would see at a Symphony Concert as well as hear. There is no more occasion for letters to the manager, letters to the editor, the biting word in an audible whisper, the annihilating look. Thus do "great reforms" accomplish themselves. There is the agitation, the seemingly hopeless agitation of years. Then in the twinkling of an eye—or in this case of a feather—the reform is accomplished, and a week later the old conditions are as though they never were. Henceforth and forever the hatted at the Symphony Concerts have become the hatless. No doubt the learned and observant "programmist" has made a note about it in his addenda or, perhaps, corrigenda.

News of Music

THE final afternoon concert of the Symphony Orchestra for the season befalls today, and for the first time since the spring began, the weather invites to the hats and the frocks that used to make Symphony Hall look like a very radiant, if a very wildly growing, garden. As of old, the frocks will gladden men's eyes—and women's; but the hats, bright with the lustre of new straw and dappled with all the hues of a hundred millinery shops, will lie half hidden upon the laps of the audience. No more does the spectator in the balcony look down, as it were, upon Klingsor's magic garden in "Parsifal" while the orchestra plays the music of the flower-maidens. And no one will grumble now

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1911

OVATION IS GIVEN CONDUCTOR FIEDLER

Symphony Patrons Show Appreciation of His Remarkable Work.

Conductor Fiedler and the Symphony Orchestra, after the season's last matinee yesterday, enjoyed an ovation intensified beyond all customary bounds by a stirring and scintillating performance of one of the most popular programs on record.

Mr. Fiedler's appearance was the signal for the first outburst of applause. No conductor in the orchestra's history has shown more modesty, and none has won greater popularity; and the increased drawing power the orchestra has developed under his guidance speaks for itself. The season has been notable at home, and away from home the orchestra has met unparalleled success at a time when other organizations of the kind, with one or two exceptions, have been struggling to keep in existence. Mr. Fiedler's success has been genuine. The enthusiasm yesterday made it clear that the Symphony patrons—and patronesses, too—will be glad to see him back.

The orchestra, too, had its share of the applause, standing up to take it. The program of these final concerts includes Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony and three Wagner numbers—the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," the "Funeral Music" from the "Dusk of the Gods" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremburg."

APRIL 27, 1911 HERALD, BOSTON,

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The 30th season of Symphony concerts will come to an end on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening with the 24th public rehearsal and concert, respectively. There will be no soloist, but Mr. Fiedler has made a program which is decidedly popular in character. The symphony will be Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," which will be preceded by Beethoven's overture, "Coriolanus." The second part of the program will be devoted wholly to Wagner, the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," the funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY

The final Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given next Thursday evening, April 27, in Sanders Theatre. The soloist, Alwin Schroeder, the well known violoncellist of the orchestra, will play Tschaikowsky's Variations on a Rococo Theme. The orchestral pieces will be Liszt's popular symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," the Suite for orchestra by the Franco-Roumanian composer Enesco, which was played in Boston a few weeks ago, and Schumann's symphony in D minor, No. 4.

COMING "POP" CONCERTS

As last year Mr. Strube will conduct the first half of the "Pop" concerts which will begin on Monday night, May 1. The season will last for nine weeks ending on Saturday, July 1. Mr. Maquarre will begin to conduct on Thursday evening, June 1. These conductors are favorites with the public and they have been spending not a little time during the past year in selecting new and attractive pieces for the programs. A number of good operettas and comic operas have been produced during the past season and excerpts and medleys from them will be heard. There will also be a number of light pieces for orchestra. The orchestra will have at least 55 men in it and for the greater part of the season it will contain more.

During the two months there will be the usual "special nights." Some of these already arranged for are "Amherst night," which is set for May 10; "Tech night," June 6; "Williams night," June 16. "Harvard night" has not yet been finally settled. The National Hotel Men's Association, which will meet, here, will have a special night. Moreover, it is likely that the Boston City Club and the Clover Club will have nights as last year.

Boston Traveler April 29. 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL.

The 26th season of the Pop concerts of the Symphony orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on next Monday evening, May 1. The season, as last year, will run till July 1, and concerts will be given every evening except Sunday. During the month of May, Gustav Strube will conduct and in June the conductor will be Andre Maquarre. Some welcome improvements will be found in the arrangements at Symphony Hall, particularly on the first balcony floor, where room will be set apart for ices and the like.

Among some of the new operetta and musical comedy excerpts to be played during the season will be, "The Girl in the Train," "Naughty Marietta," "The Pink Lady," "The Spring Maid," and "Rosita." Mr. Strube will also perform excerpts from Victor Herbert's new grand opera, "Natome." Strauss waltzes from the composer's new comic opera, "The Knight of the Roses" (Rosenkavalier) which has been the reigning craze of the past season in Europe will also be given.

March, "Chanticler" (first time).Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville" Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South"..Strauss
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'Cello (first time)...Strube
M. J. Keller.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
(a) Danse russe Trepak.
(b) Danse des Mirlitons.
(c) Valse des fleurs.
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi s'amuse malgre lui".....Chabrier
(a) To a Wild Rose.....MacDowell
(b) To a Water-Lily (first time) MacDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train" (first time).....Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

BOSTON POST, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1911

SYMPHONY IS HEARD AT BEST

Final Rehearsal Extraordinary Example of Virtuosity

BY OLIN DOWNES

The final public rehearsal of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, and the occasion was made memorable by Mr. Fiedler's superb reading of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" symphony. The programme embraced the Coriolanus overture of Beethoven and three Wagner excerpts, the "Good Friday Spell" from Parsifal; the funeral music from "The Dusk of the Gods" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers."

The performance of Tschaikowsky's remarkable work will not easily be forgotten. Mr. Fiedler is a man of moods. He interpreted this symphony two seasons ago, and there is no comparison with the performance of yesterday. For technical finish, the most painstaking conductor of them all, Wilhelm Gericke, might have been at the helm, while it is probable that the symphony has not been read so dramatically since the days of Nikisch or Paur, with whom this work was a favorite.

The Symphonie Pathetique, in spite of the over-playing to which it is subjected, remains one of the great masterpieces of modern orchestral music. As a constructive artist, Tschaikowsky never rose to a greater height, as a colorist he displays all of his characteristics at their best, and in the transcendent expression of emotion he has here achieved his greatest heights. The two last movements are among the most remarkable movements in symphonic music. The opening of the magnificent march, perhaps the most perfect piece of music the composer ever penned, reminds one in its suggestion of vastness and preparation of the dream of de Quincy, who heard infinite cavalades filing off in the distance, who knew that a battle, an issue, was being waged, greater than ever mortal man had striven.

This "music of preparation and suspense," of battle lust and the irony of the last despair, is incredible in its might. That Tschaikowsky, the neurotic, could achieve such a mailed, implacable expression is in itself one of the psychological marvels of the past century. This fantastical subtle music is graven like stone. It is inexorable in its progress. As though all the armies of the universe were marching to the final conflict.

This movement, and two which precede, are exceedingly modern in feeling and expression. And so, as far as its structure is concerned, is the great lament of the finale. That, while the first three sections could only have been thought by a man very modern in his emotions as well as his manner of thinking, the final lamentation must have been sung by nations since the world was young. It is indeed the capstone of one of those entirely unexplainable compositions that apparently come from the brain of a man, and which for lack of a better name, we call "works of genius."

Mr. Fiedler infused the opening section with all possible savagery and barbaric opulence of coloring. The popular movement in five-four rhythm was as successful in a more graceful manner, but the great effect was reserved for the march, and here, indeed, the conductor did colossal things. The performance was delayed a moment or two by the applause that followed, and after the finale the audience gave the conductor and the orchestra an ovation, which the men rose to acknowledge.

The orchestral performance had been an extraordinary example of virtuosity, to say nothing of its expressive qualities. So once more the despised Tschaikowsky, the most uneven of all great composers, came into his own.

The Beethoven overture, which seems to be a favorite work with Mr. Fiedler, was also very well read, while Mr. Fiedler indulged in extra noise in the funeral music and in his lusty reading of the "Meistersinger" overture. When he entered at beginning of the concert he was given a warm and prolonged greeting, and at the last the audience lingered an instant to wish him cordial farewell until next October.

RECORD, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1911

THE POPS.

The 26th season of the Pop concerts of the Symphony Orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on next Monday evening. The season, as last year, will run for nine weeks, the last concert coming on July 1. Also, as in the past, the concerts will be given on every night of the week except on Sunday night.

During the month of May the conductor will be Mr. Gustav Strube, who has occupied this post almost continuously for the last dozen years. In the month of June the conductor will be Mr. Andre Maquarre, whose third season it will be in this capacity.

Both Mr. Strube and Mr. Maquarre have been eagerly searching during the past winter for new music to play at the concerts. Both have succeeded in finding much, a considerable part of which is sure to find favor with the public. Since last spring a number of new operettas and musical comedies have appeared, selections from which will be played, notably "The Girl in the Train," "Naughty Marietta," "The Pink Lady," "The Spring Maid" and "Rosetta."

[222]

FINAL SYMPHONY PROGRAMME OF 1911

SUPERB PERFORMANCE OF THE "PATHETIC"

Beethoven and Wagner Furnish the Remainder of the Entertainment—Much Enthusiasm.

By Louis C. Elson.

PROGRAMME.

Beethoven—"Coriolanus" Overture.
Tschaikowsky—"Pathetic Symphony."
Wagner—"Good Friday's Spell."
Wagner—Siegfried's Funeral Music.
Wagner—Prelude to "The Mastersingers."

A purely orchestral concert, which we confess to enjoying best in such a series. We do not care to have our great orchestra come in competition with the "star" system, to have an enormous throng wait at the doors for a chance to hear Melba or Farrar and consider the instrumental numbers as a necessary adjunct merely to be tolerated. "Blessings brighten as they take their flight," and this last concert was something to be remembered.

The "Coriolanus" overture was given with great virility and dignity. It was not exaggerated in any way, a temptation to which many conductors yield only too easily, since Wagner opened the door with his pamphlet "On Conducting." There was an object-lesson too, in the fact that while the combination of loftiness and sorrow that speaks in the "Coriolanus" overture is as powerful as ever, the final movement of the Tschaikowsky symphony grows a little tamer in its recital of woe. A mere tale of complaining may move once or twice, but it loses power eventually, just as the wails of a chronic invalid grow less effective with repetition.

It was evident, from the beginning, that Mr. Fiedler was not going to dwell upon the whining side of the Finale nor to make the symphony anything like "sick-chamber" music. It is a great work for all its excess of emotion at the end, one of the masterpieces of the modern repertoire. But it can be made weak when in the wrong hands. Long ago Mr. Paur saw the strength of the work and gave it a great performance. Mr. Gericke and Dr. Muck fell a little below this level. Yesterday afternoon Mr. Fiedler exceeded in merit every previous performance of it in Boston.

In the first movement he minimized the complaining note and dwelt more upon the manly and noble features. The woodwind played excellently, and they have very much to do in a Tschaikowsky work. Those inexorable pizzicato scales upon the contra-basses and violoncellos were perfectly given at the end of this movement. The first movement was a musical triumph, but the audience took a little time to recognize that it was hearing an extraordinary performance. They woke up to that fact in the next movement, the longest bit of 5-4 rhythm in existence. Yet this was not quite so well done as we have had it under Gericke. Something of the elasticity was lost. Nevertheless here the applause began and it continued—crescendo molto,—until the end.

In this movement, in the Trio, the kettle-drum gave just the right throbbing effect to the bass, not forcing itself into prominence. The instrument had prominence enough in other parts of the symphony.

We admire our kettle-drummer. We love a man who does not slight a humble instrument, but tries to idealize it. Such a man was Pfund, in Germany. Such a man our present kettle-drummer seems to be.

In the Finale Mr. Fiedler took the pace rather slower than we are accustomed to hearing it. We fancy that he was afraid of its becoming sentimental and therefore took refuge in breadth and power. We confess to caring less for the death-scene than we used to. One feels like giving the invalid an anodyne once in a while. It is not a Death such as Strauss has depicted in his great tone-poem, which might have the motto—"Oh Death, where is thy sting? Where grave, thy Victory?" It is simply a painful scene at a sick bed, to which there is no possible sequel but the undertaker.

But the glory which Mr. Fiedler gave to the third movement sent thrills down one's spine. Never, never, never have we heard such combat and triumph, in this work. At the end of the symphony there was great applause, and at last Mr. Fiedler was obliged to let the orchestra rise and share in the triumph. But in this case it was not the orchestra, it was the conductor who deserved the triumph. His reading took all the effeminacy out of the work and brought out all its grandeur. It was a great reading.

Since we are speaking of the enthusiasm of the occasion we must add that Mr. Fiedler was welcomed, when he came upon the platform, with an outburst of applause, loud and long-continued, and a similar ovation took place at the end. These tributes must have convinced him that he has won a warm place in Boston hearts.

The Wagner numbers, which formed the second part of the concert, were broadly and finely read. The "Char Freitagszauber" is one of the most religious pastorales ever written. It is a new conception of that supreme day and diametrically opposite to the gloom of the "Tenebrae" and other mournful music which is associated with it. The oboes did some especially fine work in this and the interweaving of many themes was made as clear as we have recently heard it. It is, however, too subtle a number to awaken great enthusiasm.

We were glad to see the next number called "Funeral music" and not "Siegfried's Funeral March," as is so often done. It is not a funeral march at all, but a recital of the great deeds of the hero. In Old Ireland the "Keener" used to chant the great deeds of the deceased, at the wake, and this music seems to be like an Irish "Keen." It is the idealization of the "Leit-motif," and those who understand these figures can read Siegfried's [illegible] in the recital. The work was read in a most heroic vein.

But the full breadth and power of the orchestra was unchained in that best of Preludes, the Vorspiel to "Die Meistersinger." All the pomp of festivity was in its measures and it brought the season to a lofty close.

THE POPS.

The 26th season of the Pop concerts of the Symphony Orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on next Monday evening. The season, as last year, will run for nine weeks, the last concert coming on July 1. Also, as in the past, the concerts will be given on every night of the week except on Sunday night.

During the month of May the conductor will be Mr. Gustav Strube, who has occupied this post almost continuously for the last dozen years. In the month of June the conductor will be Mr. Andre Maquarre, whose third season it will be in this capacity.

Both Mr. Strube and Mr. Maquarre have been eagerly searching during the past winter for new music to play at the concerts. Both have succeeded in finding much, a considerable part of which is sure to find favor with the public. Since last spring a number of new operettas and musical comedies have appeared, selections from which will be played, notably "The Girl in the Train," "Naughty Marietta," "The Pink Lady," "The Spring Maid" and "Rosetta."

AT THE SYMPHONY.

Final Afternoon Concert Given by the Orchestra.

Mr Fiedler and Men Applauded at Close of Superb Performance.

The last public rehearsal of the Symphony for this season was given yesterday afternoon. The program was as follows: Beethoven, overture to "Coriolanus"; Tschaikowsky, symphony No. 6, "Pathetic"; Wagner, "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

The audience paid a marked tribute to Mr Fiedler and the men of the orchestra. At his first appearance, the conductor was greeted with prolonged applause, which he stood and acknowledged with quiet dignity. At the conclusion of what was a superb performance of the Tschaikowsky, the audience again applauded, which Mr Fiedler received alone and then with the members of the orchestra standing.

After the last piece, great numbers rose to their feet, and stood while the handclapping continued ardent and for moments unabated. Again Mr Fiedler directed that the men should stand with him and receive their share of the demonstration.

It was an impressive and a just tribute. Boston leaves no question at the season's close as to the endorsement of its orchestra and of these concerts. There was marked expression of cordiality and appreciation for Mr Fiedler.

It is beyond the province of any one man to be a perfect mouthpiece to every school and every composer. Mr Fiedler is essentially a masculine conductor. If he betrays less sympathy with the subtleties of lyric beauty and with that form of suggestion which intensifies by withholding, he approaches Beethoven with reverence, brings a sweeping vigor and fine virility to Strauss, and has kept and enhanced the splendid precision and sonority of tone for which the orchestra has been known.

Kept Pace With the Times.

Furthermore, Mr Fiedler has shown a commendable catholicity of taste in his programs. He has not been chauvinistic with one school or one composer and indifferent or negligent with another. He has kept pace with the times and has brought forward new works, all of which may not retain a place in the orchestra's repertory, but were worth the hearing. He has given to the public works of the younger men abroad, as Enesco, Mandl, Delius and Sibelius, and he has not disdainfully turned his face from the American composer.

Of the 20 pieces played for the first time in Boston, "Iberia" is the most interesting and significant. A second hearing revealed its subtlety in a clearer light. Here is that rare and elusive beauty which may not be wholly detected at once.

Tschaikowsky's monumental symphony, when performed as yesterday with virtuosity, understanding and sympathy, is a work to be remembered. It is not a masterpiece of symphonic music, because of its transgressions of established form, as the concluding lament in place of an apotheosis or a paean of victory, or because of the amazing fertility of invention and development of thematic material displayed. The composer wrote his brother Modest that he loved it as no other of his works. He was engrossed with heart and mind. He spoke of a "program" in it, but would not reveal the secret.

Universal Music.

Whatever the motive that inspired this Tschaikowsky's "Swan Song," here is music which bears the test of universality. In it men may find the pomposity, the feverish aspiration, revolt and outcry of life, and there are in it profound and noble thoughts of the grave.

The Wagner excerpts were played with authority and great tonal beauty.

MR FIEDLER SAILS.

Conductor of Boston Symphony to Leave for New York and Sail on Tuesday for Europe.

Conductor Max Fiedler of the Symphony orchestra and Mrs Fiedler, with Miss Gabory, their friend, who has been with them this winter in Boston, will leave Boston tomorrow afternoon at 3 for New York and sail on the Kronprinzessen Cecilie Tuesday morning with several distinguished musicians who have been in this country this year.

Among them will be Arturo Toscanini, principal conductor of the Metropolitan opera house, New York; Alfred Hertz, German conductor of the Metropolitan opera house; Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Cincinnati orchestra, and his bride, who was Olga Samaroff; the pianist, Josef Hofmann, and Mrs Hofmann and several singers of the Metropolitan opera company.

Mr and Mrs Fiedler will go direct to Hamburg, their home, and in a fortnight expect to go to some watering place, probably Kissingen. Mr Fiedler is planning to spend July and August at Garmisch, a beautiful village in the Bavarian highlands not far from Munich, where Richard Strauss has his home. Mr and Mrs Fiedler will sail for America at the end of September.

Many others of the orchestra will sail soon. Mr Noack, the second concert master, has already gone to Holland on account of the serious illness of his mother. Mr Witek will go in June for a few weeks in Europe. Mr Longy will sail from Boston on the Franconia on Tuesday. Mr Roth sails next week and Mr Lenom late in May.

"CARIOLANUS" MARKS CLOSING SYMPHONY

By EDITH BURNHAM.

At the last Symphony rehearsal of the season yesterday afternoon Mr. Fiedler selected as a farewell programme all the things which he was sure his audience would like, every number had a deep personal note in it, such as one likes to feel in a farewell concert, and conductor and orchestra gave of their best to their audience in spite of the heat of the day. Mr. Fiedler was greeted with cheers at his first appearance, and he, together with the whole orchestra, was called upon to respond to the prolonged applause after the Tschaikowsky "Pathetic" Symphony, and at the close of the programme there was a long goodbye applause given him.

The Beethoven overture to "Coriolanus" opened this programme. Although having a deeply stirred and fevered theme, which goes through the subjective struggle of the Shakespearean hero, it is the purely musical themes of the overture which triumph in the end, as is always true of Beethoven music. The delicacies of these musical themes were exquisitely brought out yesterday.

The Tschaikowsky "Pathetic" Symphony followed the symphony which is the musical Sphinx,—for the composer told his public only one thing about it, that into it he had written more of himself than in any other of his compositions, and thus out of it each listener must take in proportion to what he can feel. This "Pathetic" Symphony is distinctly a "feeling" symphony—it gathers up all the feeling of a lifetime of the composer, it picks up the threads of life one at a time, some of them silver and gold, some of them frayed and gray, some stout and strong and some frail and broken, and fuses them in a cord which links life that is going, the life of earthly struggles and achievements, with the life that is coming, the life of eternal growth.

With all its sadness, its farewell to the illusions of youth in the first adagio, its riot of living in the allegro its sickening and palling of life's successes in the scherzo, and its final adagio lament, which sadly says goodbye to it all, the spirit weighed down by its futility of this symphony is full of the beauty and the mystery of life. Despite its closing lament, which is tragedy rent, for the soil of earth has somehow fallen on every blossom and spoiled some petal, still the surpassing loveliness of life's flower is seen and its fragrance felt. After all, the composer possessed that genius which unites the human and the divine in his life, even as the late Henry Bernard Carpenter wrote in his long poem "Liber Amoris," the poem of divine love and human—

"Nature and he might meet and mate each other;
For Love, said he, is genius that can draw
Whatever is best within us to wed fast
Whatever is best and loveliest under Heaven."

Mr. Fiedler conducted this symphony without the score, and read into it deep and full expression.

The closing half of the programme was Wagnerian, a rich memory to tide over the closing season with the coming one, including as it did the "Parsifal Good Friday Spell," the funeral march from the "Dusk of the Gods" and the "Meistersinger Prelude," with its glorious affirmation of the Mastersinger.

SYMPHONY SEASON CLOSES.

Anton Witek's first violins have been the crowning honor of the Symphony orchestra this season, just as Mr. Hess' first violins were in seasons before and as Franz Kneisel's were in the old days. The Symphony first violins for 25 years have been the chief musical pride of Boston and probably will be so for a long time to come. But the praise of that group of instruments is different today from what it was before Max Fiedler came to Boston; no more wonderful, perhaps, than it used to be, but having a new, a fuller, broader manner of expression.

To pick out other sections of the organization which have been not only responsive, but keen to advance to the Fiedler ideal, there are the violas under Mr. Ferir, the two quartets of French horns and the group of heavy brass. To mention soloists who have accepted the Fiedler theory of rendering melodies of individual color, there are the principals of the French horns, Mr. Sadony of the bassoons and Mr. Grisez of the clarinets.

The programs of the present season have been rather lighter than those of Mr. Fiedler's first two years, perhaps on account of some reactionary feeling in the orchestra, possibly on account of the public's unwillingness to be led into modern ways too fast.

The program of Friday afternoon was: Beethoven, overture to "Coriolanus," op. 62; Tschaikowsky, symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," in B minor, op. 74; Wagner, "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal"; funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods"; prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Fiedler sail for Europe on the Kronprinzessen Cecilie Tuesday morning with a number of the most distinguished musicians who have been in America this season. Among them will be Arturo Toscanini, principal conductor of the Metropolitan opera house, New York; Alfred Hertz, German conductor of the Metropolitan opera house; Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Cincinnati orchestra, and his bride, who was Olga Samaroff, the well-known pianist; Joseph Hofmann and Mrs. Hofmann and several of the principal singers of the Metropolitan opera company. Mr. Fiedler is planning to spend July and August at Garmisch, a beautiful village in the Bavarian highlands not for from Munich, where Richard Strauss has his home. He will return to America at the end of September.

Mr. Longy sails from Boston on the Franconia on Tuesday. Mr. Roth sails next week and Mr. Lenom late in May. Mr. Witek will not leave until the end of June.

"Pop" Concert Opening Due Tomorrow Night

A particularly brilliant opening is promised for the twenty-sixth season of pop concerts in Symphony Hall, which begin tomorrow evening.

Through May the conductor will be Gustav Strube, who has made many warm friends in the dozen years in which he has occupied this post for a part of each season. Mr. Strube, always up to date, has written a new march which he calls the March "Chantecler," and he will introduce a number of interesting novelties, selections from the best and most popular of the operettas and musical comedies which have appeared in this country during the past season. An interesting feature of his program for next Tuesday night will be the first performance in Boston, and probably the first performance in America, of a set of waltzes from Richard Strauss's new comic opera, "The Knight of the Roses," which is the reigning sensation of the day in Europe.

Some improvements have been made in the arrangements of Symphony Hall that will please the patrons. Particularly is this true of the room on the floor of the first balcony where ices and the like are served for balcony patrons. The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Chantecler" (first time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'cello (first time).....Strube
J. Keller.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
(a) Danse russe Trepak. (b) Danse des Mirlitons. (c) Valse des fleurs.
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre lue," Chabrier
(a) "To a Wild Rose, (b) "To a Water Lily" (first time).....MacDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train" (first time).....Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

[223]

HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1911.

SYMPHONY GIVES FINAL REHEARSAL

Popular Program Gives Great Pleasure; Mr. Fiedler Enthusiastically Applauded.

By PHILIP HALE.

The 24th public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last of the 30th season, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Overture to "Coriolanus".....Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic".....Tschaikowsky
Good Friday spell from "Parsifal".....Wagner
Funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods."
Wagner
Prelude to "The Mastersingers".....Wagner

When Mr. Fiedler appeared on the stage the applause was hearty, and the demonstration of appreciation lasted for some time. The performance of the symphony awakened enthusiasm, and the third movement, which, when the work was first played here, left the audience cool and perplexed, yesterday was especially applauded.

The program was of a popular nature, and although there was no soloist, the second gallery was wholly filled. With a program of this nature, the orchestra is a soloist of the greatest drawing power. There has been for some years in Germany and at Paris an effort to do away with soloists at symphony concerts. There are concertos and other pieces for piano and orchestra that fit the general scheme, and violinists and pianists are less obtrusive than singers. No matter who the singer may be, her arias and groups of songs are usually without relation to the rest of the program, and when she is a famous prima donna, the orchestral pieces serve only as a background for her display.

It was a pleasure to hear Beethoven's overture again. There are few nobler, few more tragic pages in all music. There is no digression, no elaboration. The overture is as compact, concise, expressive as Synge's "Riders to the Sea." And how simple the structure! By what simple means the thought of the haughty heroic soul is impressed on the hearer! The tragedy for which the overture was written was by von Collin; but the music is after the manner of Greek tragedy. "And one of Plutarch's men talked with us face to face."

There was a time when it seemd as though Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony would pass by reason of its popularity, and many prophesied it would be forgotten when the composer's fifth and fourth were still heard eagerly. The "Pathetic" is now nearly 18 years old, and it still moves and thrills. The music tempts conductors to extravagance in pace and in expression. The lyric theme in the first movement is often sung in a sentimental fashion, and the third movement is often hurried. Mr. Fiedler avoided sentimentalism and on the whole gave a dramatic reading. There should have been a stronger contrast between the dance section and the inexorable trio of the second movement, and in this trio the monotony of the drum, one of the most striking features of the symphony, was not fully brought out, for the wall of strings and woodwind was too pronounced. The third movement was taken at so fast a pace that the general effect was impaired. With any other orchestra there would have been a scramble to the climax.

It is idle to debate the question whether excerpts from Wagner's music-dramas should or should not be played in concert. Wagner, himself, not only permitted concert performances, but led them. This was at a time when he gladly heard his own music outside the opera house and was not prepared to theorize in the matter.

The first public rehearsal of the 31st season, Mr. Fiedler, conductor, will be on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6.

A review of the season of 1910-11 will be published in the editorial section of Sunday's Herald.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN

APRIL 30, 1911

"POP" SEASON IS OPENED TOMORROW

Brilliant Inauguration of Concerts in Symphony Hall Is Promised.

A particularly brilliant opening is promised for the twenty-sixth season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall which begins tomorrow evening. The reservations of tables have been very large and a number of particularly brilliant parties will be present.

As last year, the season of Pops will continue for nine weeks the last concert coming on Saturday evening, July 1st. Through May the conductor will be Gustav Strube who has made many warm friends in the dozen years in which he has occupied this post for a part of each season. The last half of the season, in June, will bring as conductor Andre Maquarre who was "tried out" two years ago with such success that he, like Mr. Strube, has become a permanent fixture.

Some improvements have been made in the arrangements of Symphony Hall that will please the patrons. The programme for to-morrow night is as follows:

March, "Chanticler" (first time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'cello (first time).....Strube
MR. J. KELLER.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
Danse russe Trepak. (b) Danse des Mirlitons. (c) Valse des fleurs.
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre Lui".Chabrier
To a Wild Rose.....McDowell
To a Water-Lily (first time).....McDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train" (first time.Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1911

"THE POPS" AGAIN

The Twenty-Sixth Season to Begin at Symphony Hall on Monday—The Orchestra, the Conductors and the Music—The Other Familiar Arrangements—The First Programme

THE Symphony Concerts end at Symphony Hall tonight; next Monday, the "Pop" Co... sical calendar ... years, and the ... change in it. On ... for "The Pops" ... men from the larg... Mr. Strube wil lea... of May and Mr. ... month of June ur... the first day of J... again will run t... potpourris from ... cal plays and o... season has yield... "The Spring Ma... Train" and "Mad... nese waltzes, po... "selections" from ... sic and contem... overtures; and ... from Wagner ... Strube, as usual ... musical adventur... Strauss has arra... of the Rose" (to ... probably for the ... into Mr. Herbert's ... played on Friday ... "Chantecler" and ... violoncello of ... played on Mond... turn, has picked ... the annually re... light music. Th... frequently, since ... Pops" evidently ... casion there will ... or another leader ... choirs; and the "col... have their songs and ... ate to each seat of lea... other things.

So much for the m... concerts. Slight chan... year keep it elastic; o... lines that many season ... approved. A like wisdo... arrangements for the ... will replace the ranks o... of Symphony Hall, and ... them may smoke at wi... refreshments" that an... fords, and in general t... their light pleasure as ... other concerts and at ... the year. The lower ... fore, will be reserved for those that prefer the usual chairs of a concert-room and who do not care to smoke; but, by way of innovation, a neighboring room has been fitted and decorated for the serving of ices and the like. The rest is—the pleasant recollections of all the years that have made "The Pops" unique in America and of the new store that the new season should add to them. The programme for Monday night remains:

March, "Chantecler" (first time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Bohème".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'Cello (first time).....Strube
(Mr. Keller)
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Ballet Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
Fête Polonaise from "Le Roi malgré Lui".....Chabrier
To a Wild Rose.—To a Water-Lily (first time).....MacDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train".....Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

TELEPHONE 2923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Symphony Program
"O wad some power the gittie gi'e us To see ourse'l's as ithers see us!"
HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc
110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.
CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK
NEW YORK
The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World
From JOURNAL
Address PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Date JUL 6
The managers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have issued the programme notes of the 30th season of the orchestra in a bound volume, in accordance with their custom. When the entire series is collected these notes make 1832 pages; there are 24 separate pamphlets gathered together, and at the end there is a summary of the works given, the performers who took part, and an index of the miscellaneous matter that makes up a considerable portion of the volume.
These programme notes are familiar to the frequenters of the orchestra's concerts, but the marvel as to their accuracy, detail and inclusiveness is continually renewed, comments the New York Times. They are the work of Philip Hale of Boston, as everybody knows, and they are equally noteworthy for their great learning and their persuasive charm in treating subjects that tend toward dryness. These programme notes are worthy of the remarkable orchestra for which they are prepared. Many, if not most, of the great orchestras of the world issue such notes for their concerts, but none of them equals in interest and authority Mr. Hale's. The bound volumes are an invaluable repository of records, information and comment.

SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 30, 1911

...IC AND MUSICIANS

"Pop" Concerts Begin T... Night.

...duct, ...eek's ...ip.

...b" con... ...tra will ... Monday ... for nine ...g Satur... the past ...n every ...y night. ...conduc... ...has oc... ...nuously ...e month ...e Andre ...t will be ... will be ...he hall. ... of the ...r, which ... the like. ...ated and ...able and ...e attrac... ...or balcony patrons. ... the custom light ... served, including ...s.

...heir way, as much ...oston as the Sym... ...e move was first ... Symphony hall, ...cided falling off ...hall at that time ...aten path. Last ... in every respect ... had enjoyed in ...xistence. ...ow the Fenway ... a center of life ...g the nine weeks ...s more than 30,000 ... sold. There were ...mphony hall was ..., despite the fact ...s not always fa...

Interesting Novelties Announced.

Mr Strube and Mr Maquarre have been eagerly searching during the past winter for new music to play at the concerts. Both have succeeded in finding much, a considerable part of which is sure to find favor with the public. Since last spring a number of new operettas and musical comedies have appeared selections from which will be played, notably "The Girl in the Train," "Nauty Marietta," "The Pink Lady," "The Spring Maid," and "Rosetta."

Mr Strube will also place on his program excerpts from Victor Herbert's grand opera, "Natoma," which was sung in Philadelphia and New York during the past season. An interesting item which will appear on the program for the first time Tuesday night will be a set of waltzes from Richard Strauss' new comic opera, "The Knight of the Roses," which is the present reigning sensation of Europe.

These waltzes are said to be written in true Vienna style and show that this great modern master is as successful in following in the steps of Johann Strauss as he is in breaking into paths for the writers of more ambitious styles of music.

Mr Maquarre during June will again draw on the French composers for light melodious pieces. Such pieces were one of the most successful features of last season. Mr Strube has a new march which he calls the "March Chantecler."

The program for Monday night is as follows:

March, Chanticler (first time).....Strube
Overture, The Barber of Seville.....Rossini
Waltz, Roses from the South.....Strauss
Selection, La Boheme.....Puccini
Overture, Mignon.....Thomas
Romance for cello (first time).....Strube
Mr J. Keller.
Selection, Carmen.....Bizet
Suite, Nut Cracker.....Tschaikowsky
Fete Polonaise from Le Roie malgre lui, Chabrier
To a Wild Rose.....MacDowell
To a Water Lily (first time).....MacDowell
Selections, The Girl in the Train.....Fall
March, Russe.....Ganne

HERALD, BOSTON, APRIL 30, 1911.

"THE POPS"

A particularly brilliant opening is promised for the 26th season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall, which begin tomorrow (Monday) evening. The reservations of tables have been very large.

As last year the season of Pops will continue for nine weeks, the last concert coming on Saturday evening, July 1. Through May the conductor will be Gustav Strube, who has made many warm friends in the dozen years in which he has occupied this post for a part of each season. The last half of the season, in June, will bring as conductor Andre Maquarre, who was "tried out" two years ago with such success that he, like Mr. Strube, has become a permanent fixture. Mr. Strube has written a new march, which he calls "Chantecler," and he will introduce a number of interesting novelties, selections from the best and most popular of the operettas and musical comedies which have appeared in this country during the past season. An interesting feature of his program for next Tuesday night will be the first performance in Boston, and probably the first performance in America, of a set of waltzes from Richard Strauss's new comic opera, "The Knight of the Roses" ("Der Rosenkavalier"), which is the reigning sensation of the day in Europe. These waltzes will show that the great master is as skilled in the writing of a Vienna waltz as his namesake and great predecessor, Johann Strauss. Mr. Maquarre, as last year during his engagement, will bring forth a number of novelties from Paris. These bright, melodious pieces that the Frenchmen write with so much skill are becoming very popular here in Boston.

Some improvements have been made in the arrangements of Symphony Hall that will please the patrons. Particularly is this true of the room on the floor of the first balcony, where ices and the like are served for balcony patrons. This room has been decorated, and now is one of the most attractive spots in the hall. The usual prices will prevail for entrance, reserved tables and balcony chairs. The concerts will begin at 8 o'clock, and will be over at 11. The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March. "Chantecler" (first time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'cello (first time).....Strube
Mr. J. Keller.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
(a) Danse russe Trepak, (b) Danse des Mirlitons, (c) Valse des fleurs.
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi malgre lui" Chabrier
To a Wild Rose; To a Water Lily (first time).....MacDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train" (first time).....Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

CONDUCTOR FIEDLER SAILS

Conductor Max Fiedler of the Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Fiedler will leave Boston tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock for New York. They sail on the Kronprinzessin Cecilie Tuesday morning with a number of the most distinguished musicians who have been in this country this year: Arturo Toscanini, principal conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York; Alfred Hertz, German conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House; Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, and his bride, who was Olga Samaroff, the well known pianist; Josef Hofmann and Mrs. Hofmann, and several of the principal singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler will go direct to Hamburg, their home, and in the course of a fortnight they expect to go to some watering place, probably Kissingen, where Mrs. Fiedler will take a cure. Mr. Fiedler is planning to spend July and August at Garmisch, a village in the Bavarian highlands. Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler will sail for America the end of September.

A number of other members of the orchestra are sailing in the near future. Mr. Noack, the second concert master, has already gone to Holland, having been summoned by cable on account of the serious illness of his mother. Mr. Witek will not sail until the end of June and expects to be only a few weeks in Europe. Mr. Longy sails from Boston on the Franconia on Tuesday, Mr. Roth sails next week and Mr. Lenom in May.

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1911.

At the "Pops"

The program for tonight's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall is as follows:

March, "Hoch Habsburg".....Kral
Overture, "Stradella".....Flotow
Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
Valse Lyrique.....Emery
Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys".....Lalo
Meditation from "Thais".....Massenet
Colo violin, Mr. J. Hoffmann.
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana".....Mascagni
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6.....Brahms
March from "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Suite, "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Waltz, "Rain of Gold".....Waldteufel
March, "Tambour Battant".....Lincke

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1911

Familiar pieces, for the most part, make the programme for "The Pops" this evening as follows:

March, "Hoch Habsburg".....Kral
Overture, "Stradella".....Flotow
Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
Valse Lyrique.....Emery
Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys".....Lalo
Meditation from "Thais".....Massenet
(Solo Violin, Mr. Hoffmann)
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticanna".....Mascagni
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6.....Brahms
March from "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Suite, "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Waltz, "Rain of Gold".....Waldteufel
March, "Tambour Battant".....Lincke

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, MAY 1, 1911

ON Saturday evening, at the Symphony Concert, as on Friday afternoon, the audience was heartiest in its applause for Mr. Fiedler when he came to his place, as though it would appreciate and reward all the good work that he had done through the year, before it took leave of him until next autumn. For long, as applause goes, the house kept Mr. Fiedler bowing his thanks and then followed an amusing little contretemps. The usual greenery and a rather larger bunch of red flowers than usual adorned the conductor's music stand; but the carnations had been so placed that some of the violinists could not see his beat. Mr. Fiedler, Mr. Witek and finally one of the viola players tried to lower the flowers. The wires resisted stoutly, then broke and the rest of the evening, the carnations lay at Mr. Fiedler's feet. The audience watched the struggle amusedly and rewarded the victor with a ripple of applause. Then the concert took its course; to as sustained interest and as keen pleasure as it did on Friday afternoon. At every pause, the listeners were eager with their plaudits, and at the end they held Mr. Fiedler for a moment of final leave-taking. Throughout the evening his pleasure in the temper of his audience toward him was clear, full and sincere.

The orchestra had its just share in these seasonal rites when at the end of the march in Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony, the conductor bade it rise and share round upon round of applause with him. Mr. Fiedler, as it was said in this place on Saturday, is indeed an eminent conductor. Eminent conductors have preceded him in Symphony Hall and in the old Music Hall—Dr. Muck, Mr. Gericke and Mr. Nikisch. Each in his time they have done much to make the Symphony Orchestra the most remarkable orchestra in America, one of the three or four remarkable orchestras of the world. They have set, maintained and heightened its standard of performance. They have established one of its finest distinctions, the catholicity of its programmes and its corollary, the sympathetic and vitalizing performance of music, classic or modern, old or new, of whatever individual, of whatever school. They have wrought the prestige of the Symphony Concerts, which make them the chief artistic glory of this town. They could not have done all these things had not the men of the orchestra been of like mind, will, abilities and faith with them. They, too, consciously or unconsciously, have set their standards, made their traditions, kept their loyalties. Neither founder nor conductor, neither public nor press can make a great orchestra unless there also are the men. H. T. P.

[224]

HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1911.

SYMPHONY GIVES FINAL REHEARSAL

Popular Program Gives Great Pleasure; Mr. Fiedler Enthusiastically Applauded.

By PHILIP HALE.

The 24th public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last of the 30th season, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Overture to "Coriolanus".....Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic".....Tschaikowsky
Good Friday spell from "Parsifal".....Wagner
Funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods."
Wagner
Prelude to "The Mastersingers".....Wagner

When Mr. Fiedler appeared on the stage the applause was hearty, and the demonstration of appreciation lasted for some time. The performance of the symphony awakened enthusiasm, and the third movement, which, when the work was first played here, left the audience cool and perplexed, yesterday was especially applauded.

The program was of a popular nature, and although there was no soloist, the second gallery was wholly filled. With a program of this nature, the orchestra is a soloist of the greatest drawing power. There has been for some years in Germany and at Paris an effort to do away with soloists at symphony concerts. There are concertos and other pieces for piano and orchestra that fit the general scheme, and violinists and pianists are less obtrusive than singers. No matter who the singer may be, her arias and groups of songs are usually without relation to the rest of the program, and when she is a famous prima donna, the orchestral pieces serve only as a background for her display.

It was a pleasure to hear Beethoven's overture again. There are few nobler, few more tragic pages in all music. There is no digression, no elaboration. The overture is as compact, concise, expressive as Synge's "Riders to the Sea." And how simple the structure! By what simple means the thought of the haughty heroic soul is impressed on the hearer! The tragedy for which the overture was written was by von Collin; but the music is after the manner of Greek tragedy. "And one of Plutarch's men talked with us face to face."

There was a time when it seemd as though Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony would pass by reason of its popularity, and many prophesied it would be forgotten when the composer's fifth and fourth were still heard eagerly. The "Pathetic" is now nearly 18 years old, and it still moves and thrills. The music tempts conductors to extravagance in pace and in expression. The lyric theme in the first movement is often sung in a sentimental fashion, and the third movement is often hurried. Mr. Fiedler avoided sentimentalism and on the whole gave a dramatic reading. There should have been a stronger contrast between the dance section and the inexorable trio of the second movement, and in this trio the monotony of the drum, one of the most striking features of the symphony, was not fully brought out, for the wail of strings and woodwind was too pronounced. The third movement was taken at so fast a pace that the general effect was impaired. With any other orchestra there would have been a scramble to the climax.

It is idle to debate the question whether excerpts from Wagner's music-dramas should or should not be played in concert. Wagner, himself, not only permitted concert performances, but led them. This was at a time when he gladly heard his own music outside the opera house and was not prepared to theorize in the matter.

The first public rehearsal of the 31st season, Mr. Fiedler, conductor, will be on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6.

A review of the season of 1910-11 will be published in the editorial section of Sunday's Herald.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN
APRIL 30, 1911

"POP" SEASON IS OPENED TOMORROW

Brilliant Inauguration of Concerts in Symphony Hall Is Promised.

A particularly brilliant opening is promised for the twenty-sixth season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall which begins tomorrow evening. The reservations of tables have been very large and a number of particularly brilliant parties will be present.

As last year, the season of Pops will continue for nine weeks the last concert coming on Saturday evening, July 1st. Through May the conductor will be Gustav Strube who has made many warm friends in the dozen years in which he has occupied this post for a part of each season. The last half of the season, in June, will bring as conductor Andre Maquarre who was "tried out" two years ago with such success that he, like Mr. Strube, has become a permanent fixture.

Some improvements have been made in the arrangements of Symphony Hall that will please the patrons. The programme for to-morrow night is as follows:

March, "Chanticler" (first time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'cello (first time).....Strube
MR. J. KELLER.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
(a) Danse russe Trepak. (b) Danse des Mirlitons. (c) Valse des fleurs.
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre Lui".Chabrier
To a Wild Rose.....McDowell
To a Water-Lily (first time).....McDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train" (first time. Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1911

"THE POPS" AGAIN

The Twenty-Sixth Season to Begin at Symphony Hall on Monday—The Orchestra, the Conductors and the Music—The Other Familiar Arrangements—The First Programme

THE Symphony Concerts end at Symphony Hall tonight; next Monday, the "Pop" Concerts begin. Our musical calendar has run so these many years, and the current spring brings no change in it. Once more, the orchestra for "The Pops" will consist of fifty-five men from the larger band and once more Mr. Strube will lead it through the month of May and Mr. Maquarre through the month of June until the concerts end on the first day of July. The programmes, again will run their usual course; the potpourris from past and current musical plays and operettas—and the past season has yielded "Naughty Marietta." "The Spring Maid," "The Girl in the Train" and "Madame Sherry"; the Viennese waltzes, polkas and marches; the "selections" from well-liked operas classic and contemporary; the melodious overtures; and the well-tried excerpts from Wagner and Tschaikowsky. Mr. Strube, as usual, will make his little musical adventures—into the waltz that Strauss has arranged from "The Knight of the Rose" (to be played on Tuesday, probably for the first time in America); into Mr. Herbert's "Irish Rhapsody" (to be played on Friday) and into a new march, "Chantecler" and a songful romance for violoncello of his own (both to be played on Monday). Mr. Maquarre, in turn, has picked his new pieces out of the annually renewed store of French light music. The organ will be used frequently, since the public of "The Pops" evidently likes to hear it. On occasion there will be a solo piece for one or another leader of the orchestral choirs; and the "college nights" will have their songs and marches appropriate to each seat of learning—and of many other things.

So much for the musical side of the concerts. Slight changes from year to year keep it elastic; otherwise it follows lines that many seasons have tested and approved. A like wisdom guides the other arrangements for the concerts. Tables will replace the ranks of seats on the floor of Symphony Hall, and those that sit at them may smoke at will, drink the "light refreshments" that an excellent bar affords, and in general take their ease and their light pleasure as are possible at no other concerts and at no other season of the year. The lower balcony, as heretofore, will be reserved for those that prefer the usual chairs of a concert-room and who do not care to smoke; but, by way of innovation, a neighboring room has been fitted and decorated for the serving of ices and the like. The rest is—the pleasant recollections of all the years that have made "The Pops" unique in America and of the new store that the new season should add to them. The programme for Monday night remains:

March, "Chantecler" (first time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Bohème".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'Cello (first time).....Strube
(Mr. Keller)
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Ballet Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
Fête Polonaise from "Le Roi malgré Lui".....Chabrier
To a Wild Rose.—To a Water-Lily (first time).....MacDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train".....Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 30, 1911

...IC AND MUSICIANS

"Pop" Concerts Begin Tomorrow Night.

Gustav Strube Will Conduct, as in Years Past.

"La Boheme" This Week's Opera---Current Gossip.

The 26th season of the "Pop" concerts of the Symphony orchestra will open in Symphony hall next Monday evening. The season will run for nine weeks, the last concert coming Saturday evening, July 1. As in the past the concerts will be given on every night of the week, except Sunday night. During the month of May the conductor will be Gustav Strube, who has occupied this post almost continuously for the last dozen years. In the month of June the conductor will be Andre Maquarre, whose third season it will be in this capacity.

Some welcome improvements will be found in the arrangements of the hall. Particularly will this be true of the room on the first balcony floor, which has been set aside for ices and the like. This room has been redecorated and has been made very comfortable and cozy and will add much to the attraction of the concerts for balcony patrons. As has always been the custom light refreshments will be served, including beers and light wines.

The "Pops" are, in their way, as much of an institution in Boston as the Symphony itself. When the move was first made, 10 years ago to Symphony hall, there was a very decided falling off in patronage, for the hall at that time was far from the beaten path. Last season, however, was in every respect the best the concerts had enjoyed in the 25 years of their existence.

It is significant of how the Fenway district has become a center of life in Boston, that during the nine weeks of last year's concerts more than 30,000 entrance tickets were sold. There were few nights that Symphony hall was not comfortably filled, despite the fact that the weather was not always favorable.

Interesting Novelties Announced.

Mr Strube and Mr Maquarre have been eagerly searching during the past winter for new music to play at the concerts. Both have succeeded in finding much, a considerable part of which is sure to find favor with the public. Since last spring a number of new operettas and musical comedies have appeared selections from which will be played, notably "The Girl in the Train," "Nauty Marietta," "The Pink Lady," "The Spring Maid," and "Rosetta."

Mr Strube will also place on his program excerpts from Victor Herbert's grand opera, "Natoma," which was sung in Philadelphia and New York during the past season. An interesting item which will appear on the program for the first time Tuesday night will be a set of waltzes from Richard Strauss' new comic opera, "The Knight of the Roses," which is the present reigning sensation of Europe.

These waltzes are said to be written in true Vienna style and show that this great modern master is as successful in following in the steps of Johann Strauss as he is in breaking into paths for the writers of more ambitious styles of music.

Mr Maquarre during June will again draw on the French composers for light melodious pieces. Such pieces were one of the most successful features of last season. Mr Strube has a new march which he calls the "March Chantecler."

The program for Monday night is as follows:

March, Chanticler (first time).....Strube
Overture, The Barber of Seville.....Rossini
Waltz, Roses from the South.....Strauss
Selection, La Boheme.....Puccini
Overture, Mignon.....Thomas
Romance for cello (first time).....Strube
Mr J. Keller.
Selection, Carmen.....Bizet
Suite, Nut Cracker.....Tschaikowsky
Fete Polonaise from Le Roie malgre lui, Chabrier
To a Wild Rose.....MacDowell
To a Water Lily (first time).....MacDowell
Selections, The Girl in the Train.....Fall
March, Russe.....Ganne

HERALD, BOSTON, APRIL 30, 1911

"THE POPS"

A particularly brilliant opening is promised for the 26th season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall, which begin tomorrow (Monday) evening. The reservations of tables have been very large.

As last year the season of Pops will continue for nine weeks, the last concert coming on Saturday evening, July 1. Through May the conductor will be Gustav Strube, who has made many warm friends in the dozen years in which he has occupied this post for a part of each season. The last half of the season, in June, will bring as conductor Andre Maquarre, who was "tried out" two years ago with such success that he, like Mr. Strube, has become a permanent fixture. Mr. Strube has written a new march, which he calls "Chantecler," and he will introduce a number of interesting novelties, selections from the best and most popular of the operettas and musical comedies which have appeared in this country during the past season. An interesting feature of his program for next Tuesday night will be the first performance in Boston, and probably the first performance in America, of a set of waltzes from Richard Strauss's new comic opera, "The Knight of the Roses" ("Der Rosenkavalier"), which is the reigning sensation of the day in Europe. These waltzes will show that the great master is as skilled in the writing of a Vienna waltz as his namesake and great predecessor, Johann Strauss. Mr. Maquarre, as last year during his engagement, will bring forth a number of novelties from Paris. These bright, melodious pieces that the Frenchmen write with so much skill are becoming very popular here in Boston.

Some improvements have been made in the arrangements of Symphony Hall that will please the patrons. Particularly is this true of the room on the floor of the first balcony, where ices and the like are served for balcony patrons. This room has been decorated, and now is one of the most attractive spots in the hall. The usual prices will prevail for entrance, reserved tables and balcony chairs. The concerts will begin at 8 o'clock, and will be over at 11. The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Chantecler" (first time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'cello (first time).....Strube
Mr. J. Keller.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
(a) Danse russe Trepak, (b) Danse des Mirlitons, (c) Valse des fleurs.
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi malgre lui"
Chabrier
To a Wild Rose; To a Water Lily (first time).....MacDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train" (first time).....Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

CONDUCTOR FIEDLER SAILS

Conductor Max Fiedler of the Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Fiedler will leave Boston tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock for New York. They sail on the Kronprinzessin Cecilie Tuesday morning with a number of the most distinguished musicians who have been in this country this year: Arturo Toscanini, principal conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York; Alfred Hertz, German conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House; Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, and his bride, who was Olga Samaroff, the well known pianist; Josef Hofmann and Mrs. Hofmann, and several of the principal singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler will go direct to Hamburg, their home, and in the course of a fortnight they expect to go to some watering place, probably Kissingen, where Mrs. Fiedler will take a cure. Mr. Fiedler is planning to spend July and August at Garmisch, a village in the Bavarian highlands. Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler will sail for America the end of September.

A number of other members of the orchestra are sailing in the near future. Mr. Noack, the second concert master, has already gone to Holland, having been summoned by cable on account of the serious illness of his mother. Mr. Witek will not sail until the end of June and expects to be only a few weeks in Europe. Mr. Longy sails from Boston on the Franconia on Tuesday, Mr. Roth sails next week and Mr. Lenom in May.

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, MAY 1, 1911

ON Saturday evening, at the Symphony Concert, as on Friday afternoon, the audience was heartiest in its applause for Mr. Fiedler when he came to his place, as though it would appreciate and reward all the good work that he had done through the year, before it took leave of him until next autumn. For long, as applause goes, the house kept Mr. Fiedler bowing his thanks and then followed an amusing little contretemps. The usual greenery and a rather larger bunch of red flowers than usual adorned the conductor's music stand; but the carnations had been so placed that some of the violinists could not see his beat. Mr. Fiedler, Mr. Witek and finally one of the viola players tried to lower the flowers. The wires resisted stoutly, then broke and the rest of the evening, the carnations lay at Mr. Fiedler's feet. The audience watched the struggle amusedly and rewarded the victor with a ripple of applause. Then the concert took its course; to as sustained interest and as keen pleasure as it did on Friday afternoon. At every pause, the listeners were eager with their plaudits and at the end they held Mr. Fiedler for a moment of final leave-taking. Throughout the evening his pleasure in the temper of his audience toward him was clear, full and sincere.

The orchestra had its just share in these seasonal rites when at the end of the march in Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony, the conductor bade it rise and share round upon round of applause with him. Mr. Fiedler, as it was said in this place on Saturday, is indeed an eminent conductor. Eminent conductors have preceded him in Symphony Hall and in the old Music Hall—Dr. Muck, Mr. Gericke and Mr. Nikisch. Each in his time they have done much to make the Symphony Orchestra the most remarkable orchestra in America, one of the three or four remarkable orchestras of the world. They have set, maintained and heightened its standard of performance. They have established one of its finest distinctions, the catholicity of its programmes and its corollary, the sympathetic and vitalizing performance of music, classic or modern, old or new, of whatever individual, of whatever school. They have wrought the prestige of the Symphony Concerts, which make them the chief artistic glory of this town. They could not have done all these things had not the men of the orchestra been of like mind, will, abilities and faith with them. They, too, consciously or unconsciously, have set their standards, made their traditions, kept their loyalties. Neither founder nor conductor, neither public nor press can make a great orchestra unless there also are the men. H. T. P.

[224]

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1911.

At the "Pops"

The program for tonight's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall is as follows:

March, "Hoch Habsburg".....Kral
Overture, "Stradella".....Flotow
Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
Valse Lyrique.....Emery
Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys".....Lalo
Meditation from "Thais".....Massenet
Colo violin, Mr. J. Hoffmann.
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana".....Mascagni
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6.....Brahms
March from "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Suite, "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Waltz, "Rain of Gold".....Waldteufel
March, "Tambour Battant".....Lincke

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1911

Familiar pieces, for the most part, make the programme for "The Pops" this evening as follows:

March, "Hoch Habsburg".....Kral
Overture, "Stradella".....Flotow
Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
Valse Lyrique.....Emery
Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys".....Lalo
Meditation from "Thais".....Massenet
(Solo Violin, Mr. Hoffmann)
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticanna".....Mascagni
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6.....Brahms
March from "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Suite, "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Waltz, "Rain of Gold".....Waldteufel
March, "Tambour Battant".....Lincke

Pop Concerts Open 21st Season Tomorrow Night

The 21st season of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall opens tomorrow night. It is a significant fact that today the Pop concerts, if anything, appeal to a wider public than they did even when the Symphony Orchestra was located downtown, in old Music Hall. When the orchestra took up its new quarters at the junction of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, a certain percentage of its former patronage, more especially those who were accustomed to solace themselves of an evening at the Pops, dropped away for the time being. Last season the Pop concerts attracted larger audiences than ever before, and this season there are indications of a greater attendance. The Pop concerts are becoming more and more the resort of social parties and suburbanites. For tomorrow night the reservations of the tables have been very numerous, and the audience promises to be an unusually brilliant one.

As last year the season of Pops will continue for nine weeks, the last concert coming on Saturday evening, July 1. Through May the conductor will be Gustav Strube. The last half of the season, in June, will bring as conductor Mr. Andre Maquarre, who was "tried out" two years ago with such success that he, like Mr. Strube, has become a permanent fixture. Mr. Strube, always up to date, has written a new march which he calls the march "Chantecler," and he will introduce a number of interesting novelties, selections from the best and he will introduce a number of interesting novelties, selections from the best and most popular of the operettas and musical comedies which have appeared in this country during the past season. An interesting feature of his programme for next Tuesday night will be the first performance in Boston and probably the first performance in America of a set of waltzes from Richard Strauss' new comic opera, "The Knight of the Roses" ("Der Rosenkavalier"), which is the reigning sensation of the day in Europe. Mr. Maquarre, as last year during his engagement, will bring forth a number of novelties from Paris. These bright, melodious pieces that the Frenchmen write with so much skill are becoming very popular in Boston.

Some improvements have been made in the arrangements of Symphony Hall. The room on the floor of the first balcony has been decorated and now is one of the most attractive spots in the hall. The usual prices will prevail for entrance, reserved tables and balcony chairs. The concerts will begin at 8 o'clock and will be over at 11. The programme for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Chantecler" (First time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses from the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for 'Cello (First time).....Strube
Mr. J. Keller.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Suite, "Nut-Cracker".....Bizet
(a) Danse Russe Trepak.
(b) Danse des Mirlitons.
(c) Valse des Fleurs.
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre Lui"
.....Chabrier
(a) To a Wild Rose.....MacDowell
(b) To a Water-Lily (First time).MacDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train" (First time).....Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

SYMPHONY SEASON CONCLUDED

With the concerts of Friday afternoon and yesterday evening the 30th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra came to an end. Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler leave Boston tomorrow afternoon at 3 for New York. They sail on the Kronprinzessin Cecilie Tuesday morning with a number of the most distinguished of the musicians who have been in this country this year. Among them will be Arturo Toscanini, principal conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York; Alfred Hertz, German conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House; Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, and his bride, who was Olga Samaroff, the well known pianist; Josef Hofmann and Mrs. Hofmann, and several of the principal singers of the Metropolitan opera company.

Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler will go direct to Hamburg, their home, and in the course of a fortnight they expect to go to some watering place, probably Kissingen, where Mrs. Fiedler will take a cure. Mr. Fiedler is planning to spend July and August at Garmisch, a beautiful village in the Bavarian highlands, not far from Munich where Richard Strauss has his home. Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler will sail for America the end of September.

A number of other members of the orchestra will sail in the near future. Mr. Noach, the second concert master, has already gone to Holland, having been summoned by cable on account of the serious illness of his mother. Mr. Witek will not sail until the end of June and he expects to remain only a few weeks in Europe. Mr. Longy sails from Boston on the Franconia on Tuesday, Mr. Roth sails next week and Mr. Lenom late in May.

During the last season, which, upon the whole, has been a very prosperous one for the orchestra, six tours have been made, and concerts given in all of the most important cities of this country. There have been in all 64 concerts outside of Boston, and when to these are added the 24 Boston concerts, an idea may be gained of the amount of labor accomplished this season by the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra and his men. In fact, it would hardly be possible for this orchestra to undertake more than it has carried through in the past winter, especially since the alliance of the Symphony Orchestra and the Cecilia Society. This alliance, incidentally, has not entirely solved the problems of the Cecilia. It has, it is true, gone far toward accomplishing the first essential result—for the Cecilia audiences of the three concerts given with the Symphony Orchestra this season have come nearer the proportions of the best years when B. J. Lang was in power than for some time past. But it hardly seems possible, under present conditions, to bring the performances up to the standard which the more or less critical musical public of this city demands. Three works have been given this winter by the Symphony and the Cecilia: Bantock's "Omar Khayyam," Pierne's "Children's Crusade," Bach's "St. Matthew Passion." All of these works demand much and painstaking rehearsal. It was arranged at the beginning of the season that Mr. Malcolm Lang should prepare the chorus for the rehearsals and performance with orchestra. The rest was Mr. Fiedler's duty. Mr. Fiedler is much more an orchestra than a choral conductor, and he was fairly driven to the wall even to find time for the regular Symphony rehearsals. It was impossible to hold as many rehearsals with the chorus and the orchestra as were desirable for the best presentation of the choral music chosen for performance. Therefore the first concert, when Bantock's "Omar Khayyam" was given, fell far short of the standard demanded by that pretentious work; the performances at the last two concerts were better, but in no case were they of the description which they should be with such a body of singers as the Cecilia.

The orchestra, on the other hand, was supposed to benefit by the co-operation of the Cecilia when Mr. Fiedler wished to present works demanding voices as an integral part of the score. This arrangement did not prove very practical, for in the first place, the Cecilia consisting chiefly of amateurs, the male members were not easily available for day time rehearsals or afternoon concerts. Doubtless it was largely for this reason that pieces such as Delius' "Appalachia," announced for performance before the season commenced, have not yet been heard in this city. Likewise Mahler's monumental 2d symphony, which is still curiously awaited by the local public.

At the beginning of the season Mr. Fiedler issued a promising list of new music to be performed in the course of the winter. Some of these pieces were not given, for various reasons such as the one just cited, and others proved of little worth. There have been a few noteworthy additions to the standing repertoire of the orchestra. Four compositions by American composers have been presented for the first time in Boston, and three of them were conducted by the composers. Henry Hadley's "Culprit Fay" and Henry F. Gilbert's "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes" were very successful. The compositions by Chadwick (Suite Symphonique), and Arthur M. Curry (symphonic poem, "Atala") revealed, on the one hand, admirable technical ability, with little for subject matter, and on the other, a composer with some ideas, but, unfortunately, a lack of constructive power. Debussy's "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," the latest orchestral works from the pen of that contemporaneous master, were performed and received very warmly. The first composition was repeated by request. Delius' "Brigg Fair," like his "Paris," heard last season, displayed a new man and a new style that have further aroused the curiosity of the Symphony audiences. Strauss' "Macbeth," his first tone-poem, was played for the first time here, and proved a violent, extravagant and rather immature work, but full of ideas. Enesco's "Suite for Orchestra," played at the concerts of March 31 and April 1, was one of the most interesting of the new pieces heard this season in Symphony Hall. Most successful of all was Rachmaninoff's 2d symphony, first played Oct. 15, and repeated by request on the 5th of November. Mr. Sylvain Noack, the second concert meister, and and excellent violinist, played for the first time at the Symphony concerts Lalo's violin concerto, op. 20—an interesting work. Probably—it is to be hoped—neither Busoni's "Turandot" suite or Scriabine's "Poems de l'Extase" will be played here again, for some time at least.

The list of soloists has been better. Anton Witek, the new concert meister, gave a memorable performance of the Beethoven concerto when he made his debut here as a soloist, Oct 29. Xavier Scharwenka played his own fourth piano concerto on the 10th and the 11th of February. Mr. Busoni gave one of his characteristic performance of the Beethoven C minor concerto at the concert when his Turandot suite was played. Felix Berber, not a brilliant virtuoso, but a fine and sincere musician, gave a remarkably vital and communicative performance of the Brahms concerto. Two soloists unannounced at the beginning of the season made their appearance, Kathleen Parlow, the brilliantly gifted young Canadian violinist, and Carolina White of operatic fame. Geraldine Farrar appeared with a new hat, with a new and good song. The laws regarding the removal of ladies' hats were thoroughly enforced, for the first time, at the concerts of the 2d and the 3d of December. Other soloists were Mme. Kirby-Lunn, Jeanne Jomelli, Corinne Rider-Kelsey, Mischa Elman, Heinrich Warnke, Joseph Hoffmann, who played the "old hat" concerto in D minor of Rubinstein at one of the regular subscription concerts, and reserved for the pension fund concert of April 9, a rarely poetical performance of Beethoven's G minor concerto. It may be said that during the past season Mr. Fiedler has labored hard, and to good purpose, and he has given much needed impetus to native composers. The concerts of the orchestra have been more stringently criticised in Boston than anywhere else. Outside of its own city the orchestra has been received with ever increasing acclaim.

HERALD, MONDAY, MAY 1, 1911.

THE POPS.

The "Pops" begin tonight to the joy of many. We import the descriptive word. "Promenade concerts," so called because there is no room for the hearers to walk, after the principle of "lucus a non lucendo," go back in London to 1838 with the appearance of Musard's "Promenade Band" and this sort of concert was then an importation from Paris. "Pop" for "Popular concert" was heard in London about 1860, for in 1862 George Eliot wrote that she had been to a Monday Pop. As yet we have not adopted the English "Poppite," a performer at or a frequenter of the Popular concerts.

The London Pops were begun in January, 1859, and were at first of a miscellaneous nature, consisting of old ballads and well known instrumental pieces. Afterward the programs were made up of classical chamber pieces, so that a London journal said: "The appellation Popular Concerts was originally, in fact, an impudent misnomer. The music given was of the most consistently unpopular character." Artists like Clara Schumann, Joachim, Piatti appeared at them. The 1000th concert took place on April 4, 1887. The public began to tire of these entertainments, and many were like the person in "Patience":

Who thinks suburban hops
More fun than Monday Pops.

Then there were too many chamber clubs in competition and the Pops were given up in 1898. There was a vain attempt to revive them in 1903-04.

The Pops in Boston have always been popular except one season when the mistaken policy of giving only "high-class" music and frowning on operetta tunes was adopted. Music should not be taken too seriously the year round. "Vulgar tavern music" moved Sir Thomas Browne to contemplation of the First Composer and there were ancients who thought the mission of music was to "produce affability and a sort of gentleman-like joy." Neither the music nor the behavior of the audience at a Pop should be formal.

POST, TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1911.

SEASON OPEN

Brilliant First Night at Symphony Hall

The Symphony Hall Pops began last evening with a brilliant first night audience and enjoyable concert programme. Gustav Strube conducted. The younger social element was conspicuously present. The orchestral floor was, as usual, given over to tables at which sat hundreds of beautifully gowned women and their men companions.

The galleries were filled with those who preferred to watch the gayer folk on the floor below and listen to the music undisturbed by the accompaniment of popping corks.

The first number was "Chantecler," a march by the conductor which was heard for the first time. This, together with a romance for the cello, also by Strube, were well received, the audience demanding encores.

The programme was as follows:

March, "Chantecler" (first time).....Strube
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Roses From the South".....Strauss
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Romance for Cello (first time).....Strube
MR. J. KELLER.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Suite, "Nut Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
a, Danse russe, Trepak; b, Danse des mirlitons; c, Valse des fleurs.
Fete Polonaise, from "Le Roi malgre lui".....Chabrier
a, To a Wild Rose; b, To a Water Lily (first time).....MacDowell
Selection, "The Girl in the Train" (first time).....Fall
March, "Russe".....Ganne

The present season of the Pop concerts, which is the 26th, will continue until Saturday evening, July 1. Gustav Strube will conduct during May and in June will be succeeded by Andre Maquarre.

Monday, May 8, will be Wagner night. The season will be marked with the usual number of special nights. First of those already arranged will be Amherst night, Wednesday evening, May 10.

The date of Harvard night has not been definitely settled, but it probably will come in the end of May. The next college night will be "Tech" night, Tuesday evening, June 6. Williams College will have a night—Friday evening, June 16. On June 21 will come Chicago night, when the Boston Chamber of Commerce will entertain the Chamber of Commerce of Chicago.

Among those present last evening were Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Adamowski and party, Theodore Bauer and party, Fred Estabrook and party, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert and party, Max Zach, conductor of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, and party, and Dr. J. F. Bush and party.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1911

"THE POPS OPENED"

Tonight They Will Really Begin — The Amusing "Function" That Has Come to Be an Annual Rite, as It Recurred Last Night—Comparisons and Contrasts with the Pleasures and the Freedom That Will Henceforth Prevail at the Concerts —The Band and the Programmes

ONCE a year Symphony Hall asks the newspapers to celebrate "The Pops"—on the evening in the first week of May, when the concerts annually begin their course. Yet on that particular evening the whole aspect and atmosphere of the place and the occasion are different from what they will be through all the nine weeks during which "The Pops" usually run. The orchestra puts on its evening clothes for the first and the last time through the series. On the floor, those of us that henceforth will merely put on our hats and go, array ourselves in the formal black and white that is the negation of the ordinary lounging freedom of "The Pops." Our women folk search their wardrobes for the garments and the hats that may not best please themselves, but are reasonably sure, as the chances of clothes go, to catch and please the eyes of others. Call the taxi-cab, Mary, for tonight we must not go afoot. Or you, John, have the car at the door at a quarter past eight; for tonight we must not arrive too early. The reporters of "What Society is Doing," sharpen their pencils and their eyes, and the rest of us, who may or may not be the subject of their recordings, sit as close-packed as we may about the close tables, pretend to eat or drink a little, pretend to listen to the music, smoke for the comfort of it, see and are seen, and timely depart. Our social duty, our institutional duty—since "The Pops" are a Boston institution—has been done in the mutual observation proper to such rites. "The Pops" have been "opened;" tonight, they will really begin.

That is to say, from this Tuesday evening for nine weeks onward, fifty-five men of the Symphony Orchestra will sit on the stage of Symphony Hall, first with Mr. Strube and then with Mr. Maquarre to lead them. They will play potpourris from current operettas and musical plays with a richness of tone that will make the music doubly melodious and rhythmical and unexpectedly full-bodied. They will play waltzes old and new and miss not the beat that is the fascination of such music. At their hands, the "good old overtures" will be good to hear again. Occasionally, they will play a classic that is really too much alive to deserve the chilly epithet. Occasionaly they will play sentimental salon-pieces to hushed audiences, and now and again they will venture "selections" from operas and mies in most of them the "operatic accent" that somehow neither orchestra nor conductors at "The Pops" can quite get. And now and then will come a novelty, which we on the floor shall hear tranquilly, as we heard Mr. Strube's new march yesterday or a little curiously as we shall the waltz from "The Knight of the Rose" tonight. We shall hear happily, we shall applaud good-naturedly. We shall even obey the conductor's admonitory taps when he would have a particular piece really heard. And we sha not scratch so much as one match in a pianissimo passage.

What is still more to the blessed point, we of the floor, like them of the stage, will sit in our old clothes, yea lounge in them, and we shall not care a penny whether the scrupulous X. across the aisle has arrayed himself in garments of state. It is we, not he, who are preserving the "traditions" of "The Pops." And the frocks and the hats of our neighbors of the other sex shall be as snares that are set in vain before the eyes of the masculine bird. For shall we not have far more interesting things to watch—the curling and the breaking of the smoke-wreaths, for example; the bubbles that mount in the sparkling wines of the Rhine vineyards, and the deep red or the pale golden lustres of those of France. And the odor of the mint of the julep or of the tobacco-plant of Egypt shall be more grateful to our nostrils than all the scents of the perfumer's shop. We shall babble or be still, as whim dictates and not as "politeness" requires. We shall be lazily intimate and not diligently formal. The social "Who's Who" will have next to nothing about which he can talk and the rest of us will be more than content with the mute admonitions of the programme of pieces and the list of drinks. When these things be—and they will be from tonight onwards—"The Pops" have really begun.

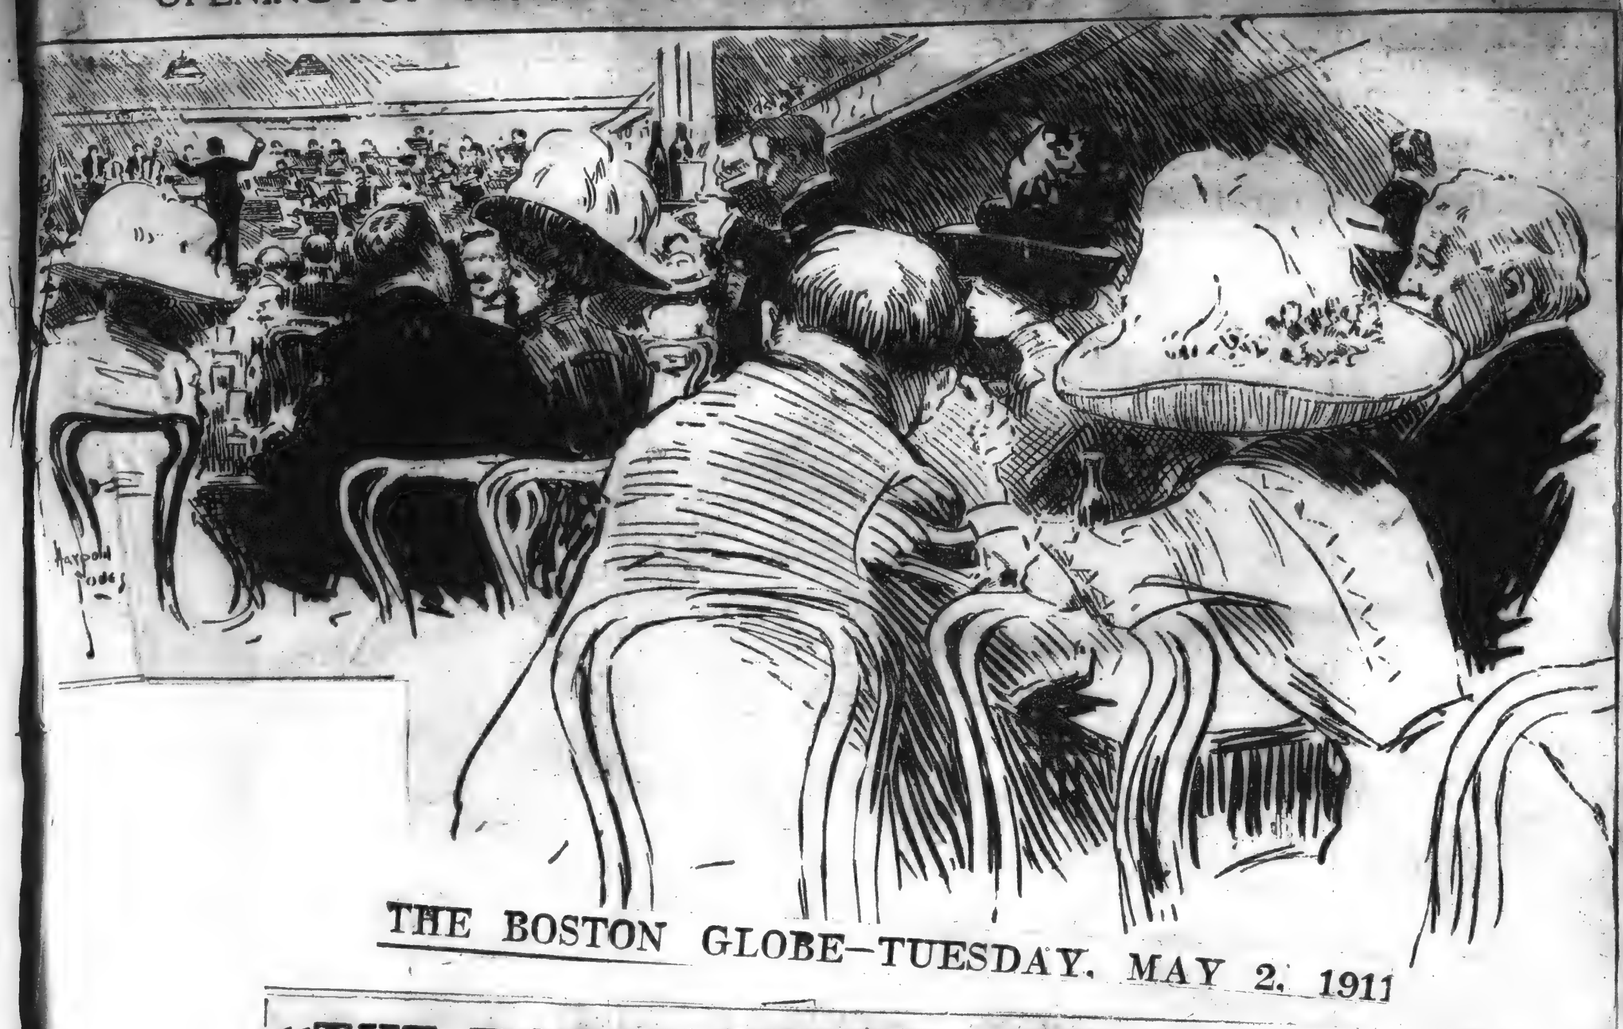
H. T. P.

to "The Pops" for the first time. The full list runs:

Coronation March.....Meyerbeer
Overture, "Masaniello".....Auber
Selection, "Rigoletto".....Verdi
Waltz from "Der Rosenkavalier".....Strauss
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Valse Lente and Pizzicato from "Sylvia".Delibes
Reve Angelique.....Rubinstein
Ballet Music from "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
March, Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar
The Rosary.....Nevin
Serenade.....Moszkowski
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
March, "Werner".....Ziehrer

[225]

OPENING POP CONCERT OF THE SEASON AT SYMPHONY HALL



THE BOSTON GLOBE—TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1911

"THE POPS" BEGIN ANOTHER SEASON IN SYMPHONY HALL

A CARTOONIST'S IMPRESSIONS OF THE OPENING OF THE "POPS."

The "Pops," that vernal institution consecrated to the persuasive compound of symphony, millinery, refined hilarity and Bostonese, Bohemiamism, or, in the words of the poet, the fragrant springtime in which the not too aesthetic man may mix his drinks (softly) with music, may eat, imbibe, smoke and be merry, and when long-suffering woman may wear her hat in Symphony hall, unmolested and unafraid either of mayor or usher—all such arrived safely last night in our midst, and was welcomed by a goodly crowd that gathered around the tables.

Those who scorned the flowing bowl, the pretzels and the bland Havana, sat aloft, looked and listened.

Evening dress was worn by a large percentage of women and men who sat downstairs. There were semidecollete gowns to be seen. Some of them should not be spoken of hastily or with obvious effusion, but only by those with learning and great discretion in such matters. The promenaders filled the foyers with a gay and pleasure-bent throng and merriment ruled.

Since Mr Strube was the conductor it followed then as the night the day that the cabaret season would open with a new Strube march. A timely gentleman is this Mr Strube, who holds the mirror up to nature, for did not his "Comet" march a year ago blaze forth at 8 the opening night, when all were craning their necks for the newcomer in the heavens?

There was another new march last night, which one might have supposed would have been dedicated to "The World in Boston," the Cambridge subway or to the harem skirt. It is called modestly, "Chantecler," and reflects no small portion of the fine virility in that noble bird's clarion greeting to the rising sun.

Followed then a list of pieces always welcome to an audience when played with the beauty of tone of this orchestra, the overtures to "The Barber of Seville" and "Mignon," selections from "La Boheme" and "Carmen," three of the movements from Tschaikowsky's brilliant "Nut-cracker" ballet and the Fete polonaise from Chabrier's "Le Roi malgre lui."

These were the heavier numbers with "extras" and repetitions generously interspersed among them.

Among the lighter pieces were a potpourri from Leo Fall's new piece, "The Girl in the Train," a sympathetic orchestration of MacDowell's "To a Water Lily" (first time) and of his "To a Wild Rose," in both of which the orchestra keeps and enhances the elusive fragrance of the originals.

There was also a romance for 'cello by Mr Strube, played for the first time by Mr Keller and applauded. Its appeal came more by the ingratiating qualities of Mr Keller's playing, however, than from its grace of melody.

Tonight there will be played, doubtless for the first time in America, the waltz from Richard Strauss' latest opera, "The Knight of the Rose," which was produced in Dresden last January.

A selection from Herbert's "Naughty Marietta" will also be played for the first time here, and there will be for numbers with the organ, Rubinstein's "Reve Angelique" and Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance."

Mr Strube will conduct through May. Andre Maquarre, the first flute of the Symphony, will succeed him in June. The "Pops" will close Saturday night July 1.

There will be the usual number of "special" nights. The first of these will be "Amberst" night on Wednesday, May 10. Other special events will include the "Tech" night, June 6, "Williams" night June 16, and the "Chicago" night, June 21, when the chamber of commerce from that city will be entertained by the local chamber of commerce.

MANY A POP AT FIRST POP

Throng Has Liquid and Musical Enjoyment at the Opening Concert.

POST-EASTER STYLE REVIEW

Once again the Pops have come to town. For the initial poppiliade last evening a big crowd went to Symphony Hall. Some people filled the galleries and looked down upon other people who filled the floor, the landscape and themselves.

These latter were the real poppers and poppins. They sat at little tables. They could catch, fletcherize and swallow any solid or liquid in perfect time to the music. Some who had popped for many seasons were even able to regulate their munching in accordance with fortissimo and pianissimo orchestration. Others could simultaneously and without apparent effort wag time with the head, keep taps on the bass drum with the jaws, follow the viol with a sandwich held between thumb and forefinger and carry on an exhaustive conversation about the woes of the Nationals or the way to reduce a double chin to single blessedness. It was a delightful sight.

Men in evening clothes are not strictly beautiful, but, with the waiters, they served as a background. Women—every one knows how they look on such occasions, and that is the way they looked last night. There were large hats, of course—great, big, large hats. There were many small ones. There were any number of handsome gowns, red, blue, black, silk, lace, muslin, combinations of those colors and materials, with some others. One especially striking dress, which was ordering little striped drinks, was a black net over coral silk. Another gown, which ran more to Swiss cheese sandwiches and lemonade, had a sailor collar of brilliant empire green and green cuffs, the dress being cream.

Through the airy film of tobacco smoke and in the interstices between hats and heads and hair the orchestra could be seen high upon the platform. Let no one suppose that it was seen and not heard. Whatever Pops may signify in other cities, in Boston they include listening to the music. When Gustav Strube raised his baton and tapped with it sharply there came a perceptible cessation of linguistics and gastronomics. When Mr. Strube waved out the final chord of the selection there was loud applause before the audience fell to once more.

"Chantecler," a march by Strube, was the first piece on the program. Then came the overture to "The Barber of Seville," by Rossini; "Roses from the South," a waltz by Strauss; selections from "La Boheme," by Puccini; the overture of "Mignon," by Thomas; "Romance for 'Cello," by Strube, with solo by J. Keller; selection from "Carmen," by Bizet; suite, "Nutcracker," by Tschaikowsky, with the "Danse Russe" (Trepak), "Danse des Mirlitons" and "Valse des Fleurs"; "Fete Polonaise," from "Le Roi Malgre Lui," by Chabrier; "To a Wild Rose" and "To a Water Lily," by MacDowell; selections from "The Girl in the Train," by Fall; and a march, "Russe," by Ganne.

The feature of tonight's program will be a set of waltzes from Richard Strauss's new comic opera, "Der Rosenkavalier" ("The Knight of the Roses"). This, so far as is known, is the first time these waltzes have been played in America. The program will be as follows:

Coronation March.....Meyerbeer
Overture, "Masaniello".....Auber
Selection, "Rigoletto".....Verdi
Waltz from "Der Rosenkavalier,"
R. Strauss
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Valse Lente and Pizzicato from Suite "Sylvia".....Delibes
Reve Angelique.....Rubinstein
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Ballet Music from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli
March, "Pomp and Circumstance"...Elgar
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
The Rosary.....Nevin
Serenade.....Moszkowski
Selection, "Naughty Marietta" (first time).....Herbert
March, "Werner".....Ziehrer

The program for tomorrow night will be as follows:

March, "Hoch Habsburg".....Kral
Overture, "Stradella".....Flotow
Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
Valse Lyrique.....Emery
Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys".....Lalo
Meditation from "Thais".....Massenet
Solo violin, J. Hoffmann.
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana,"
Mascagni
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6...Brahms
March from "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Suite "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Waltz, "Rain of Gold".....Waldteufel
March, "Tambour Battant".....Lincke

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1911

"Pop" Program

The program for this evening's "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall is as follows:

March, "Merry Soldiers".....Sabathil
Overture, "The Bronze Horse".....Auber
Waltz, "Vienna Beauties".....Ziehrer
Selection, "Traviata".....Verdi
Selection, "Samson and Delilah".....Saint-Saens
"Zug der Zwerge" (first time).....Grieg
Andante for string orchestra.....Tschaikowsky
Overture, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
Pizzicato Arabesque.....Fauchetti
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
March, "Boston-1915".....Strube

[226]

LARGE AND DELIGHTED CROWD AT POPS OPENER LAST NIGHT

Sketch made by a Traveler artist at the opening pop concert last night. Standing out prominently is Gustave Strube, the orchestra's leader, and in the sketch are seen various types of men and women who were there.

By EDITH BURNHAM.

Summer is here officially—the Pops have opened. That everybody was eager for this opening of the season was evidenced by the crowd that packed the floor and balconies of Symphony Hall last night, taxing the seating capacity to its utmost. Boston at the Pops is Boston happy, carefree, gay. Who would suspect that it was Boston at all? Certainly not the Boston that the space writers on New York papers pen lines about, nor the Boston concerning which Mary Garden gives out interviews to the press. The crowd on the floor of Symphony Hall last evening, sipping cool drinks of all varieties, did not look as if they had ever heard of the Boston Tea Party or other Boston history. The musical programme prepared for this great assemblage of pleasure seekers was arranged for in accord with the spirit of Boston at play. It opened with a march, with the popular and meaning title of "Chanticler," by Gustav Strube, the conductor, and included the "Barber of Seville" overture, the Strauss waltz, "Roses from the South," a selection from the first act of Puccini's "La Boheme," selections from Carmen, including the Castanet song and the Toreador, three movements of the Tschaikowsky Nut Cracker Suite, the Fete Polonaise from Chabrier's "Le Roi," two MacDowell pieces, "To a Wild Rose," and "To a Water-Lily," a selection from "The Girl in the Train," which was played for the first time, and also a second composition of Mr. Strube's, a Romance for 'cello, concluding with the March "Russe" of Ganne.

Puccini Music Delightful.

It was a delight to hear the Puccini "Boheme" music with an orchestra of Symphony players, the Puccini orchestration yearning at all points for just such fineness of expression as they are able to give it. One of the programmes announced for next week includes selections from "Madame Butterfly." The Puccini music seems not at all to suffer from loss of accompanying vocalization, as do many of the orchestra scores when bereft of it—the "Carmen" music, for instance. The "Toreador" song, and even the "Castanet" song, which is really dance music and should not need the accompaniment of song, does suffer distinctly when heard without it.

Mr. Strube's Romance for 'cello was received with warm applause. The 'cello is admirably suited to sing the song of romance, having depth of feeling that is boundless, but it is limited as to imagery, the number of poetic pictures which it can paint, and even the gamut of feeling is restricted. But in its depth and sincerity it makes up for all these. Mr. Strube's Romance is full of heart feeling, but is not especially broad in scope, hence it is perfectly suited to the instrument playing it.

The "Danse of the Mirlitons," from the Tschaikowsky suite, with its flute solo, won its audience as it always does. The orchestra was in its accustomed smiling mood all through this suite; they seem always to think that they are having just a little joke on their public when they play it, and the public is with them in the amusement of it.

The "sugary" Fete Polonaise of Chabrier is particularly suited to a Pop concert—it will hardly stand the clear atmosphere of the concert room, so very thick did the composer lay on the candied frosting.

For First Time Here.

The selection from "The Girl in the Train," aside from being "new," has not very much to recommend it. Neither the Girl nor the Train has great fascination. But such selections add the flavor of novelty and the spirit of light opera to the Pops' programme, and are thus timely productions.

The lovely McDowell bits of poetry, "To a Wild Rose" and "To a Water Lily," are like the songs of Keats or Shelley; they have no part with the songs of the other poets, but are just little gems all by themselves—there is only one Rose and one Lily, and McDowell found them all alone and sang to them. One never hears any composition of this composer without breathing a lament that so early in life did this voice stop singing—there were so many hundreds eager for more of his song.

The feature of tonight's programme at the Pops will be a set of waltzes from Richard Strauss' new comic opera, "Der Rosenkavalier" ("The Knight of the Roses"). So far as is known, this is the first time they have been played in America. The programme for the evening is as follows. "Coronation March," Meyerbeer; overture, "Mansaniello," Auber; selection, "Rigoletto," Verdi; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; Valse Lente and Pizzicato from Suite "Sylvia," Delibes; "Reve Angelique," Rubenstein (organ, Mr. Marshall); ballet music, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; march, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar (organ, Mr. Marshall); "The Rosary," Nevin; Serenade, Moskowski; selection "Naughty Marietta" (first time), Herbert; march, "Werner, Ziehres.

"POPS" BEGIN THEIR ANNUAL SEASON

MIRTH AND MUSIC FILL SYMPHONY HALL

Mr. Strube and His Fellow-Musicians in Fascinating First Night Programme.

By Louis C. Elson.

'Tis now the pleasant month of May.
Again the "pops" begin to play.
Farewell to Destinn, Nielsen, Melis,
Welcome to Mudgett and to Ellis.

Farewell to all the music puzzles,
While in the glass we dip our muzzles,
Look on the cup that's brown or ruby,
And revel in the tunes of Strube.

From symphonies profound, severe,
We turn to lighter strains,—and beer.
From Richard Strauss, that mighty man,
We turn to one yclept Johann.

The hall was crowded to the door,
Both balconies and on the floor.
And also, pleasant to narrate,
The crowd came early and stayed late.

Last night for first time did we hear
A march of Strube's,—"Chanticleer,"
And Mr. Keller, genial fellow,
Played Strube's fine Romance for 'Cello.

For Strube each year doth reveal
That he is very versatile,
And all were pleased, while none were bored,
'Twas much applauded, not encored.

They also played,—by no means illy,
MacDowell's "Rose" and "Waterlily,"
But these, though the applause was warm,
Are better in piano form.

Arrangements from Bizet, Puccini,
An overture by old Rossini,
And other pieces operatic,
These all received applause emphatic.

Another gem the band did play,
"Fete Polonaise" by Chabrier,
Selected from "Roi Malgre Lui,"
A rhythmic bit of melody.

Nor in our list may we forget,
Tschaikowsky's charming "Casse-Noisette,"
They played three dances from this Suite,
In style musicianly and neat.

We trust the critic, bored and hardened,
For this effusion may be pardoned,
His earnest work is ended quite,
And in the "Pops" he takes delight.

Prose would not fit for such review,
Only the poet's harp would do.
The symphonies at last, are off our mind,—
On with the "Pops"! Let Joy be unconfined!

POPS THRONGED OPENING NIGHT

Brilliant Gathering Applauds Notable Program of Novelties.

GUSTAV STRUBE IS CONDUCTOR

Offers Among Other Excellent Selections His Own 'Chantecler' March for the First Time.

Wholesale success attended the opening of the twenty-sixth season of the "Pops" at Symphony Hall last night. The audience filled every seat. The program offered by Gustav Strube was delightful. The performance was worthy of an orchestra made up for the most part of symphony players. Warm applause followed every number, and now and then there was an encore.

All this is as a twice-told tale. The "Pops" are invariably entertaining and brilliant. They represent a unique and typical Boston institution, as characteristic of the town and as successful as the Somerset assemblies or the meetings of the Bostonian Society or the flower shows at Horticultural Hall. It would not seem spring-like in Boston without them. By some they are described as Bohemian; but they do not smack of Broadway. The gaiety is ebullient but moderate. It would meet the approval of a Concord philosopher, who can be merry though sober.

"Pops" Democratic.

At all events, the "Pops" are democratic. The programs and the refreshments suit a variety of tastes. The soft drinks and ices go well with such numbers as the "Romance for 'Cello," written by Mr. Strube, and played by J. Kellar and the orchestra last night; a tender, musing piece, conjuring up reveries; and the MacDowell numbers, "To a Wild Rose" and "To a Water Lily," were equally soft and sentimental. But such numbers as the Strauss waltz, "Roses from the South," the dances from Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite" and the "Fete Polonaise" from Chabrier's "Le Roi Malgre Lui" set the feet in motion and likewise raise a thirst. Such sparkling music suggests sparkling wines and good cigars; and they are to be had at the "Pops." The musicians were kept busy last night. So were the waiters. There was no lack of refined merriment. There was just enough ice to keep everything at the proper temperature.

The people in the balconies had a happy time all their own looking down at the brilliant throng around the tables on the floor; and it may be said that the display of millinery last night was worth going far to see. It would be a pity to have those wondrous hats pinned under the seats or left out in the coat room. Evening dress was conspicuous, but not exclusive. There are folks who cannot celebrate except in evening dress; but they do not dominate the "Pops" any more than do the admirers of Johann Strauss or Richard Wagner. These unusual concerts appeal to all sorts and conditions of music lovers. Those who love to see fashion were content last night, and the devotees of excellent light music were also satisfied.

Novelties Offered.

The best feature of the "Pops" is the music. This was appreciated at the opening by those doubly refreshing themselves downstairs as well as by the people who sat in the balconies. Mr. Strube offered, among other charming numbers, several novelties, including his own "Chantecler" march, which led the program; his piece for 'cello and one of the MacDowell numbers. "The Girl on the Train" selection was new to "Pop" programmes. "The Barber of Seville" and "Mignon" overtures, a potpourri from "Boheme," another medley from "Carmen," and a Ganne march, "Russe," completed the regular orchestral attractions last night. The extras were equally diverting.

The programme tonight will be as follows:

Coronation March ..... Meyerbeer
Overture, "Masaniello" ..... Auber
Selection, "Rigoletto" ..... Verdi
Waltz from "Der Rosenkavalier" (first time) ..... R. Strauss
Overture, "Rienzi" ..... Wagner
Valse Lente and Pizzicato from Suite "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Reve Angelique ..... Rubinstein
Organ, Mr. Marshall
Ballet music from "La Gioconda" ... Ponchielli
March, "Pomp and Circumstance" ..... Elgar
Organ, Mr. Marshall
(a) The Rosary ..... Nevin
(b) Serenade ..... Moszkowski
Selection, "Naughty Marietta" (first time) ..... Herbert
March, "Werner" ..... Ziehrer

The programme for the "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall this evening again consists mainly of pieces often heard and warmly liked in previous seasons. It goes:

March, "Merry Soldiers" ..... Sabathil
Overture, "The Bronze Horse" ..... Auber
Waltz, "Vienna Beauties" ..... Ziehrer
Selection, "Traviata" ..... Verdi
Selection, "Samson and Delilah" ... Saint-Saëns
"Zug der Zwerge" ..... Grieg
Andante for String Orchestra ... Tschaikowsky
Overture, "Orpheus" ..... Offenbach
Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ... Nicolai
Pizzicato Arabesque ..... Fanchetti
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen" ..... Luders
March, "Boston—1915" ..... Strube

Sidelights on a Night at the "Pops"

Boston has opened the Pops.

New York has opened the Folies Bergere.

The two institutions are alike in one respect—the patron sits at little tables and eats things and drinks things. And there the resemblance ends.

The "typical" New Yorker has gone into raptures over the Folies Bergere because of its exceeding generosity in the way of display of feminine anatomy, lofty kicking and high-flavored jokes.

The "typical" Bostonian adores the Pops because it is the spring-time habitat of his adored Symphony Orchestra.

The "typical" New Yorker fills up at the Folies with cocktails and champagne.

The "typical" Bostonian at the Pops nibbles at strawberry ice cream and claret.

That's the difference between Boston and New York as seen at two entertainments highly typical of the two towns.

A GLIMPSE AT THE POPPERS

Of course, the patron at the Pop Concerts doesn't have to confine himself to claret or plain lemonade if he doesn't want to.

A glimpse of the interior of the great ice chest at Symphony Hall the past week would have revealed scores of bottles of the fluids which made Milwaukee and Frank Jones famous.

There were pyramids (in the ice box) of bottles labelled "Moselle," "Lieb fraumilch 1900," "Hock," "Sauterne," "Yellow Seal," etc. (whatever those expressions may mean.

There were cigars all the way from ten cents each up to four for a dollar bills, but the man who smokes "two-fer-er-nickels" will have to bring his own ammunition along.

Etiquette a la Pops

But it is the audience itself, and not the wine list nor even the orchestra, which is the greatest attraction to the spectators who look down from the balcony.

So it was in the balcony a Post reporter sat and took notes with an indelible pencil on the cuffs of his only dress-shirt. Some of those memoranda, as deciphered the next morning, were as follows:

"Boston women do not smoke in public, even at the Pops. A couple of young women at one table are trying to manage cigarettes, but they hold them like lead pencils and act afraid of them.

"Some Boston women do drink wines, etc., in public. But for every woman who is sipping wine, two are sampling lemonade or chocolate candies.

"There isn't a ready-made tie in the place.

"The young men all wear dress suits. The older ones both do and don't.

"You cannot buy a limburger cheese sandwich at the Pops. One man just tried. Roquefort and Neufchatel are the limit.

"Women's hats aren't so big as they used to be. Some look like inverted bean pots trimmed with velvet. Others look like waving forests of ostrich plumes.

"More old people smoke cigarettes than used to. The younger men, on the other hand, mostly are smoking cigars. There isn't a pipe in sight, except the one the man is playing on in the orchestra.

"Low necked dresses are cut lower, especially in the backs.

"The most conspicuous color in the hall, among the ladies' gowns, is black; three-fourths of the costumes have some touch of black. A lady at my left says the gowns are 'very stunning.'

Moszkowski Versus Ragtime

"The most popular man in the hall is Timothee Adamowski, judging by the number of salutations he receives.

"Gustav Strube, the conductor, doesn't like ragtime.

"The audience does.

"But Conductor Strube is boss, and the audience doesn't get its ragtime after all.

"Moszkowski's 'serenade' gets seven seconds of applause. The 'Rosary' gets 18 seconds of hand-clapping. And 'Naughty Marietta' got nearly a full minute.

"A selection from Verdi's 'Rigoletto' keeps the audience applauding 16 seconds.

"Wagner's overture 'Rienzi' gets nine seconds of applause.

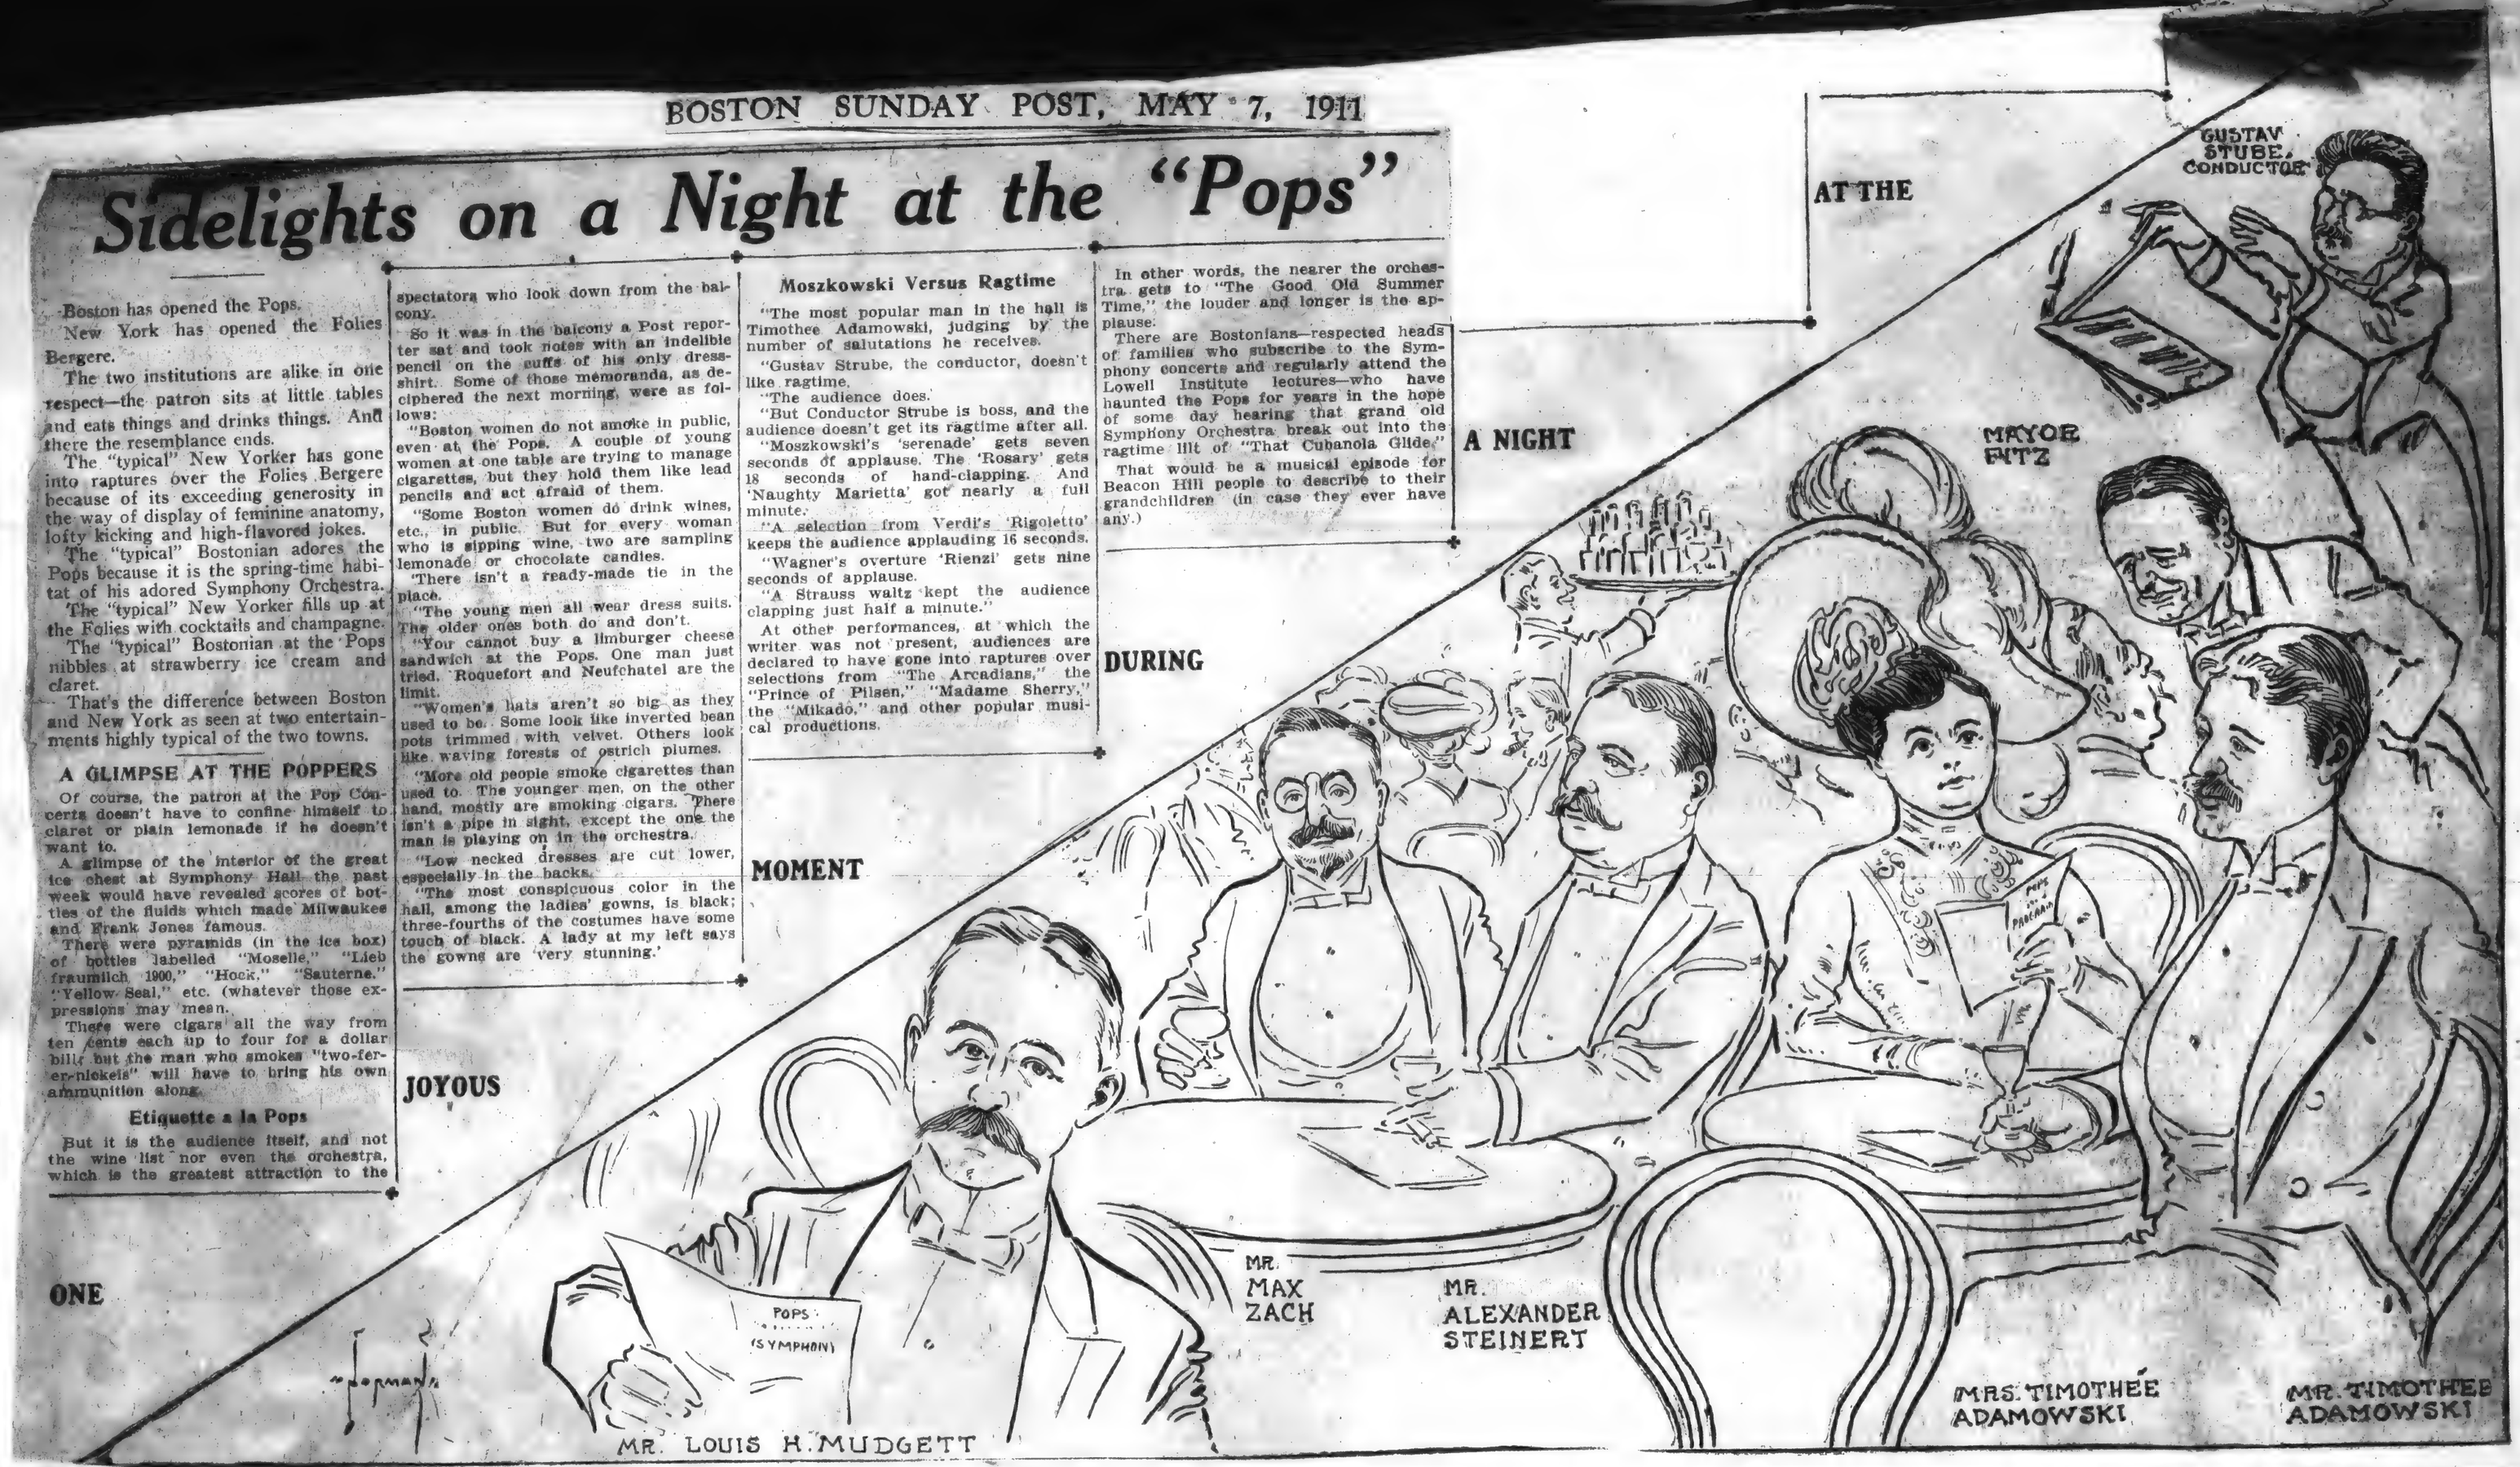
"A Strauss waltz kept the audience clapping just half a minute."

At other performances, at which the writer was not present, audiences are declared to have gone into raptures over selections from "The Arcadians," the "Prince of Pilsen," "Madame Sherry," the "Mikado," and other popular musical productions.

In other words, the nearer the orchestra gets to "The Good Old Summer Time," the louder and longer is the applause.

There are Bostonians—respected heads of families who subscribe to the Symphony concerts and regularly attend the Lowell Institute lectures—who have haunted the Pops for years in the hope of some day hearing that grand old Symphony Orchestra break out into the ragtime lilt of "That Cubanola Glide."

That would be a musical episode for Beacon Hill people to describe to their grandchildren (in case they ever have any.)



SECOND WEEK OF POPS

The second week of the Pops in Symphony Hall will be ushered in by the first Wagner night of the season. These Wagner nights are always a popular attraction. The Wagner selections, which come in the second part, comprise the Prelude to "Lohengrin," "Ride of the Valkyries," the Prelude and "Love Death" from "Tristan and Isolde," and the "Tannhauser" overture.

The first of the college nights is set for next Wednesday evening, May 10, when Amherst night will be celebrated. Amherst had its first "night" last year and it was one of the most successful of the season.

A number of the pieces on the programme will be traditional and honored Amherst tunes, with one or two new songs. Among the new things that Mr. Strube expects to do next week will be the Prelude to the third act of Victor Herbert's new grand opera, "Natoma," which will be played on Tuesday evening, and a selection from the popular musical comedy, "The Arcadians," which will be played on Monday evening.

The programmes for the week follow:

MONDAY, MAY 8—WAGNER NIGHT.

March, "Flag of Victory"	Bion
Overture, "Oberon"	Weber
Waltz, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
Selection, "Madame Butterfly"	Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Prelude and "Love Death" from "Tristan and Isolde"	Wagner
Overture, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Overture, "Rose and Peasant"	Suppe
Melody	Rubinstein-d'Indy

TUESDAY, MAY 9.

Selection, "The Arcadians" (First time)	Monckton
March, "King Karl"	Unrath
March, "Chanticleer"	Strube
Cortege de Macchus from Suite "Sylvia"	Delibes
Waltz, "Barcarole"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Grand Duchess"	Offenbach
Overture to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
"Sous les Tilleuls"	Massenet
Solo violoncello, Mr. Minart. Solo Cello, Mr. J. Keller.
Noce villageoise	Godard
Selection, "Carmen"	Bizet
Prelude to Act III., "Natoma" (First time)	Herbert
Hymn to St. Cecilia	Adam
Overture, "si Jetais Roi"	Gounod
Solo Violin, Mr. J. Hoffmann.
March, "Naughty Marietta"	Herbert

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10—AMHERST NIGHT.

March, "Chanticleer"	Strube
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
"Cheer for Old Amherst"	J. N. Pierce, '02
Waltz, "Campus Dreams"	E. N. Blake, '97
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
"Amherst Horse"	D. S. Barlett, '03
"Amherst Alma Mater"	D. S. Hamilton, '06
To the Fairest College"	D. S. Barlett, '03
"The Arcadians"	Monckton
"Stein Song"	Bullard
"Lord Geoffrey Amherst"	J. S. Hamilton, '06
Selection, "Madame Sherry"	Hoschna
Hero Angelique	Rubinstein
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Waltz, "Beautiful Blue Danube"	Strauss
March, "Stars and Stripes"	Sousa
March, "Hoch und Deutschmeister"	Ertl
Overture, "Die Fledermaus"	Strauss
Selection, "Rigoletto"	Verdi
Overture, "La Reine de Chocolate"	Kommak
("The Squabbles of the People of Chocolate")	Silingsia
(a) To a Wild Rose.	MacDowell
(b) To a Water Lily	Ponchielli
Ballet Music from "La Gioconda"	Wagner
Finale to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Nevin
Intermezzo, "The Beautiful Galatea"	Suppe
Pierrette	Chaminade
Selection, "Far Away Isles" (First time)	Marguerre
March, "Follow the Crowd"	Warner

THURSDAY, MAY 11.

March, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"	Rossini
Waltz, Dreaming	Strauss
Selection, "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
False Lente and Pizzicato from Suite	Delibes
Romance for Violin	Strube
Mr. J. Hoffmann.
Fete Boheme from "Scenes Pittoresques"	Massenet
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"	Herbert
The Rosary	Nevin
Country Dance	Nevin
Waltz, "Rain of Gold"	Waldteufel
March, "Black Bess"	Strube

FRIDAY, MAY 12.

Coronation March	Meyerbeer
Overture, "La Minette"	Auber
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Waltz, "Wiener Blut"	Strauss
Selection, "Faust"	Gounod
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Invitation to the Dance	Weber
Hungarian Rhapsody in F	Liszt
Overture, "Hansel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
Selection, "The Girl in the Train"	Pahl
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldteufel
Marche des Amoureux	Gamme

SATURDAY, MAY 13.

March, "Boston—1915"	Strube
Overture, "Fatinitza"	Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Selection, "The Arcadians"	Monckton
Selection, "Madam Sherry"	Hoschna
Ballet Music from "Coppelia"	Delibes
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Tschaikowsky
Selection, "Merry Widow"	Lehar
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"	Voltestedt
March, "Stars and Stripes"	Sousa

TONIGHT'S POPS PROGRAM

The Pop concert program for this evening, which is "Amherst" night, is as follows:

March, "Chanticleer"	Strube
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Cheer for old Amherst	J. N. Pierce, '02
Waltz, "Campus Dreams"	E. N. Blake, '97
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
(a) Amherst Horse	D. S. Barlett, '03
(b) Alma Mater	D. S. Hamilton, '06
(c) To the Fairest College	D. S. Barlett, '03
Selection, "The Arcadians"	Monckton
Stein Song	Bullard
(a) Lord Geoffrey Amherst	J. S. Hamilton, '06
Selection, "Madame Sherry"	Hoschna
Reve Angelique	Rubinstein
Waltz, "Beautiful Blue Danube"	Strauss
March, "Stars and Stripes"	Sousa

HERALD, WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1911.

Amherst Night at "Pops."

Tonight will be Amherst night at the "Pops." The program will be as follows:

March, "Chanteclee"..... Strube
Overture, "Rienzi"..... Wagner
Cheer for Old Amherst.....J. N. Bierce, '02
Waltz, "Campus Dreams"...E. N. Blake, '97
Suite, "Peer Gynt"..... Grieg
Paige's Horse.....D. C. Bartlett, '03
Amherst Alma Mater.....J. S. Hamilton, '06
To the Fairest College:....D. C. Bartlett, '03
(Organ, C. E. Lamson, '99)
Selection, "The Arcadians"..... Monckton
Stein Song..... Bullard
Lord Geoffrey Amherst ...J. S. Hamilton, '06
Selection, "Madame Sherry"..... Hoshna
Reve Angelique..... Rubinstein
(Organ, Mr. Marshall)
Waltz, "Beautiful Blue Danube"..... Strauss
March, "Stars and Stripes"..... Sousa

GLOBE—THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1911.

AMHERST NIGHT AT POPS.

Graduates and Undergraduates of College Throng Symphony Hall and Assist in Program.

Symphony hall was the gathering place for every Amherst graduate and undergraduate in the vicinity of Boston last evening, for the annual "Amherst night" at the Pops. From the enthusiasm with which the cheering and singing was carried on no one would have suspected that the Amherst baseball team had been defeated by Harvard yesterday afternoon.

The name "Amherst" blazed in front of the great organ in large purple and white letters, paper banners inscribed with the name of the college hung at frequent intervals from the railings of the balconies and souvenir paper napkins, appropriately decorated, were found on the tables.

A large part of the musical program was composed of Amherst songs and all the Amherst sympathizers in the large audience joined in the singing, led by William Marrow '99, from the center of the stage. The most popular song proved to be "Lord Geoffrey Amherst," written by J. S. Hamilton '06, which was encored at least four times. Both "Lord Geoffrey Amherst" and "To the Fairest College" were sung standing.

Other college numbers included "Cheer for Old Amherst," by J. N. Pierce '02; "Campus Dreams," by E. N. Blake '97; "Amherst Alma Mater," by J. S. Hamilton '06; "Paige's Horse," by D. C. Bartlett '03, and the "Stein song." The organ accompaniment to these songs was played by C. E. Lamson '99.

During the evening the banners around the balcony railings gradually disappeared, until at the close of the concert not one had been left by the souvenir collectors.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1911

The following programme will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

March, "Queen of Sheba"..... Gounod
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"..... Rossini
Waltz, "Du und Du"..... Strauss
Selection, "Il Trovatore"..... Verdi
Overture, "Rienzi"..... Wagner
Valse Lente and Pizzicato from Suite "Sylvia"..... Delibes
Romance for Violin..... Strube
Mr. J. Hoffmann.
Fete Boheme from "Scenes Pittoresques"..... Massenet
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"..... Herbert
(a) The Rosary; (b) Country Dance..... Nevin
Waltz, "Rain of Gold"..... Waldteufel
March, "Black Bess"..... Strube

The programme for tomorrow evening is as follows:

Coronation March..... Meyerbeer
Overture, "La Musette"..... Auber
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..... Mascagni
Waltz, "Wiener Blut"..... Strauss
Selection, "Faust"..... Gounod
Prelude to "Lohengrin"..... Wagner
Invitation to the Dance..... Weber
Hungarian Rhapsody in F..... Liszt
Overture, "Hansel and Gretel"..... Humperdinck
Selection, "The Girl in the Train"..... Fall
Waltz, "España"..... Waldteufel
Marche des Amoureux..... Ganne

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1911

Tonight's "Pop"

The following program will be given at the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

March, "Queen of Sheba"..... Gounod
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"..... Rossini
Waltz, "Du und Du"..... Strauss
Selection, "Il Trovatore"..... Verdi
Overture, "Rienzi"..... Wagner
Valse Lente and Pizzicato from Suite "Sylvia"..... Delibes
Romance for violin..... Strube
Mr. J. Hoffmann.
Fete Boheme from "Scenes Pittoresques"..... Massenet
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"..... Herbert
"The Rosary"..... Nevin
"Country Dance"..... Nevin
Waltz, "Rain of Gold"..... Waldteufel
March, "Black Bess"..... Strube

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1911

THE POPS.

This programme will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony hall this evening:—March, "Queen of Sheba," Gounod; overture, "The Barber of Seville," Rossini; waltz, "Du and Du," Strauss; selection, "Il Trovatore," Verdi; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; valse Lente and Pizzicato from Suite "Sylvia," Delibes; romance for Violin, Strube, J. Hoffmann; Fete Boheme from "Scenes Pittoresques," Massenet; selection, "Mlle. Modiste," Herbert; "The Rosary" and "Country Dance," Nevin; Waltz, "Rain of Gold," Waldteufel; March, "Black Bess," Strube.

BOSTON MINIATURES.

By E. N. VALLANDIGHAM.

Boston's Spring Weather and the Pops

Thanks to the cab prices of Boston's spring, the Pops have had for more than a quarter of a century a deserved and unique success. If May were commonly a month of hot days and balmy nights, as it is in some more favored climes, even so delightful a performance as that nightly enacted at Symphony Hall could not keep an audience indoors. Time was when that mixture of drink and music, so normal according to German notions, would have shocked Bostonians, and excited the censorial activities of a watchful mayor. It is not a great many years indeed since music of any sort was positively prohibited by Philadelphia in resorts where drink was served. Scandalous doings of many kinds were winked at in such places, but the moment a fiddle squeaked down came the police in the name of public virtue. John Milton warned the Parliament of England when it set about censoring books: "It will ask more than 20 licensers to examine all the lutes, the violins and the guitars in every house; they must not be suffered to prattle as they do, but must be licensed what they may say. And who shall silence all the airs and madrigals that whisper softness in chambers?" Milton was of more authority with the Puritans of Boston early and late than with the Quakers of Philadelphia, and surely no great harm has come from the union of music and mild alcoholic spirits at the Pops. We seem to take our pleasures of this kind less sadly than the Frenchman felt was the habit of the English, and at the same time we have managed to avoid mere music hall fashions.

Meanwhile the hall lends itself to the occasion. He who glances ceilingward when Wagner's swarms of golden bees hum their maddening sweetness, may take in, with that corner of the mind so curiously left free from the preoccupation of music, trivial details such as ordinarily elude observation. Such an observer can hardly fail to note with a sort of sympathetic terror the almost casual attitudes of the casts from the antique in their perilously high niches. He may see, too, for the first time perhaps, that the grouped lights of the chandeliers simulate the falling stars of a rocket just past the turn of its descent. Many at such moments must have discovered also that the lowered shades in the arched windows mightily suggest the hull of a vessel, with the curtain ropes for cordage and the wooden mullions for masts. There is a whole fleet of them sailing bravely along beneath the ever bursting rockets to the melodious humming of the Wagnerian bees.

Interlude Talk and Some Auditors

There is an agreeable bass tone to the general hum of conversation during the intermissions at the Pops, perhaps because there are usually more men than women present, unless, indeed, men may be supposed to talk more than women in such resorts. At any rate the soprano tones are utterly lost in the even roar of the bass that fills the hall, and makes a most agreeable music to the ears of those who love their own human kind and rejoice in the voices of living men heard in concert. One realizes the likeness of the tone to that of a hoarsely murmuring sea, when after successive strokes of the director's baton the chorus dwindles a little reluctantly with the effect of retreating waves, and finally dies into silence as if the commotion of the invisible billows had been suddenly stilled by a mighty hand.

One usually sees at the Pops some very old men from Harvard who have miraculously managed to keep their heads thickly thatched and their complexions clear, their faces free from wrinkles. The thirst of these grave elders sometimes can be appeased with nothing less than a red foamy liquor from a portly, red-necked bottle, a liquor, by the way, which strangely resembles, when it moveth itself aright and giveth its color in the cup, a certain imperfectly disguised bad medicine that one dimly remembers to have taken in the days before gelatin capsules came into use. The ruddy convivialities of these auditors do not greatly disturb one in the enjoyment of the music, and, indeed, furnish a decorative detail that lovers of the picturesque would not care to do without; besides, the color and foam of the drink have a certain sympathetic seemliness when the Valkyrie music is storming through the hall. Genuine old folks, men with grizzled, thinning locks, and women who have abandoned the attempt to look young and learned to wear their wrinkles with certain grace look on tolerantly at the spectacular effects produced by the Harvard contingent, and would not have them other than they are, especially as they applaud the music with discriminating enthusiasm.

Outdoor Entertainments and Dining

Coming between seasons, the Pops prepare Boston for outdoor entertainments, of which there are too few to meet the growing belief in the sanitary efficacy of fresh air. Our Atlantic coast cities north of Baltimore seem hardly of climatic fitness for the flourishing of the roof garden. New York had one more than a century ago, but buildings were not high in those days, and there are a great many summer nights when one is apt to shiver as high up as the 13th floor. In Boston, it is apt to be "main airy," as Charles Lamb said of his lodgings, upon roof gardens on a good many July nights, and the table cloths flap in a disconcerting fashion when the east wind, rich in damp sea-salt, begins to blow. There are many signs, however, that Bostonians like to take their pleasures in the open. It is not merely the influence of the law forbidding screens and curtains at windows where drink is served that leads patrons of the restaurants to fight for the privilege of the window tables. New York tried one summer to imitate Paris by dining on the sidewalk, but the police, who have a most meddlesome vigilance when they are least needed, speedily stopped the practice. Second avenue, with its old beer yards, has many German, Austrian and Hungarian outdoor dining places on the very edge of the street, pleasant spots, in spite of the necessity of simulating a bower by the aid of new potted privets. Boston might well imitate these pleasant resorts if there were houses so fortunately provided with space between the front doors and the sidewalk. A very pleasant thing to do for those blessed with leisure when others are busy is to take a late breakfast at some one of the outlying resorts about Boston, and have the meal served in the open air. So little as yet are hosts accustomed to such demands that an arrangement by telephone in advance is a wise precaution. Folks who minister to the public in Boston are a little deficient in imagination and adaptability, so that the request for the unusual commonly brings a denial upon the ground that the thing is against regulations. The notion that a meal may have a spice of adventure does not seem to have occurred to the matter of fact persons whose business it is to serve the public. They do these things btter abroad, where hosts have long been reconciled to the caprices of folks with money to spend.

Private Open Air Dining

Climatic considerations have not prevented the building of a good many houses in and about Boston with open air dining rooms. A family that made such provision in the suburbs of New York 20 years ago heard from friends who looked on at the building the sceptical opinion: "That is a very pretty idea, but of course you will not use the porch for dining." Such prophecies were not fulfilled. All summer long for nearly 15 years the open air dining room was the delight of the householders and their friends. It was pleasant to begin the meal while yet the wood thrush was humming his exquisite soprano vespers from his high perch which commanded the roseate West. It was a subtly sympathetic experience to drink coffee in the deepening dusk, while the cigars burned with an earnest spark across the table, the fireflies swam the air and showed their electric flashes against the velvet gloom of the woodland wall, the odors of rose and honeysuckle mingled in the humid air, and a great bald spot high over the southwestern horizon spoke of sleepless Manhattan's mimic daylight. Outdoor dining rooms in Boston and its suburbs need to be semi-inclosed and to have a southern outlook. Our summer here is seldom rich in fireflies, the fairy decoration of more southern nights, and the wood thrush seems less the friend of man in Boston than in the suburbs of New York, but outdoor summer dining for the stay-at-homes can be made delightful and distinctive even hereabouts. Certainly the outdoor dining room is about the cheapest adjunct to the home, since it demands little increased cost or construction in proportion to the space gained, and it requires no costly and troublesome paraphernalia as an outdoor sleeping room demands.

POPS JUST FOR AMHERST MEN

Throng of Alumni, Undergraduates and Friends Make Merry at Concert.

DESPITE HARVARD VICTORY

Even Break with Crimson Nine in Last Four Years Consolation for Yesterday.

Amherst alumni and undergraduates cheered and sang with enthusiasm last evening at the Pops. It was "Amherst night." Harvard's baseball victory over Amherst in the afternoon by a score of 8 to 2 made no difference.

"Why should we be sad?" asked an undergraduate. "We have won two of the games played with Harvard in the last four years."

The Boston Amherst Alumni Association was represented by 800 of its 1500 members and ladies. T. B. Plimpton of Newton, '02, secretary of the association, was chairman of the committee of arrangements. Nearly 300 undergraduates were present.

Henry P. Field, '90, former mayor of Northampton, entertained at his table Charles S. Groves, executive secretary of the Republican state committee. Others present included Albion F. Bemis '80 of Brookline, a former member of the Governor's council; Frank B. Dunbar '90 of Lowell; F. W. Stearns, a college trustee; Alfred E. Alvord '84, president of the Boston Alumni Association; Charles E. Kelsey '84, a former president; J. E. Plimpton '72 of Walpole, Eldern Keith '92 of Brockton.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The following program will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

March, "Queen of Sheba"..... Gounod
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"..... Rossini
Waltz, "Du und Du"..... Strauss
Selection, "Il Trovatore"..... Verdi
Overture, "Rienzi"..... Wagner
Valse Lente and Pizzicato from suite "Sylvia"..... Delibes
Romance for violin..... Strube
Mr. J. Hoffmann.
Fete Boheme from "Scenes Pittoresques"..... Massenet
Selection, "Mlle Modiste"..... Herbert
(a) The Rosary..... Nevin
(b) Country Dance..... Nevin
Waltz, "Rain of Gold"..... Waldteufel
March, "Black Bess"..... Strube

POST, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1911

POP CONCERT

The programme for this evening for the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall is as follows:

FRIDAY, MAY 12.

Coronation March..... Meyerbeer
Overture, "La Musette"..... Auber
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..... Mascagni
Waltz, "Wiener Blut"..... Strauss
Selection, "Faust"..... Gounod
Prelude to "Lohengrin"..... Weber
Invitation to the Dance..... Liszt
Hungarian Rhapsody in F..... Humperdinck
Overture, "Hansel and Gretel"..... Fall
Selection, "The Girl in the Train"..... Waldteufel
Waltz, "Espana"..... Ganne
Marche des Amoureux.....

TRAVELER, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1911.

POPS PROGRAMME TONIGHT.

The Pops programme for this evening follows:

Coronation March..... Meyerbeer
Overture, "La Musette"..... Auber
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..... Mascagni
Waltz, "Wiener Blut"..... Strauss
Selection, "Faust"..... Gounod
Prelude to "Lohengrin"..... Wagner
Invitation to the Dance..... Weber
Hungarian Rhapsody in F..... Liszt
Overture, "Hansel and Gretel"..... Humperdinck
Selection, "The Girl in the Train"..... Fall
Waltz, "Espana"..... Waldteufel
Marche des Amoureux..... Ganne

HERALD, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1911

POP PROGRAM TONIGHT

The following program will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

Coronation March..... Meyerbeer
Overture, "La Musette"..... Auber
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..... Mascagni
Selection, "Faust"..... Gounod
Prelude to "Lohengrin"..... Wagner
Invitation to the Dance..... Weber
Hungarian Rhapsody in F..... Liszt
Overture, "Hansel and Gretel"..... Humperdinck
Selection, "The Girl in the Train"..... Fall
Waltz, "Espana"..... Waldteufel
Marche des Amoureux..... Ganne

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1911.

"Pop" Program

The program for tonight's "Pop" concert is as follows:

Coronation March..... Meyerbeer
Overture, "La Musette"..... Auber
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..... Mascagni
Waltz, "Wiener Blut"..... Strauss
Selection, "Faust"..... Gounod
Prelude to "Lohengrin"..... Wagner
Invitation to the Dance..... Weber
Hungarian Rhapsody in F..... Liszt
Overture, "Hansel and Gretel"..... Humperdinck
Selection, "The Girl in the Train"..... Fall
Waltz, "Espana"..... Waldteufel
Marche des Amoureux..... Ganne

TRAVELER, SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL.

The third week of the very successful season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will open with the annual "German Night," which is always one of the favorite events of the spring. A feature of the programme for this night, which is Monday, May 15, will be the playing of a number of German folk songs by one of the horn quartets of the Symphony orchestra, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair.

Among the new pieces which Mr. Strube has put on for the coming week are an Adagio Pathetique for orchestra and organ by Godard, a Scotch march by Degan by Godard, a serenade waltz by Herman Goldbussy, a serenade waltz by Herman Goldstein of the orchestra, a selection from Massenet's "Herodiade" and on Thursday night, for the first time, a selection from Puccini's "The Girl of the Golden West" will be played.

Monday, May 15, German night:

German March..... Strube
Overture, "Der Freischutz"..... Weber
Waltz, "Bei uns z'Haus"..... Strauss
Nocturne and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"..... Mendelssohn
Selection, "Die Fledermaus"..... Strauss
Romance for 'Cello..... Strube
Mr. J. Keller.
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6..Brahms
Overture, "Tannhauser"..... Wagner
Overture, "Stradella"..... Flotow
German Songs.....
Boston Symphony orchestra horn quartet—Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain Phair.
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube"..... Strauss
March, "Schlaraffen"..... Kempter

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
MAY 13, 1911

Third Week of the Pops

The third week of the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall will open with the annual "German Night," which is always one of the events of the spring. A feature of the programme for Monday will be the playing of a number of German folk-songs by one of the horn quartets of the Symphony Orchestra, composed of Messrs Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair. To hear the old songs played by this quartet will be a welcome novelty.

Among the new pieces that Mr. Strube has put on for the coming week are an Adagio Pathétique for orchestra and organ by Godard, a Scotch march by Debussy, a serenade waltz by Hermann Goldstein of the orchestra, a selection from Massenet's "Herodiade," and on Thursday night, for the first time, a selection from Puccini's "The Girl of the Golden West" will be played.

The programme for Monday, "German Night," is as follows:

German March ..... Strube
Overture, "Der Freischütz" ..... Weber
Waltz, "Bei uns z'Haus" ..... Strauss
Nocturne and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
Selection, "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Romance for 'Cello ..... Strube
Mr. J. Keller
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6 ..... Brahms
Overture, "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Overture, "Stradella" ..... Flotow
German Songs
Boston Symphony Orchestra Horn Quartet
(Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain, Phair)
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" ... Strauss
March, "Schlaraffen" ..... Kempter

South Boston News
May 13 1911.

THE POP CONCERTS.

The third week of the POP concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Monday evening May 15th, with "German" Night. The feature of this programme will be the performance of a number of German folk songs by the Horn Quartet of the Orchestra, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair. The season is progressing admirably and with large patronage especially of music lovers from the towns surrounding Boston. Strict attention is given in the box office to all telephone orders for seats, and tickets will be held until eight o'clock on the night of the concert. A splendid programme has been arranged for next week. The Pops have become an institution in this city, and is eagerly looked forward to and greatly enjoyed by thousands. A delightful place to spend an evening.

RECORD, SATURDAY,
MAY 13, 1911

THE "POPS."

The third week of the very successful season of Pop concerts in Symphony hall will open with the annual "German Night," which is always one of the favorite events of the spring. A feature of the programme for this night which is Monday, May 15, will be the playing of a number of German folk-songs by one of the horn quartettes of the Symphony.

Among the new pieces that Strube has put on for the coming week are an Adagio Pathetique for orchestra and organ by Godard, a Scotch march by Debussy, a serenade waltz by Hermann Goldstein of the orchestra, a selection from Massenet's "Herodiade" and on Thursday night a selection from "The Girl of the Golden West" will be played

HERALD, BOSTON,
MAY 14, 1911.

THIRD WEEK OF POPS

The third week of the very successful season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will open with the annual "German Night," which is always one of the favorite events of the spring. A feature of the program for this night, which is tomorrow, will be the playing of a number of German folksongs by one of the horn quartets of the Symphony orchestra, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair. The horns of the Symphony orchestra are famous the country over, and to hear the old songs played by this quartet will be a welcome novelty.

Among the new pieces that Mr. Strube has put on for the coming week are an Adagio Pathetique for orchestra and organ, by Godard; a Scotch march, by Debussy, first played here by the Boston Orchestral Club; Serenade Waltz, by Hermann Goldstein of the orchestra; a selection from Massenet's "Herodiade," and on Thursday night, for the first time, a selection from Puccini's "Girl of the Golden West" will be played.

The program for tomorrow, Monday, night, is as follows:

German March ..... Strube
Overture, "Der Freischuetz" ..... Weber
Waltz, "Bei uns z'Haus" ..... Strauss
Nocturne and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
Selection, "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Romance for 'cello ..... Strube
Mr. J. Keller.
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6 ..... Brahms
Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Overture, "Stradella" ..... Flotow
German Songs.
Boston Symphony Orchestra horn quartet
(Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain, Phair).
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" ... Strauss
March, "Schlaraffen" ..... Kempter

BOSTON SUNDAY POST,
MAY 14, 1911

THIRD WEEK OF POPS

The third week of the very successful season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will open with the annual "German Night," which is always one of the favorite events of the spring. A feature of the programme for this night, which is tomorrow, May 15, will be the playing of a number of German folk-songs by one of the horn quartets of the Symphony Orchestra, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair.

Among the new pieces that Mr. Strube has put on for the coming week are an Adagio Pathetique for orchestra and organ, by Godard; a Scotch march, by Debussy; a Serenade Waltz, by Hermann Goldstein of the orchestra; a selection from Massenet's "Herodiade."

The programme for the week follows:

MONDAY, MAY 15—GERMAN NIGHT

German March ..... Strube
Overture, "Der Freischutz" ..... Weber
Waltz, "Bei uns z'Haus" ..... Strauss
Nocturne and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
Selection, "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Romance for 'Cello ..... Strube
Mr. J. Keller.
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6 ..... Brahms
Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Overture, "Stradella" ..... Flotow
German Songs.
Boston Symphony Orchestra Horn Quartet
(Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain, Phair.)
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" ... Strauss
March, "Schlaraffen" ..... Kempter

TUESDAY, MAY 16.

March, "Le Pere, la Victoire" ..... Ganne
Overture, "Raymond" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Arabian Nights" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Rigoletto" ..... Verdi
Overture, "William Tell" ..... Rossini
Intermezzo, "Naila" ..... Delibes
Selection, "Faust" ..... Gounod
Indian Dance, from Suite No. 2 ..... MacDowell
Overture, "Fra Diavolo" ..... Ober
Daffodils ..... Carvel
Dalliance ..... Strube
Selection, "Naughty Marietta" ..... Herbert
March, "Flag of Victory" ..... Blon

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17.

March, "The Continentals" ..... Brooke
Overture, "Martha" ..... Flotow
Waltz, "Roses from the South" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Herodiade" (First time) ... Massenet
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Adagio Pathetique (First time) ..... Godard
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
"Zug der Zwerge" ..... Grieg
Irish Rhapsody ..... Herbert
Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Prelude to "The Deluge" ..... Saint-Saens
Selection, "Far Away Isles" ..... Maquarre
March, "Hoch Habsburg" ..... Kral

THURSDAY, MAY 18.

Rackoczy March ..... Berlioz
Overture, "Semiramide" ..... Rossini
Waltz, "Artist's Life" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Il Trovatore" ..... Verdi
Overture, "Midsummer's Night Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
"Morning Mood" and "In the Hall of the Mountain King" from Suite "Peer Gynt" ..... Grieg
Ballet Music from "Coppelia" ..... Delibes
"Finlandia" ..... Sibelius
"Czardas," "Der Geist des Wojewoden" ..... Grossman
To a wild Rose ..... MacDowell
Legato ..... Strube
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen" ..... Luders
March, "Teufel" ..... Suppe

FRIDAY, MAY 19.

March, "Chantecler" ..... Strube
Overture, "Si J'etais Roi" ..... Adam
Waltz, "Pres de toi" ..... Waldteufel
Selection, "Les Huguenots" ..... Meyerbeer
Selection, "La Boheme" ..... Puccini
"Marche Ecossaise" (First time) ..... Debussy
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 ..... Liszt
Overture, "Orpheus" ..... Offenbach
Overture "Poet and Peasant" ..... Suppe
Serenade ..... Whelpley
"Nadia" ..... Wachs
Selection, "The Arcadians" ..... Monckton
March, "El Capitan" ..... Sousa

SATURDAY, MAY 20.

March, "The Comet" ..... Strube
Overture, "La Gazza Ladra" ..... Rossini
Waltz, "Wine, Women and Song" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste" ..... Herbert
Selection, "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Largo ..... Handel
Violin, Mr. Hoffman; Harp, Mr. Schuecker; Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Ballet Music from "La Gioconda" ... Ponchielli
Ride of the Valkyries ..... Wagner
Selection, "Madame Sherry" ..... Hoschna
Waltz, "Les Patineurs" (The Skaters) ..... Waldteufel
American Fantasy ..... Herbert
March, "King Karl" ..... Unrath

THE BOSTON AMERICAN
SUNDAY, MAY 14, 1911

"GERMAN NIGHT" TO BEGIN POPS' WEEK

Feature Will Be Rendering of Folk-Songs by Orchestra's Horn Quartet.

The third week of the very successful season of pop concerts in Symphony Hall will open with the annual "German Night," which is always one of the favorite events of the Spring. A feature of the program for to-morrow night will be the playing of a number of German folk songs by one of the horn quartets of the Symphony Orchestra, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair.

Among the new pieces that Mr. Strube has put on for the coming week are an adagio pathetique for orchestra and organ by Godard, a Scotch march by Debussy, a serenade waltz by Hermann Goldstein of the orchestra, a selection from Massenet's "Herodiade," and on Thursday night, for the first time, a selection from Puccini's "The Girl of the Golden West."

The program for to-morrow night is as follows:

1—German March ..... Strube
2—Overture, "Der Freischuts" ..... Weber
3—Waltz, "Bei uns z'Haus" ..... Strauss
4—Nocturne and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
5—Selection, "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
6—Romance for 'cello ..... Strube
Mr. J. Keller.
7—Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6 ..... Brahms
8—Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
9—Overture, "Stradella" ..... Flotow
10—German Songs.
Boston Symphony Orchestra Horn Quartet
(Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain, Phair).
11—Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" ... Strauss
12—March, "Schlaraffen" ..... Kempter

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,
MAY 14, 1911

"German Night" Will Open Week at "Pops"

The third week of the "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall will open with the annual "German night," which is always one of the favorite events of the spring. A feature of the program will be the playing of a number of German folk-songs by one of the horn quartets of the Symphony Orchestra, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair. The horns of the Symphony Orchestra are famous the country over.

Among the new pieces that Mr. Strube has put on for the coming week are an "Adagio Pathetique," for orchestra and organ, by Godard; a "Scotch March," by Debussy; a "Serenade Waltz," by Hermann Goldstein of the orchestra; a selection from Massenet's "Herodiade," and, on Thursday night, for the first time, a selection from Puccini's "The Girl of the Golden West."

The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

German March ..... Strube
Overture, "Der Freischuts" ..... Weber
Waltz, "Bei uns z'Haus" ..... Strauss
Nocturne and Wedding March from "A Midsummer's Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
Selection, "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Romance for 'cello ..... Strube
Mr. J. Keller.
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6 ..... Brahms
Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Overture, "Stradella" ..... Flotow
German Songs.
Boston Symphony Orchestra Horn Quartet.
(Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain, Phair.)
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" ..... Strauss
March, "Schlaraffen" ..... Kempter

SUNDAY GLOBE
—MAY 14, 1911

Third Week of Symphony Hall "Pop" Concerts.

The third week of the successful season of "Pop" concerts in Symphony hall will open tomorrow with the annual "German Night," which is always one of the favorite events of the spring. A feature of the program will be the playing of a number of German folk-songs by one of the horn quartets of the Symphony orchestra, composed of Messrs Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair.

The horns of the Symphony orchestra are famous the country over, and to hear the old songs played by this quartet will be a very welcome novelty.

Among the new pieces that Mr Strube has announced for this week are an "Adagio Pathetique" for orchestra and organ, Godard; a Scotch march, Debussy; a serenade waltz, by Hermann Goldstein of the orchestra; a selection from Massenet's "Herodiade," and on Thursday night, for the first time, a selection from Puccini's "The Girl of the Golden West" will be played.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY,
MAY 16, 191[illegible]

The Pops

The following programme will be given at the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

March, "Le Pere, la Victoire" ..... Ganne
Overture, "Raymond" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Arabian Nights" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Rigoletto" ..... Verdi
Overture, "William Tell" ..... Rossini
Intermezzo, "Naila" ..... Delibes
Selection, "Faust" ..... Gounod
Indian Dance, from Suite No. 2 ..... Delibes
Overture, "Fra Diavolo" ..... Macdowell
(a) Daffodils ..... Ober
(b) Dalliance ..... Carvel
Selection, "Naughty Marietta" ..... Strube
March, "Flag of Victory" ..... Herbert
..... Blon

Tomorrow evening's programme will be as follows:

March, "The Continentals" ..... Brooke
Overture, "Martha" ..... Flotow
Waltz, "Roses from the South" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Herodiade" (first time) ..... Massenet
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Adagio Pathetique (first time) ..... Godard
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
"Zug der Zwerge" ..... Grieg
Irish Rhapsody ..... Herbert
Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Prelude to "The Deluge" ..... Saint-Saens
Selection, "Far Away Isles" ..... Maquarre
March, "Hoch Habsburg" ..... Kral

HERALD, TUESDAY,
MAY 16, 1911

GERMAN NIGHT AT POPS

Last night was German night at the Pops. The program opened with "German March," by Strube, followed by the overture from "Der Freischutz." The overture from "Tannhauser" was heartily applauded. "Romance for 'Cello" was played by J. Keller and was one of the most pleasing numbers.

"Hungarian Dances" Nos. 5 and 6 and the "Blue Danube Waltz" were well appreciated. The march "Schlaraffen" closed the program.

JOURNAL—TUESDAY,
MAY 16, 1911

At the "Pops"

The following program will be given at the Pop concert this evening:

March, "Le Pere, la Victoire" ..... Ganne
Overture, "Raymond" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Arabian Nights" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Rigoletto" ..... Verdi
Overture, "William Tell" ..... Rossini
Intermezzo, "Naila" ..... Delibes
Selection, "Faust" ..... Gounod
Indian Dance, from Suite No. 2 ..... MacDowell
Overture, "Fra Diavolo" ..... Ober
"Daffodils" ..... Carvel
"Dalliance" ..... Strube
Selection, "Naughty Marietta" ..... Herbert
March, "Flag of Victory" ..... Blon

[230]

POST, TUESDAY,
MAY 16, 1911

HORNS SCORE HIT AT POPS

A particular feature of the Pop concert of yesterday evening in Symphony Hall was the performance of three German folk-songs by the horn quartet of the Symphony Orchestra, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair. These songs were preceded by the sparkling music from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus." The more serious portion of the programme was excellently composed—the overture to "Der Fretschutz," the overture to "Tannhauser," Brahms' Hungarian Dances Nos. 5 and 6, and Flotow's overture to Stradella.

There was a very large audience and more than the ordinary enthusiasm for the music of Mendelssohn, Brahms, Strauss and the German folk-songs—a welcome innovation by Mr. Strube in the matter of programme-making. Mr. J. Keller was recalled when he had played Strube's Romance for 'Cello, and the concert commenced with the conductor's snappy "German March." There were as usual numerous encores, while the glasses clinked and the smoke ascended. The "Beautiful Blue Danube" carried the house, as it always does, and the audience filed out to the rollicking strains of Kempter's "Schlaraffen."

RECORD, TUESDAY,
MAY 16, 19

GERMAN NIGHT AT "POPS."

Typical "Pops" weather brought out more than the average crowd to fill the tables and balconies at Symphony hall last night, when the third week of the season opened with the annual German night, always one of the favorite events of the spring.

A feature of the programme that was especially applauded was the playing of a number of German folk songs by one of the horn quartettes of the Symphony, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair. These songs, with their homely old melodies won the audience at once. Many of them were taken back to the "lieb Vaterland" of their childhood, and to hear these old songs played by such talented performers was indeed a treat.

The programme opened with a German march from Strube, and concluded with "Schlaraffen," a march from Kempter.

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY
MAY 16, 191[illegible]

GERMAN NIGHT AT "POPS."

Typical "Pops" weather brought out more than the average crowd to fill the tables and balconies at Symphony hall last night, when the third week of the season opened with the annual German night, always one of the favorite events of the spring.

A feature of the programme that was especially applauded was the playing of a number of German folk songs by one of the horn quartettes of the Symphony, composed of Messrs. Hess, Lorbeer, Hain and Phair. These songs, with their homely old melodies won the audience at once. Many of them were taken back to the "lieb Vaterland" of their childhood, and to hear these old songs played by such talented performers was indeed a treat.

The programme opened with a German march from Strube, and concluded with "Schlaraffen," a march from Kempter.

GLOBE—TUESDAY,
MAY 16, 1911.

Symphony Hall "Pops."

This evening at the Symphony hall "pops," Mr Strube will conduct the following program: March, "Le Pere, la Victoire," Ganne; overture, "Raymond," Thomas; waltz, "Arabian Nights," Strauss; selection, "Rigoletto," Verdi; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; intermezzo, "Naila," Delibes; selection, "Faust," Gounod; "Indian Dance," from suite No. 2, MacDowell; overture, "Fra Diavolo," Ober; "Daffodils," Carvel; "Dalliance," Strube; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert.

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY,
MAY 17, 1911.

Tonight's "Pop"

Tonight's "Pop" program is as follows:

March, "The Continentals" ..... Brooke
Overture, "Martha" ..... Flotow
Waltz, "Roses From the South" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Herodiade" (First time) ..... Massenet
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Adagio Pathetique (First time) ..... Godard
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
"Zug der Zwerge" ..... Grieg
Irish Rhapsody ..... Herbert
Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Prelude to "The Deluge" ..... Saint-Saens
Selection, "Far Away Isles" ..... Maquarre
March, "Hoch Habsburg" ..... Kral

JOURNAL.--FRIDAY, MAY 19, 1911

"Pop" Program

The following program will be given at the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

March, "Chantecler".....Strube
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Pres de toi".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Les Huguenots".....Meyerbeer
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
"Marche Ecossaise" (first time).....Debussy
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.....Lisst
Overture, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Overture, "Poet and Peasant".....Suppe
"Serenade".....Whelpley
"Nadia".....Wachs
Selection, "The Arcadians".....Monckton
March, "El Capitan".....Sousa

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1911

THE "POPS."

Conductor Strube has but nine more Pop concerts to conduct, his service ending on Wednesday, May 31. He will be succeeded, as last year, by Conductor Maquarre. Strube has made a number of especially interesting evenings for the near future. On Monday he will have his second "Wagner" night, with the most interesting and extensive list of selections that have yet been given at these concerts. On Thursday night comes the annual Italian night. There will be a large attendance from Il Circolo Italiano on that evening.

It has been finally decided that "Harvard" night will be given on Monday, May 29.

This programme will be given at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall this evening:

March, "The Comet," Strube; overture, "La Gazza Ladra," Rossini; waltz, "Wine, Women and Song," Strauss; selection, "Mlle. Modiste," Herbert; selection, "Carmen," Bizety; Largo, Handel; violin, Mr. Hoffmann; harp, Mr. Schuecker, and organ, Mr. Marshall; ballet music from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; "Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; selection, "Madame Sherry," Hoshna; waltz, "Les Patineurs" (The Skaters), Waldteufel; American fantasy, Herbert; march, "King Karl," Unrath.

RECORD, SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1911

THE "POPS."

Conductor Strube has but nine more Pop concerts to conduct, his service ending on Wednesday, May 31. He will be succeeded, as last year, by Conductor Maquarre. Strube has made a number of especially interesting evenings for the near future. On Monday he will have his second "Wagner" night, with the most interesting and extensive list of selections that have yet been given at these concerts. On Thursday night comes the annual Italian night. There will be a large attendance from Il Circolo Italiano on that evening.

It has been finally decided that "Harvard" night will be given on Monday, May 29.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1911

The Pops

Conductor Gustave Strube has but nine more Pop concerts to conduct, his service ending on Wednesday evening, May 31. He will be succeeded, as last year, by Conductor André Maquarre. Mr. Strube has made a number of interesting evenings for the near future. On Monday night he will have his second "Wagner Night," with the most extensive list of selections that have yet been given at these concerts. On Thursday night comes the annual "Italian Night," the programme being devoted entirely to Italian composers. "Harvard Night" is Monday evening, May 29. The Harvard musical clubs will be in attendance, and as in the past it will be a particularly jolly evening for Harvard students and alumni.

The programme for Monday night is as follows:

WAGNER NIGHT

March from the "Damnation of Faust"..Berlioz
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Du und Du".....Strauss
Selection from "The Flying Dutchman".Wagner
Overture, "Tannhäuser."—Prelude to Act I., "Lohengrin."—Tone Pictures from "The Valkyrie."—March from Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall
Introduction to Act III. and Dance of the Apprentices from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".....Wagner
Berceuse-Reverie (first time).....Sgambati
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
March, "Old Berlin".....Blon

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1911.

Tonight's "Pops"

The following program will be given at the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

March, "The Comet".....Strube
Overture, "La Gazza Ladra".....Rossini
Waltz, "Wine, Women and Song".....Strauss
Selection, "Mlle Modiste".....Herbert
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Largo.....Handel
Violin, Mr. Hoffmann; Harp, Mr. Schuecker; Organ, Mr. Marshall
Ballet music from "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
Waltz, "Les Patineurs".....Waldteufel
American Fantasy.....Herbert
March, "King Karl".....Unrath

TRAVELER, SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1911.

THE POPS.

Conductor Gustave Strube has but nine more Pop concerts to conduct, his service ending on Wednesday evening, May 31. He will be succeeded, as last year, by Conductor Andre Maquarre. Mr. Strube has made a number of especially interesting evenings for the near future. On Monday night he will have his second "Wagner" night. On Thursday night comes the annual "Italian" night, the programme being devoted entirely to Italian composers.

The programme for Monday night is as follows:

March from the "Damnation of Faust".....Berlior
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".Rossini
Waltz, "Du und Du".....Strauss
Selection from "The Flying Dutchman".....Wagner
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Prelude to Act 1, "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Tone pictures from "The Valkyrie".....Wagner
March from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Introduction to Act 3 and dance of the apprentices, from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"...Wagner
Berceuse-Reverie (first time)....Sgambati
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
March, "Old Berlin".....Blon

SUNDAY POST, MAY 21, 1911

THE POPS

Conductor Gustav Strube has but nine more Pop concerts to conduct, his service ending on Wednesday evening, May 31. He will be succeeded, as last year, by Conductor Andre Maquarre. Mr. Strube has made a number of especially interesting evenings for the near future. On Monday night he will have his second "Wagner" night, with the most interesting and extensive list of selections that have yet been given at these concerts. The "Wagner" nights always bring large audiences and this one will be no exception. On Thursday night comes the annual "Italian" night, the programme being devoted entirely to Italian composers. There will be a large attendance from Il Circolo Italiano on that evening.

It has been finally decided that "Harvard" night will be given on Monday evening. May 29. The Harvard musical clubs will be in attendance as usual and as in the past it will be a particularly jolly evening for Harvard students and alumni. The programme for tomorrow (Monday) evening is as follows:

MONDAY, May 22—Wagner Night.

March from "The Damnation of Faust"..Berlioz
Overture, "The Barber of Seville".....Rossini
Waltz, "Du und Du".....Strauss
Selection from "The Flying Dutchman".Wagner
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Prelude to Act 1, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Tone pictures from "The Valkyrie".....Wagner
March from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Introduction to Act 3 and "Dance of the Apprentices" from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".....Wagner
Berceuse-Reverie (first time).....Sgambati
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
March, "Old Berlin".....Blon

HERALD, BOSTON, MAY 21, 1911.

THE POPS.

Gustave Strube has but nine more Pop concerts to conduct, his service ending on Wednesday evening, May 31. He will be succeeded, as last year, by Andre Maquarre. Mr. Strube has made a number of especially interesting evenings for the near future. On Monday night he will have his second "Wagner" night, with a most interesting and extensive list of selections. The "Wagner" nights always bring large audiences. On Thursday night comes the annual "Italian" night, the program being devoted entirely to Italian composers. There will be a large attendance from Il Circolo Italiano on that evening.

It has been finally decided that "Harvard" night will be given on Monday evening. May 29. The Harvard Musical clubs will be in attendance, as usual, and, as in the past, it will be a particularly jolly evening for Harvard students and alumni. The program for tomorrow (Monday) evening is as follows:

March from the "Damnation of Faust".Berlioz
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"....Rossini
Waltz, "Du und Du".....Strauss
Selection from "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Overture, "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner
Prelude to Act I, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Tone Pictures from "The Valkyrie"..Wagner
March from "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Introduction to Act III. and Dance of the Apprentices from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".....Wagner
Berceuse-Reverie (first time).....Sgambati
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
March, "Old Berlin".....Blon

THE BOSTON AMERICAN-SUNDAY, - MAY 21, 1911.

FOURTH WEEK OF POPS.

Attendance This Year Surpasses All Previous Figures.

The fourth week of the Pops and the last of Mr. Strube's conductorship begins to-morrow night. The popularity of this peculiarly Boston institution is increasing year by year, and so far this season the attendance has broken all previous records. The musical programs have continued to be high class. Out of twelve numbers eleven usually are popular classics or operatic excerps and the twelfth is selections from some such popular comic opera as "Naughty Marietta" or "The Girl in the Train." For encores the "Barcarole" from "Tales of Hoffman" is still the leader in popularity, although Blom's "Flag of Victory" is a close second.

Now that warm evenings have come there is no more pleasant way of passing them than sitting at a table sipping cooling drinks and listening to the music of the finest band in the world.

Introduction to Act 3 and dance of the apprentices, from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"...Wagner
Berceuse-Reverie (first time)....Sgambati
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
March, "Old Berlin".....Blon

JOURNAL--SUNDAY, MAY 21, 1911

Strube to Conduct But Nine More "Pop" Concerts

Conductor Gustave Strube has but nine more "Pop" concerts to conduct, his service ending on Wednesday evening, May 31. He will be succeeded by Conductor Andre Maquarre. Mr. Strube has made a number of especially interesting evenings for the near future. On Monday night he will have his second "Wagner" night. On Thursday night comes the annual "Italian" night, the program being devoted entirely to Italian composers. There will be a large attendance from the Circolo Italiano on that evening.

"Harvard" night will be held on Monday, May 29.

The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March from the "Damnation of Faust" Berlioz
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"...Rossini
Waltz, "Du und Du".....Strauss
Selection from "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Prelude to Act 1, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Tone Pictures from "The Valkyrie"..Wagner
March from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall
Introduction to Act III and Dance of the Apprentices from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".....Wagner
Berceuse-Reverie (first time).....Sgambati
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
March, "Old Berlin".....Blon

SUNDAY GLOBE--MAY 21, 1911.

Wagner Night Tomorrow at Symphony Hall "Pops."

Conductor Gustave Strube has but nine more "Pop" concerts to conduct, his service ending Wednesday evening, May 31. He will be succeeded, as last year, by Conductor Andre Maquarre. Mr Strube has made a number of especially interesting evenings for the near future. Tomorrow he will have his second "Wagner" night, with the most interesting and extensive list of selections that have yet been given at these concerts.

Thursday night comes the annual "Italian" night, the program being devoted entirely to Italian composers. There will be a large attendance from Il Circolo Italiano on that evening.

It has been finally decided that "Harvard" night will be given Monday evening, May 29. The Harvard musical clubs will be in attendance as usual, and, as in th past, it will b a particularly jolly evening for Harvard students and alumni.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1911

The Pops

At the Pop Concert tomorrow evening Mr. Jacques Hoffmann will play a violin solo, "Chanson d'Amour," by Louis Victor Saar, who is in charge of the department of harmony, and composition at the College of Music of Cincinnati. Mr. Saar is a native of Rotterdam but came to America in 1893, as accompanist at the Metropolitan Opera House. In 1899 he won a prize in piano composition in this city; and in 1903 was awarded the Kaiser Prize for Composition, at the Sangerfest in Baltimore. The programme at the concert in Symphony Hall this evening is as follows:

March, "The Comet".....Strube
Overture, "Phèdre".....Massenet
Waltz, "Morning Journals".....Strauss
Selection, "The Brigands".....Offenbach
Selection, "Samson and Delilah"....Saint-Saëns
Ballet Music from "Faust".....Gounod
Andacht for Violin, Harp and Organ....Johnson
Messrs. Hoffman, Schuecker and Marshall
March, Danse des Mirlitons, Trepak from "Nut-Cracker" Suite.....Tschaikowsky
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi malgré lui".....Chabrier
Waltz, "Barcarole".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
March, "Frisch drauf los".....Blon

The programme for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Hoch und Deutschmeister".....Ertl
Overture, "Raymond".....Thomas
Selection, "Mikado".....Sullivan
Waltz from "Der Rosenkavalier"....R. Strauss
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
(a) Valse Noble.....Nadball
(b) Chanson d'Amour, Violin Solo, Mr. Hoffmann.....Saar
Americanesque.....Gilbert
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"....Wagner
Marche Nuptiale.....Schlesinger
Organ, Mr. Marshall
(a) Narcissus.....Nevin
(b) "Zug der Zwerge".....Grieg
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube"...Strauss
March, "Gruss in die Ferne".....Döring

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY MAY 23, 1911

THE POPS.

This programme will be given at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall this evening:—

March, "The Comet," Strube; overture, "Phedre," Massenet; waltz, "Morning Journals," Strauss; selection, "The Brigands," Offenbach; selection, "Samson and Delilah,' Saint-Saens; ballet music from "Faust," Gounod; Andacht for violin, harp and organ, Johnson, Messrs. Hoffmann, Schuecker and Marshall; march, Danse des Mirlitons, Trepak from "Nut-Cracker" suite, Tschaikowsky; Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi malgre lui," Chabrier; waltz, "Barcarole," Waldteufel; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; march, "Frisch drauf los," Blon.

POST, TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1911

WAGNER NIGHT CROWDS POPS

Favorite Masterpieces Are Well Received

The fourth week of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall opened brilliantly last night. It was a "Wagner night" and this fact, coupled with the unusually warm weather, drew out an audience of record-breaking proportions.

The greater part of the programme consisted of compositions by Wagner, of which the orchestra gave virtuoso performances—selections from the romantic opera, "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," selections from "The Valkyrie," the overture to "Tannhauser" and the famous march from that opera, and the introduction to Act 3 and Dance of the Apprentices, from "Die Meistersinger."

The concert opened, however, with the dramatic Rakoczy March from Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," and the Wagner selections interspersed with waltzes by Strauss and Waldteufel, a march of Blon's, and, performed for the first time at these concerts, a delicate trifle by Sgambati, the modern Italian—"Berceuse-Reverie."

If the weather was hot the only indications of that fact consisted in the tremendous consumption of liquid refreshments. The men of the orchestra performed as though the concert were the first instead of the 19th of the present Pop season.

The audience was quick to respond to the excellent performances of favorite masterpieces, such as the "Tannhauser" overture, of which a repetition was desired, but this wish could not be recognized on account of the length of the programme. The music from "Lohengrin" and "The Flying Dutchman" made nearly as deep an impression.

RECORD, TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1911

THE POPS.

This programme will be given at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall this evening:—

March, "The Comet," Strube; overture, "Phedre," Massenet; waltz, "Morning Journals," Strauss; selection, "The Brigands," Offenbach; selection, "Samson and Delilah,' Saint-Saens; ballet music from "Faust," Gounod; Andacht for violin, harp and organ, Johnson, Messrs. Hoffmann, Schuecker and Marshall; march, Danse des Mirlitons, Trepak from "Nut-Cracker" suite, Tschaikowsky; Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi malgre lui," Chabrier; waltz, "Barcarole," Waldteufel; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; march, "Frisch drauf los," Blon.

HERALD, TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1911

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The following program will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

1—March, "The Comet".....Strube
2—Overture, "Phedre".....Massenet
3—Waltz, "Morning Journals".....Strauss
4—Selection, "The Brigands".....Offenbach
5—Selection, "Samson and Delilah".....Saint-Saens
6—Ballet music from "Faust".....Gounod
7—Andacht for violin, harp and organ..Johnson
Messrs. Hoffmann, Schuecker and Marshall.
8—March, Danse des Mirlitons, Trepak from "Nut-Cracker" Suite.Tschaikowsky
9—Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi malgre lui".....Chabrier
10—Waltz, "Barcarole".....Waldteufel
11—Selection, "Naughty Marietta"....Herbert
12—March, "Frisch drauf los".....Blon

JOURNAL.--TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1911.

Tonight's "Pops" Program

The following program will be given at the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

March, "The Comet".....Strube
Overture, "Phedre".....Massenet
Waltz, "Morning Journals".....Strauss
Selection, "The Brigands".....Offenbach
Selection, "Samson and Delilah"....Saint-Saens
Ballet music from "Faust".....Gounod
Andacht for violin, harp and organ.....Johnson
Messrs. Hoffman, Schuecker and Marshall.
March, Danse des Mirlitons, Trepak from "Nut-Cracker".....Tschaikowsky
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi malgre lui."
Chabrier
Waltz, "Barcarole".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
March, "Frisch drauf los".....Blon

GLOBE--TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1911.

Symphony Hall "Pops."

This evening at the Symphony hall "Pop" concerts the program will be as follows: March, "The Comet," Strube; overture, "Phedre," Massenet; waltz, "Morning Journals," Strauss; selection, "The Brigands," Offenbach; selection, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; ballet music from "Faust," Gounod; andacht for violin, harp and organ, Johnson; march, "Danse des Mirlitons, Trepak," from "Nut-Cracker" suite, Tschaikowsky; "Fete Polonaise," from "Le Roi malgre lui," Chabrier; waltz, "Barcarole," Waldteufel; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; march, "Frisch drauf los," Blon.

[231]

HERALD, WEDNESDAY,

MAY 24, 1911

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The following program will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

March, "Hoch und Deutschmeister"...Ertl
Overture, "Raymond".....Thomas
Selection, "Mikado".....Sullivan
Waltz from "Der Rosenkavalier" R. Strauss
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
(a) Valse Noble.....Nedball
(b) Chanson d'Amour.....Saar
Violin solo, Mr. Hoffmann.
Americanesque.....Gilbert
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman".Wagner
Marche Nuptiale.....Schlesinger
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
(a) "Narcissus".....Nevin
(b) "Zug der Zwerge".....Grieg
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube," Strauss
March, "Gruss in die Ferne".....Doring

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY,

MAY 24, 1911

At the "Pops" Tonight

At tonight's "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall the orchestra, under Mr. Strube, will play the following program:

March, "Hoch und Deutschmeister".....Ertl
Overture, "Raymond".....Thomas
Selection, "Mikado".....Sullivan
Waltz from "Der Rosenkavalier"..R. Strauss
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
"Valse Noble".....Nedball
"Chanson d' Amour," violin solo, Mr. Hoffmann.....Saar
Americanesque.....Gilbert
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"....Wagner
Marche Nuptiale.....Schlesinger
Organ, Mr. Marshall
"Narcissus".....Nevin
"Zug der Zwerge".....Grieg
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube"..Strauss
March, "Gruss in die Ferne".....Doring

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY

MAY 25, 1911

THE POPS.

Tonight is "Italian Night" at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall, and the programme is made up of works entirely by Italian composers. A large crowd is expected, among which will be members of the Circolo Italiano, which will attend in a body. The programme: March, "Il Bersagliere," Eilenberg; overture, "L'Italiana in Algeri," Rossini; waltz, "Italian Nights," Tobani; selection, "Madame Butterly," Puccini; selection, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; ballet music from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; selection, "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; overture, "Le Baruffe Chiozzotte," Sinigaglia; sexet from "Lucia," Donizetti; selection, "Aida," Verdi; Marcia Reale, Gabetti.

JOURNAL—FRIDAY

MAY 26, 1911

Tonight's "Pop" Music

Tonight's "Pop" program at Symphony Hall will be as follows:

Coronation March.....Meyerbeer
Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
Finale to Act 1, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
"Sous les Tilleuls".....Massenet
Solo clarinet, Mr. Mimart; solo, 'cello, Mr. J. Keller.
"Noce Villageoise".....Godard
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowsky
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
Aase's Death and Anitra's Dance from suite, "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Waltz, "Rain of Gold".....Waldteufel
March, "Boccaccio".....Suppe

TRAVELER, FRIDAY,

MAY 26, 1911.

POPS PROGRAMME TONIGHT.

The programme for tonight follows:
Coronation march.....Meyerbeer
Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Kamzak
Finale to Act I., "Lohengrin"...Wagner
Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
(a) "Sous les Tilleuls".....Massenet
Solo clarinet, Mr. Mimart; solo 'cello, J. Keller.
(b) Noce Villageoise.....Godard
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowsky
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
Aase's Death and Anitra's Dance from Suite "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
Waltz, "Rain of Gold".....Waldteufel
March, "Boccaccio".....Suppe

HERALD, FRIDAY

, MAY 26, 1911.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The program of the Pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening is as follows:

1—Coronation March.....Meyerbeer
2—Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
3—Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
4—Finale to Act 1, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
5—Selection, "Faust".....Gounod
Solo clarinet, Mr. Mimart; solo 'cello, Mr. J. Keller.
6—(a) "Sous les Tilleuls".....Massenet
(b) Noce Villageoise.....Godard
7—Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
8—Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowsky
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
9—Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
10—Aase's Death and Anitra's Dance from Suite "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
11—Waltz, "Rain of Gold".....Waldteufel
12—March, "Boccaccio".....Suppe

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,

MAY 27, 1911

Fifth Week of the Pops

Gustav Strube conducts the Pops for the last time this year on Wednesday evening and will be succeeded the following night by André Maquarre, who will conduct the concerts until the end of the season, Saturday evening, July 1. Next Monday will come the annual "Harvard Night." A big crowd is expected and the Glee Club will, of course, be present and sing during the intermissions. The principal Harvard music will be selections from "The Cantelopers," this year's Phi Eta show, and from "The Crystal Gazer," this year's Hasty Pudding play, the march "Up the Street," by Morse, and, of course, "Fair Harvard."

Mr. Maquarre, who during the Symphony season is the solo flutist of the orchestra, has conducted the Pops for the past two years with success, selecting light, tuneful French music which otherwise is seldom heard in this country. He has a list of attractive novelties which he will play during his term of four weeks and a half. On Thursday night he has a Marche Héroique by Saint-Saëns; a little piece called "The Voice of the Bells" by Luigini and a new waltz of his own entitled "Endymion." On Friday he will play for the first time a Suite Gitanilla by Lacome, and a piece for strings by D'Ambrosio called "En Badinant." The programme for Monday night is as follows:

HARVARD NIGHT

March, "Soldiers Field".....R. Fletcher, '07
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Estudiantina".....Waldteufel
Selection, "The Cantelopers".....Tweedy, '12
March, "Veritas".....Densmore
Scènes de Ballet.....Roepper, '10
Selection, "The Crystal Gazer".....
Brown, '11—Foster, '11
Cortège de Bacchus from Suite "Sylvia"...Delibes
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoschna
Fair Harvard.....Gilman, '81
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Up the Street".....Morse

HERALD, SATURDAY,

MAY 27, 1911.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The following program will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

German March.....Strube
Overture, "The Beautiful Galatea"... Suppe
Waltz, "Violets".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Ave Maria.....Schubert
'Cello, J. Keller; harp, Mr. Schuecker; organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Rigoletto".....Verdi
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.....Liszt
March, "Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar
(a) "To a Wild Rose".....MacDowell
(b) "Dalliance".....Strube
Selection, "The Arcadians".....Monckton
March, "Flag of Victory".....Blon

JOURNAL,—SATURDAY,

MAY 27, 1911.

At the "Pops" Tonight

The following program will be given at the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall this evening:

"German March".....Strube
Overture, "The Beautiful Galatea".....Suppe
Waltz, "Violets".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
"Ave Maria".....Schubert
'Cello, Mr. J. Keller; harp, Mr. Schuecker; organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Rigoletto".....Verdi
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.....Liszt
March, "Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar
"To a Wild Rose".....MacDowell
"Dalliance".....Strube
Selection, "The Arcadians".....Monckton
March, "Flag of Victory".....Blon

ADVERTISER, SATURDA

MAY 27, 1911

THE POPS.

Gustav Strube conducts the Pops for the last time this year on Wednesday and will be succeeded the following night by Andre Maquarre, who will conduct the concerts until the end of the season, which comes on Saturday evening, July 1. The great night of the week will be Monday, the annual "Harvard night." The Glee Club will, of course, be present and sing during the intermissions.

In his programmes for Tuesday and Wednesday nights Strube will present no novelties.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN-

—SUNDAY,. MAY 28, 1911.

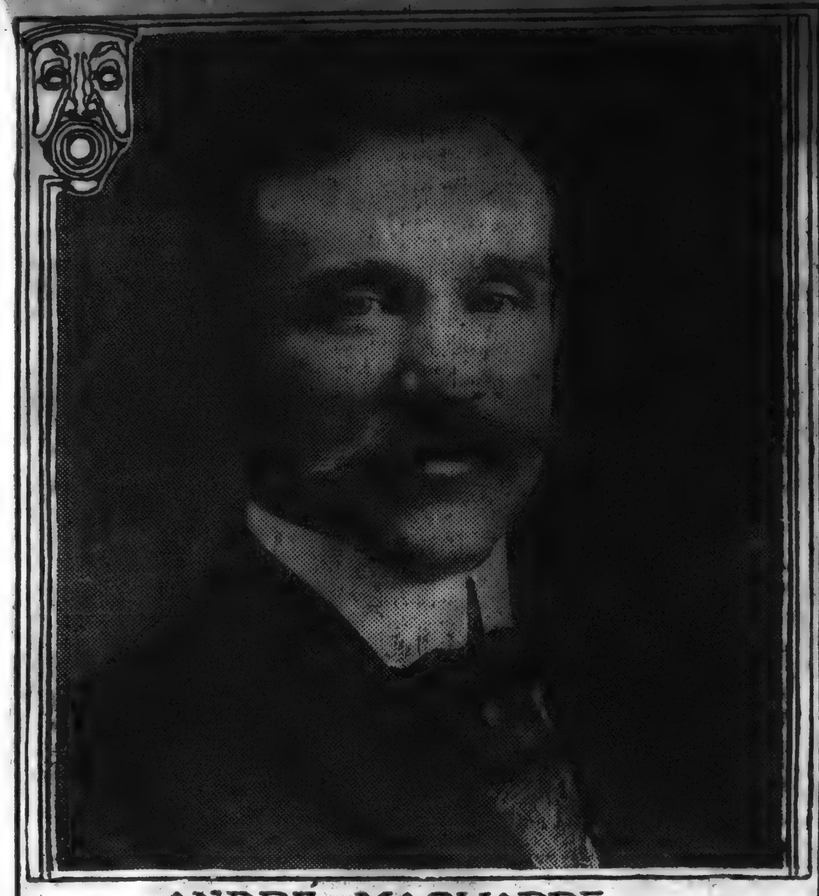
HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS.

Marks Closing Night for Strube, Who Is Followed by Maquarre.

Gustav Strube conducts the Pops for the last time this year on Wednesday evening and will be succeeded the following night by Andre Maquarre, who will conduct the concerts until the end of the season, Saturday evening, July 1. The great night of the week will be Monday, the annual "Harvard Night." A big crowd is expected. The Glee Club will sing during the intermissions. Mr. Maquarre, who during the Symphony season is the solo flutist of the orchestra, has conducted the Pops for the past two years with the greatest success.

THE SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, MAY 28, 1911

TO BE SEEN IN BOSTON THIS WEEK



ANDRÉ MAQUARRE
CONDUCTOR

FIFTH WEEK OF POPS

Gustav Strube conducts the Pops for the last time this year on Wednesday evening and will be succeeded the following night by Andre Maquarre, who will conduct the concerts until the end of the season, which comes on Saturday evening, July 1. The great night of the week will be Monday, the annual "Harvard Night." A big crowd is expected, and the Glee Club will sing during the intermissions. The principal Harvard music will be selections from "The Cantelopers," this year's Phi Eta show by Mr. Tweedy of the class of '12, and a selection from "The Crystal Gazer," this year's Hasty Pudding piece by Brown, '11, and Foster, '11; some ballet music, by Roepper, '10; the march, "Up the Street," by Morse; march, "Veritas," by Densmore, and, of course, "Fair Harvard."

In his program for Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Mr. Strube will present no novelties.

Mr. Maquarre, during the Symphony season the solo flutist of the orchestra, has conducted the Pops for the past two years with the greatest success, not the least part of which has been due to his taste in selecting light, tuneful French music, which otherwise is seldom heard in this country. He has a long list of attractive novelties, which he will play during his term of four weeks and a half. On Thursday night he has a march, "Joyeuse," by Auzende; a Marche Heroique, by Saint-Saens; a little piece, called "The Voice of the Bells," by Luigini, and a new waltz of his own, "Endymion." On Friday night he will play for the first time a Suite Gitanilla, by Lacome; an Entr'acte from Cilea's "Adrienne Lecouvreur," and a piece for strings by D'Ambrosio, "En Badinant." On Saturday evening his novelties comprise a march, "Song of Glory," by Marie; a waltz, "Frascati," by Litolff; an entr'act, from Lapara's "Habanera," which was done at the Boston Opera House this last winter, and a new selection from "Lakme." Of course, all the old favorites will appear on the program. The program for tomorrow (Monday) night is as follows:

March, "Soldier's Field".....R. Fletcher '07
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Estudiantina".....Waldteufel
Selection, "The Cantelopers".....Tweedy '12
March, "Veritas".....Densmore
Scenes de Ballet.....Roepper '10
Selection, "The Crystal Gazer."
Brown '11, Foster '11
Cortege de Bacchus from Suite "Sylvia"
Delibes
Selection, "Mme. Sherry".....Hoshna
"Fair Harvard".....Gilman '81
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Up the Street".....Morse

GLOBE—TUESDAY

, MAY 30, 1911

Symphony Hall "Pops."

Conductor Strube makes his last appearance of the season at tomorrow evening's "Pop" concert in Symphony hall, Mr Andre Maquarre taking his place the following evening. Wagner will be represented by two pieces on tonight's program, the prelude to "The Mastersingers" and the "Tannhauser" march.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,

MAY 28, 1911

Harvard Night Opens Fifth Week of "Pops"

Gustav Strube conducts the "Pops" for the last time this year on Wednesday evening and will be succeeded the following night by Andre Maquarre, who will conduct the concerts until the end of the season, which comes on Saturday evening, July 1. The great night of the week will be Monday, the annual "Harvard Night." The Glee Club will sing during the intermissions. The orchestra will play Harvard music, given in the program below.

Mr. Maquarre has a long list of attractive novelties which he will play during his term as conductor. On Thursday night he has a march, "Joyeuse," by Auzende; a "Marche Heroique," by Saint-Saens; a little piece called "The Voice of the Bells," by Luigini, and a new waltz of his own entitled "Endymion." On Friday night he will play for the first time a "Suite Gitanilla," by Lacome, one of the most capable writers of agreeable, pleasing melody that France has; an entr'acte from Cilea's opera, "Adrienne Lecouvreur," and a piece for strings by D'Ambrosio called "En Badinant." On Saturday evening his novelties comprise a march, "Song of Glory," by Marie; a waltz, "Frascati," by Litolff; an entr'acte from Laparra's opera "Habanera," and a selection from Delibes's "Lakme."

The program for Monday night is as follows:

March, "Soldiers Field".....R. Fletcher '07
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Estudiantina".....Waldteufel
Selection, "The Cantelopers".....Tweedy '12
March, "Veritas".....Densmore
"Scenes de Ballet".....Roepper '10
Selection, "The Crystal Gazer"
Brown '11—Foster '11
"Cortege de Bacchus".....Delibes
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
"Fair Harvard".....Gilman '81
Organ, Mr. Marshall
"American Fantasy".....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall
March, "Up the Street".....Morse

SUNDAY GLOBE

—MAY 28, 1911.

Maquarre This Week Begins to Conduct "Pops."

Gustav Strube conducts the "Pops" for the last time this year next Wednesday evening, and will be succeeded the following night by Andre Maquarre, who will conduct the concerts until the end of the season, Saturday evening, July 1. The great night of the week will be tomorrow, the annual "Harvard night." A big crowd is expected, and the glee club will, of course, be present and sing during the intermissions.

The principal Harvard music will be selections from "The Cantelopers," this year's "Phi Eta" show, by Mr Tweedy of the class of '12; a selection from "The Crystal Gazer," this year's "Hasty Pudding" piece, by Brown '11 and Foster '11; some ballet music by Roepper '10, the march, "Up the Street," by Morse; march, "Veritas," by Densmore, and "Fair Harvard."

Mr Maquarre, who during the Symphony season is the solo flutist of the orchestra, has conducted the "pops" for the past two years with great success, not the least part of which has been due to his taste in selecting light, tuneful French music which otherwise is seldom heard in this country.

Thursday night he has a march, "Joyeuse," by Auzende; a "Marche Heroique," by Saint-Saens; a little piece called "The Voice of the Bells," by Luigini, and a new waltz of his own, entitled "Endymion."

Friday night he will play for the first time a "Suite Gitanilla," by Lacome; an entr'act from Cilea's opera, "Adrienne Lecouvreurs" and a piece for strings by d'Ambrosio, called "En Badinant."

Saturday evening his novelties comprise a march, "Song of Glory," by Marie; a waltz, "Frascati," by Litolff; an entr'act from Lapara's opera, "Habanera," which was done at the Boston opera house this last winter, and a new selection from Delibes' opera "Lakme."

[232]

Activities Here and Abroad

Last Half of Pop Season—Wagner Autobiography—Ravel's New Opera—"Siegfried" in English—Other Items

The first half of the present Pop season in Symphony Hall, with the conclusion of Mr. Strube's month of conductorship, ends next Wednesday evening. Tomorrow night will be Harvard night, with the Glee Club, the college yells, etc., in full swing. For Tuesday and Wednesday, Mr. Strube offers no novelties.

Mr. Maquarre, who during the Symphony season is the solo flutist of the orchestra, has conducted the Pops for the past two years with much success, not the least part of which has been due to his taste in selecting light, tuneful French music, which otherwise is seldom heard in this country. He has a long list of attractive novelties which he will play during his term of four weeks and a half. For the coming week there are the march "Joyeuse," by Auzende; the "Marche Heroique," by Saint-Saens; the little piece, "The Voice of the Bells," by Luigini, and a new waltz of Mr. Maquarre's, "Endymion." On Friday will be heard for the first time the "Suite Gitanilla" by Lacome, one of the contemporaneous writers of agreeable melody that France has; the "Entr'acte" from Cilea's opera "Adrienne Lecouvreur", and the piece for strings by D'Ambrosio, "En Badinant."

On Saturday evening the novelties comprise the march, "Song of Glory," by Marie; the waltz "Frascati," by Litolff; the entr'acte from Laparra's opera "Habanera," which was done at the Boston Opera House this last winter, and a new selection from Delibes' opera, "Lakme."

Henry F. Gilbert's "Americanesque on Negro Themes," described in the Post a week ago, was performed last Wednesday evening at the Pops. The performance was inexcusably poor, but in spite of this, it was possible to perceive uncommon value in certain measures of the "Americanesque." Mr. Gilbert, in this immature work, has commenced strikingly to form an orchestral style of his own, and he has before this given conclusive evidence of an art-expression wholly original with him. In the "Americanesque" the humor is broader than in the "Comedy Overture in Negro Themes." There is a rapscallion preluding, a drunken rowdy dance, as a beginning. Then the air "Zip Coon" is handled effectively for a space. "Dearest May" is played in a sentimental, German band fashion, by the brass. There is a final section, written with breath-taking abandon and virtuosity, in which the themes previously employed are combined. The form of this composition is far less individual than that of the "Comedy Overture." The intent of the composer is rather painstakingly obvious. But leaving aside those things with which the professional reviewer and musician is particularly concerned, the fact remains that for the general music-lover, Mr. Gilbert has written a piece full of humor and swing, an alternately sentimental and festive spirit, while for the critical musician he has provided some splendid orchestration and some masterly counterpoint.

The memoirs of Richard Wagner, just published in Germany, will undoubtedly prove one of the most absorbing autobiographies in German or in any other language. Wagner was nothing if not a tremendous egoist. He let no opportunity go by of recording himself, his impressions and experiences in his lifetime either in life, literature or music. His stupendous operas are only the cogitations of that most modern and introspective of individuals, and nothing, great or small, was without value in his eyes when it affected Richard Wagner.

A foretaste of these chronicles ("Mein Leben," Bruckmann, Munich) has been furnished by Mr. Arthur Abell, the Berlin correspondent of the Musical Courier, in the issue of May 17. Wagner acquired the habit of making notes upon himself very early in life. The memoirs which have just seen the light extend to the year 1864, when Ludwig the Second became Wagner's protector, and he entered upon the last and happiest phase of his career. Wagner retells the well-known fact of his childhood; that he was not strongly attracted toward the piano and in fact never learned to play well. In his ninth year he was introduced to the composer, Carl Maria von Weber, and von Weber asked his mother if her son desired to be a musician. Mme. Wagner replied that she could discover no traits of the musician in Richard saving his wild enthusiasm over "Der Freischutz"—a reply which was diplomatic enough and also true. Little by little, however, Wagner's love for music grew. In school he secretly took lessons in harmony, meanwhile ignoring almost completely his other studies. Without having gone through the gymnasium he entered the Leipsic Conservatorium in 1831, and comenced the wildest period of his life. He was constantly quarrelling with his fellow-students, though he never could be persuaded to fight a duel. He became a desperate gambler. At last he lost in play his mother's pension, which had been intrusted to him for delivery. With his last thaler luck turned, he regained not only all he had lost, but more beside, and the scare cured him permanently of the gambling habit.

Let us read Wagner's own words: "The passion for gambling combined with the despair caused by my losses nearly drove me crazy. Everything else that had lured me to the student life now seemed of no importance; I was absolutely indifferent to the opinion of my fellow students; I no longer associated with them and met only the most corrupt in the small gambling hells of Leipsic; I even endured with indifference the contempt of my sister Rosalie, who, together with my mother, now looked upon me with utter disdain. In my growing despair I finally determined to take a last big risk and turn the tables of fortune; I was of the opinion that I could win only by playing big stakes, so I risked a large sum of money, this being my mother's pension, which had been entrusted to me. That night I lost everything to the last thaler. The excitement that mastered me as I played this, my very last coin, was wholly new to me, and I had already experienced much; although I had eaten nothing all night long, the feeling of seasickness came over me again and again. With this last thaler I risked my very life, for if it were lost, I could not think of returning to my family; I could already see myself a lost son, aimlessly wandering over the fields and through the forests. I won, but the mood of despair still gripped me. Again and again I staked my winnings, until a fair sum was before me. I continued to win and I was so careful that I could dare the boldest coups, for suddenly it occurred to me that I was now gambling for the last time in my life. My good fortune was so noticeable that the others would not continue; I had, indeed, not only regained all that I had lost that night, but enough more to pay all my debts. The glow that warmed my whole body during this procedure seemed of a holy nature; with the turn of my luck I distinctly felt that God or an angel were standing beside me whispering words of warning or consolation. At break of day I returned home and fell into a deep, long sleep, from which I awakened feeling as if I had been born anew. No sense of shame could now keep me from hurrying to my mother and confessing to her, while giving her her money, telling her the whole story, including the gambling away of her own property. She folded her hands and thanked God for His grace, declaring that I was saved and that it would be impossible for me ever to return to such vices: and, in fact, from that time onward all similar temptations have lost their power over me. The world in which I had been carousing suddenly seemed to me the most undesirable and inexplicable; the passion for gambling had already made me indifferent to all other student vanities, and with the release from this vice, I suddenly felt myself face to face with a new world which now belonged to me, and I was immediately possessed with a hitherto unknown zeal for a musical education. And a new phase of my musical developement now began—serious application."

But even in this wildest period, continues the composer, his musical development continued. He does not remember the C major overture or the piano sonata in B flat for four hands, but he does remember vividly a composition of considerably more importance in the forming of his musical style. This was an overture in B flat:

"But I have epoch-making memories of another work written at that time—an overture in B flat; this composition was the result of my studying Beethoven's ninth symphony. I developed here, in particular, the mystical atmosphere which I gave to the orchestra. This was divided into three imposing elements; it was my desire to make the characteristics of these elements at once plain to the reader of the score by an energetic play of colors, and it was only because I could not procure green ink that I did not carry out my intention. The strings were to be written in red, the woodwind in green and the brass in black."

The prelude to the "Rheingold" came to him in this manner:

"I suddenly had the sensation of sinking into swiftly flowing water. The roaring of the water soon developed into a musical sound expressed in the ever rising and falling of the arpeggio of the accord in E flat; this arpeggio continually increased in compass as a melodic figuration, but it always remained in the pure chord of E flat, and—this, by constantly increasing, seemed to give to the element into which I had sunk tremendous importance. I could feel the waves majestically falling over me—and I wakened in terror. I immediately recognized that my dream had given me the inspiration for the Vorspiel to 'Rheingold,' which I had long been seeking, but had not been able to find."

POP PROGRAMMES

MONDAY, MAY 29—HARVARD NIGHT

March, "Soldiers Field".....R. Fletcher, '07
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Estudiantina".....Waldteufel

Selection, "The Cantelopes".....Tweedy, '12
March, "Veritas".....Densmore
Scenes de Ballet.....Roepper, '10
Selection, "The Crystal Gazer".....Brown, '11—Foster, '11
Cortege de Bacchus from Suite "Sylvia".....Delibes
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoschna
Fair Harvard.....Gilman, '81
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Up the Street".....Morse
Organ, Mr. Marshall.

TUESDAY, MAY 30.

March, "Merry Soldiers".....Sabathil
Overture, "Zampa".....Herold
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana".....Mascagni
Valse Valesca.....Chase
Selection, "Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
Romance sans paroles.....Guilmant
Valse Brilliante.....Chopin
Flute Solo, Mr. Brooke.
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".....Wagner
"Finlandia".....Sibelius
March from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
"La Colombe".....Gounod
"The Little Lead-Soldiers".....Pierne
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste".....Herbert
March, "The Gladiator".....Fucick

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21.
(Farewell Appearance of Gustav Strube.)

March, "The Comet".....Strube
Overture, "The Bronze Horse".....Auber
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
Selection, "Aida".....Verdi
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Prelude to Act I., "Lohengrin".....Wagner
"Entree Triomphale des Boyards".....Halvorson
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
"Traumerei".....Schumann
Intermezzo.....Szalit
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoschna
March, "King Karl".....Unrath

THURSDAY, JUNE 1.
(First Appearance of Conductor A. Maquarre.)

March, "Joyeuse" (First time).....Auzende
Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
Waltz, "Barcarole".....Waldteufel
Selection, "La Mascotte".....Audran
Ballet Music "Sylvia".....Delibes
a. Les Chasseresses.
b. Pizzicato.
c. Cortege de Bacchus.
Meditation.....J. S. Bach—Jules Bordier
Violin, Mr. Krafft; Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Marche Heroique (First time).....Saint-Saens
Overture, "Fra Diavolo".....Auber
La Voix des Cloches (First time).....Luigini
Waltz, "Endymion" (First time).....A. Maquarre
Marche des Amoureux.....Ganne

FRIDAY, JUNE 2.

March, "En Avant".....Gungl
Overture, "La Dame Blanche".....Boieldieu
Waltz, "Fideles Wien".....Komzak
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
Suite "Gitanilla" (First time).....P. Lacome
a. Les Romani.
b. Sous Les Etoiles.
c. Sous le Soleil.
d. Valse Boheme.
Entr' acte, "Adrienne Lecouvreur" (First time).....Cilea
Selection, "Samson".....Saint-Saens
Marche Hongroise.....Berlioz
Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Scherzo, "En Badinant" (strings) (First time).....D'Ambrosio
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube".....J. Strauss
March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner

SATURDAY, JUNE 3.

March, "Chante de Gloire" (First time).....G. Marie
Overture, "Jessonda".....Spohr
Waltz, "Frascati" (First time).....H. Litolff
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....V. Herbert
Suite No. 2 "L'Arlesienne".....Bizet
Entr' acte, "Habanera" (First time).....Lapara
Selection, "Lakme" (First time).....Leo Delibes
Kermesse.....Godard
Overture, "Poet and Peasant".....Suppe
'Cello, Mr. Keller.
Les Petit Soldats de Plomb.....Pierne
Abendlied.....R. Schumann
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
March, "Merry Soldier".....Sabathil

BOSTON POST
MAY 30, 1911

HARVARD AT POP CONCERT

It was Harvard night yesterday evening at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall. The hall was packed. There were the usual sights and sounds of such occasions.

"Harvard" blazed out against the organ pipes over the stage; red banners hung over the railings of the balconies; at the tables the groups were clad in the lightest and most brilliant of summer attire. The Glee Club sat down near the stage, and was first heard when Conductor Strube raised his baton for the opening march, "Soldiers Field," by Fletcher of '07.

Tweedy, '12, himself conducted the orchestra in the performance of his catony music from "The Cantelopers." The other Harvard music, in addition to that provided by the glee club, was Densmore's famous march, "Veritas"; a prelude of Rachmaninoff, originally a piano piece, orchestrated with fair skill; "Scenes de Ballet," in modern orchestral and harmonic idoms, by Roepper, '10; "Fair Harvard" and "Up the Street," with John Marshall at the organ.

The glee club sang the Harvard football songs, "Rhine Wine," "Australia" and "Ciribiribin"; the commencement hymn, "Ave Mater"; "General Grant," the medley including "Old Folks at Home"; a very amusing skit, "The Orchestra"; "'Way Down Yonder in the Corn Field," and quartet selections, including "Susie's Pa Bought a Limou-

---

JOURNAL—TUESDAY,
MAY 30, 1911.

HARVARD PROGRAM AT THE POP CONCERT

College Men Enthusiastic When Strube Plays "Up the Street."

In spite of the intensely warm weather every table was occupied at the "Pop" concert last evening, when Harvard night brought out not only the undergraduates but several large parties of graduates, each trying to outdo the other in the enthusiastic cheering that followed each number. The program chosen by Gustav Strube abounded in compositions by Harvard men and was all that could be desired, if enthusiasm can be judged as favorable criticism. Each number by the Crimson "grads" or seniors was the signal for unlimited applause, both preceding and following the selection.

"Fair Harvard" came in for the largest share of demonstrative appreciation and sung by the hundreds of male voices, proved tremendously effective. "Up the Street," the popular gridiron march by "Bob" Morse, came in for no secondary amount of applause. Among the men at the various tables were numerous well known graduates. The crimson banners twining the balconies added greatly to the scene, while the crimson electric lettering of "Harvard" on the large organ was very effective. ssion the Glee Club iumbers, which met es, and when "Fair k up by the full orme, everybody stood ses.

Tonight's "Pop" Program

Tonight's program at the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall is as follows:

March, "Merry Soldiers".....Sabathil
Overture, "Zampa".....Herold
Selection, Cavalleria Rusticana".....Mascagni
Valse Valesca.....Chase
Selection, "Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
"Romance sans paroles".....Guilmant
"Valse Brillante".....Chopin
Flute solo, Mr. Brooke.
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".....Wagner
"Finlandia".....Sibelius
March from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
"La Colombe".....Gounod
"The Little Lead-Soldiers".....Pierne
Selection, "Mlle Modiste".....Herbert
March, "The Gladiator".....Fucick

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY,
MAY 31, 1911

Strube's Last Concert

At the "Pop" Concert at Symphony Hall tonight Conductor Gustav Strube makes his last appearance with the orchestra this season. The first number on the programme will be his popular march, "The Comet." Tomorrow evening he will be succeeded by André Maquarre, who will conduct the concerts until they close.

Tonight's programme is as follows:

March, "The Comet".....Strube
Overture, "The Bronze Horse".....Auber
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
Selection, "Aida".....Verdi
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Prelude to Act I., "Lohengrin".....Wagner
"Entré Triomphale des Boyards".....Halvorson
Overture, "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Overture, "Si j'étais Roi".....Adam
(a) "Traumerei".....Schumann
(b) Intermezzo.....Szalit
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoschna
March, "King Karl".....Unrath

Tomorrow night the programme is:

March, "Joyeuse" (first time).....Auzende
Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
Waltz, "Barcarolle".....Waldteufel
Selection, "La Mascotte".....Audran
Ballet Music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
a. Les Chasseresses.
b. Pizzicatto.
c. Cortège de Bacchus.
Méditation.....J. S. Bach—Jules Bordier
(Violin, Mr. Krafft; Organ, Mr. Marshall)
Selection, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Marche Héroique (first time).....Saint-Saëns
Overture, "Fra Diavolo".....Auber
La Voix des Cloches (first time).....Luigini
Waltz, "Endymion" (first time).....A. Maquarre
Marche des Amoureux.....Ganne

HERALD, TUESDAY,
MAY 30, 1911

HARVARD CHEER DROWNS 'POPS'

Symphony Hall Rocks with Enthusiasm of the Biggest Night on Record.

CRIMSON SIGN NAILED DOWN

University Composers Applauded with Mighty Roars of the Assembled Throng.

No one within a quarter-mile of Symphony Hall last evening could have failed to be aware that it was Harvard night at the Pops. "Harvard indifference," characteristic celebrated in song and story for lo these many years, manifested itself in cheers that made the statues tremble in their niches. It was the biggest Harvard night that ever came over from Cambridge. And, more than that, it was the biggest Pop night in Symphony Hall history.

Across the front of the organ blazed a red electric sign, "Harvard." At the end of the evening the sign still blazed. It is a difficult climb up to that organ. Anyway, the lights were screwed down. Along the outside of the railings round first and second balconies were strung rows of crimson banners which proclaimed that this was "Harvard Night, 1911."

The kindly management had not nailed the banners and they were speedily evanescent. In former years they have been visible till the first intermission. But when that period arrived only three pennants were left. Three girls peered over the railing. Three gloved hands investigated and the banners vanished forthwith.

Long before the doors were opened a crowd of 500 ticketless folk had waited on the steps for a chance to rush into the balconies. Every table on the floor was taken, and every available point of vantage round the wall wherever a chair could be placed. All the tickets were gone by Thursday of last week. And when even the rush spaces were occupied, people persisted in storming the doors in the hope that perhaps there might be a chance to enter.

Scarcely had the Harvard crowd taken its place at the tables when somebody started the Harvard cheer. Again and again the college and class yells were given. Then the orchestra was permitted to begin. The first number on the crimson-bound program was "Soldiers' Field," the march written by R. Fletcher, '07. Renewed cheering greeted the rendition. "Si j'etais Roi," by Adam came next, and then "Estudiantina," by Waldteufel; but as neither of these estimable gentlemen graduated from Harvard, the applause was less intense.

At the end of "Estudiantina," the Harvard Glee Club, seated down front near the platform, decided that it was time to interfere. So the club uprose and intoned any number of semi-cheer songs, which were approved with lung-splitting roars of delight. The roars actually increased in violence—a seemingly impossible vocal feat—when Conductor Gustav Strube handed his baton to Tweedy, '12. Tweedy, '12, wrote music for that Harvard operetta, "The Cantelopers," and he conducted the Canteloper selections played last night.

Densmore's march, "Veritas," received appropriate notice, although Densmore never went to Harvard. Some people were puzzled to know why Rachmaninoff's "Serenade" should be so enthusiastically hailed. The enthusiasm was due to the fact that the "Serenade," originally written for the piano, was orchestrated over at Harvard in one of the music classes, under the supervision of Prof. E. W. Hill. Roepper, '10, was crimsonly applauded for his "Scenes de Ballet," and the like tribute was vouchsafed Brown, '11, and Foster, '11, for "Selections from the Crystal Gazer."

"Cortege de Bacchus," "Madame Sherry" and "American Fantasy" all received their just reward. But when John P. Marshall went to the organ and with the orchestra swung into the strains of "Fair Harvard," by Gilman, '81——

And then the orchestra played "Up the Street," so every one went home whistling.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Tonight's program of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall is as follows:

1—March, "Merry Soldiers".....Sabathil
2—Overture, "Zampa".....Herold
3—Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana".....Mascagni
Valse Valesca.....Chase
4—Valse Valesca.....Leoncavallo
5—Selection, "Pagliacci".....Guilmant
6—(a) Romance sans paroles.....Chopin
(b) Valse Brillante.....
Flute solo, Mr. Brooke.
7—Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".....Wagner
8—"Finlandia".....Sibelius
9—March from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
10—(a) "La Colombe".....Gounod
(b) "The Little Lead Soldiers".....Pierne
11—Selection, "Mlle. Modiste".....Herbert
12—March, "The Gladiator".....Fucick

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1911

POPS PROGRAMME TONIGHT.

Conductor Gustav Strube makes his last appearance of the season at tonight's Pop concert in Symphony Hall. Tomorrow night he will be succeeded by Andre Maquarre, who will act as conductor through the month of June. The programme for tonight follows:

March, "The Comet".....Strube
Overture, "The Bronze Horse"....Auber
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
Selection, "Aida".....Verdi
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Prelude to Act I., "Lohengrin"..Wagner
"Entree Triomphale des Boyards"
.....Halvorson
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
(a) "Traumerei".....Schumann
(b) Intermezzo.....Szalit
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
March, "King Karl".....Unrath

HERALD, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1911

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Conductor A. Maquarre will make his first appearance at tonight's program of the Pop concert in Symphony Hall, directing the orchestra in these numbers:

March, "Joyeuse" (first time)....Auzende
Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
Waltz, "Barcarole".....Waldteufel
Selection, "La Mascotte".....Audran
Ballet Music "Sylvia".....Delibes
(a) Les Chasseresses. (b) Pizzicato. (c) Cortege de Bacchus.
Meditation.....J. S. Bach—Jules Bordier
Violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Marche Heroique (first time)..Saint-Saens
Overture, "Fra Diavolo".....Auber
La Voix des Cloches (first time)..Luigini
Waltz, "Endymion" (first time).A. Maquarre
Marche des Amoureux.....Ganne

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concert tonight marks the first appearance of Conductor A. Maquarre. The programme: March, "Joyeuse" (first time), Auzende; overture, "Mireille," Gounod; waltz, "Barcarole," Waldteufel; selection, "La Mascotte," Audran; ballet music, "Sylvia," Delibes, (a) Les Chasseresses, (b) Pizzicato, (c) Cortege de Bacchus; Meditation, J. S. Bach—Jules Bordier, violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall; selection, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Marche Heroique (first time), Saint-Saens; overture, "Fra Diavolo," Auber; La Voix des Cloches (first time), Luigini; waltz, "Endymion" (first time), A. Maquarre; Marche des Amoureux, Ganne.

RECORD, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concert tonight marks the first appearance of Conductor A. Maquarre. The programme: March, "Joyeuse" (first time), Auzende; overture, "Mireille," Gounod; waltz, "Barcarole," Waldteufel; selection, "La Mascotte," Audran; ballet music, "Sylvia," Delibes, (a) Les Chasseresses, (b) Pizzicato, (c) Cortege de Bacchus; Meditation, J. S. Bach—Jules Bordier, violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall; selection, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Marche Heroique (first time), Saint-Saens; overture, "Fra Diavolo," Auber; La Voix des Cloches (first time), Luigini; waltz, "Endymion" (first time), A. Maquarre; Marche des Amoureux, Ganne.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1911

André Maquarre will conduct the "Pop" Concert at Symphony Hall, this evening, and continue for the remainder of the season. In the well chosen programme, which has been printed here, is a waltz by the conductor that will be given for the first time. Tomorrow's programme is as follows:

March, "En Avant".....Gungl
Overture, "La Dame Blanche".....Boieldieu
Waltz, "Fideles Wien".....Komzak
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
Suite, "Gitanilla" (first time).....P. Lacome
(a) Les Romani.
(b) Sous les Etoiles.
(c) Sous le Soleil.
(d) Valse Bohème.
Entr'acte, "Adrienne Lecouvreur" (first time).....Cilea
Selection, "Samson".....Saint-Saëns
Marche Hongroise.....Berlioz
Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Scherzo, "En Badinant," strings, (first time).....D'Ambrosio
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube"..J. Strauss
March, "Under the Double Eagle"..Wagner

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1911

Maquarre to Be "Pop" Conductor Tonight

A. Maquarre will make his first appearance of the season tonight as conductor at the "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall. The program will be as follows:

March, "Joyeuse" (first time).....Auzende
Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
Waltz, "Barcarole".....Waldteufel
Selection, "La Mascotte".....Audran
Ballet Music "Sylvia".....Delibes
Meditation.....J. S. Bach—Jules Bordier
Violin, Mr. Krafft. Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Marche Heroique (first time).....Saint-Saens
Overture, "Fra Diavolo".....Auber
La Voix des Cloches (first time).....Luigini
Waltz, "Endymion" (first time)..A. Maquarre
Marche des Amoureux.....Ganne

TRAVELER, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1911

"POP" PROGRAMME TONIGHT.

Tonight's programme of the Pop concerts follows:

March, "Joyeuse" (first time)....Auzende
Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
Waltz, "Barcarole".....Waldteufel
Selection, "La Mascotte".....Audran
Ballet music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
(a) Les Chasseresses, (b) Pizzicato, (c) Cortege de Bacchus.
Meditation.....J. S. Bach-Jules Bordier
Violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Marche Heroique (first time).Saint-Saens
Overture, "Fra Diavolo".....Auber

GLOBE—THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1911

This evening Mr A. Maquarre will make his appearance as conductor of the "Pops" in Symphony hall. He will introduce three musical novelties on the program, his own "Endymion" waltz; Auzende's march, "Joyeuse," and Luiguini's "La Voix des Cloches."

GLOBE—FRIDAY, JUNE 2, 1911

MAQUARRE CONDUCTS.

First Flutist of Symphony Orchestra Succeeds Mr Strube as Conductor of the "Pops."

Andre Maquarre, the first flutist of the Symphony, last night succeeded Gustav Strube as conductor of the "Pops," and will continue at the desk during the remaining weeks of the season.

Mr Maquarre began with an interesting number of novelties for his first program. They were all heard with appreciation by an audience of large size.

There was a splendid reception accorded the "Endymion" waltz, a new composition by conductor Maquarre.

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, JUNE 2, 1911.

At the "Pops" Tonight

Tonight's "Pop" Concert program is as follows:

March, "En Avant".....Gung'l
Overture, "La Dame Blanche".....Boieldieu
Waltz, "Fideles Wien".....Komzak
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
Suite, "Gitanilla" (first time).....P. Lacome
Entr'act, "Adrienne Lecouvreur" (first time).....Cilea
Selection, "Samson".....Saint-Saens
Marche Hongroise.....Berlioz
Overture, "Mignon".....A. Thomas
Scherzo, "En Badinant" (strings), first time.....D'Ambrosio
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube".J. Strauss
March, "Under the Double Eagle"....Wagner

POST, SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1911

SECURE MEES AS CONDUCTOR

Cecilia Society Engages Celebrated Musician

A most interesting musical development of the early summer is the announcement that the Cecilia Society has engaged as its conductor for the coming season Arthur Mees of New York.

The society is planning to give during the season of 1911-1912, two concerts in Symphony Hall, one with orchestra and one a capella. Last year the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave three concerts together under the conductorship of Max Fiedler as an addition to his regular work with the Symphony Orchestra, and he was compelled regretfully to give up the idea of continuing it another year. Consequently, the Cecelia has engaged as successor to him and to Wallace Goodrich and to the late B. J. Lang, Mr. Mees, who is generally regarded as one of the best choral conductors in this country.

He was born in Columbus, Ohio, and his first appearance was as accompanist of the May Festival Chorus in Cincinnati, where Theodore Thomas introduced him to Anton Rubinstein, and on the latter's advice, Mr. Mees went to Berlin, where he studied piano with Kullak, theory with Weitzmann and conducting with Dorn.

After four years of study in Germany, he returned to Cincinnati, where he became accompanist and assistant conductor under Theodore Thomas of the May Festival Chorus of that city. For several years he was conductor of these May festivals, but he left Cincinnati for New York to accept a position as assistant conductor in the American Opera Company. Since that time he has been a resident of that city and during the past years he has been conductor of the German Liederkranz, the Beethoven Maennerchor, the Orange Mendelssohn Union, the New York Mendelssohn Glee Club and the Albany Festival Association.

During the first two years of the Chicago Orchestra, he was their assistant conductor under Thomas. In 1907 he was made conductor of the Worcester Festival, succeeding Wallace Goodrich. Mr. Mees is the author of an important book, "Choirs and Choral Music." His coming to Boston is an important event in the musical history of this country.

GLOBE—SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 191

CECILIA'S NEW CONDUCTOR

Two Concerts to Be Given Under the Direction of Arthur Mees Next Season in Symphony Hall.

The Cecilia society announces two concerts to be given next year in Symphony hall, one with orchestra and one a capella. The society, as has been announced, will be conducted by Arthur Mees.

He was born in Columbus, O. His first appearance was as accompanist of the May festival chorus in Cincinnati, where Theodore Thomas introduced him to Anton Rubinstein. On the latter's advice Mr Mees went to Berlin, where he studied piano with Kullak, theory with Weitzmann and conducting with Dorn.

After four years in Germany he returned to Cincinnati and became accompanist and assistant conductor, under Theodore Thomas, of the May festival chorus of that city and for several years was conductor of these festivals. He then left Cincinnati to come to New York to accept a position as assistant conductor in the American opera.

He has since been a resident of that city and has been conductor of the German Liederkranz, the Beethoven Naennerchor, the Orange Mendelssohn union, the New York Mendelssohn glee club and the Albany festival association. During the first two years of the Chicago orchestra he was assistant conductor under Thomas. In 1907 he was made conductor of the Worcester festival, succeeding Wallace Goodrich.

Mr Mees is the author of "Choirs and Choral Music" and has annotated the programs at various times of the Chicago and New York Philharmonic orchestras and now of the Worcester festival.

RECORD, SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1911

THE POPS.

The coming week of the "Pops" will be a very busy one. Tuesday evening brings the 14th annual "Tech" night, when there will be no accommodations for the general public.

Wednesday night the greater part of the floor will be taken by the members of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Assn., which is meeting here in convention.

Friday night Conductor Maquarre gives his annual special programme of French music. These are the particular features.

BOSTON POST, SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1911

SECURE MEES AS CONDUCTOR

Cecilia Society Engages Celebrated Musician

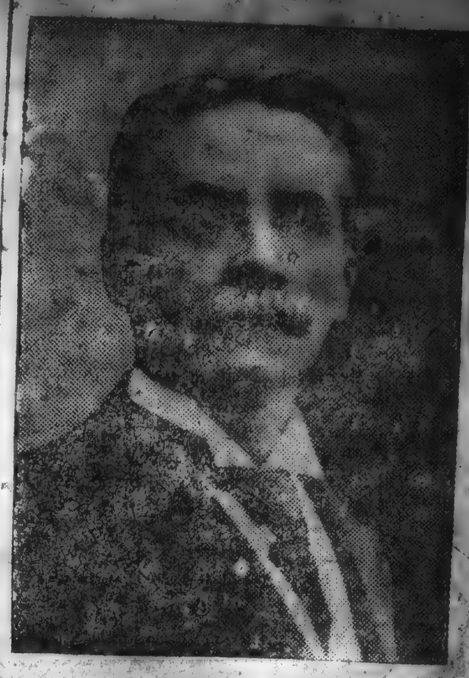
A most interesting musical development of the early summer is the announcement that the Cecilia Society has engaged as its conductor for the coming season Arthur Mees of New York.

The society is planning to give during the season of 1911-1912, two concerts in Symphony Hall, one with orchestra and one a capella. Last year the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave three concerts together under the conductorship of Max Fiedler as an addition to his regular work with the Symphony Orchestra, and he was compelled regretfully to give up the idea of continuing it another year. Consequently, the Cecelia has engaged as successor to him and to Wallace Goodrich and to the late B. J. Lang, Mr. Mees, who is generally regarded as one of the best choral conductors in this country.

He was born in Columbus, Ohio, and his first appearance was as accompanist of the May Festival Chorus in Cincinnati, where Theodore Thomas introduced him to Anton Rubinstein, and on the latter's advice, Mr. Mees went to Berlin, where he studied piano with Kullak, theory with Weitzmann and conducting with Dorn.

After four years of study in Germany, he returned to Cincinnati, where he became accompanist and assistant conductor under Theodore Thomas of the May Festival Chorus of that city. For several years he was conductor of these May festivals, but he left Cincinnati for New York to accept a position as assistant conductor in the American Opera Company. Since that time he has been a resident of that city and during the past years he has been conductor of the German Liederkranz, the Beethoven Maennerchor, the Orange Mendelssohn Union, the New York Mendelssohn Glee Club and the Albany Festival Association.

During the first two years of the Chicago Orchestra, he was their assistant conductor under Thomas. In 1907 he was made conductor of the Worcester Festival, succeeding Wallace Goodrich. Mr. Mees is the author of an important book, "Choirs and Choral Music." His coming to Boston is an important event in the musical history of this country.



DR ARTHUR MEES,
The new conductor of the Cecilia Society.
Society.

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1911

Will Lead Cecilia

Arthur Mees.

CECILIA PLANS TWO CONCERTS

Both to Be Given in Symphony Hall, One With Orchestra.

The Cecilia Society is planning to give during the season of 1911-1912 two concerts in Symphony Hall, one with orchestra. Last year the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave three concerts together, under the conductorship of Max Fiedler. But Mr. Fiedler, owing to the press of his regular work with the Symphony Orchestra, has been compelled to give up the idea of continuing this extra task another year. This explains why the Cecilia has engaged as conductor Arthur Mees of New York.

Mr. Mees was born in Columbus, O., and his first appearance was as accompanist of the May Festival chorus in Cincinnati, where Theodore Thomas introduced him to Anton Rubinstein, and, on the latter's advice, Mr. Mees went to Berlin, where he studied piano with Kullak, theory with Weitzmann and conducting with Dorn.

After four years he returned to Cincinnati, where he became accompanist and assistant conductor, under Theodore Thomas, of the May Festival Chorus of that city. He left Cincinnati to accept a position as assistant conductor in the American Opera in New York. Since that time he has been a resident of that city and during the past years he has been conductor of the German Liederkranz, the Beethoven Naennerchor, the Orange Mendelssohn Union, the New York Mendelssohn Glee Club and the Albany Festival Association. During the first two years of the Chicago Orchestra he was assistant conductor under Thomas. In 1907 he was made conductor of the Worcester Festival, succeeding Wallace Goodrich.

Mr. Mees is the author of an important book, "Choirs and Choral Music." Altogether his coming to Boston is recorded as a most important event.

[234]

HERALD, SATURDAY,
JUNE 3, 1911

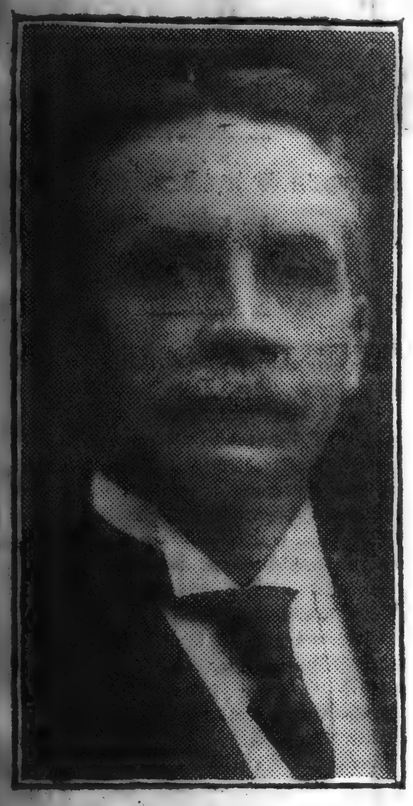
MEES TO CONDUCT CECILIA SOCIETY

Organization to Give Orchestra and Capella Concert in Symphony Hall.

Arthur Mees of New York has been engaged by the Cecilia Society as its conductor for the coming season, during which the society will give an orchestra and capella concert in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Mees, who is generally regarded as one of the best choral conductors in this country, was born in Columbus, O., and his first experience was as accompanist of the May Festival chorus in Cincinnati, where Theodore Thomas introduced him to Anton Rubinstein. On the latter's advice Mr. Mees went to Berlin, where he studied piano with Kullak, theory with Weitzmann and conducting with Dorn.

After four years of study in Germany, he returned to Cincinnati, where he became accompanist and assistant



ARTHUR MEES.
New Conductor of the Cecilia Society.

conductor under Theodore Thomas of the May Festival chorus in that city. For several years he was the conductor of these May festivals, but he left Cincinnati and went to New York to accept a position as assistant conductor in the American Opera.

Since that time he has been a resident of that city, and during the past years he has been conductor of the German Liederkranz, the Beethoven Naennerchor, the Orange Mendelssohn Union, the New York Mendelssohn Glee Club and the Albany Festival Association.

During the first two years of the Chicago orchestra, he was its assistant conductor under Thomas. In 1907 he was made conductor of the Worcester Festival, succeeding Wallace Goodrich. He is the author of an important book, "Choirs and Choral Music."

DAILY ADVERTISER
JUNE 6, 1911

TECH NIGHT AT POPS TONIGHT.

This is "Tech" night at the "Pops," and, as has always been the rule on these occasions, there will be no accommodations for the general public.

The programme is: Waltz, "Grubenlichter," Zeller; March, "Up the Street," Morse; Dear Old "M. I. T.," H. S. Wonson '07; ballet music from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; selection, "Prince of Pilsen," Luders; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; mazurka, "La Scandinave," Ganne; a Stein Song, Bullard '87; organ, Mr. Marshall; selection, "The Arcadians," Monckton; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; "Take Me Back to Tech," I. W. Litchfield '85; American Fantasy, Herbert; organ, Mr. Marshall; march, "Washington Post," Sousa.

RECORD, TUESDAY,
JUNE 6, 1911

TECH NIGHT AT POPS TONIGHT.

This is "Tech" night at the "Pops," and, as has always been the rule on these occasions, there will be no accommodations for the general public.

The programme is: Waltz, "Grubenlichter," Zeller; March, "Up the Street," Morse; Dear Old "M. I. T.," H. S. Wonson '07; ballet music from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; selection, "Prince of Pilsen," Luders; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; mazurka, "La Scandinave," Ganne; a Stein Song, Bullard '87; organ, Mr. Marshall; selection, "The Arcadians," Monckton; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; "Take Me Back to Tech," I. W. Litchfield '85; American Fantasy, Herbert; organ, Mr. Marshall; march, "Washington Post," Sousa.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
JUNE 3, 1911

CHANGES IN THE CECILIA

Next Season's Concerts of the Society with the Symphony Orchestra to Be Conducted by Mr. Arthur Mees, Known as One of the Most Distinguished Choral Conductors of This Country

A most interesting musical development of the early summer is the announcement that the Cecilia Society has engaged as its conductor for the coming season Mr. Arthur Mees of New York.

The society is planning to give during the season of 1911-1912, two concerts in Symphony Hall, one with orchestra and one a capella. Last year the Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave three concerts together under the conductorship of Mr. Max Fiedler, but the work proved to be altogether too onerous for Mr. Fiedler as an addition to his regular work with the Symphony Orchestra, and he was compelled, regretfully, to give up the idea of continuing it another year. Consequently the Cecilia has arranged as successor to him, to Mr. Wallace Goodrich and to the late B. J. Lang, Mr. Mees, who is generally regarded as one of the best choral conductors in this country.

He was born in Columbus, Ohio, and his first experience was as accompanist of the May Festival Chorus in Cincinnati, where Theodore Thomas introduced him to Anton Rubinstein. On the latter's advice, Mr. Mees went to Berlin, where he studied piano with Kullak, theory with Weitzmann and conducting with Dorn.

After four years of study in Germany he returned to Cincinnati, where he became accompanist and assistant conductor, under Theodore Thomas, of the May Festival Chorus of that city. For several years he was the conductor of these May Festivals, but he left Cincinnati to come to New York to accept a position as assistant conductor in the American Opera. Since that time he has been a resident of that city and during the past years he has been conductor of the German Liederkranz. The Beethoven Naennerchor, the Orange Mendelssohn Union, the New York Mendelssohn Glee Club and the Albany Festival Association. During the first two years of the Chicago Orchestra he was their assistant conductor under Thomas. In 1907 he was made conductor of the Worcester Festival, succeeding Wallace Goodrich. Mr. Mees is the author of an important book, "Choirs and Choral Music." Altogether his coming to Boston is recorded as a most important event.

The Pops

André Maquarre began as conductor of the "Pop" Concerts at Symphony Hall last Thursday night. He leans strongly toward the school of lighter French music and is introducing a number of new pieces that charm by their melody and daintiness.

The coming week of the "Pops" will be a very busy one. Tuesday evening brings the fourteenth annual "Tech" night, when there will be no accommodations for the general public. The Alumni Association of Technology buys the entire house, which is reserved for the students, alumni and friends of the Institute. Wednesday night the greater part of the floor will be taken by the members of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, which is meeting here in convention. On Friday night Mr. Maquarre gives his annual special programme of French music. In the near future the Chamber of Commerce will have a crowd at the concert of June 14 in honor of the Chicago visitors, while Boston College is to have a special night, June 15, and Williams College is to have its first special night on Friday evening, June 16. Harvard College has taken the hall for Wednesday night, June 28, which will be in a sense a resumption of the old Graduates Night.

The programme for tonight is as follows:

March, "Chant de Gloire" (first time)..G. Marie
Overture, "Jessonda" .....Spohr
Waltz, "Frascati" (first time).....H. Litolff
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....V. Herbert
Suite No. 2, "L'Arlésienne".....Bizet
Entr'acte "Habanera" (first time).....Laparra
Selection, "Lakmé" (first time)....Léo Delibes
Kermesse ..... Godard
Overture, "Poet and Peasant".....Suppé
'Cello, Mr. Keller
(a) Les Petits Soldats de Plomb.....Pierné
(b) Abendlied .....R. Schumann
Violin, Mr. Krafft
Waltz, "España" .....Waldteufel
March, "Merry Soldier".....Sabathil

JOURNAL--SUNDAY,
JUNE 4, 1911.

"Tech" Night a "Pop" Feature This Week

Tuesday brings the fourteenth annual "Tech" night at the "Pops." The entire house is reserved for "Tech" men. Wednesday night the greater part of the floor will be taken by the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association. Friday night Mr. Maquarre gives his annual special program of French music.

The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Grecque" (first time).....Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir".....Auber
Waltz, "Reverie".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Miss Helyett".....Audran
Suite, "La Feria".....P. Lacome
"Le Baiser d'Eunice," from "Quo Vadis" (first time).....J. Nougues
'Cello, Mr. Keller.
Selection, "Boheme".....Puccini
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Overture, "Sigurd" (first time).....Reyer
Gavotte "In the Shadows" (first time)...Finck
Waltz, "Les Blandes".....Ganne
March, "Tambour Battant".....Messager

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY
JUNE 3, 1911

ARTHUR MEES TO BE CECILIA CONDUCTOR

SOCIETY TO GIVE TWO CONCERTS NEXT SEASON

Successor to Max Fiedler Is Well Known for Work in Several Cities.

A most interesting musical development of the early summer is the announcement that the Cecilia society has engaged as its conductor for the coming season Arthur Mees of New York.

The society is planning to give during the season of 1911-1912, two concerts, in Symphony hall, one with orchestra and one a capella. Last year the Cecilia society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave three concerts together under the conductorship of Max Fiedler as an addition to his regular work with the Symphony Orchestra, but he was compelled, regretfully, to give up the idea of continuing it another year.

Consequently, the Cecilia has arranged as successor to him and to Wallace Goodrich and to the late B. J. Lang, Mr. Mees, who is generally regarded as one of the best choral conductors in this country.

He was born in Columbus, O., and his first appearance was as accompanist of the May festival chorus in Cincinnati where Theodore Thomas introduced him to Anton Rubinstein, and on the latter's advice Mr. Mees went to Berlin, where he studied piano with Kullak, theory with Weitzmann and conducting with Dorn.

After four years of study in Germany, he returned to Cincinnati, where he became accompanist and assistant conductor under Theodore Thomas, of the May festival chorus of that city. For several years he was conductor of these May festivals, but he left Cincinnati to come to New York to accept a position as assistant conductor in the American opera.

Since that time he has been a resident of that city and during the past years he has been conductor of the German Liederkranz, the Beethoven Maennerchor, the Orange Mendelssohn union, the New York Mendelssohn glee club and the Albany festival association.

During the first two years of the Chicago orchestra, he was their assistant conductor under Thomas. In 1907 he was made conductor of the Worcester festival, succeeding Wallace Goodrich.

Mr. Mees is the author of an important book, "Choirs and Choral Music." Altogether his coming to Boston is a most important event.

THE POPS.

The coming week of the "Pops" will be a very busy one. Tuesday evening brings the 14th annual "Tech" night, when there will be no accommodations for the general public.

Wednesday night the greater part of the floor will be taken by the members of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Assn., which is meeting here in convention.

Friday night Conductor Maquarre gives his annual special programme of French music. These are the particular features.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY POST, JUNE 4, 1911

THE POPS

Mr. Andre Maquarre began his term of service as conductor of the "Pop" concerts on last Thursday night. In the two years that he has held this position he has made very many friends who welcomed his return warmly. As has been his custom in the last two years, he leans strongly toward the school of lighter French music, and he is introducing a number of new pieces that charm by their melody and daintiness.

The coming week of the "Pops" will be a very busy one. Tuesday evening brings the 14th annual "Tech" night, when, as has always been the rule in the past, there will be no accommodations for the general public. The Alumni Association of Technology buys the entire house, which is reserved for the students, alumni and friends of the institution. This year's "Tech" night promises to be particularly lively, for all those connected with the institute are full of enthusiasm over the large sums of money that have come into its possession during the last few weeks.

Wednesday night the greater part of the floor will be taken by the members of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, which is meeting here in convention. Friday night Mr. Maquarre gives his annual special programme of French music. These are the particular features.

In the near future the Chamber of Commerce will have a big crowd, at the concert of June 14 in honor of the Chicago visitors. Boston College is to have a special night, June 15, and Williams College is to have its first special night on Friday, June 16. Harvard College has taken the hall for Wednesday night, June 28, which will be in sense, a resumption of the old Graduates' Night.

MONDAY, JUNE 5.

March, "Grecque" (First time).....Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir".....Auber
Waltz, "Reverie".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Miss Helyett".....Audran
Suite, "La Feria".....P. Lacome
a. Les Laureaux.
b. Sous le Balcon.
c. Au Theatre.
Le Baiser d'Eunice Opera "Quo Vadis" (First time).....J. Nougues
'Cello, Mr. Keller.
Selection, "Boheme".....Puccini
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Overture, "Sigurd" (First time).....Reyer
Gavotte, "In the Shadows" (First time)..Finck
Waltz, "Les Blandes".....Ganne
March, "Tambour Battant".....Messager

TUESDAY, JUNE 6—14th TECH NIGHT.

Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
March, "Up the Street".....Morse
Dear Old "M. I. T.".....H. S. Wonson, '07
Ballet Music from "La Gioconda"....Ponchielli
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
Mazurka, "La Scandinave".....Ganne

A Stein Song.....Bullard, '87
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "The Arcadians".....Monckton
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
"Take Me Back to Tech"....I. W. Litchfield, '85
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Washington Post".....Sousa
(All seats reserved for Students, Alumni and Friends of the Institute of Technology.)

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY,
JUNE 6, 1911

The Pops

This is "Tech" Night at the "Pops," and, as has been the rule on these occasions, there will be no accommodations for the general public. The programme follows:

Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
(a) March, "Up the Street".....Morse
(b) Dear Old "M. I. T.".....H. S. Wonson, '07
Ballet Music from "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
Mazurka, "La Scandinave".....Ganne
A Stein Song.....Bullard, '87
Organ, Mr. Marshall
Selection, "The Arcadians".....Moncton
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
"Take Me Back to Tech"..I. W. Litchfield, '85
American Fantasy .....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall
March, "Washington Post".....Sousa

The hotel men here in convention will be at Symphony Hall tomorrow night, when the following special programme will be given:

March, "Joyeuse".....Auzende
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppé
Waltz, "Les Patineurs".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoschna
Ballet Music, "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
March, "Into Action".....Payne
Dedicated to the H. M. M. B. A.
Selection, "The Girl in the Train".....Fall
Overture, "Jubilee".....Weber
Organ, Mr. Marshall
Overture, "Raymond".....Thomas
Waltz, "Solitude".....Waldteufel
American Fantasy .....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall
March, "Flag of Victory".....Rion

HERALD, BOSTON,
JUNE 4, 1911.

MAQUARRE NOW CONDUCTING POPS

Conductor Leads Strongly Toward School of Lighter French Music.

Andre Maquarre began his term of service as conductor of the "Pop" concerts last Thursday night, and straightway was received into the favor of the audience. In the two years that he has held this position he has made very many friends who welcomed his return most warmly.

As has been his custom in the last two years, he leans strongly toward the school of lighter French music, and he is introducing a number of new pieces that charm by their melody and daintiness.

The coming week of the "Pops" will be a very busy one. Tuesday evening brings the 14th annual "Tech" night, when, as has always been the rule in the past, there will be no accommodations for the general public. The Alumni Association of Technology buys the entire house, which is reserved for the students, alumni and friends of the institution.

This year's "Tech" night promises to be particularly lively for all those connected with the institute are full of enthusiasm over the large sums of money that have come into its possession during the last few weeks.

Wednesday night the greater part of the floor will be taken by the members of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, which is meeting here in convention. Friday night Mr. Maquarre gives his annual special program of French music. These are the particular features.

In the near future the chamber of commerce will have a big crowd at the concert of June 14 in honor of the Chicago visitors. Boston College is to have a special night, June 15, and Williams College is to have its first special night on Friday evening, June 16. Harvard College has taken the hall for Wednesday night, June 28, which will be in a sense, a resumption of the old graduates' night.

The program for tomorrow night is as follows.

March, "Grecque" (first time).....Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir".....Auber
Waltz, "Reverie".....Auber
Selection, "Miss Helyett".....Waldteufel
Suite, "La Feria".....Audran
(a) Les Laureaux, (b) Sous le Balcon, (c) Au Theatre.
Le Baiser d'Eunice Opera "Quo Vadis" (first time).....J. Nougues
'Cello, Mr. Keller.
Selection, "Boheme".....Puccini
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Overture, "Sigurd" (first time).....Reyer
Gavotte, "In the Shadows" (first time).....Finck
Waltz, "Les Blandes".....Ganne
March, "Tambour Battant".....Massager

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

A New Conductor For the Cecilia.

Notable List of Novelties Given by the Society.

Berlin's Musical Grudge—The "Pops"—Notes.

The election of Arthur Mees as conductor of the Cecilia for the ensuing year is the beginning and the end of a chapter in the history of the society. Friends of the chorus have been aware that a change from the alliance of the past year was imminent.

Mr Mees, by reason of his experience as assistant conductor to Theodore Thomas in the American opera company and the Cincinnati festivals, and later as director of various festival societies in New York, Albany and Worcester, should prove an able and efficient drill master. The matter of present importance is that the Cecilia society is to continue its career, and it is hoped to maintain its policy of bringing out the newer works of the day for mixed voices.

The fact is indisputable that the greater public exists and will doubtless continue to exist for the established choral works for the oratorios. That is reasonable and all as it should be, but it will be a lamentable day should it ever come when, for the lack of a public or for the lack of a conductor of tact, magnetism, devotion and musicianship, there will cease to flourish in the city of Boston a choral organization composed of skilled and intelligent singers, who make it their business to seek out and present the modern choral works of largest promise as they appear.

This policy has made the programs of the Cecilia unique and invaluable in the musical development of the city. The records of the long period of years under Mr Lang's conductorship bear constant evidence to the catholicity of taste of both conductor and of the membership which collaborated with him.

Important Novelties.

They comprise a list of the works which have marked the vanguard of the moderns in choral literature. It is to this society that a first hearing in Boston is due of Liszt's "St Elisabeth," Dvorak's "The Spectre Bride," Berlioz' requiem mass, Brahms' "Requiem," Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah," chorus-music from "Parsifal," Coleridge-Taylor's triology, "Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha," Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius," Pierne's "Children's Crusade," Wolf Ferrari's "The New Life" (under Mr Goodrich), and, under Mr Fiedler, Bantock's "Omar Khayyam," a work of unquestionable interest.

The society has also given the first complete performance in Boston of Bach's B minor mass, with the high trumpets and the oboi d'amor for which Bach wrote.

There have been performed for the first time in America Schumann's "Faust," Massenet's "The Promised Land," Charpentier's "Life of the Poet" and the "Taillefer" of Richard Strauss, while first performances anywhere were given of Georg Henschel's requiem, written in memory of his wife, and of Prof Paine's opera, "Azara" (in concert).

There have been two visiting conductors of note. Dvorak conducted a performance of his Requiem at a concert in the so-called "wage-earners'" series, Nov 30, 1892, and Edouard Colonne, the eminent French conductor, appeared once, Monday evening, Dec 12, 1904, at a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust." He left for New York the same night to attend a rehearsal there on Tuesday morning. He was to have returned to Boston for the second performance that night, but a heavy snowfall delayed trains, preventing his arrival. Mr Lang conducted.

This same work marked an important event in the history of the society when it was performed Dec 1, 1903, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the death of Berlioz. Mme Melba and Mr Gilibert both appeared. At a repetition the following night Anita Rio sang Marguerite music, Mr Gilibert retaining the part of Mephistopheles.

Theodore Thomas a Rival.

The society has usually been sucessful in offering novelties which have been announced. There was perhaps one exception, Berlioz' dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet" was considered for the last concert in the season of 1880-81. Theodore Thomas announced a performance of it for May 16 of that year with his orchestra, and a chorus of 300 prepared by J. B. Sharland. The Cecilia, not caring to match its orchestra with that of Mr Thomas, particularly in the three movements for orchestra alone, withdrew the announcement. Mr Thomas was also unable to give his concert. He did, however, give the work the following October, the 14th and 15th, for the first time in Boston. His soloists were Mrs F. P. Whitney, Jules Jordan and Georg Henschel.

After a season in which the Cecilia society has been in alliance with the Boston Symphony orchestra, it is of interest to recall that the chorus was first assembled in the season of 1874-1875 at the invitation of a committee of the Harvard musical association to furnish the vocal complement for certain numbers on their programs.

After taking part in four of the symphony concerts of the association in that season and three in the next, the members of the chorus called a meeting and reasoned among themselves, concluding as follows: (1) that the orchestra was too big for the chorus, (2) that the men could not leave their business to sing at afternoon concerts, (3) that the stage upon which they sang was too crowded with a chorus and (4) that the dual concerts had not drawn enough money to pay for the additional cost. As to whether or not the Harvard musical association did deliberated and concurred upon the last point the record does not state.

Special Nights Frequent This Month at the "Pops."

Mr André Maquarre began his term of service as conductor of the "Pop" concerts on last Thursday night, and straightway was received into the favor of the audience. As has been his custom in the last two years he leans strongly toward the school of lighter French music.

The coming week of the "pops" will be a busy one. Tuesday evening brings the 14th annual "Tech" night, when, as has always been the rule in the past, there will be no accommodations for the general public. The Alumni association of Technology buys the entire house, which is reserved for the students, alumni and friends of the institution.

This year's "Tech" night promises to be particularly lively, for all those connected with the institute are full of enthusiasm over the large sums of money that have come into its possession during the last few weeks.

Wednesday night the greater part of the floor will be taken by the members of the Hotel Men's mutual benefit association, and Friday night Mr Maquarre gives his annual special program of French music.

In the near future the chamber of commerce will have a big crowd at the concert June 14 in honor of the Chicago visitors. Boston college is to have a special night, June 15; Williams college is to have its first special night Friday evening, June 16; Harvard college has taken the hall for Wednesday night, June 28, which will be, in a sense, a resumption of the old graduates night.

HERALD, TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1911

TECH NIGHT AT THE POPS

This is Tech night at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall, and, as has always been the rule on these occasions, there will be no accommodations for the general public. The programme:

1—Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
2—(a) March, "Up the Street".....Morse
(b) Dear Old "M. I. T."..H. S. Wonson '07
3—Ballet music from "La Gioconda"....Ponchielli
4—Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
5—Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
6—Mazurka, "La Scandinave".....Ganne
7—A Stein Song.....Bullard '87
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
8—Selection, "The Arcadians".....Monckton
9—Selection, "Naughty Marietta"....Herbert
10—"Take Me Back to Tech"..... I. W. Litchfield '85
11—American Fantasy:.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
12—March, "Washington Post".....Sousa

JOURNAL—TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1911

"Tech" at the "Pops"

This is "Tech" night at the "Pops" and, as has always been the rule on these occasions, the hall will be reserved exclusively for "Tech" men and their friends. The program is as follows:

Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
(a) March, "Up the Street".....Morse
(b) Dear Old "M. I. T."....H. S. Wonson '07
Ballet music from "La Gioconda"..Ponchielli
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen".....Luders
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
Mazurka "La Scandinave".....Ganne
A Stein Song.....Bullard '87
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "The Arcadians".....Monckton
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
"Take Me Back to Tech"..I. W. Litchfield '85
American fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Washington Post".....Sousa

GLOBE—TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 191

"Tech" Night at the "Pops."

This is "Tech" night at the "Pops," and, as has always been the rule on these occasions, there will be no accomodations for the general public. All seats being reserved for students, alumni and others specially interested in the institute.

The program of music will be as follows: Waltz, "Grubenlichter," Zeller; march, "Up the Street," Morse; "Dear Old M. I. T.," H. S. Wonson '07; ballet music from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; selection, "Prince of Pilsen," Luders; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; mazurka "La Scandinave," Ganne; "A Stein Song," Bullard '87; selection, "The Arcadians," Monckton; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; "Take Me Back to Tech," I. W. Litchfield '85; "American Fantasy," Herbert; march, "Washington Post," Sousa.

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7, 1911.

TECH NIGHT AT POPS.

Cheering and Merriment by 2000 Institute Men—Gifts to Conductor Marquarre and F. H. Hunter.

More than 1100 Technology alumni crowded upon the floor of Symphony hall last evening at the annual M. I. T. night at the Pops. Technology men were out 2000 strong.

The class of 1902 was first on the floor, marching from the banquet at Copley-sq hotel. The alumni were led by Dr Arthur A. Noyes, president of the association, accompanied by Pres Maclaurin. Then came the class of 1911, lead by Pres Donald R. Stevens of Brookline and Marshals Theodore B. Parker, Orville B. Denison and William C. Salisbury.

The alumni banner was presented to Pres Stevens by Dr Noyes amid cheers. Thousands of paper streamers were hurled from the balconies.

The enthusiasm reached the climax when the orchestra played the Technology "Stein Song."

Conductor Maquarre was presented several bottles of wine by the class of 1903. A silver loving cup was given to Frederick H. Hunter '02, secretary of the class.

JUNE 7, 191

Tonight's "Pop" Program

At the "Pops" tonight the following special program will be given in honor of the hotel men in convention here:

March, "Joyeuse".....Auzende
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
Waltz, "Les Patineurs".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoschna
Ballet Music "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
March, "Into Action".....Payne
(Dedicated to the H. M. M. B. A.)
Selection, "The Girl in the Train".....Fall
Overture, "Jubilee".....Weber
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Overture, "Raymond".....Thomas
Waltz, "Solitude".....Waldteufel
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Flag of Victory".....Blon

BOSTON HERALD, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7, 19

HOTEL NIGHT AT THE POPS

The hotel men here in convention will hold revel at the Pops in Symphony Hall tonight, when a special program is to be given in their honor. It is as follows:

March, "Joyeuse".....Auzende
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
Waltz, "Les Patineurs".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
Ballet music, "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
March "Into Action".....Payne
(Dedicated to the H. M. M. B. A.)
Selection, "The Girl in the Train".....Fall
Overture, "Jubilee".....Weber
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Overture, "Raymond".....Thomas
Waltz, "Solitude".....Waldteufel
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Flag of Victory".....Blon

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1911

French Music at the Pops

Tonight Mr. Maquarre gives a special programme of French music at the "Pop" Concert at Symphony Hall, which is as follows:

March, "Burlesque" (first time).....Gillet
Overture, "La Sirène' (first time).....Auber
Waltz, "Arc en Ciel".....Waldteufel
Selection, "La Fille du Tambour Major"..
Offenbach
First Suite (first time).....Guiraud
Au Claire de Lune.....A. Maquarre
Violin, Mr. Krafft; Organ, Mr. Marshall
Selection, "Manon".....Massenet
Danse Macabre.....Saint-Saëns
Violin, Mr. Krafft
Overture, "Sigurd".....Reyer
Le Baiser d'Eunice (from "Quo Vadis)...Nouguès
'Cello Solo, Mr. Keller
Valse des Blondes.....Ganne
March, "Tahbour Battant".....Messager

The programme for the "Pops" tomorrow night is:

March, "Chant de Gloire".....Marie
Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
Waltz, "Dornroeschen".....Tschaikowsky
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana".....Mascagni
Suite, "Scènes Pittoresques".....Massenet
(a) March, (b) Air de Ballet, (c) Angelus,
(d) Fete Bohème
Legende (first time).....Carl Stix
Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
Rustic Dance (from "Rustic Wedding"
Symphony.....Goldmark
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Suite Indienne (for strings).....A. Maquarre
(a) Indian March, (b) Minnehaha Reverie,
(c) Snake Dance
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
Salve Imperator (first time).....Fucik

GLOBE—THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1911.

HOTEL MEN AT "POPS."

March, "Into Action," With Thrilling War Flavor, Written by Brookline Man, Heartily Applauded.

Symphony hall was the mecca for all the hotel men in Boston last evening, the entire floor at the pops being reserved for the members of the Hotel Men's mutual benefit association.

The members of the association, their wives, families and guests, including the members of the Luncheon club of Boston, were present.

The hall was decorated with a large number of banners inscribed with the letters, "H. M. M. B. A.," hung at frequent intervals about the railings of the balconies, while the same letters blazed in purple and white electric lights in a prominent position directly in front of the great organ.

The march, "Into Action," written by A. W. Payne of the hotel Beaconsfield, Brookline, and dedicated to the Hotel men's mutual benefit association, was received with the greatest enthusiasm, the applause of the large audience forcing the composer to appear upon the platform to bow his acknowledgments. The march, which opens with a volley of musketry and the booming of cannon, seemed to win the approval of the audience from the opening strains.

While the hotel men and their guests filled practically the entire floor of the hall, the two balconies were open to the general public, and a tremendous crowd assembled to witness the informal merrymaking of the members of the association. During the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" the entire audience arose and remained standing until the close of the number.

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1911

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Tonight Mr. Maquarre will give a special program of French music at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall, as follows:

March, "Burlesque" (first time).....Gillet
Overture, "La Sirene" (first time).....Auber
Waltz, "Arc en Ciel".....Waldteufel
Selection, "La Fille du Tambour Major,"
Offenbach
First Suite (first time).....Guiraud
"Au Claire de Lune".....A. Maquarre
Violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Manon".....Massenet
Danse Macabre.....Saint-Saens
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Overture, "Sigurd".....Reyer
Le Baiser d'Eunice (from "Quo Vadis")
Nougues
'Cello solo, Mr. Keller.
Valse des Blondes.....Ganne
March, "Tambour Battant".....Messager

[236]

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1911.

POP CONCERT.

Tonight Mr. Maquarre gives a special programme of French music at the "Pop" concert, which is: March, "Burlesque" (first time), Gillet; overture, "La Sirene" (first time), Auber; waltz, "Arc en Ciel," Waldteufel; selection, "La Fille du Tambour Major," Offenbach; First Suite (first time), Guiraud; Au Claire de Lune, A. Maquarre (violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall); selection, "Manon," Massenet; Danse Macabre, Saint-Saens, violin, Mr. Krafft; overture, "Sigurd," Reyer; Le Baiser d'Eunice (from "Quo Vadis"), Nougues; 'cello solo, Mr. Keller; Valse des Blondes, Ganne; march "Tambour Battant," Messager.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1911.

French "Pop" Music

Tonight Mr. Maquarre gives the following special program of French music at the "Pop" concert:

March, "Burlesque" (First time).....Gillet
Overture, "La Sirene" (First time).....Auber
Waltz, "Arc en Ciel".....Waldteufel
Selection, "La Fille-du Tambour Major,"
Offenbach
First Suite (First time).....Guiraud
Au Claire de Lune.....A. Maquarre
Violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Manon".....Massenet
Danse Macabre.....Saint-Saens
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Overture, "Sigurd".....Reyer
Le Baiser d'Eunice (from "Quo Vadis"),
Nougues
'Cello solo, Mr. Keller.
Valse des Blondes.....Ganne
March, "Tambour Battant".....Messager

TRAVELER, FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1911.

POPS PROGRAMME TONIGHT.

The programme for the Pops tonight is as follows:

March, "Chant de Gloire".....Marie
Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"..... Tschaikowsky
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"
.....Mascagni
Suite, "Scenes Pittoresques"...Massenet
(a) march, (b) air de ballet, (c) Angelus,
(d) Fete Boheme.
Legende (first time).....Carl Stix
Rustic dance (from "Rustic Wedding" symphony).....Goldmark
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Suite Indienne (for strings).. A. Maquarre
(a) Indian march, (b) Minnehaha reverie
(c) Snake dance.
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
Salve Imperator (first time).....Fucik

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1911

Tonight at the "Pops"

The program for the "Pops" tonight is as follows:

March, "Chant de Gloire".....Marie
Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
Waltz, "Dornroeschen".....Tschaikowsky
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana".....Mascagni
Suite, "Scenes Pittoresques".....Massenet
(a) March, (b) Air de Ballet, (c) Angelus.
(d) Fete Boheme.
Legende (first time).....Carl Stix
Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
Rustic dance (from "Rustic Wedding" symphony).....Goldmark
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Suite Indienne (for strings).....A. Maquarre
(a) Indian march, (b) Minnehaha reverie
(c) Snake dance.
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
"Salve Imperator" (first time).....Fucik

HERALD, JUNE 9, 1911

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The program for the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight is as follows:

1—March, "Chant de Gloire".....Marie
2—Overture, "Mireille".....Gounod
3—Waltz, "Dornroeschen".....Tschaikowsky
4—Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"....
Mascagni
5—Suite, "Scenes Pittoresques"....Massenet
(a) March, (b) Air de Ballet, (c) Angelus. (d) Fete Boheme.
6—Legende (first time).....Carl Stix
7—Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
8—Rustic Dance (from "Rustic Wedding" Symphony).....Goldmark
9—Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
10—Suite Indienne (for strings).. A. Maquarre
(a) Indian March, (b) Minnehaha Reverie, (c) Snake Dance.
11—Waltz, Vienna Blood".....Strauss
12—Salve Imperator (first time).....Fucik

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 191

THE POPS.

Next week at the "Pops" will be the busiest of the year. There are a number of special nights.

Monday night will be dedicated particularly to the Veterans' Association of the First Corps of Cadets. For Tuesday night Maquarre has prepared a programme that is devoted largely to American composers, and an additional novelty will be given it by two organ solos by John P. Marshall. Wednesday night brings as the chief guests the visiting members of the Chicago Association of Commerce. Boston college will have its first night at the "Pops" on Thursday. On Friday half of the floor will be taken by students and alumni of Williams college, who are in town for the Williams-Harvard ball game the next day.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1911

Sixth Week of the Pops

Next week, the sixth of the "Pops," will be the busiest of the year as there are a number of special nights. Monday night will be dedicated particularly to the Veterans' Association of the First Corps of Cadets, and the veterans will come to Symphony Hall in a body after their annual dinner. A feature of the programme for that evening will be excerpts from the three most successful Cadet plays, "1492," "Jack and the Beanstalk," and "Boodle & Co." For Tuesday night Mr. Maquarre has a programme that is devoted largely to American composers, and an additional novelty will be given it by two organ solos by Mr. John P. Marshall. Wednesday night brings as the chief guests the visiting members of the Chicago Association of Commerce, and on June 15 Boston College will have its first night at the "Pops." On Friday half of the floor will be taken by students and alumni of Williams College who are in town for the Williams-Harvard ball game the next day. This is the first night Williams College has had here.

The programme for tonight is as follows:

March, "King's Hussars" (first time)...Leonard
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi"...Adam
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"...Zeller
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen"...Luders
Ballet music from "Coppelia"...Delibes
Intermezzo Waltz...C. Stix
Selection, "Aida"...Verdi
Invitation to the Dance...Weber
Overture, "William Tell"...Rossini
'Cello, Mr. Keller.
Abendlied...Schumann
Violin, Mr. Kraft.
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
March, "Flag of Victory"...Bion

HERALD, SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1911.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The program for the Pop concert in Symphony Hall is as follows:

March, "King's Hussars" (first time) Leonard
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi"...Adam
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"...Zeller
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen"...Luders
Ballet Music from "Coppelia"...Delibes
Intermezzo Waltz...C. Stix
Selection, "Aida"...Verdi
Invitation to the Dance...Weber
Overture, "William Tell"...Rossini
'Cello, Mr. Keller.
Abendlied...Schumann
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
March, "Flag of Victory"...Bion

RECORD, SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1911

THE POPS.

Next week at the "Pops" will be the busiest of the year. There are a number of special nights.

Monday night will be dedicated particularly to the Veterans' Association of the First Corps of Cadets. For Tuesday night Maquarre has prepared a programme that is devoted largely to American composers, and an additional novelty will be given it by two organ solos by John P. Marshall. Wednesday night brings as the chief guests the visiting members of the Chicago Association of Commerce. Boston college will have its first night at the "Pops" on Thursday. On Friday half of the floor will be taken by students and alumni of Williams college, who are in town for the Williams-Harvard ball game the next day.

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1911

Tonight's "Pop" Music

The "Pop" program this evening is as follows:

March, "King's Hussars" (first time)...Leonard
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi"...Adam
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"...Zeller
Selection, "Prince of Pilsen"...Luders
Ballet Music from "Coppelia"...Delibes
Intermezzo Waltz...C. Stix
Selection, "Aida"...Verdi
"Invitation to the Dance"...Weber
Overture, "William Tell"...Rossini
'Cello, Mr. Keller.
Abendlied...Schumann
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
March, "Flag of Victory"...Bion

SUNDAY POST, JUNE 11, 1911

THE POPS

Next week, the sixth of the current season of Pops, will be the busiest of the year.

Monday night will be dedicated particularly to the Veteran's Association of the First Corps of Cadets. The veterans will come to Symphony Hall in a body after their annual dinner, and there will will be a large number of active members present with their friends. A feature of the programme for that evening will be excerpts from the three most successful Cadet plays—"1492," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Boodle & Co."

For Tuesday night Mr. Maquarre has prepared a programme that is devoted largely to American composers, and an additional novelty will be given it by two organ solos by Mr. John M. Marshall. The first is a nocturne by Arthur Foote and the other is a toccata by MacMasters.

Wednesday night brings as the chief guests, the visiting members of the Chicago Association of Commerce, who are being entertained at that time here by the Boston Chamber of Commerce. This evening at the Pops is one of the various functions prepared by the Boston men in return for the courtesies received by them in Chicago a year ago.

Boston College will have its first night at the Pops on Thursday evening, June 15. A particularly attractive programme has been arranged, his Honor the Mayor wil be present, and possibly may be persuaded to act as a soloist during the evening. It is expected there will be a a large turnout of alumni and students of Boston College.

On Friday night half of the floor will be taken by students and alumni of Williams College who are in town for the Williams-Harvard ball game the next day. This is the first night Williams College has had here, and in view of the great success of the Amherst Nights, it is expected that Williams will seek to equal its rival.

MONDAY, JUNE 12.

March, "Up the Street"...Morse
Overture, "Robespierre"...Litolff
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
Selection, "Jack and the Beanstalk"...Sloane
Overture, "Raymond"...Thomas
Selection, "Boodle & Co."...Densmore
Little Toy Soldiers...Pierne
Valse Militaire...Ganne
Selection, "1492"...Pfueger
American Fantasy...Herbert
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
March, "Second Connecticut"...Reeves

TUESDAY, JUNE 13.
(American Night.)

March, "Up the Street"...Morse
Overture, "Jean de Paris"...Boieldieu
aSwing Song...Ethel Barnes
bRemembrance...H. Carmichael
Selection, "Naughty Marietta"...Herbert
Suite No. 2...MacDowell
Organ solos:
aNocturne...Foote
bToccata...MacMasters
(Soloist, Mr. Marshall.)
Three American Dances (first time)...Gilbert
Overture, "1812"...Tschaikowsky
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
A Vagrom Ballad...Chadwick
Selection, "Madame Sherry"...Hoshna
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
March, "Stars and Stripes"...Sousa

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14.
Chicago Association of Commerce.

March, "Tambour Battant"...Messager
Selection, "Naughty Marietta"...Herbert
Waltz, "Estudiantina"...Waldteufel
March, "The Aviator" (first time)...Merrill
Selection, "Madame Sherry"...Hoshna
aHail, Chicago
bThe Song of Chicago
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"...Mascagni
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
American Fantasy...Herbert
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
aExcelsior, Chicago
bAs We Go Marching On
Czarina Mazurka...Ganne
March, "Le Pere, la Victoire"...Ganne

THURSDAY, JUNE 15,
Boston College Night.

March, "Tambour Battant"...Messager
Selection, "Madame Sherry"...Hoshna
Reve Angelique...Rubinstein
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
Selection, "Pagliacci"...Leoncavallo
Overture, "William Tell"...Rossini
Here's to Alma Mater...Whaleu, B. C. '06
The Shamrock...Myddleton
The Ride of the Valkyries...Wagner
Selection, "Lucia di Lammermoor"...Donizetti
Maroon and Gold...Meagher, S. J., B. C.
American Fantasy...Herbert
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
March, "Stars and Stripes"...Sousa

FRIDAY, JUNE 16.
Williams College Night.

March, "Under the Double Eagle,"...Wagner
Overture, "Ligth Cavalry"...Suppe
a."Alma Mater"...Marvin, '01
b. "Come Fill Your Glass"...Patterson, '96
Selection, "The Arcadians"...Monckton
Overture, "Mignon"...Thomas
a. "Rise Up"...Hepburn, '00—Kent '63
b. "Ephraim Williams"...Taylor, '99
Largo...Handel
(Violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall.)
Rackoczy March"...Berlioz

Selection, "Madame Sherry"...Hoshna
a. "'Neath the Shadows of the Hills"...
b. "Royal Purple"...Banks, '90
"American Fantasy"...Herbert
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
March, "Washington Post"...Sousa

POST, TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1911

AMERICAN NIGHT AT POP CONCERT

The sixth week of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall opened last night. The music ranged from Litolff's fiery overture, "Robespierre," to Herbert's "American Fantasy," including selections from Sloane's "Jack and the Beanstalk," the overture to "Raymond," of Thomas, selections from Densmore's "Boodle and Company," Gannes' "Valse Militaire," and Pfueger's music, "1492." Mr. Maquarre was as fortunate as usual in interpreting this music. The programme for this evening will be one of uncommon interest, for it will be "American Night" at the Pops, and compositions by American composers, almost all of them living, will be played—in some cases for the first time.

TRANSCRIPT, SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1911

SIXTH WEEK OF "POPS."

Next week, the sixth of the current season of "Pops," will be the busiest of the year. There are a number of special nights, at each of which large crowds are expected.

Monday night will be dedicated particularly to the Veterans' Association of the 1st corps of Cadets. The veterans will come to Symphony Hall in a body after their annual dinner, and there will be a large number of active members present with their friends. A feature of the program for that evening will be excerpts from the three most successful Cadet plays—"1492," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Boodle & Co."

For Tuesday night Mr. Maquarre has prepared a program that is devoted largely to American composers, and an additional novelty will be given it by two organ solos by Mr. John P. Marshall. The first is a nocturne by Arthur Foote and the other is a Toccata by MacMasters.

Wednesday night brings as the chief guests the visiting members of the Chicago Association of Commerce, who are being entertained at that time here by the Boston Chamber of Commerce. This evening at the "Pops" is one of the various functions prepared by the Boston men in return for the courtesies received by them in Chicago a year ago.

Boston College will have its first night at the "Pops" on Thursday evening, June 15. A particularly attractive program has been arranged, the mayor will be present, and, possibly, may be persuaded to act as a soloist during the evening. It is expected there will be a large turnout of alumni and students of Boston College.

On Friday night half of the floor will be taken by students and alumni of Williams College, who are in town for the Williams-Harvard ball game the next day. This is the first night Williams College has had here, and in view of the great success of the Amherst nights, it is expected that Williams will seek to equal its rival.

The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Up the Street"...Morse
Overture, "Robespierre"...Litolff
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
Selection, "Jack and the Beanstalk"...Sloane
Overture, "Raymond"...Thomas
Selection, "Boodle & Co."...Densmore
Little Toy Soldiers...Pierne
Overture, "1812"...Tschaikowsky
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Valse Militaire...Ganne
Selection, "1492"...Pfueger
American Fantasy...Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Second Connecticut"...Reeves

SUNDAY GLOBE—JUNE 11, 1911.

Special Nights This Week at the Summer "Pops."

This week at the "Pops" will be the busiest of the year, for there are a number of special nights, at each of which crowds are expected. Monday night will be dedicated particularly to the Veterans' association of the 1st corps of cadets. The veterans will come to Symphony hall in a body after their annual dinner, and there will be a large number of active members present with their friends.

A feature of the program that evening will be excerpts from the three most successful cadet plays, "1492," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Boodle & Co."

For Tuesday night Mr Maquarre has prepared a program that is devoted largely to American composers, and an additional novelty will be given it by two organ solos by Mr John P. Marshall. The first is a nocturne by Arthur Foote and the other is a toccata by MacMasters.

Wednesday night brings as the chief guests the visiting members of the Chicago association of commerce, who are being entertained at that time here by the Boston chamber of commerce. This evening at the "Pops" is one of the various functions prepared by the Boston men in return for the courtesies received by them in Chicago a year ago.

Boston college will have its first night at the "Pops" Thursday evening, June 15. A particularly attractive program has been arranged, his honor the mayor will be present, and possibly may be persuaded to act as a soloist during the evening. It is expected there will be a large turn out of alumni and students of Boston college.

Friday night half of the floor will be taken by students and alumni of Williams college who are in town for the Williams-Harvard ball game the next day. This is the first night Williams college has had here.

TRAVELER, TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1911.

"POP" PROGRAMMES.

Tonight will bring a special American programme at the Pop concerts, at which some interesting things will be heard. A feature will be two organ solos by Mr. John P. Marshall, the official organist of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The programme follows:

March, "Up the Street"...Morse
Overture, "Jean de Paris"...Boieldieu
(a) Swing Song...Ethel Barnes
(b) Remembrance...H. Carmichael
Selection, "Naughty Marietta"...Herbert
Suite No. 2...MacDowell
Organ solos—
(a) Nocturne...Foote
(b) Toccata...MacMasters
Soloist, Mr. Marshall.
Three American Dances (first time)
...Gilbert
Overture, "1812"...Tschaikowsky
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
A Vagrom Ballad...Chadwick
Selection, "Madame Sherry"...Hoshna
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
March, "Stars and Stripes"...Sousa

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1911

Special Nights for This Week's "Pops"

Monday night at the "Pops" will be dedicated to the Veteran's Association of the First Corps of Cadets. A feature of the program will be excerpts from the three most successful Cadet plays—"1492," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Boodle & Co."

For Tuesday night Mr. Maquarre has prepared a program that is devoted largely to American composers, and an additional novelty will be given it by two organ solos by John P. Marshall. The first is a nocturne by Arthur Foote and the other is a toccata by MacMasters.

Wednesday night brings as the chief guests the visiting members of the Chicago Association of Commerce.

Boston College will have its first night at the "Pops" on Thursday evening, June 15.

On Friday night half of the floor will be taken by students and alumni of Williams College, who will be in town for the Williams-Harvard ball game the next day.

The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Up the Street"...Morse
Overture, "Robespierre"...Litolff
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
Selection, "Jack and the Beanstalk"...Sloane
Overture, "Raymond"...Thomas
Selection, "Boodle & Co."...Densmore
"Little Toy Soldiers"...Pierne
Overture, "1812"...Tschaikowsky
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
Valse Militaire...Ganne
Selection, "1492"...Pfueger
American Fantasy...Herbert
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
March, "Second Connecticut"...Reeves

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1911

American Music at the Pops

Several American composers are on the programme at the "Pop" Concert at Symphony Hall tonight. A special feature will be two organ solos by John P. Marshall, the official organist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The programme is:

March, "Up the Street"...Morse
Overture, "Jean de Paris"...Boieldieu
(a) Swing Song...Ethel Barnes
(b) Remembrance...H. Carmichael
Selection, "Naughty Marietta"...Herbert
Suite No. 2...MacDowell
(a) Organ Solo, Nocturne...Foote
(b) Organ Solo, Toccata...MacMasters
Solodist, Mr. Marshall
Three American Dances...Gilbert
(First time)
Overture, "1812"...Tschaikowsky
Organ, Mr. Marshall
A Vagrom Ballad...Chadwick
Selection, "Madame Sherry"...Hoshna
Waltz, "España"...Waldteufel
March, "Stars and Stripes"...Sousa

For tomorrow night a large part of Symphony Hall has been taken by Boston merchants who are entertaining the Chicago Association of Commerce. The concert is one of the most important features of the entertainment planned for the visitors. The programme is as follows:

March, "Tambour Battant"...Messager
Selection, "Naughty Marietta"...Herbert
Waltz, "Estudiantina"...Waldteufel
March, "The Aviator" (first time)...Merrill
Selection, "Mme. Sherry"...Hoschna
a "Hail Chicago," b "The Song of Chicago."
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"...Mascagni
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
American Fantasy...Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
a "Excelsior, Chicago." b "As we go marching on."
"Czarina Mazurka"...Ganne
March, "Le Père la Victoire"...Ganne

JOURNAL—TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1911.

Tonight at the "Pops"

Tonight will bring a special American program at the "Pop" concerts, at which some interesting things will be heard. A feature will be two organ solos by John P. Marshall.

The program is as folows:

March, "Up the Street"...Morse
Overture, "Jean de Paris"...Boieldieu
(a) Swing Song...Ethel Barnes
(b) Remembrance...H. Carmichael
Selection, "Naughty Marietta"...Herbert
Suits No. 2...MacDowell
Organ Solos: (a) Nocturne...Foote
(b) Toccata...McMasters
Soloist, Mr. Marshall.
Three American Dances (first time)...Gilbert
Overture, "1812"...Tschaikowsky
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
A Vagrom Ballad...Chadwick
Selection, "Madame Sherry"...Hoshna
Waltz, "Espana"...Waldteufel
March, "Stars and Stripes"...Sousa

RECORD, TUESDAY, JUNE 13 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

Tonight will bring a special American programme at the "Pop" concerts, at which some interesting things will be heard. A feature will be two organ solos by John P. Marshall, the official organist of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The programme: March, "Up the Street," Morse; overture, "Jean de Paris," Boieldieu; "Swing Song," Ethel Barnes; "Remembrance," H. Carmichael; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; suite No. 2, MacDowell; organ solos, (a) nocturne, (b) toccata, MacMasters, soloist, Mr. Marshall; three American dances (first time), Gilbert; overture, "1912," Tschaikowsky, organ, Mr. Marshall; A Vagrom Ballad, Chadwick; selection, "Madame Sherry," Hoshna; waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; march, "Stars and Stripes," Sousa.

HERALD, TUESDAY,
JUNE 13, 1911.

AMERICAN NIGHT AT POPS

Tonight will bring a special American program at the Pop concerts. A feature will be two organ solos by John P. Marshall, the official organist of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The program:

1—March, "Up the Street".....Morse
2—Overture, "Jean de Paris".....Boieldieu
3—(a) Swing Song.....Ethel Barnes
(b) Remembrance.....H. Carmichael
4—Selection, "Naughty Marietta"....Herbert
5—Suite No. 2.....MacDowell
6—(a) Organ solo, Nocturne.....Foote
(b) Organ solo, Toccata.....MacMasters
Soloist, Mr. Marshall.
7—Three American Dances.....Gilbert
(First time.)
8—Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowsky
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
9—A Vagrom Ballad.....Chadwick
10—Selection, "Madame Sherry.....Hoshna
11—Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
12—March, "Stars and Stripes".....Sousa

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY
JUNE 13, 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

Tonight will bring a special American programme at the "Pop" concerts, at which some interesting things will be heard. A feature will be two organ solos by John P. Marshall, the official organist of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The programme: March, "Up the Street," Morse; overture, "Jean de Paris," Boieldieu; "Swing Song," Ethel Barnes; "Remembrance," H. Carmichael; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; suite No. 2, MacDowell; organ solos, (a) nocturne, (b) toccata, MacMasters, soloist, Mr. Marshall; three American dances (first time), Gilbert; overture, "1912," Tschaikowsky, organ, Mr. Marshall; A Vagrom Ballad, Chadwick; selection, "Madame Sherry," Hoshna; waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; march, "Stars and Stripes," Sousa.

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY,
JUNE 14, 1911.

A large part of Symphony hall has been taken tonight by members of the chamber who are entertaining the Chicago Association of Commerce. The Pops programme is:

March, "Tambour Battant".....Messager
Selection, "Naughty Marietta"...Herbert
Waltz, 'Estudiantina".....Waldteufel
March, "The Aviator" (first time)
.....Merrill
Selection, "Mme. Sherry".....Hoshna
(a) "Hail Chicago," (b) "The Song of Chicago."
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..
.....Mascagni
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
(a) "Excelsior Chicago," (b) "As We Go Marching On."
"Czarina Mazurka".....Ganne
March, "Le Pere, la Victoire"....Ganne

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY
JUNE 15, 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

The alumni and students of Boston college will be present at the "Pop" concert in Symphony hall this evening in large numbers. Mayor Fitzgerald will also be there, this being the first "Boston college" night.

The programme is: March, "Tambour Battant," Messager; selection, "Madame Sherry," Hoshna; Reve Angelique, Rubinstein, organ, Mr. Marshall; selection, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; "Here's to Alma Mater," L. S. Whalen '06; "The Shamrock," Myddleton; "Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; selection, "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti; "Maroon and Gold," J. P. Meagher, S.J., B.C.; American Fantasy, organ, Mr. Marshall, Herbert; march, "Stars and Stripes," Sousa.

HERALD, THURSDAY,
JUNE 15, 1911.

BOSTON COLLEGE POP NIGHT

The alumni and students of Boston College will be present at the pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening in large numbers. Mayor Fitzgerald will also be there, this being the first "Boston College" night. The program:

March, "Tambour Battant".....Messager
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
Reve Angelique.....Rubinstein
(Organ, Mr. Marshall).
Selection, "Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
"Here's to Alma Mater"...L. S. Whalen, '06
The Shamrock.....Myddleton
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Selection, "Lucia di Lammermoor".Donizetti
Maroon and Gold...J. P. Meagher, S. J., B. C.
American Fantasy.....Herbert
March, "Stars and Stripes".....Sousa
(Organ, Mr. Marshall).

TRAVELER, THURSDAY,
JUNE 15, 1911

POPS PROGRAMME.

The alumni and students of Boston College will be present at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall this evening. Mayor Fitzgerald will also be there, this being the first "Boston College night." The programme follows:

March, "Tambour Battant".....Messager
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
Reve Angelique.....Rubinstein
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Selection, "Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
"Here's to Alma Mater"..L. S. Whalen '06
The Shamrock.....Myddleton
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Selection, "Lucia di Lammermoor"
.....Donisetti
Maroon and Gold.....
.....J. P. Meagher, S. J., B. C.
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
"Stars and Stripes".....Sousa

RECORD, THURSDAY,
JUNE 15 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

The alumni and students of Boston college will be present at the "Pop" concert in Symphony hall this evening in large numbers. Mayor Fitzgerald will also be there, this being the first "Boston college" night.

The programme is: March, "Tambour Battant," Messager; selection, "Madame Sherry," Hoshna; Reve Angelique, Rubinstein, organ, Mr. Marshall; selection, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; "Here's to Alma Mater," L. S. Whalen '06; "The Shamrock," Myddleton; "Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; selection, "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti; "Maroon and Gold," J. P. Meagher, S.J., B.C.; American Fantasy, organ, Mr. Marshall; Herbert; march, "Stars and Stripes," Sousa.

JOURNAL--FRIDAY,
JUNE 16, 1911

Williams Night at "Pops"

Williams College, whose baseball team will play Harvard at Soldiers Field tomorrow, will send a large delegation to the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall tonight, and there will be a representation of the alumni resident in Boston and vicinity. This is the first time that Williams has had a night at the "Pops," and every indication goes to prophesy a great success.

The program is as follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
a. "Alma Mater." b. "Come Fill Your Glass"
Selection, "The Arcadians".....Monckton
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
a. "Rise Up." b. "Ephraim Williams"
Largo.....Handel
Violin, Mr. Krafft; Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Rackoczy March.....Berlioz
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
a. "'Neath the Shadows of the Hills."
b. "Royal Purple."
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
March, "Washington Post".....Sousa

BOSTON POST,
JUNE 16,

MAYOR AT POPS SINGS 'ADELINE'

Boston College Night Fills Big House

Last night at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall, Mayor Fitzgerald again distinguished himself by singing "Sweet Adeline" to the accompaniment of the big orchestra.

It was Boston College night, and many prominent Catholics of this city were present. In the early part of the evening there was an ovation for Father Gasson when he entered with a body of clergymen.

When the Mayor finished his celebrated song the audience applauded furiously, so he sang it again.

HERALD, FRIDAY,
JUNE 16, 1911

WILLIAMS NIGHT AT POPS.

Williams College, whose ball team is to play Harvard at Soldier's Field tomorrow, will send a large delegation to the "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall tonight and there will be a representation of the alumni resident in Boston and vicinity. This is the first time that Williams has had a night at the "Pops." The program:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
(a), "Alma Mater." (b), "Come Fill Your Glass."
Selection, "The Arcadians".....Monckton
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
(a), "Rise Up." (b), "Ephraim Williams."
Largo.....Handel
(Violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall.)
Rackoczy March.....Berlioz
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
(a), "Neath the Shadows of the Hills."
(b), "Royal Purple."
American Fantasy.....Herbert
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
March, "Washington Post".....Sousa

JOURNAL—SATURDAY,
JUNE 17, 1911

Tonight at the "Pops"

The program for tonight's Pop concert is as follows:

Inauguration March.....Bockelman
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Papillons Bleus".....Waldteufel
Selection, "L'Arlesienne" (first time)....Bizet
Ballet from "The Prophet".....Meyerbeer
(a) Valse. (b) Redowa. (c) Les Patineurs.
(d) Galop.
Entr'acte from "Lakme".....Delibes
Selection, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Invitation to the Dance.....Weber
Overture, "Phedre".....Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Triumph March.....Fucik

ADVERTISER, SATURD
JUNE 17 1911

THE "POPS."

But two more weeks of the "Pop" concerts remain, for on Saturday evening, July 1, the season comes to an end after a success which, from every point of view, is greater than these concerts have had since they were established 26 years ago.

There are no special nights in the sense of evenings being given to various organizations, but Mr. Maquarre has arranged a musical programme which will appeal to a very wide public.

HERALD, SATURDAY,
JUNE 17, 1911.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The program of the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight is as follows:

Inauguration march.....Bockelman
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Papillons Bleus".....Waldteufel
Selection, "L'Arlesienne" (first time)...Bizet
Ballet from "The Prophet".....Meyerbeer
(a) Valse, (b) Redowa, (c) Les Patineurs,
(d) Galop.
Entr'acte from "Lakme".....Delibes
Selection, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Invitation to the dance.....Weber
Overture, "Phedre".....Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
American Fantasy.....Herbert
(Organ, Mr. Marshall).
Triumph March.....Fucik

HERALD, BOSTON,
JUNE 18, 1911

POPS FOR WEEK

But two more weeks of the "Pop" concerts remain, for on Saturday evenin, July 1, the season comes to an end after a success which from every point of view is greater than these concerts have had since they were established 26 years ago.

There are no special nights in the sense of evenings being given to various organizations, but Mr. Maquarre has arranged a musical program which will appeal to a very wide public.

On Monday night he will give a Wagner program, the third of the season. Wednesday night will be a distinctive German program, while on Thursday night the selections will be devoted to operatic music. Friday brings the annual Berlioz night, which in past years has always been a great success, and the programs on Tuesday and Saturday are of a general character.

The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

WAGNER NIGHT.

1. March, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
2. Waltz, "Les Chanteurs des Bois" Forbach
3. Selection, "Naughty Marietta".Herbert
4. Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
5. Huldingung's March.....Wagner
6. Albumblatt.....Wagner
7. Selection, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
8. Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
9. Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
10. Night Fly Dance (from Far Away Isles Comic Opera).....Maquarre
11. Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
12. Lichtenstein March.....B. Triebel

JOURNAL--SUNDAY,
JUNE 18, 1911

"Pop" Concert Season Closes in Two Weeks

But two more weeks of the "Pop" concerts remain, for on Saturday evening, July 1, the season comes to an end after a success which, from every point of view, is greater than these concerts have had since they were established twenty-six years ago.

There are no special nights in the sense of evenings being given to various organizations, but Mr. Maquarre has arranged a musical program which will appeal to a very wide public.

On Monday night he will give a Wagner program, the third of the season. Wednesday night will be a distinctive German program, while on Thursday night the selections will be devoted to operatic music. Friday brings the annual Berlioz night, which in past years has always been a great success, and the programs on Tuesday and Saturday are of a general character.

The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Waltz, "Les Chanteurs des Bois".....Forbach
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Huldingung's March.....Wagner
Albumblatt.....Wagner
Selection, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Night Fly Dance (from "Far Away Isles" comic opera).....Maquarre
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
Lichtenstein March.....B. Triebel

SUNDAY POST,
JUNE 18, 1911

THE "POPS"

But two more weeks of the "Pop" concerts remain, for on Saturday evening, July 1, the season comes to an end, after a success which from every point of view is greater than these concerts have had since their inception 26 years ago.

There are no special nights in the sense of evenings being given to various organizations, but Mr. Maquarre has arranged a musical programme which will appeal to a very wide public.

On Monday night he will give a Wagner programme, the third of the season. Wednesday night will be a distinctive German programme, while on Thursday night the selections will be devoted to operatic music. Friday brings the annual Berlioz night, which in past years has always been a great success, and the programmes on Tuesday and Saturday are of a general character.

The programme for tomorrow night is as follows:

MONDAY, JUNE 19—WAGNER NIGHT.

March, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Waltz, "Les Chanteurs des Bois".....Forbach
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Huldingung's March.....Wagner
Albumblatt.....Wagner
Selection, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Night Fly Dance (from Far Away Isles Comic Opera).....Maquarre
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
Lichtenstein March.....B. Triebel

SUNDAY GLOBE
JUNE 18, 1911

Closing Weeks of the Symphony "Pop" Concerts.

But two weeks of the "Pop" concerts remain, for on Saturday evening, July 1, the season comes to an end after a success which from every point of view is said to be greater than these concerts have had since they were established 26 years ago.

There are no special nights in the sense of "evening" being given to various organizations, but Mr Maquarre has arranged musical programs which should appeal to a very wide public.

Tomorrow night he will give a Wagner program, the third of the season. Wednesday night will be a distinctive German program, while Thursday night the selections will be devoted to operatic music. Friday brings the annual Berlioz night. The programs Tuesday and Saturday are of a general character.

In addition to the excerpts from Wagner tomorrow evening the program contains Forbach's waltz, "Les Chanteurs des Bois"; a selection from Herbert's "Naughty Marietta," "Night Fly Dance," Marquarre; Waldtenfel's "Espana" waltz and the Triebel's "Lichtenstein's" march.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN
SUNDAY, JUNE 18, 1911.

"POPS" NEARING END.

Only Two More Weeks of Popular Concerts for Music Lovers.

But two more weeks of the "Pop" concerts remain, for on Saturday evening, July 1, the season comes to an end after a success which is greater than these concerts have had since they were established twenty-six years ago. There are no special nights in the sense of evenings being given to various organizations, but Mr. Maquarre has arranged a musical program which will appeal to a very wide public.

On Monday night he will give a Wagner programme, the third of the season. Wednesday night will be a distinctive German programme, while on Thursday night the selections will be devoted to operatic music. Friday brings the annual Berlioz night, which in past years has always been a great success, and the programmes on Tuesday and Saturday are of a general character.

POST, TUESDAY,
JUNE 20, 1911

WAGNER NIGHT AT POPS
BY OLIN DOWNES

Last night was Wagner night at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall. Mr. Maquarre interpreted a programme which consisted largely of music by the German master, and once more the overwhelming popularity of Wagner today was attested. The concert commenced with the march from "Tannhauser," a resounding concert arrangement which includes, as well as the orchestra, the big organ. The Albumblatt, one of the earlier, but not uncharacteristic, compositions of Wagner, was played, then more music from "Tannhauser." There was, as well, the "Rienzi" overture—Wagner's first big overture, and in many respects an imitation of the pernicious style of Meyerbeer, the idolized composer of the public in Wagner's day—but with all its clap-trap, full of stirring stuff, and the Huldigung's March, eminently fit for the moment in a Pop concert when everyone is talking loudest. Other pieces on the programme were Mr. Maquarre's "Night Fly Dance," a pretty, graceful piece of music; the Waldteufel waltz, "Espana," and compositions by Forach and Herbert. The hall was crowded and the audience extremely enthusiastic. Tonight music by Fucik, Auber, Waldteufel, Sullivan, Demermann, Drigo, Puccini, Chabrier, Maquarre, Zeller, Spindler and Schrammel will be played.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY,
JUNE 20, 1911

The Pops

The programme for tonight's "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall is as follows:

March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik
Overture, "La Sirene".....Auber
Waltz, "Solitude".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Mikado".....Sullivan
Une Fete a Aranguez.....Demermann
Serenade d'Arlequin.....Drigo
'Cello Solo, Mr. Keller.
Selection, "Madama Butterfly".....Puccini
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgré Lui"
Chabrier
Au Claire de Lune.....A. Maquarre
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
Charge of the Hussars.....Spindler
March, "Wien bleibt Wien".....Schrammel

Tomorrow night Mr. Maquarre has arranged a distinctive German programme, which is:

March, "Kaiser Wilhelm II".....Nagel
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppé
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube"....Strauss
Selection, "The Chocolate Soldier".....Strauss
Ballet Music, "The Queen of Sheba"..Goldmark
'Cello, Mr. J. Keller.
Abendlied.....Schumann
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Selection, "Hansel and Gretel"....Humperdinck
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Overture, "Der Freischütz".....Weber
"Spring Song".....Mendelssohn
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
March, "Lichenstein".....B. Triebel

[238]

JOURNAL—TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1911.

Tonight at the "Pops"

The "Pop" program for tonight is as follows:

March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik
Overture, "La Sirene".....Auber
Waltz, "Solitude".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Mikado".....Sullivan
Une Fete a Aranguez.....Demermann
Serenade D'Arlequin.....Drigo
'Cello Solo, Mr. Keller.
Selection, "Madame Butterfly".....Puccini
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre Lui".....Chabrier
Au Claire de Lune.....A. Maquarre
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
Charge of the Hussars.....Spindler
March, "Wien bleibt Wien".....Schrammel

SUNDAY POST, RECORD, THURSDAY, JUNE 22 1911

OPERATIC NIGHT AT POPS.

A special operatic programme has been arranged by Mr. Maquarre for tonight's concert at the "Pops" in Symphony hall. This in the past has always been a very popular feature of the season and a large audience is expected.

The programme: March, "Boccaccio," Suppe; overture, "Mignon," Thomas; waltz, "The Merry Widow," Lehar; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; selection, "Thais," Massenet; selection, "Tannhauser," Wagner; cortege, "The Queen of Sheba," Gounod; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; selection, "La Vivandiere," Godard; Waltz, "Die Fledermaus," Strauss; march, "Salve Imperator," Fucik.

TRAVELER, FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1911

"POPS" PROGRAMME.

The lighter works of Berlioz will be the prominent feature at tonight's Pops in Symphony Hall. The list of selections follows:

March, "Frisch Drauf Los".....Blon
Overture, "Francaise".....C. Stix
Waltz, "Artist's Life".....Strauss
Selection, "H. M. S. Pinafore".....Sullivan
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delila".....Saint-Saens
Invitation to Dance.....Weber-Berlioz
Damnation of Faust.....Berlioz
(a) Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps; (b) Dance of the Sylphs.
Rakoczy March.....Berlioz
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini".....Berlioz
Meditation (on a Prelude by J. S. Bach).....Bordier
Violin, Mr. Krafft; Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Waltz, "Barcarolle".....Waldteufel
March, "Princess Ninetta".....Strauss

DAILY ADVERTISER, JUNE 24 1911

THE POPS.

New week brings to an end the 26th season of "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall, and it is a source of much gratification to all who are interested in the welfare of the Symphony Orchestra, that this season has broken all records in point of attendance, having been even larger than last season, which, in its place, was a record breaker.

The "Pops" have grown steadily in the last few years, and the average attendance now is much larger than it ever was in old Music Hall.

TRAVELER, TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1911

"POP" PROGRAMME.

The Pop programme for tonight follows:

March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik
Overture, "La Sirene".....Auber
Waltz, "Solitude".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Mikado".....Sullivan
Une Fete a Aranguez.....Demermann
Serenade D'Arlequin.....Drigo
'Cello solo, Mr. Keller.
Selection, "Madame Butterfly".....Puccini
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre Lui".....Chabrier
Au Claire deLune.....A.Maquarre
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
Charge of the Hussars.....Spindler
March, "Wien bleibt Wien"...Schrammel

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1911.

"Pop" Concert Program

A special operatic program has been arranged by Mr. Maquarre for tonight's concert at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall. This in the past has always been a very popular feature of the season and a large audience is expected.

The program is as follows:

1. March, "Boccaccio".....Suppe
2. Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
3. Waltz, "The Merry Widow".....Lehar
4. Selection, "Naughty Marietta".Herbert
5. Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
6. Selection, "Thais".....Massenet
7. Selection, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
8. Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba".Gounod
9. Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
10. Selection, "La Vivandiere".....Godard
11. Waltz, "Die Fledermaus".....Strauss
12. March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1911

Last Nights of the Pops

Next week brings to an end the twenty-sixth season of "Pop" Concerts in Symphony Hall, a season which has broken all records in point of attendance. The "Pops" have grown steadily in the last few years and the average attendance now is larger than it ever was in old Music Hall. On Wednesday night, June 28, the Harvard Club of Boston has taken Symphony Hall to entertain the visiting alumni, and there will be no accommodation for the public. Mr. Maquarre has arranged for Friday night a "Request" programme, and for Saturday night a "Patriotic" programme.

The programme for tonight is as follows:

March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik
Overture, La Part Du Diable".....Auber
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste".....Herbert
Une Fete a Aranguez.....Demermann
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
March Fantasie.....Guilmant
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Ballet Music "Sylvia".....Delibes
(a) Pizzicato, (b) Cortege.
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
La Cygne.....Saint-Saens
'Cello Solo, Mr. Keller.
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube".....Strauss
March, "Boccaccio".....Suppé

RECORD, SATURDAY JUNE 24 1911

THE POPS.

New week brings to an end the 26th season of "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall, and it is a source of much gratification to all who are interested in the welfare of the Symphony Orchestra, that this season has broken all records in point of attendance, having been even larger than last season, which, in its place, was a record breaker.

The "Pops" have grown steadily in the last few years, and the average attendance now is much larger than it ever was in old Music Hall.

HERALD, TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1911.

POP CONCERT PROGRAM

The program of the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight is as follows:

March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik
Overture, "La Sirene".....Auber
Waltz, "Solitude".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Mikado".....Sullivan
Une Fete a Aranguez.....Demermann
Serenade D'Arlequin.....Drigo
'Cello solo, Mr. Keller.
Selection, "Madame Butterfly".....Puccini
Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre Lui,".....Chabrier
Au Claire de Lune.....A. Maquarre
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
Charge of the Hussars.....Spindler
March, "Wien bleibt Wien".....Schrammel

DAILY ADVERTISER, JUNE 22 1911

OPERATIC NIGHT AT POPS.

A special operatic programme has been arranged by Mr. Maquarre for tonight's concert at the "Pops" in Symphony hall. This in the past has always been a very popular feature of the season and a large audience is expected.

The programme: March, "Boccaccio," Suppe; overture, "Mignon," Thomas; waltz, "The Merry Widow," Lehar; selection, "Naughty Marietta," Herbert; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; selection, "Thais," Massenet; selection, "Tannhauser," Wagner; cortege, "The Queen of Sheba," Gounod; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; selection, "La Vivandiere," Godard; Waltz, "Die Fledermaus," Strauss; march, "Salve Imperator," Fucik.

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY JUNE 20 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" programme for tonight is: March, "Salve Imperator," Fucik; overture, "La Sirene," Auber; waltz, "Solitude," Waldteufel; selection, "Mikado," Sullivan; Une Fete a Aranguez, Demermann; Serenade D'Arlequin, Drigo, 'cello solo, Mr. Keller; selection, "Madame Butterfly, Puccini; Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre Lui," Chabrier; Au Claire de Lune, A. Maquarre, organ, Mr. Marshall; waltz, "Grubenlichter," Zeller; Charge of the Hussars, Spindler; march, "Wien bleibt Wien," Schrammel.

HERALD, THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1911

OPERATIC NIGHT AT POPS

The following operatic program has been arranged by Mr. Maquarre for tonight's Pop concert in Symphony Hall:

March, "Boccaccio".....Suppe
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Waltz, "The Merry Widow".....Lehar
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
Selection, "Thais".....Massenet
Selection, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba".....Gounod
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Selection, "La Vivandiere".....Godard
Waltz, "Die Fledermaus".....Strauss
March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik

JOURNAL—TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1911.

"Pop's" Program

The "Pop" program for tonight is as follows:

March, "Triumph".....Fucik
Overture, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Waltz, "Barcarolle".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Chimes of Normandy".....Planquette
Ballet music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
(a) Les Chasseresses, (b) Pizzicato, (c) Cortege
Romance for horn.....Saint-Saens
Soloist, Mr. Hess.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Kermesse.....Godard
Prelude, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
"Little Toy Soldiers".....Pierne
Waltz, "Roses of the South".....Strauss
March, "Serenade".....Herbert

RECORD, TUESDAY, JUNE 20 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" programme for tonight is: March, "Salve Imperator," Fucik; overture, "La Sirene," Auber; waltz, "Solitude," Waldteufel; selection, "Mikado," Sullivan; Une Fete a Aranguez, Demermann; Serenade D'Arlequin, Drigo, 'cello solo, Mr. Keller; selection, "Madame Butterfly, Puccini; Fete Polonaise from "Le Roi Malgre Lui," Chabrier; Au Claire de Lune, A. Maquarre, organ, Mr. Marshall; waltz, "Grubenlichter," Zeller; Charge of the Hussars, Spindler; march, "Wien bleibt Wien," Schrammel.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY JUNE 22, 1911

The Pops

A special operatic programme has been arranged by Mr. Maquarre for tonight's "Pop" concert in Symphony Hall. In the past this has been a popular feature of the season. The programme is as follows:

March, "Boccaccio".....Suppé
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Waltz, "The Merry Widow".....Lehar
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
Selection, "Thais".....Massenet
Selection, "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba".....Gounod
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Selection, "La Vivandière".....Godard
Waltz, "Die Fledermaus".....Strauss
March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik

The lighter works of Berlioz will be the prominent feature at tomorrow's concert. The list of selections is:

March, "Frisch Drauf Los".....Blon
Overture, "Francaise".....C. Stix
Waltz, "Artist's Life".....Strauss
Selection, "H. M. S. Pinafore".....Sullivan
Bacchanale "Samson and Delila".....Saint-Saëns
Invitation to Dance.....Weber-Berlioz
Damnation of Faust.....Berlioz
A Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps.
b Dance of the Sylphs.
Rakoczy March.....Berlioz
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini".....Berlioz
Meditation (on a prelude by J. S. Bach).....Bordier
Violin, Mr. Krafft; Organ, Mr. Marshall
Waltz, "Barcarolle".....Waldteufel
March, "Princess Ninetta".....Strauss

TRAVELER, THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1911

"POPS" PROGRAMME.

A special operatic programme has been arranged by Mr. Maquarre for tonight's concert at the Pops in Symphony Hall. This in the past has always been a popular feature. The programme follows:

March, "Boccaccio".....Suppe
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Waltz, "The Merry Widow".....Lehar
Selection, "Naughty Marietta".....Herbert
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
Selection, "Thais".....Massenet
Selection, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba".....Gounod
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Selection, "La Vivandiere".....Godard
Waltz, "Die Fledermaus".....Strauss
March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1911.

Pop Concert Program

The lighter works of Berlioz will be the prominent feature at tonight's "Pops" in Symphony Hall. The list of selections is as follows:

BERLIOZ NIGHT.

March, "Frisch Drauf Los".....Blon
Overture, "Francaise".....C. Stix
Waltz, "Artist's Life".....Strauss
Selection, "H. M. S. Pinafore".....Sullivan
Bacchanale "Samson and Delila".....Saint-Saens
Invitation to Dance.....Weber-Berlioz
Damnation of Faust.....Berlioz
(a) Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps.
(b) Dance of the Sylphs.
Rakoczy March.....Berlioz
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini".....Berlioz
Meditation (on a Prelude by J. S. Bach).....Bordier
Violin, Mr. Krafft; organ, Mr. Marshall.
Waltz, "Barcarolle".....Waldteufel
March, "Princess Ninetta".....Strauss

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1911

"Pop" Concert Program

Tonight's program at the "Pops" is as follows:

March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik
Overture, "La Part Du Diable".....Auber
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
Selection, "Mlle Modiste".....Herbert
Une Fete a Aranguez.....Demermann
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
March Fantasie.....Guilmant
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Ballet Music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
(a) Pizzicato, (b) Cortege
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
La Cygne.....Saint-Saens.
'Cello Solo, Mr. Keller
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube"..Strauss
March, "Boccaccio".....Suppe

HERALD, SATURDAY JUNE 24, 1911

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Tonight's program at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall is as follows:

March, "Salve Imperator".....Fucik
Overture "La Part Du Diable".....Auber
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".....Komzak
Selection, "Mlle Modiste".....Herbert
Une Fete a Aranguez.....Demermann
Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
March Fantasie.....Guilmant
Organ, Mr. Marshall
Ballet Music "Sylvia".....Delibes
(a) Pizzicato, (b) Cortege.
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
La Cygne.....Saint-Saens
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube"...Strauss
March, "Boccaccio".....Suppe

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY JUNE 27 1911

THE "POPS."

The "Pop" programme for tonight is: March, "Triumph," Fucik; overture, "Orpheus," Offenbach; waltz, "Barcarolle," Waldteufel; selection, "Chimes of Normandy," Planquette; Ballet Music "Sylvia," Delibes, (a) Les Chasseresses, (b) Pizzicato, (c) Cortege; Romance for Horn, Saint-Saens, soloist, Mr. Hess; selection, "Carmen," Bizet; Kermesse, Godard; prelude, "Lohengrin," Wagner; "Little Toy Soldiers," Pierne; waltz, "Roses of the South," Strauss; march, "Serenade," Herbert.

HERALD, TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1911

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The program of the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight is as follows:

March, "Triumph".....Fucik
Overture, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Waltz, "Barcarolle".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Chimes of Normandy".....Planquette
Ballet music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
(a) Les Chasseresses, (b) Pizzicato, (c) Cortege.
Romance for Horn.....Saint-Saens
Soloist, Mr. Hess.
Selection, "Carmen".....Bizet
Kermesse.....Godard
Prelude, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
"Little Toy Soldiers".....Pierne
Waltz, "Roses of the South".....Strauss
March, "Serenade".....Herbert

GLOBE—TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1911.

Symphony Hall "Pops."

This evening's selections at the "Pop" concert will be mainly of the lighter class of music, Offenbach, Waldteufel, Bizet, Planquette, Piere, Delibes, Strauss and Herbert being represented on the program.

Tomorrow evening Symphony hall has been taken by the Harvard club for the entertainment of the visiting alumni. There will be no accommodations for the general public.

ADVERTISER, WEDNESD JUNE 28, 1911

HARVARD MEN IN VAUDEVILLE AT POPS

Talent from the ranks of Harvard men for the vaudeville performance to be given in connection with the Pop concert at Symphony hall tonight, by the Boston Harvard club represents many forms of variety entertaining.

Charles Shea, well known in cadet theatricals, and George F. Root, 1900, the first in Irish ballads and the second in coster songs, will be the two singers. Anderson Dana of this year's graduating class is to do a lasso throwing dance. C. F. Brainard of New York, an exceptionally clever amateur, will mystify with some of his card tricks. Roger Scaife and Bradlee Fenno have revived a ballet dance which was a great success when they were in college.

One of the big features will be the singing, by the Harvard alumni chorus of 125 men, under the direction of Warren A. Locke.

The entire house has been taken by the Boston Harvard club, and admission will be only to members of that club and its guests.

Ladies will not be admitted.

[239]

TISER.

911

S. an end the 26th
ts in Symphony
f much gratifica-
rested in the welrchestra, that this ecords in point of n even larger than its place, was a

own steadily in the average attendance
an it ever was in old

RDAY

1911

POPS. to an end the 26th
ncerts in Symphony
ce of much gratifica-
nterested in the wel-
Orchestra, that this records, in point of en even larger than n its place, was a

rown steadily in the e average attendance
an it ever was in old

ESDAY.

1911.

am tonight is as
.....Fucik
.....Offenbach
.....Waldteufel
dy"..Planquette
.....Delibes
ato, (c) Cortege
....Saint-Saens
s.
.....Bizet
.....Godard
.....Wagner
.....Pierne
.....Strauss
.....Herbert

TUESDA

1911

."
for tonight is:
cik; overture,
altz, "Barcarol-
, "Chimes of Ballet Music
s Chasseresses,
; Romance for t, Mr. Hess;
et; Kermesse,
rin," Wagner;
Pierne; waltz,
trauss; march,

SDAY,

1911

PROGRAM
Pop concert in is as follows:
.....Fucik
.....Offenbach
.....Waldteufel
ndy"...Planquette
.....Delibes
Pizzicato, (c)
.....Saint-Saens
.....Bizet
.....Godard
.....Wagner
.....Pierne
.....Strauss
.....Herbert

ESDAY.

1911.

"Pops."
tions at the mainly of the sic, Offenbach,
nquette, Pierne,
Herbert being
gram.
mphony hall has arvard club for
of the visiting
e no accommoda-
ublic.

WEDNESDAY,

28. 1911

LE AT POPS
of Harvard men
ance to be given
p concert at Sym-
Boston Harvard
orms of variety

nown in cadet
. Root, 1900, the
the second in wo singers. An-raduating class
dance. C. F. n exceptionally y with some of ife and Bradlee et dance which they were in

will be the sing-
nni chorus of 125
n of Warren A.

been taken by the nd admission will that club and its mitted.

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY,

JUNE 28, 1911

Harvard Night at "Pops"

Tonight Symphony Hall has been taken by the Harvard Club for the entertainment of the visiting alumni. There will be no accommodations for the general public.

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY

JUNE 29 1911

HARVARD CLUB NIGHT AT SYMPHONY "POPS"

MORE THAN 2000 MEMBERS HAVE A MUSICAL EVENING

Class of 1901 Presents a Flag, Appropriately Inscribed, to the Semi-Centennial Class of '61.

The inaugural of Harvard Club night at "the Pops," Symphony hall, last evening, was one of the features of commencement week. It was a great success, and will be looked forward to as one of the chief functions at future commencement weeks.

About 2000 members of the club and male friends were present, the various classes being seated together in sections reserved for them.

The oldest class represented was '59, by Maj. Higginson, honorary president of the Harvard club. There were cheers several times for him and for the class of '59 by the gathering in a body and the numerous other classes.

Maj. Higginson was seated with the class of '61, which had the position of honor in the centre directly in front of the stage. The members of this class present were Frank W. Hackett, Charles Storrow, J. P. Walker, J. Herbert Center, Col. N. P. Hallowell, Rev. J. E. Wright and Dr. David F. Lincoln.

Just after the opening number by the orchestra the class of 1901 marched up the hall and presented a large Harvard flag with "Class of '61" in white letters to the 50-yr. men, the other classes rising and giving "three times three" for '61. Col. Hallowell accepted the flag on behalf of his class and led the responsive cheer of '61 for '01.

Over 100 of 1901, the 10-year men, were present, the largest representation of any class. They wore white negligee shirts and shoulder sashes of crimson ribbon with "Class of 1901" in white. Their numerous class songs and cheers, with J. Carroll Swan as leader, were a feature of the occasion.

Among the prominent Harvard graduates present were: Sec. Meyer '79, P. M. Gen. Hitchcock '91, Cong. Gardner '86, Cong. Longworth '91, Bishop Lawrence '71, Maj. Higginson '59, Dr. E. H. Nichols '86, Maj. W. V. Judson, U. S. A., '86.

The members of the 1911 varsity baseball nine were present in a body. As they walked across the stage and filed into the hall to take seats reserved for them, Arthur J. Garceau '91, led the crowd in cheering.

Malcolm B. Lang '02, led the cheers for the crews.

There were interchanges of cheers between the classes of 1901, '61, '85, '86, '96, '88, '91. The largest representations were from these classes, and they kept things lively with cheers and songs, '01 leading in the volume and variety.

Charles Locke '01, with Carl Ellis of the same class as accompanist, sang a solo entitled, "Yale Is All Alone," to the tune of "All Alone," which took the house by storm.

The alumni chorus, Warren A. Locke director, sang "God Save the Faculty," "Prayer of Thanksgiving," "Artillerist's Oath," "Arion waltz," and "Image of the Rose," the tenor solo in the last named being by George E. Hills, 98. The organ accompanist was Malcolm Lang.

The orchestra numbers included the march "Up the Street," waltz "Espana," march "Cruiser Harvard," waltz "Estudiantina," march "Our Director," "Stars and Stripes" and various Harvard songs.

Other features of the programme were cowboy rope manipulations by Anderson Dana 1911, Scaife and Fenns in ballet dance, George F. Root '01 in costume coster songs.

The celebration closed with "Fair Harvard," the organ solo by Malcolm Lang '02, all rising and singing.

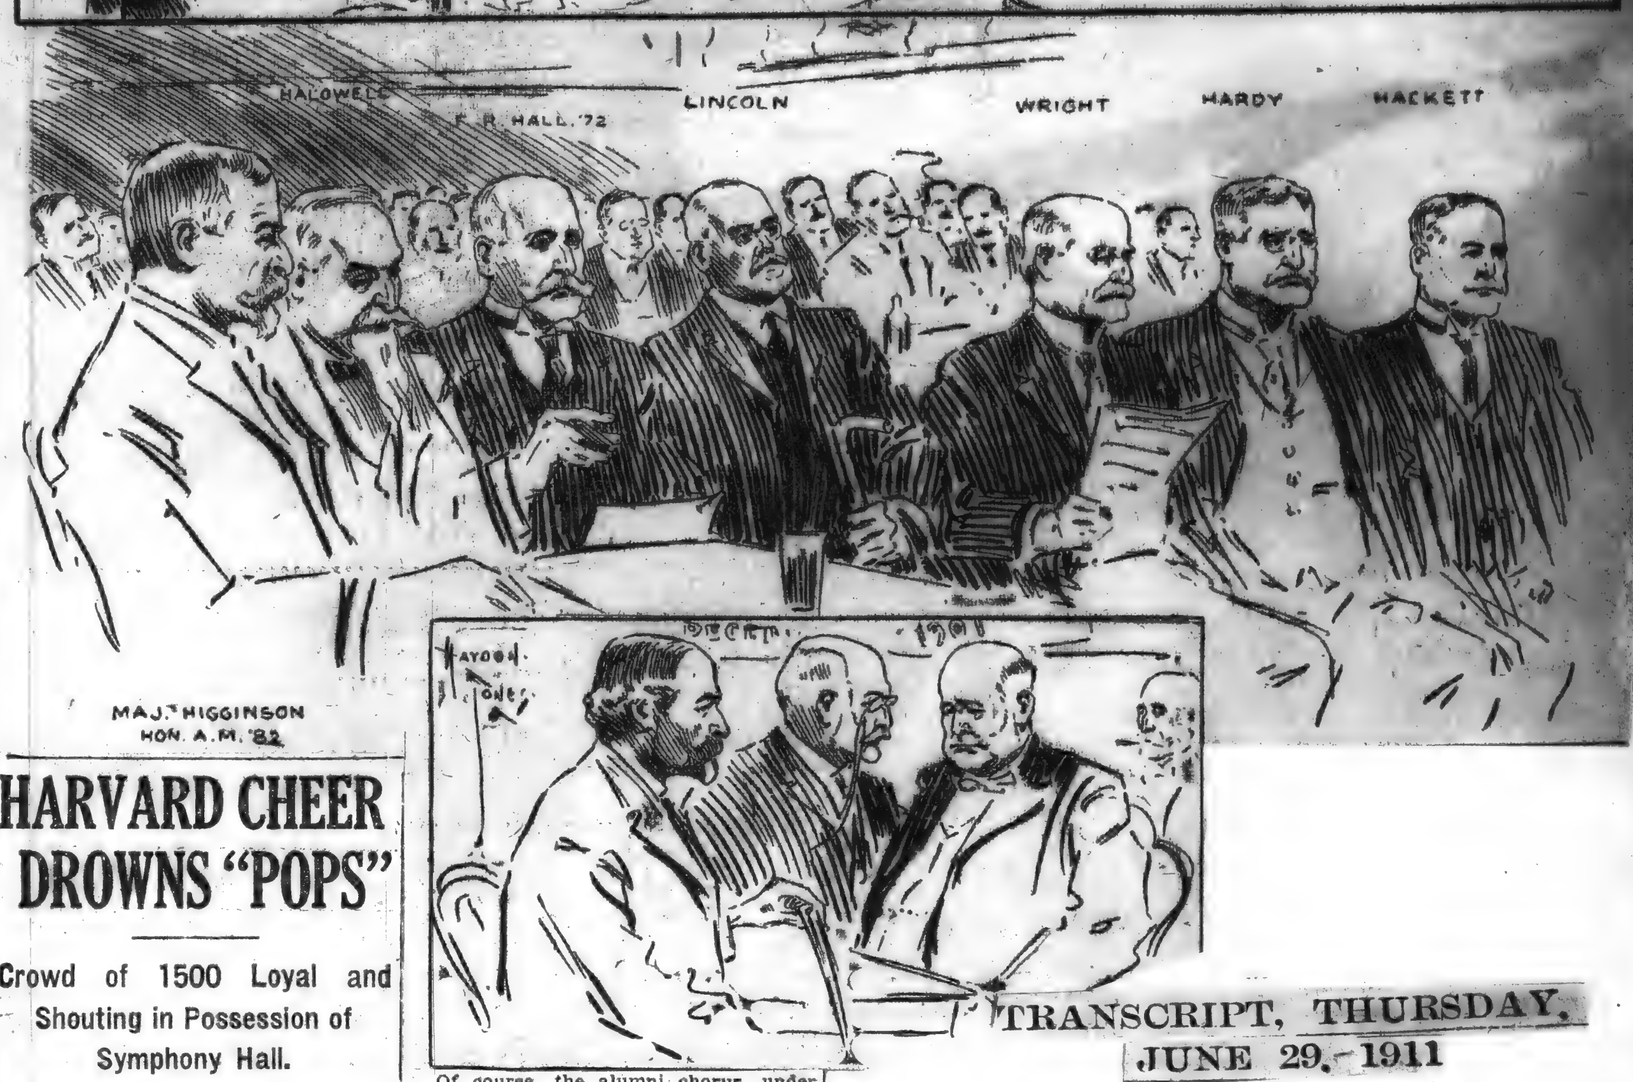
"POP" CONCERTS.

Tonight's programme at the "Pop" concert: Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba," Gounod; overture, "Norma," Bellini; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Voltstedt; selection, "Orpheus," Offenbach; ballet music, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; intermezzo and mazurka, Wallen; viola solo, Mr. Gietzen; selection, "La Boheme," Puccini; Invitation to the Dance, Weber; march, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar, organ, Mr. Marshall; Hymne, Mimart, organ, Mr. Marshall, violin, Mr. Kraft; waltz, "The Chocolate Soldier," Strauss; march, "Berliner Lust," Lincke.

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1911

"HARVARD ONLY" CELEBRATING AT THE POPS IN SYMPHONY HALL

Dana Doing His Cowboy Stunt—Picking Out a Friend in the Audience.



MAJ. HIGGINSON
HON. A.M. '82

HARVARD CHEER DROWNS "POPS"

Crowd of 1500 Loyal and Shouting in Possession of Symphony Hall.

VETERANS OF '61 POPULAR

Tumult Stilled a While as Dana Executes His Dance with Lariat.

Any one who forgot that yesterday was Harvard Commencement day would have been unforgetably reminded of the fact about 7:45 last evening had he been within hearing distance of Huntington avenue. A cheering throng of '01 graduates marched into Symphony Hall to celebrate their decennial to the lively tune of "The E-Z One." There were high doings at the "Pops," for the Harvard Club of Boston with nearly its full quota of 1400 members, with hundreds of visiting alumni from other cities, filled Symphony Hall to shout, sing and make merry. Everybody was there from the eight white-haired members of the class of '61 to the baseball team that defeated Yale twice without blinking. And everybody agreed that the biggest Harvard graduate night on record had been written in the history of Symphony Hall.

What if it was a hot evening? A goodly half of those in the hall dispensed with the formality of a coat, in order the better to cheer the various classes and the music. Whenever there was nothing else to do, one class would cheer another class or itself, especially the latter. Col. N. P. Hallowell of '61 came in for a big round of cheers.

The excitement started with everybody on their feet to the tune of "Up the Street." J. W. Hallowell, chairman of the '01 class committee, brought down the class banner to Hallowell of '61 amid a tumult of cheers and songs that crowded from prominence Charles Shea, '04, who was listed on the program as "the Swell Singer, not Dasha, the Swell Flinger. Charles will troll a ballad or two." Charles may have trolled, but amid the sound and fury that signified the love of some 1500 graduates for their alma mater, Charles was forgotten.

To make up, Anderson Dana of this year's graduating class did some fancy lariat dancing while the members of the orchestra, with chairs pushed back, admiringly watched his feats on the sacred platform. Then toward the end of the evening Messrs. Scaife and Fenno, '99, added to the general hilarity by a delirious ballet, characterized by coquettishness and devilishness. Staid, dignified graduates of 50 years' standing rolled in their chairs at the sight.

In the upper gallery, members of '06 were in their glory, cheering the classes of '01 and '61 as if their throats would burst. Downstairs nearly all the other members of the club could be dimly seen through the clouds of smoke that rose from the tables. They enthusiastically cheered everybody and everything.

Of course, the alumni chorus, under the direction of W. A. Locke '69, was one of the pleasantest features of the evening. Even the festive ones stopped to listen to the finely harmonized voices as they sang the strong old chorus "Domine Salorum Fac." John Densmore '04, had the orchestra when it played a selection from "Boodle & Co.," the '04 Hasty Pudding show.

Occasionally the orchestra interrupted the audience, once very prettily when it played Waldteufel's catchy "Espana." In the main, however, Conductor Maquarre was content to let the excitement go its own way.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Tonight's program of the Pop concert at Symphony Hall is as follows:

Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba".....Gounod
Overture, "Norma".....Bellini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Volstedt
Selection, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Ballet Music, "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
Intermezzo and Mazurka.....Wallen
(Viola solo, Mr. Gietzen.)
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
Invitation to the Dance.....Weber
March, "Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
Hymne.....Mimart
(Organ, Mr. Marshall. Violin, Mr. Krafft.)
Waltz, "The Chocolate Soldier".....Strauss
March, "Berliner Lust".....Lincke

POST, THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1911

HARVARD OWNS POPS

Two Thousand Coatless, Perspiring, Cheering, Care-Free Alumni Take Concert Into Their Keeping

Fully 2000 men, many of them well known throughout the entire country, attended Harvard Club night at the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall last night. They at intervals took the Pops into their own keeping, and old and young joining in the form of unnumbered furnished the entertainment, the music and the voice.

The hall was sold out to members of the club, and from 8 o'clock until nearly 11, all cares were thrown to the wind and the evening given to testifying in shouts of wild enthusiasm, and songs of college days and their love for Alma Mater.

Major Henry Lee Higginson was present as the sole representative of the oldest class in the hall, that of '55, and divided attention with six members of the class of '61, who were Charles Storrow, J. P. Walker, J. Herbert Center, Colonel N. P. Hallowell, the Rev. J. E. Wright and Dr. David F. Lincoln.

Among the coatless, perspiring, cheering, carefree throng were Bishop William Lawrence, '71; Postmaster-General Frank W. Hitchcock, '91; Secretary of the Navy George von L. Meyer, '79, who was yesterday also elected to the Harvard board of overseers; Congressman Nicholas Longworth, '91; Congressman A. P. Gardner, '86, and Major William D. Judson, U. S. A., class of '86, who served on the staff of Kuropatkin as the representative of the United States during the Russian-Japanese war.

They all cheered riotously with their respective classes and drank ginger pop with reckless abandon.

[240]

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1911

The Pops

Tonight's programme at the "Pop" concert at Symphony Hall is as follows:

Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba".....Gounod
Overture, "Norma".....Bellini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Voltstedt
Selection, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Ballet Music, "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
Intermezzo and Mazurka.....Wallen
Viola Solo, Mr. Gietzen.
Selection, "La Bohème".....Puccini
Invitation to the Dance.....Weber
March, "Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
Hymne.....Mimart
Organ, Mr. Marshall. Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Waltz, "The Chocolate Soldier".....Straus
March, "Berliner Lust".....Lincke

Tomorrow evening there will be a "Request" programme. This will be the last concert but one of the season.

March, "Wien bleit Wien".....Schrammel
Overture, "Fra Diavolo".....Auber
Waltz, "España".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoschna
Danse Macabre.....Saint-Saëns
Night Fly Dance.....Maquarre
Violin, Mr. Krafft
Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
Fete Polonaise, "Le Roi malgré lui"..Chabrier
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
'Cello Solo, Mr. Keller
Reve Angélique.....Rubinstein
Organ, Mr. Marshall
Waltz, "Merry Widow".....Lehar
March, "Frisch drauf los".....Blon

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, JULY 1. 1911

Final Night of the Pops

Tonight brings the close of the twenty-sixth season of the "Pop" concerts, which has been unusually successful from the start. Mr. Maquarre has arranged a patriotic programme as follows:

American March.....Ganne
Overture, "Poet and Peasant".....Suppé
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube"..Strauss
Selection, "The Mikado".....Sullivan
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Largo.....Händel
Violin, Mr. Krafft; Harp, Mr. Schuecker;
Organ, Mr. Marshall
Selection, "Aida".....Verdi
Two movements from Suite "Peer Gynt"..Grieg
Overture, "1812".....Tschaikowsky
American Patrol.....Meacham
Fair Harvard.....Gilman
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Organ, Mr. Marshall

HERALD, FRIDAY, JUNE 30, 1911

REQUEST NIGHT AT POPS

Tonight will bring a "request" program at the pop concert in Symphony Hall. It is as follows:

March, "Wein bleibt Wein".....Schrammel
Overture, "Fram Diavolo".....Auber
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoschna
Dance Macabre.....Saint-Saens
(Violin, Mr. Krafft.)
Night Fly Dance.....Maquarre
Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
Fete Polonaise, "Le Roi malgre lui"..Chabrier
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
('Cello solo, Mr. Keller.)
Reve Angelique.....Rubinstein
(Organ, Mr. Marshall.)
Waltz, "Merry Widow".....Lehar
March, "Frisch drauf los".....Blon

Men of the Crimson Having Fun in Symphony Hall

Cheers For Old Harvard Ring Out At The "Pops"

Like the roar of a mighty ocean singing the praises of nature, so a mighty sea of voices singing the praises of their beloved Alma Mater echoed through Symphony Hall last night, when 2000 Harvard students and alumni celebrated "Harvard Club" night at the "Pops."

It was an occasion given over to mirth and joy. Good fellowship reigned, and hundreds of elderly men—world-famous—who passed from Harvard University into their real life work years ago, took a trip back over time's road to be boys again.

"UP THE STREET" STARTS THE MERRIMENT

The fun began right at the start, when the Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Conductor Andre Maquarre, swung into the lusty strains of "Up the Street." Into the hall rushed the men, the members of each class guided to their reservation by the spindle buoys carrying the year mark.

Once seated, there were three mighty cheers for Harvard and a second later the assemblage rose as one to welcome the baseball team of 1911 as they passed across the platform and down the crowded center aisle to the place of honor reserved for them in the middle of the hall.

From that time on the mirth was unrestrained. A delightfully enjoyable program was carried out with frequent interruptions as J. Carroll Swan, '91, rose to cheer some class or athletic team, or, as once happened, the lone graduate of the oldest class present.

This man was Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, '55, scholar, soldier and financier. As he arose in acknowledgment of the tribute paid him, the cheering was renewed until it seemed to shake the very walls of the hall.

Cheers for '61 Class.

Another old class cheered was that of '61, the next in order to '55. There were just seven representing this famed class, and one of its members held the center of the stage a good part of the evening. This was Col. N. B. Hallowell. Dignified bank president, for the evening he forgot the cares of finance and was a boy again, the "Fighting Quaker" of the old days. A song was sung in his honor, called "Hallowell." It went to the tune of Harrigan, and explained how he was the father of the famous Harvard athletes, always known as the Hallowell boys.

And the other members of his class, Charles Storrow, J. P. Walker, J. Herbert Centre, the Rev. J. E. Wright, class secretary; Frank W. Hackett and Dr. David F. Lincoln, were not forgotten. They were cheered to the echo.

A part of the program which pleased the spectators immensely was a rope dance by Anderson Dana, '11. Rigged up as a real cowboy, branded all over with marks of the "wild and woolly" West, he gave exhibitions in lariat throwing which would have made some of the cow punchers on the plain turn green with envy.

Two members of the '99 class gave an impersonation of two ballet queens. And, queer coincidence, just at the front of the stage was a bald-headed row. They were for a time the target for all sorts of witticisms, and Congressman Nicholas Longworth, son-in-law of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, or "Nick," as everyone called him last night, came in for his share of the pleasantries. When the dance was over the consensus of opinion was that Scaife and Fenno were "some ballet artists."

Alumni Chorus Prominent.

The alumni chorus, under the directorship of Warren A. Locke, '69, gave selections from Gounod, Kremser, Adam and Vogel. All were members of the glee club of their day at college and their singing of "Domine Salvum Fac" ("God Save the Faculty") was admirable.

A gathering of Harvard men would not be complete without some good natured jests at Yale's expense, and last night was no exception. A song had been written for the occasion by Charles Locke, '01, and it made a hit.

"Yale Is All Alene" was the title, and it was a parody on a popular air. Locke sang it himself and he knew just how to bring out the fine points. It represented Eli calling on the 'phone for Walter Camp, imploring him to help the Blue squad find the line, which had been passed by Harvard long ago.

The chorus was picked up at once by the crowd and none seemed to join in the singing with deeper appreciation of the humor of the words than Secretary of the Navy George von L. Meyer and Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock. Nor was "Jim" Storrow behind the others in lending a helping voice to the occasion, a voice well trained in a never-to-be-forgotten municipal campaign when he ran against the originator of "Sweet Adeline."

During the lapses in the orchestral music, the other numbers on the program and the cheering there was a continual buzz of conversation. The center of one group, standing out conspicuously, was Maj. William V. Judson, '86, of the United States army, yesterday a recipient of a degree of M. A. He was this country's representative on the staff of Gen. Kuropatkin during the Russo-Japanese War.

Formalities Dropped.

As the evening advanced, formalities of all kinds were dropped. The heat was oppressive and even the cool drinks served by the waiters did not offer relief. Coats were shed and at one time the scene presented was that of a lot of cheering fans on the bleachers when Tris Speaker had just knocked a home run with a tie score.

The church was well represented and Bishop Lawrence entered into the spirit of the occasion with all the enthusiasm of a freshman.

Tomorrow the big boat race on the Thames at New London takes place and the Harvard crew at Red Top was not forgotten last night. Three long "Harvards" were given, with three-times-three for the Crimson oarsmen.

Thus through the evening the play continued, until Malcolm Lang, '06, son of the late Benjamin F. Lang, gave an organ solo. The music was "Fair Harvard," and in homage to their alma mater, the Harvard men arose. As the sweet tones of the organ floated through the hall, there was not a sound but the music.

Once again the music was repeated, and then 200 voices were lifted in unison. As the last words, "Thou didst launch us on Destiny's sea," still echoed through the hall, the jolly crowd of celebrants passed out into the night and another Harvard commencement had gone into history.

At the "Pops" Tonight

Tonight's program at the "Pop" concert is as follows:

Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba".....Gounod
Overture, "Norma".....Bellini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Voltstedt
Selection, "Orpheus".....Offenbach
Ballet music, "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
Intermezzo and Mazurka.....Wallen
Viola solo, Mr. Gletzen.
Selection, "La Boheme".....Puccini
"Invitation to the Dance".....Weber
March, "Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar
Organ, Mr. Marshall.
"Hymne".....Mimart
Organ, Mr. Marshall. Violin, Mr. Krafft.
Waltz, "The Chocolate Soldier".....Strauss
March, "Berliner Lust".....Lincke

RECORD. THURSDAY. JUNE 29 1911

"POP" CONCERTS.

Tonight's programme at the "Pop" concert: Cortege, "The Queen of Sheba," Gounod; overture, "Norma," Bellini; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Voltstedt; selection, "Orpheus," Offenbach; ballet music, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; intermezzo and mazurka, Wallen; viola solo, Mr. Gletzen; selection, "La Boheme," Puccini; Invitation to the Dance, Weber; march, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar, organ, Mr. Marshall; Hymne, Mimart, organ, Mr. Marshall, violin, Mr. Kraft; waltz, "The Chocolate Soldier," Strauss; march, "Berliner Lust," Lincke.

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, JUNE 30, 1911.

"Pop" Request Program

Tonight will bring a "Request" program at the "Pop" concert. It is as follows:

March, "Wien bleibt Wien".....Schrammel
Overture, "Fra Diavolo".....Auber
Waltz, "Espana".....Waldteufel
Selection, "Madame Sherry".....Hoshna
"Danse Macabre".....Saint-Saens
(Violin, Mr. Krafft)
"Night Fly Dance".....Maquarre
Selection, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
"Fete Polonaise".....Chabrier
Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini
('Cello solo, Mr. Keller.)
"Reve Angelique".....Rubinstein
(Organ, Mr. Marshall)
Waltz, "Merry Widow".....Lehar
March, "Frisch drauf los".....Blon

[241]

PROMINENT FIGURES AT FIRST HARVARD GRADUATES' CELEBRATION AT THE POPS

ALUMNI MAKE MERRY AT POPS

Vaudeville Acts By Harvard Men.

Cheering and Singing From Many Reunion Classes.

Members of 1901 Carry Off First Honors.

Harvard commencement festivities were brought to a glorious conclusion last evening with a "pops" concert at Symphony hall at which the Harvard club of Boston stood host to the gathered throng of alumni.

With a crowd of 2000 Harvard men, who packed the floor and overflowed into the balconies, with occasional playing by the orchestra, with much official singing by Warren A. Locke's alumni chorus, and even more unofficial singing by the irrepressible class of '01, with vaudeville stunts, with cheers every other minute and good fellowship continuous, this first graduate Harvard "pops" night made a record not easily to be beaten.

Whereas undergraduate Harvard night at the "pops" has degenerated into a milk-and-watery party, last evening's affair was strictly masculine. There were old graduates and there were young graduates, but they came unattended.

The sons of Harvard made themselves completely at their ease. The weather being warm and moist, they took off their coats, lighted their pipes or cigars, and settled down to an evening of good times in whatever way they pleased.

The '01 contingent, trim in white shirts and red sashes, was the largest, apparently numbering more than 100. Five years older, came '96, with neckties and hatbands of red and yellow and an unlimited capacity for cheering everybody in sight. The quarter-century class of '86 made a good showing in numbers and noise too, as did also the younger classes of '06 and '08, celebrating sexennial and triennial respectively.

A special table had been reserved for the class of '61, half a century out of college, and seven of them were present, led by Col N. P. Hallowell, the "fighting Quaker" of the civil war and father of John W. Hallowell of 1901. With him were Frank W. Hackett, Charles Storrow, James P. Walker, Joseph H. Senter, Dr David F. Lincoln and Rev James E. Wright.

Cheers for Maj Higginson.

Sitting with these "boys" of '61 was Maj Henry L. Higginson, president of the Harvard club of Boston and the oldest graduate present. When the other classes became aware of his presence they stopped cheering for '61 a few minutes and cheered for '55.

The noise began promptly at 8 o'clock with the singing by '01 of its favorite song, "A Health to 1901," to the tune of "Jungletown," acclaiming many times that "We'll be true, and loyal through and through to good old 1901." This and most of the subsequent noise-making of the class was conducted by Carrol J. Swan.

The orchestra then began the formal program with Morse's "Up the Street." At its close what few members of '01 had been previously lacking filed into the hall, bearing their three big banners, the first with the class numeral, the second the word "Decennial" and the third the class shield, depicting John the Orangeman and his donkey cart. These banners were presently fastened to the first balcony railing and hung there the rest of the evening.

The advent of the baseball team, headed by Capt Charles B. McLaughlin, and cheering by '01, '08, '05 and '96 made a brief intermission, after which the orchestra was allowed to play "Espana" and the march "Cruiser Harvard," both well received, and as an encore a football song or two.

A delegation from the class of '01 then came forward to the '61 table and presented their 40-year seniors with a silk '61 banner, amid superlative cheers from all quarters. Col Hallowell received the banner and led his classmates in a cheer for '01.

Dana's Rope Dance.

The vaudeville program then began when Anderson Dana '11, clad in a costume that looked like the real west and not that of the moving picture shows, got up on the stage and did all sorts of Montgomery-Stone stunts with a lariat, succeeding among other things in knocking off all the hats from the edge of the platform and lassoing some peaceable gentlemen in the audience.

He spun the rope up and down about his head, lighting and smoking a cigarette the while, hopped over it, jumped through it and did everything else with it. "Dost recall the musty one about the rope walk?" asked the program. "This is worse, a rope dance." It was.

Then came Warren A. Locke '69 and his alumni chorus of more than 100 and glee club members. They sang exceedingly well four standard part songs, Gounod's "Domine Salvum Fac" (sacreligiously translated "God save the faculty"), Kremser's rousing "Prayer of Thanksgiving," Adam's "Artillerist's Oath" and Vogel's "Arion Waltz."

A fifth song, not on the program, was Reichardt's "Image of the Rose," in which George E. Hills '98 sang the solo. The organ accompaniment for all the singing was played by Malcomb B. Lang '02.

John H. Densmore '04, who played piano accompaniments for '01 when he had nothing else to do, now mounted the platform and conducted the orchestra in businesslike fashion through the mazes of "Boodle & Co," a college operetta of his own undergraduate composing. This was liked so well that he kept it up and gave "Veritas" as an encore.

Arthur J. Garceau '91 filled in a brief interim with leading "Nine Harvards and Nine Nines" for the baseball team, and on the second try made a good job of it. And '01, ever ready, sang another of their songs, and a good one, to the tune of "My Hero."

Roger L. Scaife '97 and Bradlee Fenno, gorgeous in powdered wigs, spangled bodices and black skirts and gloves, revived a ballet dance that was a great success when they were in college, and proved that age could not wither nor custom stale their infinite variety.

Crew Song by Locke.

Shouts for Hale Ellis '01, of course, brought him to the piano, and Charles W. Locke—ditto—proceeded to make one of the hits of the evening by singing an up-to-date and hopefully prophetic version of "All Alone," the class joining in the chorus, as follows:

Hello central, hello central,
Give me Walter Camp,
Harvard's left us way behind,
And we cannot find the line,
Hello Walter, hello Walter,
Come and bring a rope,
We are sitting in our shell
And we need some dope.
Harvard's finished long ago
But we're trying still to row.

CHORUS.

We're all alone, all alone,
Nobody here with us,
Harvard's crossed a winner,
We'll be late for dinner,
Bring a towboat, rowboat,
Any kind of motor,
Come out quick, we're most sick
And want to get back home.
Hurry up and get us going
We are bum at rowing,
Harvard's gone and left us all alone.

Then for a time every class present cheered every other; '85 cheered '86 and was cheered in return; '86 and '96 exchanged like compliments, as did '05 and '02, '88 and '86, '86 and '91. And everybody cheered '61 and '55. And, for variety's sake, '98 got up and cheered the crew in a fashion that should have reached them away down at Red Top.

The orchestra finished up its part of the program by playing "Estudiantina," '01 and '96 snapping their fingers for castnets, and George F. Root '01, in coster rig, sang a couple of cockney songs in Albert Chevalier fashion.

Then Malcolm Lang '02, neatly clad in a dress shirt and no coat, let three lively cheers for the absent crew and sat down at the organ to wind up the evening with "Fair Harvard."

Previous to the pops, hard-working '01 had a buffet supper at the Lenox and '04 held a dinner at the Vendome.

Sunday World

NEW YORK NEEDS A "POP" HOME FOR CLASSICAL MUSIC

The Passing of Mendelssohn Hall Still Further Reduces the Opportunities Offered to Genuine Music Lovers.

BOSTON FAR IN LEAD WITH POPULAR CONCERTS.

Where the Eating of Food Is Secondary to Art and the Charges Are Reasonable.

The demolition of Mendelssohn Hall, which has been announced by the Lewisohns, its new owners, in order to make way for still another theatre, cuts the number of auditoriums where high class music may be heard in New York to a minimum. Carnegie Hall and other halls where "chamber music" and the purely classic programme is rendered at exclusive prices may still be found aplenty.

But thousands of New Yorkers who have a cultivated taste for music and would like to enjoy it in a comfortable way and at a reasonable price are beginning to realize that the European music "halles" afford a combination of the physical comfort and the aesthetic stimulation, in which New York is sadly lacking.

Agitation in musical circles has been going on for some time to interest capital in the project of an auditorium such as would be large enough to entertain a crowd at popular prices, yet properly fitted for the rendition of the better class of orchestral scores.

June 11 1911

Where Boston Excels.

The "Pop" concerts, which have become justly famous in Boston, have been held up as an example of the successful combination of first class orchestral music and the popular priced refreshment "halle" or garden. Under the management of Charles A. Ellis these concerts have been made a paying proposition for twenty-six seasons and are now, in fact, an established institution.

In German cities the same idea has been prominent for much longer. There the love of good music is so strong that the best sort of orchestras are maintained, and the halls are large enough to seat hundreds in comfort for the entire evening at a moderate price. Trieste, Hungary, has made specially successful the idea of combining the gastronomic with the aesthetic, and the caterer helps to support the conductor without disturbing the enjoyment of those who come for music primarily and refreshments only incidentally.

Similar efforts have been made in New York from time to time, but either the musicians become a mediocre, secondary feature, as in the case in cafes and hotels and the "Folies Bergere," or else it has been too expensive and high class to attract the patronage which is necessary to support it.

Theodore Thomas made several efforts to establish a series of popular concerts as far back as the middle '70's. In more recent years Anton Seidl, with a splendid orchestra, had a series of "promenade concerts" at Brighton Beach, in the Metropolitan Opera House and in Madison Square Garden. With one exception the life of these experiments was short, a matter of a few weeks. The Brighton Beach series was supported by a Brooklyn society and was so supported for several years. Since then Sousa's Band and various other military bands have monopolized the attention of the New York music lover in such popular promenade places.

The hotel orchestras furnish good music, but under extravagant conditions as to prices. And New York still remains without a popular resort where good symphonic music may be enjoyed in comfortable relaxation.

Music First, Food Second.

The Boston "Pops" are a unique institution, for, as ascertained by a World reporter, they have furnished a better grade of music at popular prices for a longer period of time than any other organization of the kind. They originated in 1885, and with the exception of one season, when for some political reason a license was not issued to them, have proved a thoroughly popular institution ever since.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra furnishes the musical talent of fifty or sixty members. The concerts are now given in the spacious Symphony Hall, from which the false floor is removed after the winter season. Here small tables are set. Light refreshments are served. These include light wines, beers and ales, sandwiches, salads, cigars and cigarettes. Everything is of good quality and furnished reasonably.

The admission charge ranges from twenty-five cents for the upper balcony seats and the outside table seats, in the rear and side of the hall, up to fifty cents for the choice balcony seats, and to seventy-five cents for the reserved table seats.

[242]

BLANK PAGE

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 29

BSO Advertisements

1910 - 1911

MENTS

N

1

1

HILL, SMITH & CO.
STATIONERS AND BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS
8 MILK STREET, BOSTON.
Job No. F1788
Duplicate this book by sending the above number.

[illegible] SATURDAY,
SEPTEMBER 10, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.
STuWTh(A) s10

BOSTON POST, TUESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 13, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

[illegible] FRIDAY,
SEPTEMBER 16, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

SUNDAY HERALD,
SEPTEMBER 11, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 13, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.
STuWTh(A) s10

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 15, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.
STuWTh(A) s10

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,
SEPTEMBER 11, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thus., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

ADVERTISER, WEDNESDAY
SEPTEMBER 14, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.
s13-2t(5)

RECORD, FRIDAY,
SEPTEMBER 16, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.
s16-2t

SUNDAY GLOBE-
SEPTEMBER 11, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.
SuWS s11

BOSTON GLOBE—WEDNESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 14, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.
SuWS s11

GLOBE—SATURDAY,
SEPTEMBER 17, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.
SuWS s11

BOSTON SUNDAY POST,
SEPTEMBER 11, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 14, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.
STuWTh(A) s10

RECORD, SATURDAY,
SEPTEMBER 17, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.
s16-2t

HERALD, MONDAY,
SEPTEMBER 12, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues. Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY
SEPTEMBER 15, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.
s13-2t(5)

JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 15, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN—
—SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS
On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.
TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS
On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.
ASSISTING ARTISTS
Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston.)
Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston.)
AUCTION SALES TICKETS
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Oct. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY
SEPTEMBER 13, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.
s13-2t(5)

JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 15, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS
MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats
24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

THE SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 18, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

100 MUSICIANS

MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR

THIRTIETH SEASON, 1910-11

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS On CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911 Omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, 1910, Jan. 13, Feb. 3, Feb. 24, and March 24, 1911.

24 CONCERTS On CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911. Omitting Nov. 12, Dec. 10, 1910, Jan. 14, Feb. 4, Feb. 25, and March 25, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES
EMMY DESTINN
GERALDINE FARRAR
JEANNE JOMELLI
KIRKBY-LUNN
and
NELLIE MELBA
(only appearance in Boston)

MESSRS.
FERRUCCIO BUSONI
CARLO BUONAMICI

MESSRS.
MISCHA ELMAN
CHARLES GILIBERT
JOSEF HOFMANN
FRANCIS MACMILLEN
SYLVAIN NOACK
ALWIN SCHROEDER
HEINRICH WARNKE
and
ANTON WITEK
(first appearance in Boston)

Tickets for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals $18.00 and $10.00 According to location

The $18 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Monday, Sept. 26, at 10 A. M.
The $10 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
The $18 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Thursday, Sept. 29, at 10 A. M.
The $10 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, Friday, Sept. 30, at A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will Be Delivered in the Hall, and Must Be Paid for as Soon as Bought or They Will Be Immediately Resold

THE BOSTON JOURNAL—SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

100 MUSICIANS

MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR

THIRTIETH SEASON, 1910-11

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS On CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911. Omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, 1910, Jan. 13, Feb. 3, Feb. 24, and March 24, 1911.

24 CONCERTS On CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911. Omitting Nov. 12, Dec. 10, 1910, Jan. 14, Feb. 4, Feb. 25, and March 25, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES
EMMY DESTINN
GERALDINE FARRAR
JEANNE JOMELLI
KIRKBY-LUNN
and
NELLIE MELBA
(Only appearance in Boston)

Messrs.
FERRUCCIO BUSONI
CARLO BUONAMICI

MESSRS.
MISCHA ELMAN
CHARLES GILIBERT
JOSEF HOFMANN
FRANCIS MACMILLEN
SYLVAIN NOACK
ALWIN SCHROEDER
HEINRICH WARNKE
and
ANTON WITEK
(First appearance in Boston)

Tickets for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals $18.00 and $10.00 According to location

The $18 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Monday, Sept. 26, at 10 A. M.
The $10 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
The $18 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Thursday, Sept. 29, at 10 A. M.
The $10 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, Friday, Sept. 30, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will be Delivered in the Hall, and must be Paid for as Soon as Bought or They Will be Immediately Resold

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

MF(A) s19

JOURNAL—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING

BOSTON POST, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVIAN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

ADVERTISER, MONDAY SEPTEMBER 19, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston)

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Oct. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall

GLOBE—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

MS s19

THE BOSTON TRAVELER SEPTEMBER 19, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY POST, SEPTEMBER 18, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

100 MUSICIANS

MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR

THIRTEENTH SEASON, 1910-11

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS On CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911. Omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, 1910, Jan. 13, Feb. 3, Feb. 24, and March 24, 1911.

24 CONCERTS ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911. Omitting Nov. 12, Dec. 10, 1910, Jan. 14, Feb. 4, Feb. 25, and March 25, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES
EMMY DESTINN
GERALDINE FARRAR
JEANNE JOMELLI
KIRKBY-LUNN
and
NELLIE MELBA
(only appearance in Boston)

Messrs.
FERRUCCIO BUSONI
CARLO BUONAMICI

MESSRS.
MISCHA ELMAN
CHARLES GILIBERT
JOSEF HOFMANN
FRANCIS MACMILLEN
SYLVAIN NOACK
ALWIN SCHROEDER
HEINRICH WARNKE
and
ANTON WITEK
(first appearance in Boston)

Tickets for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals 18.00 and 10.00 According to location

The $18 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 26, at 10 A. M.
The $10 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
The $18 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, THURSDAY, Sept. 29, at 10 A. M.
The $10 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, FRIDAY, Sept. 30, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will Be Delivered in the Hall, and must Be Paid for as Soon as Bought or They Will Be Immediately Resold

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—SEPTEMBER 18, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

100 MUSICIANS

MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR

THIRTIETH SEASON, 1910-11

24 Public Rehearsals on CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911. Omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, 1910, Jan. 13, Feb. 3, Feb. 24, and March 24, 1911.

24 Concerts ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911. Omitting Nov. 12, Dec. 10, 1910, Jan. 14, Feb. 4, Feb. 25, and March 25, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES
EMMY DESTINN
GERALDINE FARRAR
JEANNE JOMELLI
KIRKBY-LUNN
and
NELLIE MELBA
(only appearance in Boston)

Messrs.
FERRUCCIO BUSONI
CARLO BUONAMICI

MESSRS
MISCHA ELMAN
CHARLES GILIBERT
JOSEF HOFMANN
FRANCIS MACMILLEN
SYLVAIN NOACK
ALWIN SCHROEDER
HEINRICH WARNKE
and
ANTON WITEK
(first appearance in Boston)

Tickets for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals $18.00 and $10.00 According to location

The $18 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Monday, Sept. 26, at 10 A. M.
The $10 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
The $18 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Thursday, Sept. 29, at 10 A. M.
The $10 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, Friday, Sept. 30, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will Be Delivered in the Hall, and must Be Paid for as Soon as Bought or They Will Be Immediately Resold

HERALD, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall

BOSTON GLOBE—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

TF s20

HERALD, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS
Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS
Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

BOSTON POST, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

THE BOSTON JOURNAL—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING

RECORD, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston)

TRAVELER, TUESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 20, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1910
TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY,

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Oct. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

3t(A) s20

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 21, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston.)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Oct. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall. 2t s21

POST, WEDNESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 21, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

HERALD, WEDNESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 21, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 21, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

ADVERTISER, WEDNESDAY
SEPTEMBER 21, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.

s20 22 23 24(5)

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,
, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 21, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Oct. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

3t(A) s20

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY,
SEPTEMBER 21, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

BOSTON POST, THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 22, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 22, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING

HERALD, THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 22, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

BOSTON GLOBE—THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 22, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston.)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Oct. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall. 2t a21

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY
SEPTEMBER 22, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.

as20 22 23 24(5)

RECORD, THURSDAY
, SEPTEMBER 22, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.

As20 22 23 24(5) Rs22-2t(6)

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 22, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Oct. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

3t(A) s20

TRAVELER, THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 22, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

ADVERTISER, FRIDAY
SEPTEMBER 23, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.

As20 22 23 24(5) Rs22-2t(6)

RECORD, FRIDAY,
SEPTEMBER 23, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.

As20 22 23 24(5) Rs22-2t(6)

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY,
SEPTEMBER 23, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

MF(A) s19

HERALD, FRIDAY,
SEPTEMBER 23, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVAIN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

POST, FRIDAY,
SEPTEMBER 23, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)

Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVIAN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

JOURNAL—FR IDAY,
SEPTEMBER 23, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING

GLOBE—FRIDAY,
SEPTEMBER 23, 191

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

HERALD, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING

GLOBE—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats

At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

MS s19

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | AUCTION SALES SEASON TICKETS

MR. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats

At 10 A.M., Symphony Hall.

As20 22 23 24(5) Rs22-2t(5)

Christian Science Monitor
Saturday, September 24/1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26 AND 27, AND FOR THE CONCERTS THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29 AND 30, BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TICKET SALES

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL

Next Monday, Beginning at 10 o'Clock

Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, September 27, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $18.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, September 29, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Concerts, Friday, September 30, at 10 A. M.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES	MESSRS
EMMY DESTINN	MISCHA ELMAN
CERALDINE FARRAR	CHARLES GILIBERT
JEANNE JOMELLI	JOSEF HOFMANN
KIRKBY-LUNN	FRANCIS MACMILLEN
and	SYLVAIN NOACK
NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)	ALWIN SCHROEDER
Messrs	HEINRICH WARNKE
FERRUCCIO BUSONI	and
CARLO BUONAMICI	ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston)

HERALD, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE of $18.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (MONDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

Transcript Monday Sept. 26/1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (MONDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

(A)

THE BOSTON AMERICAN—SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS from Oct. 8, 1910, to April 29, 1911

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 7, 1910, to April 28, 1911

ASSISTING ARTISTS

Mesdames EMMY DESTINN, GERALDINE FARRAR, JEANNE JOMELLI, KIRKBY-LUNN and NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston) Messrs. FERRUCCIO BUSONI, CARLO BUONAMICI, MISCHA ELMAN, CHARLES GILIBERT, JOSEF HOFFMANN, FRANCIS MACMILLEN, SYLVIAN NOACK, ALWIN SCHROEDER, HEINRICH WARNKE and ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston).

AUCTION SALES TICKETS

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Sept. 26, $18 Seats
Tues., Sept. 27, $10 Seats

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Sept. 29, $18 Seats
Fri., Sept. 30, $10 Seats
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall

THE BOSTON SUNDAY POST, SEPTEMBER 25, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TICKET SALES

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL

Tomorrow (Monday) Beginning at 10 O'Clock

Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, September 27, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $18.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, September 29, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Concerts, Friday, September 30, at 10 A. M.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES	MESSRS
EMMY DESTINN	MISCHA ELMAN
GERALDINE FARRAR	CHARLES GILIBERT
JEANNE JOMELLI	JOSEF HOFMANN
KIRKBY-LUNN	FRANCIS MACMILLEN
and	SYLVAIN NOACK
NELLIE MELBA (only appearance in Boston)	ALWIN SCHROEDER
MESSRS	HEINRICH WARNKE
FERRUCCIO BUSONI	and
CARLO BUONAMICI	ANTON WITEK (first appearance in Boston)

ADVERTISER MONDAY SEPTEMBER 26/1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (MONDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

GLOBE—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (MONDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

[7]

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TICKET SALES

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL

Tomorrow (Monday), Beginning at 10 O'Clock

Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $18.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, Sept. 29, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Concerts, Friday, Sept. 30, at 10 A. M.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES
EMMY DESTINN
GERALDINE FARRAR
JEANNE JOMELLI
KIRKBY-LUNN
and
NELLIE MELBA
(only appearance in Boston)

Messrs
FERRUCCIO BUSONI
CARLO BUONAMICI

MESSRS
MISCHA ELMAN
CHARLES GILIBERT
JOSEF HOFMANN
FRANCIS MACMILLEN
SYLVAIN NOACK
ALWIN SCHROEDER
HEINRICH WARNKE
and
ANTON WITEK
(first appearance in Boston)

1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TICKET SALES

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL

Tomorrow (Monday), Beginning at 10 O'Clock

Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, September 27, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $18.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, September 29, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Concerts, Friday, September 30, at 10 A. M.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES
EMMY DESTINN
GERALDINE FARRAR
JEANNE JOMELLI
KIRKBY-LUNN
and
NELLIE MELBA
(only appearance in Boston)

Messrs
FERRUCCIO BUSONI
CARLO BUONAMICI

MESSRS
MISCHA ELMAN
CHARLES GILIBERT
JOSEF HOFMANN
FRANCIS MACMILLEN
SYLVAIN NOACK
ALWYN SCHROEDER
HEINRICH WARNKE
and
ANTON WITEK
(first appearance in Boston)

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TICKET SALES

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL

Tomorrow, (Monday) Beginning at 10 O'Clock

Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, September 27, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $18.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, September 29, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Concerts, Friday, September 30, at 10 A. M.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES
EMMY DESTINN
CERALDINE FARRAR
JEANNE JOMELLI
KIRKBY-LUNN
and
NELLIE MELBA
(only appearance in Boston)

Messrs
FERRUCCIO BUSONI
CARLO BUONAMICI

MESSRS
MISCHA ELMAN
CHARLES GILIBERT
JOSEF HOFMANN
FRANCIS MACMILLEN
SYLVAIN NOACK
ALWIN SCHROEDER
HEINRICH WARNKE
and
ANTON WITEK
(first appearance in Boston)

Record Monday September 26, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (MONDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

HERALD, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE of $18.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (MONDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

JOURNAL—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (MONDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH the DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

POST, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

JOURNAL—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK.

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

GLOBE—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK.

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

HERALD, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK.

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts, THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

SEPTEMBER 28, 1910
POST, WEDNESDAY.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL TOMORROW (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL TOMORROW (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

ADVERTISER, WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 28, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL TOMORROW (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

HERALD, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL TOMORROW (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL TOMORROW (THURSDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30. (A)

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 28, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

TICKET SALES

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for the Saturday Evening Concerts at SYMPHONY HALL Tomorrow (Thursday), Beginning at 10 o'Clock

Auction Sale of $10.00 Seats for Concerts, Friday, September 30, at 10 A. M.

ASSISTING ARTISTS

MESDAMES	MESSRS
EMMY DESTINN	MISCHA ELMAN
GERALDINE FARRAR	CHARLES GILIBERT
JEANNE JOMELLI	JOSEF HOFMANN
KIRKBY-LUNN	FRANCIS MACMILLEN
and	SYLVAIN NOACK
NELLIE MELBA	ALWIN SCHROEDER
(only appearance in Boston)	HEINRICH WARNKE
Messrs	and
FERRUCCIO BUSONI	ANTON WITEK
CARLO BUONAMICI	(first appearance in Boston)

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL TOMORROW (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

RECORD, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28. 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL TOMORROW (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL TOMORROW (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

BOSTON POST, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (MONDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, Tomorrow (FRIDAY), Sept. 30. (A)

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL THIS (FRIDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK.

HERALD, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (FRIDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK.

GLOBE—FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (FRIDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK.

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY
SEPTEMBER 27, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK

Auction Sale of $18 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 29. Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY
SEPTEMBER 29, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

POSTON POST, THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 29, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

BOSTON GLOBE—THURSDAY.
SEPTEMBER 29, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS THURSDAY MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts. FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 29, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (THURSDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

BOSTON JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 29, 1910.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $18.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL THIS (THURSDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $10 Seats for Concerts, TOMORROW, Sept. 30.

ADVERTISER, FRIDAY
SEPTEMBER 30, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (FRIDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK.

BOSTON POST, FRIDAY,
SEPTEMBER 30, 1910

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $10.00 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS at SYMPHONY HALL THIS (FRIDAY) MORNING at 10 O'CLOCK.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY,
OCTOBER 4, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
5t(A) o4

POST, WEDNESDAY,
OCTOBER 5, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8:00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN In honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office.

BOSTON HERALD, WEDNESDAY,
OCTOBER 5, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2:30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8:00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony. 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY,
OCTOBER 5, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
5t(A) o4

GLOBE—THURSDAY.
OCTOBER 6, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. – Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office. 3t o6

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY
OCTOBER 6, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony. 'Cello Concerto. Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office. o6-2t

JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 6, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
AX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 6, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
5t(A) o4

ADVERTISER, FRIDAY
OCTOBER 7, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony. 'Cello Concerto. Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office. o6-2t

GLOBE—FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 7, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office. 3t o6

BOSTON HERALD,
FRIDAY, OCTOBER

SYMPHONY HALL.
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th Anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony. 'Cello Concerto. Overture "Genoveva." Soloist, Alwin Schroeder

A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on [10]

BOSTON POST, FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 7, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8:00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conduct r
Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva."
Soloist, Alwin Schroeder
A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office.

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 7, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva."
Soloist, Alwin Schroeder
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. o4
5t(A)

GLOBE—SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 8, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva."
Soloist, Alwin Schroeder
A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office. 3t o6

HERALD, SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 8, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2:30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8:00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony. 'Cello Concerto. Overture "Genoveva."
Soloist, Alwin Schroeder
A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office.

JOURNAL—SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 8, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
AX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva."
Soloist, Alwin Schroeder
A limited number of seats for Sat. Eve. on sale at box office.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 8, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 7, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 8, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme from works of ROBERT SCHUMANN in honor of 100th anniversary of birth. Overture "Manfred," "Rhenish" Symphony, 'Cello Concerto, Overture "Genoveva."
Soloist, Alwin Schroeder
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. o4
5t(A)

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY,
OCTOBER 11, 1910

SANDERS THEATRE—Cambridge
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
EIGHT CONCERTS on Thursday Evenings, Oct. 20, Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 19, Feb. 9, March 2, March 30, April 27.
The assisting solo artists will be Mr. Chas. Gilibert, Miss Bessie Bell Collier, Mr. Josef Hofmann, Mr. Anton Witek, Mr. Edmond Clement, Mme. Kirby-Lunn, Miss Corneille Overstreet, Mr. Alwin Schroeder.
Season tickets $7. Subscribers of last season may secure the same seats by applying to Geo. H. Kent, University Book Store, on or before Wed., Oct. 12. Unclaimed seats on sale Sat., Oct. 15. 2t(A) o 11

GLOBE—THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 13, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. 3t o13

POST, THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 13, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8:00
Programme:
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

HERALD, THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 13, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2:30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8:00.
Programme:
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY
OCTOBER 13, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.
Programme:
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. o13-15

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 13, 1910

SANDERS THEATRE—Cambridge
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
EIGHT CONCERTS on Thursday Evenings, Oct. 20, Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 19, Feb. 9, March 2, March 30, April 27.
The assisting solo artists will be Miss Bessie Bell Collier, Mr. Josef Hofmann, Mr. Anton Witek, Mr. Edmond Clement, Mme. Kirby-Lunn, Miss Corneille Overstreet, Mr. Alwin Schroeder.
Season tickets $7. Subscribers of last season may secure the same seats by applying to Geo. H. Kent, University Book Store, on or before Wed., Oct. 12. Unclaimed seats on sale Sat., Oct. 15. 2t(A) o 11

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. o 13
3t(A)

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,
FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2:30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8:00.
Programme:
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Symphony in E, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

BOSTON POST, FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 14, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8:00
Programme:
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

JOURNAL—FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 14, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist;
Francis Macmillan.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 14, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2:30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8:00.
Programme:
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

BOSTON GLOBE—FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 14, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.
Programme:
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. 3t o13

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 14, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) o 13

BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 15, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2:30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

BOSTON GLOBE—SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 15, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. 3t o13

BOSTON JOURNAL—SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 15, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor.
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY
OCTOBER 15, 1910—

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. o13-15

BOSTON POST, SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 15, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8:00
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."
Soloist;
Francis Macmillen
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 15, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 14, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 15, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme:
Symphony in E minor, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, Goldmark; Overture, "Oberon."

Soloist:
Francis Macmillen.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) o 13

THE BOSTON HERALD,
OCTOBER 17, 1910.

SANDERS THEATRE—Cambridge

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

EIGHT CONCERTS on Thursday evenings, Oct. 20, Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 19, Feb. 9, March 2, March 30, April 27.

The assisting solo artists will be Miss Edith Thompson, Miss Bessie Bell Collier, Mr. Josef Hofmann, Mr. Anton Witek, Mr. Edmond Clement, Mme. Kirby-Lunn, Miss Corneille Overstreet, Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

Season tickets $7. On sale at Geo. H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Square, Cambridge.

SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON,
OCTOBER 16, 1910.

SANDERS THEATRE—Cambridge

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

EIGHT CONCERTS on Thursday evenings, Oct. 20, Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 19, Feb. 9, March 2, March 30, April 27.

The assisting solo artists will be Miss Edith Thompson, Miss Bessie Bell Collier, Mr. Josef Hofmann, Mr. Anton Witek, Mr. Edmond Clement, Mme. Kirby-Lunn, Miss Corneille Overstreet, Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

Season tickets $7. On sale at Geo. H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Square, Cambridge.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY,
OCTOBER 19, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 21, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 22, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op.26, No. 7, Sibelius.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
4t(A) o 19

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 20, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 21, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 22, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op.26, No. 7, Sibelius.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
4t(A) o 19

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT,
OCTOBER 21, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 21, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 22, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op.26, No. 7, Sibelius.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
4t(A) o 19

THE BOSTON HERALD,
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, Oct. 22, at 8.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Program:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op. 26, No. 7, Sibelius.

A limited number of seats on sale at box office.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT,
OCTOBER 22, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 21, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 22, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op. 26, No. 7, Sibelius.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
4t(A) o 19

BOSTON POST,
OCTOBER 22, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, Oct. 22, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op. 26, No. 7, Sibelius.

A limited number of seats on sale at box office.

BOSTON ADVERTISER,
OCTOBER 22, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, October 22, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIFDLER Conductor

Programme
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase,," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op. 26, No.7, Sibelius

A limited number of seats at box office.

BOSTON JOURNAL,
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, October 22, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op. 26, No. 7, Sibelius.

A limited number of seats on sale at box office.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON,
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This Evening, Oct. 22, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler Conductor

Programme:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op. 26, No. 7, Sibelius.

A limited number of seats for Saturd
Evening on sale at box office.

THE BOSTON GLOBE-
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, Oct. 22, at 8:00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor.

Programme:
Brandenburg Concerto for String Orchestra No. 3, Bach; Symphony D major No. 2, Beethoven; Symphonic Poem, "Le Poème de l'Extase," Scriabine; "Finlandia," op. 26, No.

A limited number of seats on sale at box office.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT,
OCTOBER 28, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 28, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 29, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program — Andante from Unfinished Symphony, Schubert. (In Memoriam Julia Ward Howe); Symphony No. 3, Brahms: Concerto for Violin, Beethoven; Comedy Overture, "Puck," Strube.
Soloist, Anton Witek.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
2t(A) o 28

THE BOSTON GLOBE-
OCTOBER 29, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, Oct. 29, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program — Andante from Unfinished Symphony, Schubert (In Memoriam Julia Ward Howe); Symphony No. 3, Brahms; Concerto for Violin, Beethoven; Comedy Overture, "Puck," Strube.
Soloist, Anton Witek.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

BOSTON JOURNAL-
OCTOBER 29, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, Oct. 29, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program — Andante from Unfinished Symphony, Schubert, (In Memoriam Julia Ward Howe); Symphony No. 3, Brahms; Concerto for Violin, Beethoven; Comedy Overture, "Puck," Strube.
Soloist, Anton Witek.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

BOSTON POST,
OCTOBER 29, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Sat.) Evening, Oct. 29, at 8:00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler Conductor

Programme — Andante from Unfinished Symphony, Schubert. (In Memoriam Julia Ward Howe); Symphony No. 3, Brahms; Concerto for Violin, Beethoven; Comedy Overture, "Puck," Strube.
Soloist, Anton Witek.

A limited number of seats for Saturday evening on sale at box office.

THE BOSTON HERALD,
OCTOBER 29, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, October 29, at 8.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program—Andante from Unfinished Symphony, Schubert. (In Memoriam Julia Ward Howe); Symphony No. 3, Brahms; Concerto for Violin, Beethoven; Comedy Overture, "Puck," Strube.
Soloist, Anton Witek.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 29, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, October 28, at 2.30.
Saturday Evening, October 29, at 8.00.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program — Andante from Unfinished Symphony, Schubert. (In Memoriam Julia Ward Howe); Symphony No. 3, Brahms: Concerto for Violin, Beethoven; Comedy Overture, "Puck," Strube.
Soloist, Anton Witek.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
2t(A) o 28

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,
NOVEMBER 6, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

Three Concerts
THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
175 Voices
MAX FIEDLER
Conductor
THE ENTIRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)

Thursday Eve., Dec. 1, 1910, at 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES GEORGE HARRIS, Jr
ROBERT MAITLAND

Thursday Eve., Feb. 16, 1911, at 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
The Children's Crusade
SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
EDMOND CLEMENT
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
And Others
A Children's Chorus of 100

Good Friday Eve., April 14, 1911, At 7.30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN JANET SPENCER
GEORGE HAMLIN DAVID BISHPHAM
A Boy Choir of 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00.
On sale at Box Office, Symphony Hall, Monday, November 14.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis will be filled in order of receipt before the opening of the public sale.

[12]

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
NOVEMBER 5, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, 1910, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
Part I
(First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - - (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, 1911, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend
The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - - - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM - (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, 1911, at 7.30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
and A BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00.
On sale at Box Office, Symphony Hall, Monday, NOVEMBER 14.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis will be filled in order of receipt before the opening of the public sale.

BOSTON SUNDAY POST,
NOVEMBER 6, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, 1910, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
Part I
(First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr. - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, 1911, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend
The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM - (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, 1911, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
and A BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00
On sale at Box Office, Symphony Hall, Monday, NOVEMBER 14.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis will be filled in order of receipt before the opening of the public sale.

BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE–
–NOVEMBER 6. 110.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, 1910, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
Part 1
(First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS Jr. - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, 1911, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend
The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a Chorus of 100 Children

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, 1911, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
and a BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00.
On sale at Box Office, Symphony Hall, Monday, NOVEMBER 14.
Mail orders, accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis, will be filled in order of receipt before the opening of the public sale.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN–
SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THREE CONCERTS

THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
175 Voices
MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

THE ENTIRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)

Thursday Eve., Dec. 1, 1910, at 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.
ROBERT MAITLAND

Thursday Eve., Feb. 16, 1911, at 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
The Children's Crusade
SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
EDMOND CLEMENT
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
And Others
A Children's Chorus of 100

Good Friday Eve., April 14, 1911
At 7:30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, JANET SPENCER,
GEORGE HAMLIN, DAVID BISPHAM
A Boy Choir of 50

Season tickets for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00.
On sale at Box Office, Symphony Hall, Monday, November 14.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis will be filled in order of receipt before the opening of the public sale.

SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON,
NOVEMBER 6, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 VOICES)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, 1910, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
Part 1
(First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr. - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, 1911, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend
The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM - (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
and a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, 1911, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
and A BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00.
On sale at Box Office, Symphony Hall, Monday, NOVEMBER 14.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis will be filled in order of receipt before the opening of the public sale.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
NOVEMBER 12. 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
Part I
(First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - - (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend
The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - - - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM - (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 7.30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
and A BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, on sale.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis

BOSTON SUNDAY POST,
NOVEMBER 13, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S OMAR KHAYYAM Part I (First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - - (The Narrator)
CLAUCE CUNNINGHAM - (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S THE PASSION MUSIC (St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass.
and a BOY CHOIR OF FIFTY

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, on sale. Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis.

SYMPHONY HALL, Tomorrow, Monday Afternoon, Nov. 14, at 2:30

JOSEF HOFMANN
First Boston Appearance in Seven Years

Program: Sonate Op. 111, Beethoven; Scherzo, E minor, Mendelssohn; Phantasie, C major, Schumann; Ballade G minor, Nocturne E-flat major, Valse A-flat major, Scherzo, B minor, Chopin; Funerailles, Consolation, Campanella, Liszt.

Tickets, $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale.

SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, NOVEMBER 13, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S OMAR KHAYYAM Part I (First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S THE PASSION MUSIC (St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
and a BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, on Sale. Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis.

SYMPHONY HALL, Tomorrow, Monday Afternoon, November 14, at 2:30

JOSEF HOFMANN
First Boston Appearance in Seven Years

Program: Sonate Op. 111, Beethoven; Scherzo, E minor, Mendelssohn; Phantasie C major, Schumann; Ballade G minor, Nocturne E-flat major, Valse A-flat major, Scherzo B minor, Chopin; Funerailles, Consolation, Campanella, Liszt.

Tickets, $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale.

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
THE ENTIRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, 1910, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES GEORGE HARRIS, J
ROBERT MAITLAND
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, 1911, AT 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
The Children's Crusade
SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY, EDMOND CLEMENT, EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD, CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM.
A Children's Chorus of 100
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APRIL 14, AT 7.30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN JANET SPENCER
GEORGE HAMLIN DAVID BISPHAM.
A Boy Choir of 50
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, now on sale.

GLOBE—MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Monday) Afternoon, at 2:30
JOSEF
HOFMANN
The Greatest Pianist Now in America
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

JOURNAL—MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Monday) Afternoon at 2.30
JOSEF
HOFMANN
The Greatest Pianist Now in America
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

BOSTON POST, NOVEMBER 14, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Monday) Afternoon, at 2:30
JOSEF
HOFMANN
The Greatest Pianist Now in America.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. On Sale

BOSTON POST, NOVEMBER 16, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DECEMBER 1, FEBRUARY 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—NOVEMBER 13, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S OMAR KHAYYAM Part 1 (First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM - (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S THE PASSION MUSIC (St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
And a BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, on sale. Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis.

SYMPHONY HALL, Tomorrow, Monday Afternoon, November 14, at 2:30

JOSEF HOFMANN
First Boston Appearance in Seven Years

Program: Sonate Op. 111, Beethoven; Scherzo, E minor, Mendelssohn; Phantasie C major, Schumann; Ballade G minor, Nocturne E-flat major, Valse A-flat major, Scherzo B minor, Chopin; Funerailles, Consolation, Campanella, Liszt.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL, Tomorrow (Monday) Afternoon, at 2.30

JOSEF HOFMANN
First Boston Appearance in Seven Years

Program: Sonate Op. 111, Beethoven; Scherzo, E minor, Mendelssohn; Phantasie, C major, Schumann; Ballade, G minor, Nocturne, E-flat major, Valse, A-flat major, Scherzo, B minor, Chopin; Funerailles, Consolation, Campanella, Liszt

Tickets, $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale Friday, Nov. 4.

SYMPHONY HALL
THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
THE ENTIRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, 1910, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston).
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, JR., ROBERT MAITLAND
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, 1911, AT 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
The Children's Crusade
SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY, EDMOND CLEMENT, EDITH CHAPMAN-GOULD, CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM.
A Children's Chorus of 100
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APRIL 14, at 7.30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN JANET SPENCER
GEORGE HAMLIN DAVID BISPHAM
A Boy Choir of 50
Season tickets for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, now on sale.

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY NOVEMBER 15, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
THE ENTIRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, 1910, AT 8,
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston.)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS Jr
ROBERT MAITLAND.
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, 1911, AT 8.
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND.
The Children's Crusade
SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY, EDMOND CLEMENT, EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD, CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM.
A Children's Chorus of 100.
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APRIL 14, AT 7.30
JOHAN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN JANET SPENCER
GEORGE HAMLIN DAVID BISPHAM.
A Boy Choir of 50.
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, now on sale.
Single tickets on sale Friday, Nov. 25.

HERALD, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR T E THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SY PHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14, NOW IN PROGRE S, PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.00

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

RECORD, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16. 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY and BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis. n16 19

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

GLOBE—THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17. 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis. ThS n17

HERALD, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

SANDERS THEATRE, Cambridge
THIS (THURSDAY) EVENING AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist:
MISS BESSIE BELL COLLIER.
Program: Symphony E Minor, No. 2, Rachmaninoff; Concerto for Violin, G Minor, Bruch; Rhapsody for Orchestra "Espana," Chabrier.
A limited number of tickets at Theatre evening of Concert.

POST, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DECEMBER 1, FEBRUARY 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

TRAVELER, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
THE ENTIRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, 1910, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performances in Boston)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, JR., ROBERT MAITLAND.
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, 1911, AT 8
TIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGAND
The Children's Crusade
SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY, EDMOND CLEMENT, EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD, CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM.
A Children's Chorus of 100
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., April 14, at 7:30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, JANET SPENCER, GEORGE HAMLIN, DAVID BISPHAM.
A Boy Choir of 50.
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, now on sale.
Single seats, $2, $1.50, $1, Nov. 25.

MONITOR, BOSTON NOVEMBER 19, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
THE ENTIRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, 1910, AT 8.
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
(First performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
Margaret Keyes, George Harris, Jr. Robert Maitland.
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, 1911, AT 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
SOLOISTS
Corinne Rider-Kelsey, Edmond Clement, Edith Chapman-Goold, Claude Cunningham.
A Children's Chorus of 100
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APR. 14, at 7:30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
Marie Zimmerman, Janet Spencer, George Hamlin, David Bispham.
A Boy Choir of 50
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, now on sale.
Single seats Nov. 25, $1.00, $1.50, $2.

RECORD, SATURDAY NOVEMBER 19, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY and BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis. n16 19

Herald Nov. 19 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

Saturday Evening, November 19, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Symphonic Poem, "The Culprit Fay," Hadley (Conducted by the composer); Concerto for Pianoforte in F Minor, Chopin; Suite in G Major, No. 3, Op. 55, Tschaikowsky. Soloist, Carlo Buonamici.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S OMAR KHAYYAM Part I (First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - - (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, at 8

CABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - - - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM - (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 7.30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S THE PASSION MUSIC (St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
and A BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, on sale.
Public Sale of Single Tickets Friday, Nov. 25, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis

SYMPHONY HALL

Friday Afternoon, November 18, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, November 19, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Symphonic Poem, "The Culprit Fay," Hadley (Conducted by the composer); Concerto for Pianoforte in F Minor, Chopin; Suite in G Major, No. 3, Op. 55, Tschaikowsky. Soloist, Carlo Buonamici.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
8t(A) n17

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

GLOBE—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis. ThS n17

POST, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 191(

SYMPHONY HALL

Saturday Evening, Nov. 19, at 8:00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Symphonic Poem, "The Culprit Fay," Hadley (conducted by the composer); Concerto for Pianoforte in F minor, Chopin; Suite in G major, No. 3, op. 55, Tschaikowsky. Soloist, Carlo Buonamici.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at Box Office.

ADVERTISER SATURDAY NOVEMBER 19, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

Saturday Evening, November 19, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Symphonic Poem, "The Culprit Fay," composer); Concerto for Pi- Hadley (Conducted by the anoforte in F Minor. Chopin; Suite in G Major, No. 3, Op. 55, Tschaikowsky. Soloist, Carlo Buonamici.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

HERALD, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr., ROBERT MAITLAND
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, 1911, AT 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
The Children's Crusade
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APRIL 14, at 7:30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00; Single Tickets, $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, Friday, Nov. 25.

SYMPHONY HALL
THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
THE ENTIRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
THURSDAY EVE., Dec. 1, 1910, at 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.
ROBERT MAITLAND
THURSDAY EVE., Feb. 16, 1911, at 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
The Children's Crusade
SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY, EDMOND CLEMENT, EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD, CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM.
A Children's Chorus of 100
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., April 14, at 7:30, JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN JANET SPENCER
GEORGE HAMLIN DAVID BISPHAM
A Boy Choir of 50
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, now on sale.

GLOBE—TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

SINGLE TICKETS $2, $1.50 and $1. On sale Nov. 25.

Mail orders received Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, NOVEMBER 20, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
Part 1
First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr. - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend
The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY - - (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD - - (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT - (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
And a BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, on sale.
Public Sale of Single Tickets Friday, Nov. 25, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis.

BOSTON SUNDAY POST, NOVEMBER 20, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 1, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
Part I
(First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES . . (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr. . . . (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND . (The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend
The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY . . (Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD . . (Allys)
EDMOND CLEMENT . . (The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM . (An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
And a CHORUS of 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass.
and a BOY CHOIR OF FIFTY.

Season tickets for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, on sale.
Public Sale of Single Tickets Friday, Nov. 25, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis.

BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—NOVEMBER 20, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE CECILIA SOCIETY (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THURSDAY EVENING, DEC. 1, at 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
Part I
(First Time in Boston)

SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES.....(The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.....(The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND.....(The Philosopher)

THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 16, at 8

GABRIEL PIERNE'S Musical Legend
The Children's Crusade

SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY.....(Alain)
EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD.....(Ally)
EDMONT CLEMENT.....(The Narrator)
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM....(An Old Sailor)
AND OTHERS
AND A CHORUS OF 100 CHILDREN

GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 7:30

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
THE PASSION MUSIC
(St. Matthew)

SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
AND A BOY CHOIR OF 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, on sale.
Public Sale of Single Tickets Friday, Nov. 25, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.
Mail orders accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis

---

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY NOVEMBER 26, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Saturday Evening, November 26, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme—Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K546), Mozart; Concerto, D major, for Violin, Brahms; Rondes du Printemps, "Images" pour Orchestre, No. 3, Debussy; Tone Poem, "Death and Transfiguration," Strauss. Soloist, Prof. Felix Berber.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
THE ENTIRE
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
THE ENTIRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, 1910, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES GEORGE HARRIS, Jr
ROBERT MAITLAND

THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, 1911, at 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
The Children's Crusade
SOLOISTS
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY, EDMOND CLEMENT, EDITH CHAPMAN-GOOLD, CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM.
A Children's Chorus of 100

GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APRIL 14, at 7.30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
(St. Matthew)
SOLOISTS
MARIE ZIMMERMAN JANET SPENCER
GEORGE HAMLIN DAVID BISPHAM
A Boy Choir of 50

Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, now on sale.
Single Seats, Friday, Nov. 25.

POST, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS FOR THE THREE CONCERTS BY THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ON THE EVENINGS OF DEC. 1, FEB. 16 AND APRIL 14 NOW IN PROGRESS. PRICES $6, $4.50 AND $3.

Single Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Public Sale Friday, Nov. 25.

Mail orders received. Checks payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

GLOBE—THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conducter
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
Margaret Keyes, George Harris, Jr
Robert Maitland
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, AT 8
The Children's Crusade
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., April 14, at 7:30
The Passion Music
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6, $4.50, $3; Single Tickets $2, $1.50 and $1. Sale opens tomorrow, Friday.

HERALD, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OmarKhayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
Margaret Keyes, George Harris, Jr.,
Robert Maitland
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, AT 8
The Children's Crusade
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APRIL 14, at 7:30
The Passion Music
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00 $4.50, $3.00; Single Tickets, $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Sale Opens Tomorrow, Friday.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
Margaret Keyes, George Harris, Jr.
Robert Maitland
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, AT 8
The Children's Crusade
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APRIL 14, at 7.30
The Passion Music
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00; Single Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Sale opens tomorrow, Friday.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDA NOVEMBER 23, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
(First Performance in Boston)
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.
ROBERT MAITLAND
THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 16, 1911, AT 8
PIERNE'S MUSICAL LEGEND
The Children's Crusade
GOOD FRIDAY EVE., APRIL 14, AT 7.30
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
The Passion Music
Season tickets, for the three concerts, $6.00, $4.50, $3.00, now on sale. Single Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, Friday, Nov. 25.

GLOBE NOVEMBER 25, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
SEAT SALE OPENS TODAY
For
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OmarKhayyam
SOLOISTS
Margaret Keyes, George Harris, Jr., Robert Maitla
Single Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.
now on sale.

RECORD, SATURDAY. NOVEMBER 26. 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, JR., ROBERT MAITLAND
Single tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

TRAVELER, SATURDAY NOVEMBER 26, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL.
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Boston Symphony Orchestra
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
Omar Khayyam
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, JR., ROBERT MAITLAND
Single Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

[16]

SUNDAY GLOBE—NOVEMBER 27, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Dec. 1 at 8

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S

OMAR KHAYYAM

SOLOISTS

MARGARET KEYES - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr. - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - (The Philospher)

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale. Checks payable to C. A. Ellis.

SUNDAY POST, NOVEMBER 27, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Dec. 1, at 8

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S

OMAR KHAYYAM

SOLOISTS

MARGARET KEYES - - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr - - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - (The Philosopher)

Tickets, $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale. Mail orders payable to C. A. Ellis.

HERALD, BOSTON, NOVEMBER 27, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Dec. 1, at 8

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S

OMAR KHAYYAM

SOLOISTS

MARGARET KEYES - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr. - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND (The Philosopher)

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale. Mail Orders payable to Chas. A. Ellis.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE ENTIRE CECILIA SOCIETY

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

THE ENTIRE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S

Omar Khayyam

SOLOISTS

MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr., ROBERT MAITLAND

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

HERALD, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.
ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

POST, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, JR., ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

ADVERTISER, MONDAY NOVEMBER 28, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS Jr., ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

JOURNAL—MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr., ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

HERALD, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.
ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

POST, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, JR., ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

POST, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THURSDAY EVE., DEC. 1, AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, JR., ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY DECEMBER 1, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS Jr., ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

POST, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
TONIGHT AT 8
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, JR., ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. Admission $1.00

HERALD, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.
ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr., ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Boston Symphony Orchestra
TONIGHT (Thursday) at 8.
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.
ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, now on sale.

GLOBE—THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8
CECILIA SOCIETY
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S
OMAR KHAYYAM
SOLOISTS
MARGARET KEYES, GEORGE HARRIS, Jr.
ROBERT MAITLAND
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Dec. 1

THE ENTIRE Boston Symphony Orchestra (100 Musicians)

THE ENTIRE Cecilia Society (175 Voices)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

GRANVILLE BANTOCK'S

OMAR KHAYYAM

SOLOISTS

MARGARET KEYES - (The Beloved)
GEORGE HARRIS, Jr - - (The Poet)
ROBERT MAITLAND - (The Philosopher)

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale.

SYMPHONY HALL

Friday Afternoon November 25, at 2.30
Saturday Evening November 26 at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme—Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K546), Mozart; Concerto, D major, for Violin, Brahms; Rondes du Printemps, "Images" pour Orchestre, No. 3, Debussy; Tone Poem, "Death and Transfiguration," Strauss Soloist, Prof. Felix Berber.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

2t(A) n 25

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL

Friday Afternoon, December 16, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, December 17, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme—Symphony No. 7, Beethoven; Concerto for Pianoforte, D minor, No. 4, Rubinstein; "Rondes de Printemps: Images," No. 3, DeBussy; Overture, "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner. Soloist, Josef Hofmann.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

3t(A) d 15

TRANSCRIPT, FRI[illegible]
DECEMBER 23, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, December 23, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, December 24, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Prelude, "Haensel and Gretel," Humperdinck; Symphony, E-minor, "From the New World," Dvorák; Concerto for Violin, F-minor, Lalo; "Academic Festival" Overture, Brahms.
Soloist, Sylvain Noack.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) d 22

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
DECEMBER 24, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, December 23, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, December 24, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Prelude, "Haensel and Gretel," Humperdinck; Symphony, E-minor, "From the New World," Dvorák; Concerto for Violin, F-minor, Lalo; "Academic Festival" Overture, Brahms.
Soloist, Sylvain Noack.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) d 22

JOURNAL—SATURDAY,
DECEMBER 31, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Symphony, C major, "Jupiter," Mozart; Hymn to Pallas Athene, Saint-Saens; Lia's Air from "L'Enfant Prodigue," Debussy; Tone Poem, "Ein Heldenleben." Strauss.
Soloist Mme. JOMELLI.
A limited number of seats at box office.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c. First 10 rows on Floor, $2. Now on Sale.

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY
DECEMBER 31, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Symphony, C major, "Jupiter," Mozart; Hymn to Pallas Athene, Saint-Saens; Lia's Air from "L'Enfant Prodigue," Debussy; Tone Poem, "Ein Heldenleben," Strauss.
Soloist, Mme. Jomelli.
A limited number of seats at box office.

HERALD, SATURDAY
DECEMBER 31, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Saturday) Evening at 8.00.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Symphony, C major, "Jupiter," Mozart; Hymn to Pallas Athene, Saint-Saens; Lia's Air from "L'Enfant Prodigue," Debussy; Tone Poem, "Ein Heldenleben," Strauss.
Soloist, Mme. Jomelli.
A limited number of seats at box office.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
DECEMBER 31, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, December 30, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, December 31, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Symphony, C major, "Jupiter," Mozart; Hymn to Pallas Athéné, Saint-Saens; Lia's Air from "L'Enfant Prodigue," Debussy; Tone Poem, "Ein Heldenleben," Strauss.
Soloist Mme. Jomelli.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) d 29

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

POST, SATURDAY
DECEMBER 31, 1910

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c. First 10 rows on floor, $2. Now on sale.

Issued Saturday
Dec 31, 1910.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets 1.50, 1.00, 75c and 50c. First 10 rows on Floor, $2. Now on Sale.

HERALD, BOSTON,
JANUARY 1, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

POST, MONDAY,
JANUARY 2, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, at 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

HERALD, MONDAY,
JANUARY 2, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY
JANUARY 3, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c
TuWF(A) ja 3

HERALD, THURSDAY,
JANUARY 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY,
JANUARY 4, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c. First 10 rows on Floor, $2. Now on sale.
MWF ja2

MONITOR, BOSTON
JANUARY 4, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

MONITOR, BOSTON.
JANUARY 4, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

POST, WEDNESDAY,
JANUARY 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, at 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

TRANSCRIPT, JANUARY 4, 191[illegible]

SYMPHONY HALL
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c
TuWF(A) ja 3

RECORD, WEDNESDAY,
JANUARY 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.
ja3 4 5 7

RECORD, THURSDAY,
JANUARY 5, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.
ja3 4 5 7

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
JANUARY 5, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, January 6, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, January 7, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Symphony, D major, No. 2, Sibelius; Symphonie Espagnole of Violin and Orchestra, Lalo; "In a Moorish Café," from a "Moorish Rhapsody," Humperdinck.
Soloist Mischa Elman
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) ja 5

JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
JANUARY 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c. First 10 rows on Floor, $2. Now on Sale.

GLOBE—FRIDAY,
JANUARY 6, 19[illegible]

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c. First 10 rows on Floor, $2. Now on sale.
MWF ja2

POST, FRIDAY,
JANUARY 6, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, at 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

RECORD, SATURDAY,
JANUARY 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.
ja3 4 5 7

JOURNAL—SATURDAY,
JANUARY 7, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c. First 10 rows on Floor, $2. Now on Sale.

HERALD, SATURDAY,
JANUARY 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

MONITOR, BOSTON,
JANUARY 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
JANUARY 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, January 6, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, January 7, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Symphony, D major, No. 2, Sibelius; Symphonie Espagnole of Violin and Orchestra, Lalo; "In a Moorish Café," from a "Moorish Rhapsody," Humperdinck.
Soloist Mischa Elman
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) ja 5

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT TUES. AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
HAROLD OSBORN SMITH, Accompanist
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1, 75c and 50c.

SUNDAY GLOBE—
JANUARY 8, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Next TUES. AFTERNOON, Jan. 10, 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
HAROLD OSBORN SMITH, Accompanist
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1, 75c and 50c

HERALD, BOSTON,
JANUARY 8, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT TUES. AFTERNOON, Jan. 10, 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
HAROLD OSBORN SMITH, Accompanist
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1, 75c and 50c.

SUNDAY POST,
JANUARY 8, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Tues. Afternoon, Jan. 10, 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
HAROLD OSBORN SMITH, Accompanist
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1, 75c & 50c

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,
JANUARY 8, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Next TUES. AFTERNOON, Jan. 10, 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
HAROLD OSBORN SMITH, Accompanist
Tickets, $2.00, $1.50, $1, 75c and 50c

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY
JANUARY 9, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW (TUESDAY) AFT'NOON, at 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

[18]

POST, TUESDAY,
JANUARY 10, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Tuesday) Afternoon, at 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

GLOBE—TUESDAY,
JANUARY 10, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (Tues) AFTERNOON At 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

HERALD, TUESDAY,
JANUARY 10, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Tues.) Afternoon, Jan. 10, at 2:30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

JOURNAL—TUESDAY,
JANUARY 10, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (Tues.) Afternoon, Jan. 10, at 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY,
JANUARY 10, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Tuesday) Afternoon, Jan. 10, at 2.30
SIG. ALESSANDRO
BONCI
IN SONG RECITAL.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

POST, THURSDAY,
JANUARY 12, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THURS. EVENING, JAN. 26, AT 8
Concert In Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Public Sale Monday, Jan. 16.

HERALD, THURSDAY,
JANUARY 12, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
THURS. EVENING, JANUARY 26, AT 8
Concert In Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Public Sale Monday, Jan. 16.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY
JANUARY 11, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THURS. EVENING, JANUARY 26, AT 8
Concert In Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Public Sale Monday, Jan. 16. (A)

POST, SATURDAY,
JANUARY 14, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THURS. EVENING, JAN. 26, AT 8
Concert In Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Public Sale Monday, Jan. 16.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
JANUARY 19, 1911

SANDERS THEATRE, - CAMBRIDGE
TONIGHT (THURS.) EVENING, AT 8
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST, ANTON WITEK.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, January 20, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, January 21, at 8.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Symphony, C major, Schubert; Symphonic Poem, "Le Chasseur Mandit," Franck; a, Omrphales' Spinning Wheel, b, Danse Macabre, St. Saëns.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) ja 19

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
JANUARY 21, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, January 20, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, January 21, at 8.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Symphony, C major, Schubert; Symphonic Poem, "Le Chasseur Mandit," Franck; Symphonic Poem, No. 1, "Le Rouet d'Omphale," Saint Saëns; "Danse Macabre," op. 40, Saint Saëns.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) ja 19

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
JANUARY 26, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, January 27, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, January 28, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Tone Poem, "To a Drama," Gernsheim; Variations and Fugue to a Merry Theme by Hiller (1770) op. 100, Reger; Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, A minor, op. 33, Saint - Saëns; Overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner.
Soloist, Mr. Warnke.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) ja 26

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, January 27, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, January 28, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Tone Poem, "To a Drama," Gernsheim; Variations and Fugue to a Merry Theme by Hiller (1770) op. 100, Reger; Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, A minor, op. 33, Saint - Saëns; Overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner.
Soloist, Mr. Warnke.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) ja 26

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8
CECILIA SOCIETY AND THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierné

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD	Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN	Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM	Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE	Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD	Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

HERALD, BOSTON, JANUARY 29, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8
THE CECILIA SOCIETY and the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD	Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN	Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM	Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE	Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD	Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale, Box Office, Symphony Hall

SUNDAY POST, JANUARY 29, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8
THE CECILIA SOCIETY and the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne.

Mrs. Edith Chapman Goold	Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey
Mrs. Frances Dunton Brown	Mr. Edmond Clement
Mr. Claude Cunningham	Mr. Earl Cartwright
Mrs. Alice Bates Rice	Miss Laura F. Eaton
Mrs. Bertha Cushing Child	Mrs. Emily Wentworth Carter

CHORUS OF 175. CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100. ORCHESTRA OF 100
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, JANUARY 29, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8
The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

MRS. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD	MRS. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
MRS. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN	MR. EDMOND CLEMENT
MR. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM	MR. EARL CARTWRIGHT
MRS. ALICE BATES RICE	MISS LAURA F. EATON
MRS. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD	MRS. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

SUNDAY GLOBE—JANUARY 29, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8
THE CECILIA SOCIETY AND THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD	Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN	Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM	Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE	Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD	Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY, JANUARY 27, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, January 27, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, January 28, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Tone Poem, "To a Drama," Gernsheim; Variations and Fugue to a Merry Theme by Hiller (1770) op. 100, Reger; Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, A minor, op. 33, Saint - Saëns; Overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner.
Soloist, Mr. Warnke.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) ja 26

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,
FEBRUARY 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THURSDAY EVG., FEB. 16, AT 8
The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne
Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

GLOBE—TUESDAY
FEBRUARY 7, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Thursday Ev'g, Feb. 16, at 8
The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne
Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

Transcript Feb. 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierné

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

BOSTON SINDAY POST, FEBRUARY 5, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

THE CECILIA SOCIETY and BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne.

Mrs. Edith Chapman Goold
Mrs. Frances Dunton Brown
Mr. Claude Cunningham
Mrs. Alice Bates Rice
Mrs. Bertha Cushing Child
Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey
Mr. Edmond Clement
Mr. Earl Cartwright
Miss Laura F. Eaton
Mrs. Emily Wentworth Carter

CHORUS OF 175. CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100. ORCHESTRA OF 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

BOSTON JOURNAL FEBRUARY 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierné

MRS. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
MRS. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
MR. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
MRS. ALICE BATES RICE
MRS. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
MRS. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
MR. EDMUND CLEMENT
MR. EARL CARTWRIGHT
MISS LAURA F. EATON
MRS. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Ticket $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

Herald Feb. 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mr. EDMUND CLEMENT
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

POST, TUESDAY FEBRUARY 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL

Thursday Ev'g, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne.

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY 8, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL

Thursday Ev'g, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierné

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE

THURSDAY EVENING, FEB. 9, AT 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Soloist, EDMOND CLEMENT

Program—Prelude to "Hänsel und Gretel," Humperdinck; Symphony No. 5, E-minor, Tschaikowsky; Aria—(a) "Aubade," from "Le Roi d'Y's," Lalo—(b) Air from "Le Mage, Massenet—(c) "Le Reve," from "Manon," Massenet; Symphonic Poem, No. 1, "Omphale's Spinning Wheel," Saint-Saëns; Songs with Piano—(a) "Mai," Hahn—(b) "Le Cavalier," Dlémer—(c) "Bergere Legere," Weckerlin; Symphonic Poem, "Danse Macabre," Saint-Saëns.

A limited number of tickets at theatre evening of concert. 2t(A) fe 8

SYMPHONY HALL

Friday Afternoon, February 10, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, February 11, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Overture, D major, Handel; Symphony E flat major, Haydn; Concerto for Piano, F minor, No. 4, Scharwenka; Symphonic Poem, The "Moldau," Smetana. Soloist, Mr. Scharwenka.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. 3t(A) fe 9

Transcript Feb. 10, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL

Friday Afternoon, February 10, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, February 11, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Overture, D major, Handel; Symphony E flat major, Haydn; Concerto for Piano, F minor, No. 4, Scharwenka; Symphonic Poem, The "Moldan," Smetana. Soloist, Mr. Scharwenka.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. 2t(A) fe 9

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL

Thursday Ev'g, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierné

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

MWTh(A) fe 6

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE

THURSDAY EVENING, FEB. 9, AT 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Soloist, EDMOND CLEMENT

Program—Prelude to "Hänsel und Gretel," Humperdinck; Symphony No. 5, E-minor, Tschaikowsky; Aria—(a) "Aubade," from "Le Roi d'Y's," Lalo—(b) Air from "Le Mage, Massenet—(c) "Le Reve," from "Manon," Massenet; Symphonic Poem, No. 1, "Omphale's Spinning Wheel," Saint-Saëns; Songs with Piano—(a) "Mai," Hahn—(b) "Le Cavalier," Dlémer—(c) "Bergere Legere," Weckerlin; Symphonic Poem, "Danse Macabre," Saint-Saëns.

A limited number of tickets at theatre evening of concert. 2t(A) fe 8

SYMPHONY HALL

Friday Afternoon, February 10, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, February 11, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Overture, D major, Handel; Symphony E flat major, Haydn; Concerto for Piano, F minor, No. 4, Scharwenka; Symphonic Poem, The "Moldan," Smetana. Soloist, Mr. Scharwenka.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office. 3t(A) fe 9

GLOBE—FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL

Thursday Ev'g, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

Traveler Feb 11 1911

SYMPHONY HALL

THURSDAY EVG., FEB. 16, AT 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

[20]

Transcript Feb 11 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, February 10, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, February 11, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Overture, D major, Handel; Symphony E flat major, Haydn; Concerto for Piano, F minor, No. 4, Scharwenka; Symphonic Poem, The "Moldau," Smetana Soloist, Mr. Scharwenka.

A limited number of seats for Saturday evening on sale at box office.

fe 9

SYMPHONY HALL, Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society
AND
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierné

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

SOLOISTS

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

CHICKERING HALL, Monday Evening, Feb. 13, at 8

THE LONGY CLUB CHAMBER MUSIC FOR WIND INSTRUMENTS

Tickets at Symphony Hall

SUNDAY POST, FEBRUARY 12, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Next Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society
AND
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

SOLOISTS

Mrs. Edith Chapman Goold
Mrs. Frances Dunton Brown
Mr. Claude Cunningham
Mrs. Alice Bates Rice
Mrs. Bertha Cushing Child
Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey
Mr. Edmond Clement
Mr. Earl Cartwright
Miss Laura F. Eaton
Mrs. Emily Wentworth Carter

CHORUS OF 175. CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100. ORCHESTRA OF 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

CHICKERING HALL, Tomorrow (Monday) Evg. at 8:15

THE LONGY CLUB Second Concert Chamber Music for Wind Instruments

TICKETS AT SYMPHONY HALL

HERALD, BOSTON, FEBRUARY 12, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Next Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society
AND
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

SOLOISTS

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

CHICKERING HALL, Tomorrow (Monday) Evening, at 8.15

The LONGY CLUB SECOND CONCERT CHAMBER MUSIC FOR WIND INSTRUMENTS

Tickets at Symphony Hall

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, February 17, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, February 18, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner; "Don Quixote," Introduction Theme and Variations, Strauss; Concerto, C-minor, No. 8, Beethoven; Suite, "Turandot," Busoni.

Soloist, Busoni

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

fe 16

SUNDAY GLOBE—FEBRUARY 12, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Next Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society
AND
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

SOLOISTS:

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER

CHORUS OF 175 CHILDREN'S CHORUS OF 100 ORCHESTRA OF 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on Sale Box Office, Symphony Hall

CHICKERING HALL, Tomorrow (Monday) Evening at 8:15

THE LONGY CLUB Second Concert Chamber Music for Wind Instruments

Tickets at Symphony Hall.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Thursday Evening, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100 Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

RECORD, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Thursday Ev'g, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

POST, THURSDAY FEBRUARY 16, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (THURS.) EVENING AT 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

[21]

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY FEBRUARY 14, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Thursday Ev'g, Feb. 16, at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow (Thursday) Evening at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY FEBRUARY 16, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Thurs.) Evening, at 8

The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne

Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT

Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY
FEBRUARY 16, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
This (Thurs.) Eve'g at 8
The Cecilia Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra
THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE
Musical Legend by Gabriel Pierne
Mrs. EDITH CHAPMAN GOOLD
Mrs. CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY
Mrs. FRANCES DUNTON BROWN
Mrs. ALICE BATES RICE
Miss LAURA F. EATON
Mrs. BERTHA CUSHING CHILD
Mrs. EMILY WENTWORTH CARTER
Mr. EDMOND CLEMENT
Mr. CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
Mr. EARL CARTWRIGHT
Chorus of 175. Children's Chorus of 100. Orchestra of 100.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, on sale Box Office, Symphony Hall.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, February 17, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, February 18, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme — Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner; "Don Quixote," Introduction Theme and Variations, Strauss; Concerto, C-minor, No. 3, Beethoven; Suite, "Turandot," Busoni.
Soloist, Busoni
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) fe 16

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
FEBRUARY 16, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, February 17, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, February 18, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme — Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner; "Don Quixote," Introduction Theme and Variations, Strauss; Concerto, C-minor, No. 3, Beethoven; Suite, "Turandot," Busoni.
Soloist, Busoni
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) fe 16

Transcript
Feb. 25. 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, March 12, at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor CONCERT IN AID PENSION FUND
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO, Soloist
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Public Sale Opens Friday, March 3.

Journal Sunday
Feb. 26 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, March 12, at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor CONCERT IN AID PENSION FUND
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO, Soloist
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Public Sale Opens Friday, March 3.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
MARCH 2, 1911

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THIS (THURS.) EVENING AT 8
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist, MME. KIRBY-LUNN
Programme—Overture to a Gascon Comedy, Mandl; Symphony No. 3, Op. 16, Berlioz; Arias, (a) "Where Corals Lie," (b) "Sabbath Morning at Sea," Elgar; "The Swan of Tuonela," Sibelius; Air from "Alceste," Act I, Gluck; Overture, "Euryanthe," Weber.
A limited number of tickets on sale at theatre this evening. (A)

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 3, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, March 4, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Overture to a Gascon Comedy, Mandl; Symphony No. 3, Op. 16, Berlioz; Arias, (a) "Where Corals Lie," (b) "Sabbath Morning at Sea," Elgar; "The Swan of Tuonela," Sibelius; Air from "Alceste," Act. I, Gluck; Overture, "Euryanthe," Weber. Soloist, Mme. Kirby-Lunn
3t(A) mh 2

BOSTON JOURNAL
MARCH 3, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
MARCH 3, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 3, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, March 4, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Overture to a Gascon Comedy, Mandl; Symphony No. 3, Op. 16, Berlioz; Arias (a) "Where Corals Lie," (b) "Sabbath Morning at Sea," Elgar; "The Swan of Tuonela," Sibelius; Air from "Alceste," Act. I, Gluck; Overture, "Euryanthe," Weber. Soloist, Mme. Kirby-Lunn
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) mh 2

ADVERTISER, FRIDAY
MARCH 3, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director, Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00
mh3-2t

Transcript
March 9. 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, March 12, at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor CONCERT IN AID PENSION FUND
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO, Soloist
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.
Programme: Symphonic Poem, "Les Préludes," Liszt. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhäuser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra, "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky. Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on Sale.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 3, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, March 4, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Overture to a Gascon Comedy, Mandl; Symphony No. 3, Op. 16, Berlioz; Arias (a) "Where Corals Lie," (b) "Sabbath Morning at Sea," Elgar; "The Swan of Tuonela," Sibelius; Air from "Alceste," Act. I, Gluck; Overture, "Euryanthe," Weber. Soloist, Mme. Kirby-Lunn
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
3t(A) mh 2

MONITOR, BOSTON
, MARCH 4, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, at 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO,
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

HERALD, SATURDAY,
MARCH 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Saturday Evening, March 4, at 8:00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme—Overture to a Gascon Comedy, Mandl; Symphony No. 3, Op. 16, Berlioz; Arias (a) "Where Corals Lie," (b) "Sabbath Morning at Sea," Elgar; "The Swan of Tuonela," Sibelius; Air from "Alceste," Act I, Gluck; Overture, "Euryanthe," Weber. Soloist, Mme. Kirby-Lunn.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY
MARCH 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director, Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00
mh3-2t

TRAVELER, SATURDAY,
MARCH 4, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, March 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

BOSTON JOURNAL—SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, March 12, at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor CONCERT IN AID PENSION FUND
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO, Soloist
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.
Programme: Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes," Liszt. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra. "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky. Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus of the Cecilia Society and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on Sale.

BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—MARCH 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, March 12, at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor CONCERT IN AID PENSION FUND
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO, Soloist
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company
Programme: Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes," Liszt. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra, "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky, Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus of the Cecilia society, and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on Sale.

THE BOSTON HERALD
MARCH 3, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

RECORD, SATURDAY
MARCH 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

THE SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, MARCH 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, March 12, at 8.
Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor CONCERT IN AID PENSION FUND
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO, Soloist
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company
Programme: Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes," Liszt. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra. "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky. Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus of the Cecilia Society and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on Sale.

SUNDAY POST,
MARCH 5, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENS ON FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

BOSTON HERALD
MARCH 6, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid
PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO
Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

22

BOSTON GLOBE
MARCH 6, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00
MWS mh6

BOSTON HERALD
MARCH 7, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
MARCH 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kin permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managin director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

BOSTON HERALD
MARCH 9, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
MARCH, 9 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00 (A)

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 10, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, March 11, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program—Symphony No. 1, C minor, Brahms; Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," Tschaikowsky; "Siegfried Idyl," Wagner; Overture, "Le Baruffe Chiozzotte," Sinigaglia.

A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) mh 9

RECORD, THURSDAY,
MARCH 9, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00
mh7 9 11

HERALD, FRIDAY,
MARCH 10, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY
MARCH 10, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00 (A)

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 10, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, March 11, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program—Symphony No. 1, C minor, Brahms; Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," Tschaikowsky; "Siegfried Idyl," Wagner; Overture, "Le Baruffe Chiozzotte," Sinigaglia.

A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
8t(A) mh 9

MONITOR, BOSTON
MARCH 11, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow (Sunday) Evg., March 12, at 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
SIGNOR CONSTANTINO.

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

BOSTON JOURNAL—
MARCH 11, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, M

SYMPHONY HALL, Tomorrow (Sunday) Evening, at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Pension Fund Concert

SIG. CONSTANTINO, Soloist

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.

Programme: Symphonic Poem, "Les Préludes," Liszt. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhäuser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra, "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky. Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus of the Cecilia Society and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on Sale.

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 10, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, March 11, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program—Symphony No. 1, C minor, Brahms; Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," Tschaikowsky; "Siegfried Idyl," Wagner; Overture, "Le Baruffe Chiozzotte," Sinigaglia.

A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) mh 9

TRAVELER, SATURDAY,
MARCH 11, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW (SUNDAY) EVENING AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

RECORD, SATURDAY,
MARCH 11, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.
mh7 9 11

BOSTON GLOBE
MARCH 11, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, AT 8
Concert in Aid

PENSION FUND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist

SIGNOR CONSTANTINO

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., managing director Boston Opera Company.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00
MWS mh6

BOSTON SUNDAY POST, MARCH 12, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, TONIGHT AT 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Pension Fund Concert

SIG. CONSTANTINO, Soloist

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.

Programme: Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes," Liszt. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra, "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky. Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus of the Cecilia Society and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on sale.

THE SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, MARCH 12, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIELDER, Conductor

Pension Fund Concert

SIG. CONSTANTINO, Soloist

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.

Program: Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes," Liszt. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhaeuser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra, "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky. Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus of the Cecilia Society and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on Sale.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
MARCH 18, 191(

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 17, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, March 18, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program — Tone Poem, "Macbeth," R.Strauss; Suite "Pelléas et Mélisande," G. Fauré; Overture, "Sakuntala," Goldmark; Symphony, C minor, No. 5, Beethoven.

A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) mh 16

BOSTON JOURNAL—SUNDAY, MARCH 12, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Pension Fund Concert

SIG. CONSTANTINO, Soloist

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.

Programme: Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes," Listz. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhaeuser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra, "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky. Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus of the Cecilia Society and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on Sale.

BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—MARCH 12, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, TONIGHT at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Pension Fund Concert

SIG. CONSTANTINO, Soloist

Who volunteers his services with the kind permission of Henry Russell, Esq., Managing Director Boston Opera Company.

Programme: Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes," Liszt. Aria from "The Girl of the Golden West," Puccini. Overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner. Suite for Full Orchestra, "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky. Aria, "Cielo e Mare," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai. Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" (Male Chorus of the Cecilia Society and Orchestra), Johann Strauss.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Now on Sale.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
MARCH 25, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, AT 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office, Symphony Hall. (A)

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt. (A)

MONITOR, BOSTON,
MARCH 25, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

Record Saturday
March 25 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

SUNDAY POST,
MARCH 26, 1

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVE'G, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale at Box Office, Symphony Hall.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEPH HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale Box Office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

SUNDAY GLOBE–
–MARCH 26, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVEN'G, APRIL 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office, Symphony Hall.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN–
SUNDAY, MARCH 26, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale, box office, Symphony Hall.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
PENSION FUND CONCERT
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

BOSTON JOURNAL
MARCH 26, 191

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

SUNDAY GLOBE–
–MARCH 26, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

HERALD, FRIDAY,
MARCH 31, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 31, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, April 1, at 8:00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Suite for orchestra, op. 9, Enesco; Concerto for Violin, No. 2, D major, Tschaikowsky; Symphony, D minor, No. 4, Schumann. Soloist—Miss Parlow.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

BOSTON POST
MARCH 31, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 31, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, April 1, at 8:00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme — Suite for Orchestra, op. 9, Enesco; Concerto for Violin No. 2, D major, Tschaikowsky; Symphony D minor, No. 4, Schumann. Soloist—Miss Parlow.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.

ADVERTISER, FRIDAY
MARCH 31, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale. mh31a3 6

BOSTON GLOBE
MARCH 31, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.
mh31 ap3478

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
MARCH 30, 191

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 31, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 1, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Suite for Orchestra op. 9 Enesco; Concerto for Violin No. 2, D major, Tschaikowsky; Symphony D minor, No. 4, Schumann. Soloist — Miss Parlow.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office 3t(A) mh 30

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THIS (Thursday) EVENING at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist, Miss OVERSTREET
Programme—Symphony No. 1 C minor, Brahms; Concerto for Pianoforte A minor op. 16, Grieg; Overture Sakuntala, op. 13, Goldmark.
A limited number of tickets on sale at Theatre evening of concert. 2t(A) mh 29

HERALD, THURSDAY,
MARCH 30, 1911.

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
This (Thursday) Evening at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist — Miss OVERSTREET
Programme—Symphony No. 1 C minor, Brahms; Concerto for Pianoforte A minor op. 16, Grieg; Overture Sakuntala, op. 13, Goldmark.
A limited number of tickets on sale at Theatre evening of concert.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY,
MARCH 29, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt. (A)

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, AT 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale. (A)

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Tomorrow (Thursday) Evening at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist, Miss OVERSTREET
Programme—Symphony No. 1 C minor, Brahms; Concerto for Pianoforte A minor op. 16, Grieg; Overture Sakuntala, op. 13, Goldmark.
A limited number of tickets on sale at Theatre evening of concert. 2t(A) mh 29

BOSTON POST
MARCH 29, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets, $2, $1.50 and $1. Now on sale.

RECORD, WEDNESDAY,
MARCH 29, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

BOSTON GLOBE
MARCH 29, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

HERALD, WEDNESDAY,
MARCH 29, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale box office, Friday, March 31. Mail orders with checks payable to L. H. Mudgett filled before opening of sale in order of receipt.

MONITOR, BOSTON,
APRIL 1, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVEN'G, APRIL 14, AT 8,
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

TRAVELER, SATURDAY,
APRIL 1, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.

[24]

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
APRIL 1, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, April 9, at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Pension Fund Concert WAGNER PROGRAMME

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Tickets $2, $1.50 and $1. Now on sale.

SYMPHONY HALL, Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Cecilia Society

Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, March 31, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 1, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program—Suite for Orchestra op. 9 Enesco; Concerto for Violin No. 2, D major, Tschaikowsky; Symphony D minor, No. 4, Schumann. Soloist — Miss Parlow.

A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office mh 30
3t(A)

SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 2, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, April 9, at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Pension Fund Concert WAGNER PROGRAMME

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Tickets $2, $1.50 and $1. Now on sale.

SYMPHONY HALL, Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Cecilia Society

Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

SUNDAY POST, APRIL 2, 19

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, April 9, at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Pension Fund Concert WAGNER PROGRAMME

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Tickets $2, $1.50 and $1. Now on sale.

SYMPHONY HALL, Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Cecilia Society

Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanual Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,
APRIL 2, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund Concert Wagner Programme

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist—JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50 and $1. Now on sale.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra Cecilia Society

MAX FIELDER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office

TRAVELER, MONDAY,
APRIL 3, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8

Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.

ADVERTISER, MONDAY
APRIL 3, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8

Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.
mh31a3 6

GLOBE—MONDAY.
APRIL 3, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8

Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.
mh31 ap3478

THE SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, APRIL 2, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Sunday Evening, April 9, at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Pension Fund Concert WAGNER PROGRAMME

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Tickets $2, $1.50 and $1. Now on sale.

SYMPHONY HALL, Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Cecilia Society

Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN
SUNDAY, APRIL 2, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir of 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale, box office, Symphony Hall.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8

PENSION FUND CONCERT
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale at box office, Symphony Hall.

GLOBE—TUESDAY,
APRIL 4, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8

Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.
mh31 ap3478

BOSTON JOURNAL
APRIL 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8

Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

POST, WEDNESDAY APRIL 5,

SYMPHONY HALL
Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 7:30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8

Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

[25]

BOSTON JOURNAL,
APRIL 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EV'G., APRIL 14, AT 7.30
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale at box office.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
APRIL 6, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, April 7, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 8, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme — Symphony "Manfred," Tschaikowsky; Wally's Air, "Ebben (?) ne Andro lontana," from "La Wally," Act. 1, Catalani; "Te Deum Laudamus," Sgambati; Aria, "L'Altra Notte," from "Mefistofele," Boito; Overture, "Leonora," No. 3. Soloist, Miss Carolina White.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
ap 6
8t(A)

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, at 7.30
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.
ap 5
2t(A)

ADVERTISER, FRIDAY,
APRIL 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, AT 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.
ap4 7 8

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY,
APRIL 8, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, AT 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.
ap4 7 8

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY,
APRIL 5, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
PENSION FUND
CONCERT
OF THE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.
TuWF(A) ap 4

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, at 7.30
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.
2t(A) ap 5

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY,
APRIL 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.

MONITOR, BOSTON,
APRIL 5, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

HERALD, THURSDAY,
APRIL 6, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVEN'G, April 14, at 7:30
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
Bach's Passion Music
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

RECORD, THURSDAY,
APRIL 6, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.
mh31ap4 6R mh31ap3 6A

THURSDAY MORNING,
APRIL 6, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.
mh31ap4 6R mh31ap3 6A

POST, THURSDAY,
APRIL 6, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
APRIL 6, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY,
APRIL 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
PENSION FUND
CONCERT
OF THE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.
TuWF(A) ap 4

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, April 7, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 8, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Programme — Symphony "Manfred," Tschaikowsky; Wally's Air, "Ebben (?) ne Andro lontana," from "La Wally," Act. 1, Catalani; "Te Deum Laudamus," Sgambati; Aria, "L'Altra Notte," from "Mefistofele," Boito; Overture, "Leonora," No. 3. Soloist, Miss Carolina White.
A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.
ap 6
3t(A)

GLOBE—FRIDAY,
APRIL 7, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 7:30
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
Bach's Passion Music
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale at box office.
TThF ap4

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.
mh31 ap3478

HERALD, FRIDAY,
APRIL 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

RECORD, SATURDAY,
APRIL 8, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, AT 8
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.
ap4 8

MONITOR, BOSTON,
APRIL 8, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EV'G., APRIL 14, AT 7:30.
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale at box office.

HERALD, SATURDAY,
APRIL 8, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale.

TRAVELER, SATURDAY,
APRIL 8, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 7:30
CECILIA SOCIETY
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
Bach's Passion Music
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano.
JANET SPENCER, Contralto.
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor.
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass.
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

GLOBE—SATURDAY,
APRIL 8, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, AT 8
Pension Fund Concert
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST JOSEF HOFMANN, PIANIST
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. On sale now.
mh31 ap3478

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,
APRIL 9, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (SUNDAY) EVENING, AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Pension Fund Concert
Wagner Programme
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist—JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50 and $1. Now on sale.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, April 14, at 8
LAST CONCERT
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Cecilia Society
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
(According to Matthew)
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office

HERALD, MONDAY,
APRIL 10, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVE'G, APRIL 14, at 7:30
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

DO NOT FILM OVER RIBBED BACK

[26]

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, Tomorrow (Sunday) Evening, at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Pension Fund Concert

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Program—Overture, "Egmont," Beethoven; Concerto for Piano, G-major, No. 4, Beethoven; Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," "Ride of the Valkyries," "Waldweben," and Overture "Rienzi," Wagner.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Box Office open 1 P. M. Sunday. Tel. B. B. 1492.

SYMPHONY HALL, Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 7.30

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor The Cecilia Society

Chorus 175; Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church; Orchestra 100.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano — GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
JANET SPENCER, Contralto — DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

SYMPHONY HALL

Friday Afternoon, April 7, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 8, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Programme — Symphony "Manfred," Tschaikowsky; Wally's Air, "Ebben (?) ne Andro lontana," from "La Wally," Act 1, Catalani; "Te Deum Laudamus," Sgambati; Aria, "L'Altra Notte," from "Mefistofele," Boito; Overture, "Leonora," No. 3. Soloist, Miss Caroline White.

A limited number of seats for Saturday Evening on sale at box office.

8t(A) ap 6

HERALD, BOSTON, APRIL 9, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL, This (Sunday) Evening, at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Pension Fund Concert

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Program—Overture, "Egmont," Beethoven; Concerto for Piano, G major, No. 4, Beethoven; Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," "Ride of the Valkyries," "Waldweben," and Overture "Rienzi," Wagner.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Box Office open 1 P. M. Sunday. Tel. B. B. 1492.

SYMPHONY HALL, Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 7.30

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor The Cecilia Society

Chorus 175; Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church; Orchestra 100.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano — GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
JANET SPENCER, Contralto — DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, at 7.30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale at box office.

8t(A) ap 11

GLOBE—TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 7:30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 From Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNES APRIL 12, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, at 7.30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale at box office.

8t(A) ap 11

HERALD, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVE'G, APRIL 14, at 7:30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 9, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, This (Sunday) Evening, at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Pension Fund Concert

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Program—Overture, "Egmont," Beethoven; Concerto for Piano, G-major, No. 4, Beethoven; Overture, "The Flying Dutchman;" Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," 'Ride of the Valkyries," "Waldweben," and Overture "Rienzi," Wagner.

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00. Box Office open 1 P. M. Sunday. Tel. B. B. 1492.

SYMPHONY HALL, Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 7.30

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor The Cecilia Society

Chorus 175; Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church; Orchestra 100.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano — GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
JANET SPENCER, Contralto — DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

SUNDAY POST, APRIL 9, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL, This (Sunday) Evening at 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor Pension Fund Concert

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Programme—Overture, "Egmont," Beethoven; Concerto for Piano, G-major, No. 4, Beethoven; Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," "Ride of the Valkyries," "Waldweben," and Overture "Rienzi," Wagner.

Tickets $2, $1.50 and $1. Boxoffice open 1 p. m. Sunday. Tel. B. B. 1492

SYMPHONY HALL, Good Friday Evening, April 14, at 7:30

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor The Cecilia Society

Chorus 175; Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church; Orchestra 100.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano — GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
JANET SPENCER, Contralto — DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00

RECORD WEDNESDAY APRIL 12.

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, AT 8

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra,

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
GOOD FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, at 7.30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets at the box office. Admission $1.00

8t(A) ap 11

SYMPHONY HALL

Thursday Afternoon, April 13, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 15, at 8.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program—Prelude to 'Parsifal," Wagner—Symphonic Poem, "The Island of the Dead," Rachmaninoff—Suite Symphonique MSS., Chadwick—Comedy Overture on Negro Themes, MSS., Gilbert

A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office

8t(A) ap 12

HERALD, THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL

Thursday Afternoon, April 13, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, April 15, at 8:00

Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Program—Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner—Symphonic Poem, "The Island of the Dead," Rachmaninoff—Suite Symphonique MSS., Chadwick—Comedy Overture on Negro Themes, MSS., Gilbert

A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY APRIL 13, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW (FRIDAY) EVENING at 7.30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra,

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale box office.

GLOBE—FRIDAY, APRIL 14. 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (FRIDAY) EVE'G, APRIL 14, at 7:30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets at Box Office. Admission $1.00.

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, APRIL 14 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (FRIDAY) EVENING, at 7.30
LAST CONCERT

CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 — Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass

Tickets $2, $1.50, $1. Now on sale at box office.

[27]

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY,
APRIL 14, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Thursday Afternoon, April 13, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 15, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner—Symphonic Poem, "The Island of the Dead," Rachmaninoff—Suite Symphonique MSS., Chadwick—Comedy Overture on Negro Themes, MSS., Gilbert
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) ap 12

HERALD, FRIDAY,
APRIL 14, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (Friday) EVENING, April 14, at 7:30
LAST CONCERT
CECILIA SOCIETY
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Chorus 175 Orchestra 100
Boy Choir 50 from Emmanuel Church
BACH'S PASSION MUSIC
Soloists:
MARIE ZIMMERMAN, Soprano
JANET SPENCER, Contralto
GEORGE HAMLIN, Tenor
DAVID BISPHAM, Bass
Tickets at Pox Office. Admission $1.

SYMPHONY HALL
Thursday Afternoon, April 13, at 2:30
Saturday Evening, April 15, at 8:00
Bos'on Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner—Symphonic Poem, "The Island of the Dead," Rachmaninoff—Suite Symphonique MSS., Chadwick—Comedy Overture on Negro Themes, MSS., Gilbert
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY,
APRIL 20, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, April 21, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 22, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Symphonic Poem "Athala," MSS., A. M. Curry; Aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; "Iberia," "Images pour Orchestre," No. 2, Debussy; Aria from "Der Freischütz," Weber; Overture, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Mendelssohn.
Soloist: Mme. Rider-Kelsey.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) ap 20

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY,
APRIL 21, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, April 21, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 22, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Symphonic Poem "Athala," MSS., A. M. Curry; Aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; "Iberia," "Images pour Orchestre," No. 2, Debussy; Aria from "Der Freischütz," Weber; Overture "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Mendelssohn.
Soloist: Mme. Rider-Kelsey.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) ap 20

RECORD, SATURDAY,
APRIL 22 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
ap22 24 29(6)

HERALD, SATURDAY,
APRIL 22, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Saturday Evening, April 22, at 8:00
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Symphonic Poem "Athala," MSS., A. M. Curry; Aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; "Iberia," "Images pour Orchestre," No. 2, Debussy; Aria from "Der Freischutz," Weber; Overture, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Mendelssohn.
Soloist: Mme. Rider-Kelsey.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office.

HERALD, MONDAY,
APRIL 24, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats, first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT,
APRIL 22, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, April 21, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 22, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Symphonic Poem "Athala," MSS., A. M. Curry; Aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; "Iberia," "Images pour Orchestre," No. 2, Debussy; Aria from "Der Freischütz," Weber; Overture "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Mendelssohn.
Soloist: Mme. Rider-Kelsey.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) ap 20

SYMPHONY HALL
OPENING NIGHT
MONDAY, MAY 1
And Every Evening Except Sunday
8 to 11, Until July 1
THE POPS
55 — Grand Orchestra — 55
GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor
Reserved Seats, 50c and 75c. Admission, 25c
Advance Sale of Tickets Opens on Monday
April 24. Telephone. 1492 Back Bay

THE BOSTON AMERICAN
SUNDAY, APRIL 23, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
OPENING NIGHT
MONDAY, MAY 1
And Every Evening Except Sunday
8 to 11, Until July 1
The POPS
55 — Grand Orchestra — 55
GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor
Reserved Seats, 50c and 75c. Admission, 25c. Advance Sale of Tickets Opens on Monday, April 24. Telephone, 1492 Back Bay.

SUNDAY GLOBE-
-APRIL 23, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
OPENING NIGHT
MONDAY, MAY 1
And Every Evening Except Sunday
8 to 11, Until July 1
THE POPS
55—Grand Orchestra—55
GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor
Reserved Seats, 50c and 75c. Admission, 25c. Advance Sale of Tickets Opens on Monday, April 24. Telephone, 1492 Back Bay.

HERALD, BOSTON,
APRIL 23, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
OPENING NIGHT
MONDAY, MAY 1
And Every Evening Except Sunday
8 to 11, Until July 1
THE POPS
55 — Grand Orchestra — 55
GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor
Reserved Seats 50c and 75c. Admission 25c. Advance Sale of Tickets Opens on Monday, April 24. Telephone, 1492, Back Bay.

GLOBE—MONDAY,
APRIL 24, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
MWThF ap24

POST, MONDAY,
APRIL 24, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
OPENING NIGHT
MONDAY, MAY 1
And Every Evening Except Sunday
8 to 11, Until July 1
THE POPS
55 — Grand Orchestra — 55
GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor
Reserved Seats, 50c and 75c. Admission, 25c. Advance Sale of Tickets Opens on Monday, April 24. Telephone, 1492 Back Bay.

JOURNAL—TUESDAY,
APRIL 25, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

POST, TUESDAY,
APRIL 25, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—Orchestra—55
Gustav Strube, Con.
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

HERALD, TUESDAY,
APRIL 25, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats, first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY,
APRIL 25, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
4t(A) ap 25

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY,
APRIL 26, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
4t(A) ap 25

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
TOMORROW (THURSDAY) EVENING AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist: ALWIN SCHROEDER
PROGRAMME—Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes," Liszt. Suite for Orchestra, op. 9, Enesco. Variations on a Rococo Theme for Violoncello op. 33, Tschaikowsky. Symphony in D Minor No. 4, Schumann.
A limited number of tickets on sale at Theatre evening of concert.
2t(A) ap 26

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY,
APRIL 26, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond.
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY,
APRIL 26, 19..

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
MWThF ap24

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY,
APRIL 26, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

HERALD, THURSDAY
, APRIL 27, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

GLOBE—FRIDAY.
, APRIL 28, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
MWThF ap24

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY,
APRIL 28, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, April 28, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 29, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Overture "Coriolanus," Beethoven; Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," Tschaikowsky; "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," Wagner; Funeral Music from "Dusk of the Gods," Wagner; Prelude to the "Mastersingers," Wagner.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) ap 27

SYMPHONY HALL
Opening Monday, May 1 Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
4t(A) ap 25

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,
APRIL 29, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
OPENING NIGHT
MONDAY, MAY 1
And Every Evening Except Sunday
8 to 11, Until July 1
THE POPS
55 — Grand Orchestra — 55
GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor
Reserved Seats, 50c and 75c. Admission, 25c
Telephone, 1492 Back Bay
(A)

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon, April 28, at 2.30
Saturday Evening, April 29, at 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Program—Overture "Coriolanus," Beethoven; Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," Tschaikowsky; "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," Wagner; Funeral Music from "Dusk of the Gods," Wagner; Prelude to the "Mastersingers," Wagner.
A limited number of tickets for the Saturday Evening Concert only on sale at Box Office
3t(A) ap 27

DO NOT FILM CREASED PAGES

HERALD, MONDAY,
MAY 1, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
OPENING TONIGHT Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

POST, TUESDAY,
MAY 2, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55— Orchestra—55
Gustav Strube Con.
Light Refreshments.
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

JOURNAL—WEDNESDAY
MAY 3, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every evening except Sunday, 8 to 11.
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDA
MAY 3, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
my 2
5t(A)

JOURNAL—THURSDAY,
MAY 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every evening except Sunday, 8 to 11.
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY
MAY 4, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
my 2
5t(A)

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY,
MAY 5, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
my 2
5t(A)

POST, FRIDAY
MAY 5, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55— Orchestra—55
Gustav Strube Con.
Light Refreshments.
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

HERALD, SATURDAY,
MAY 6, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL.
TONIGHT Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

EVENING TRANSCRIP
MAY 6, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every ev'g except Sunday, 8 to 11
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Cond'tr
Light Refreshments
Admission, floor and second balcony, 25c. Reserved seats first balcony, 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
my 2
5t(A)

THE BOSTON AMERICAN
SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
To-morrow, Monday
And Every Evening Except Sunday
8 to 11, Until July 1
The POPS
55—Grand Orchestra—55
GUSTAVE STRUBE, Conductor
Wagner program.....Monday
Amherst night.....Wednesday
Reserved Seats, 50c and 75c, Admission, 25c. Telephone, 1492 Back Bay

SUNDAY POST
MAY 7, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW
(Monday)
And Every Evening Except Sunday, 8 to 11, Until July 1
THE POPS
55 — Grand Orchestra — 55
GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor
MONDAY, WAGNER NIGHT
Wednesday, AMHERST COLLEGE Night
Reserved seats, 50c and 75c. Admission, 25c. Telephone, 1492 Back Bay.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,
MAY 7, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW
(MONDAY)
And Every Evening Except Sunday
8 to 11, Until July 1
THE POPS
55—Grand Orchestra—55
GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor
MONDAY, WAGNER NIGHT
Wednesday, AMHERST COLLEGE Night
Reserved Seats, 50c and 75c. Admission, 25c. Telephone, 1492 Back Bay.

POST, TUESDAY,
MAY 16, 191

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every Evening except Sunday, 8 to 11.
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Con.
Light Refreshments
Admission 25c. Reserve seats, bal., 50c. Reserve table seats, floor, 75c.

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY
MAY 11, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every Evening except Sunday, 8 to 11.
POPS
55 — ORCHESTRA — 55
Gustav Strube, Conductor
Light Refreshments
Admission 25c. Reserved seats, bal., 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
my5-3t

HERALD, BOSTON
MAY 14, 1911.

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW Every Evening except Sunday, 8 to 11.
POPS
55 — ORCHESTRA — 55
Gustav Strube, Conductor
Light Refreshments
Admission 25c. Reserved seats, bal., 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.

POST, MONDAY,
MAY 15, 1911

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT Every Evening except Sunday, 8 to 11.
POPS
55—ORCHESTRA—55
Gustav Strube, Con.
Light Refreshments
Admission 25c. Reserved seats, bal., 50c. Reserved table seats, floor, 75c.
German Night This Evening

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Baltimore Journal - EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE.

Montag, den 20. März 1911

MARCH 22, 1911

LYRIC THEATER.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.

Mittwoch, den 22. März, um 8.15 Uhr Abends.

Wagner Programm

Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles und Fayette-Str.
(ma15,17,19,20,21)

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, MARCH 22, AT 8.15
BOSTON
SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette Streets.
ADMISSION $1.00.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
MARCH 20, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 22. März 191

Star Baltimore

MARCH 20, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

LYRIC THEATER.
Heute Abend, 22. März,
um 8.15 Uhr.
Boston Symphonic Orchester
(100 Musiker.)
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
Wagner Programm
Tickets in Albaugh's Agentur, Charles- und Fayette-Straße. Eintritt $1.00.
(ma22)

Star Baltimore

MARCH 21, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
MARCH 22, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
This Evening, March 22, at 8:15
BOSTON
SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette Streets.
ADMISSION $1.00.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
MARCH 21, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22, 8.15
WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette Streets.

THE EVENING TIMES,
MARCH 15, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Mar. 20, at 8.15
Soloist.
Madame KIRKBY-LUNN
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheater, 25 cents

BALTIMORE AMERICAN,
MARCH 21, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

EVENING TIMES
MARCH 17, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Mar. 20, at 8.15
Soloist.
Madame KIRKBY-LUNN
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheater, 25 cents

THE SUN, BALTIMORE.
MARCH 22, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE
This Evening, March 22, at 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette Sts. Admission, $1.00.

EVENING TIMES,
MARCH 18, 191

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Mar. 20, at 8.15
Soloist.
Madame KIRKBY-LUNN
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheater, 25 cents

EVENING TIMES
MARCH 20, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Tonight at 8.15
Soloist
Madame KIRKBY-LUNN
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheater, 25c.

Star Baltimore

FEBRUARY 22, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
This Eve., Feb. 22, at 8:15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Assisted by
THE ORATORIO SOCIETY and
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY JANET SPENCER
DANIEL BEDDOE CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
IN BEETHOVEN'S CHORAL SYMPHONY.
Soloist, ANTON WITEK, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency. Admission, $1.00.

[32]

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
MARCH 26, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, April 4, at 8:15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
CAROLINE WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago Opera Company)
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street, Saturday, April 1.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE
MARCH 30, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Ev'ng, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Saturday, April 1.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET,
MARCH 30, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER - Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(Of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence, Saturday, April 1.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.
m30 5t

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
MARCH 30, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Ev'ng, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Saturday, April 1.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
MARCH 31, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Ev'ng, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence, Saturday, April 1.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE,
MARCH 31, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Ev'ng, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Saturday, April 1.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE,
MARCH 31, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
TUESDAY EVENING, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER.....Conductor
SOLOIST
Mme. CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(Of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Saturday, April 1.
PRICES $2.00, $1.50.
m30 2t

TIMES, PAWTUCKET
APRIL 1, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER - Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(Of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.
m30 5t

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE
APRIL 1, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Ev'ng, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats new selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
APRIL 1, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Ev'ng, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats new selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

PROVIDENCE SUNDAY JOURNAL,
APRIL 2, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, April 4, at 8:15
LAST CONCERT
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
Mme. CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
Of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.
PROGRAMME
BRAHMS.....Symphony in C minor
CATALANI.....Aria, "Le Wally"
SMETANA.....Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau"
BOITO.....Prison Song from "Mefistofele"
STRAUSS.....Death and Transfiguration"
Seats at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
APRIL 3, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Ev'ng, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats new selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE,
APRIL 3, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Ev'ng, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats new selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE
APRIL 3, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame Carolina White, Soprano
(Of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St. PRICES $2.00, $1.50.
a1 2t

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE
APRIL 3, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame Carolina White, Soprano
(Of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St. PRICES $2.00, $1.50.
a1 2t

TIMES, PAWTUCKET,
APRIL 3, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, April 4, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER - Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(Of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.
m30 5t

TIMES, PAWTUCKET
APRIL 4, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
TONIGHT AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER - Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(Of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.
m30 5t

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
APRIL 4, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats now selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

Star Baltimore
MARCH 15, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE
APRIL 4, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER ..... Conductor
SOLOIST
Madame CAROLINA WHITE, Soprano
(of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Co.)
Seats now selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES, $2.00, $1.50.

LTIMORE AMERICAN
MARCH 15, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

Star Baltimore
MARCH 16, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN,
MARCH 17, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

Star Baltimore
MARCH 18, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN,
MARCH 18, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
MARCH 19, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
Wednesday Evening, Mar. 22
at 8.15
The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."
Prelude to "Lohengrin."
Funeral Music from "Gotterdammerung."
Prelude and "Love Death" from "Tristan and Isolde."
Prelude to "Parsifal."
"Siegfried Idyl."
Overture, "Tannhauser."
Seats now selling at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

Star Baltimore
MARCH 15, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22
At 8:15.
Wagner Programme
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency,
Charles & Fayette Sts.

N.Y. Herald March 20 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mar. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor,
MAX FIEDLER.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Brooklyn.
FRI. EVG., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Tribune March 20 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor
Max Fiedler.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve.,
March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Sun March 20, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Herald March 21 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mar. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30,
Soloist,
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor,
MAX FIEDLER.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Brooklyn.
FRI. EVG., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Tribune March 21 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor.
Max Fiedler.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve.,
March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Sun March 21, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello,
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Eve., March 24.. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Herald March 21, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Sun March 21, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Globe March 21, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor
Max Fiedler.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve.,
March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Post March 21, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Herald March 21, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Eve., March 24.. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Sun March 21, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Globe March 21, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor
Max Fiedler.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve.,
March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Herald March 21, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor
Max Fiedler.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve.,
March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Herald March 22, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor
MAX FIEDLER.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Brooklyn.
FRI. EVG., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Tribune March 22 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor
Max Fiedler.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve.,
March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

Eve Sun March 22 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

Sun March 22 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24.. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Times March 22, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. World March 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
Friday Evg., March 24.. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Times March 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., Mch. 25, at 2:30
Soloist
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Eve., March 24. Soloist—Witek.

Herald March 23 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
To-Night at 8:15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist,
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor,
MAX FIEDLER.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Brooklyn.
FRI. EVG., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

Tribune March 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor
Max Fiedler.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve.,
March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

Staats Ztg March 23 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Heute Abend, um 8.15.
Solist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Dirigent.
ANTON WITEK
Violine.
Samst. Nachm., 25. Mz., 2.30
Solist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
Cello.
Reservirte Sitze in Box-Office und Tyson's.
Academy of Music, Brooklyn.
Freitag Abend, 24. März. Solist Witek.

N.Y. Globe March 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
TO-NIGHT AT 8.15.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., Mch. 25, at 2.30
Soloist.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist—Witek.

N.Y. Sun March 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30,
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's,
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. World March 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2.30.
Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Post March 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30
Soloist.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Press March 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
TO-NIGHT AT 8.15
Soloist.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2.30.
Soloist.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24, Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Herald March 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
To-Morrow
(Saturday)
Afternoon
at 2:30.
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor,
MAX FIEDLER.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Brooklyn.
TO-NIGHT. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Post March 24, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
To-morrow
(Saturday)
Afternoon
At 2:30
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
TO-NIGHT. Soloist—Witek.

N.Y. Sun March 24, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
To-morrow,
(SATURDAY)
AFTERNOON
At 2:30
Soloist.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler.
Conductor.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
TO-NIGHT, SOLOIST WITEK.

N.Y. Times March 24, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
To-morrow
(SATURDAY)
AFTERNOON
At 2:30
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
TO-NIGHT, SOLOIST WITEK.

Eve Sun March 24, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
To-morrow,
(SATURDAY)
AFTERNOON
At 2:30
Soloist.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
TO-NIGHT, SOLOIST WITEK.

N.Y. Times March 24, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
To-morrow
(SATURDAY)
AFTERNOON
At 2:30
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
TO-NIGHT, SOLOIST WITEK.

N.Y. Times March 25, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
THIS (SATURDAY)
AFTERNOON
At 2:30
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

Staats Ztg March 25, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
HEUTE
(SAMSTAG) NACHMITTAG
um 2.30
Solist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Dirigent.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Reservirte Sitze in Box-Office und Tyson's.

N.Y. World March 25, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
THIS (SATURDAY)
AFTERNOON
AT 2.30
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Conductor
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald March 25, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
THIS
(Saturday)
Afternoon, at 2:30.
Soloist.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor,
MAX FIEDLER.
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Tribune March 25 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
THIS (SATURDAY)
AFTERNOON
At 2:30
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN,
TO-NIGHT, SOLOIST WITEK.

N.Y. Press March 25, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
THIS (SATURDAY)
AFTERNOON
At 2.30
Soloist,
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler,
Conductor.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald March 21.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30.
Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Conductor
Max Fiedler.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve.,
March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

THE SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY UNION: MARCH 26, 1911

Court Square Theater, Springfield

Tomorrow Evening, March 27, at 8

Only Concert This Season

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Soloist--SYLVAIN NOACK--Violinist

Seats Now Selling at Box Office of Theater

Prices, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

THE SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY REPUBLICAN: MARCH 26, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER - - SPRINGFIELD

To-morrow Evening, March 27, at 8

ONLY CONCERT THIS SEASON

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

SOLOIST

SYLVAIN NOACK

Violinist

Seats now selling at Box Office of Theater

Prices: - - - - $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN
MARCH 27, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER,
SPRINGFIELD

Only Concert This Season.

To-night at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

SOLOIST

SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats Now on Sale at Box Office of Theater, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

SPRINGFIELD DAILY
MARCH 27, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR.
TONIGHT AT 8 O'CLOCK.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats Now on Sale at Box Office of Theater. $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD, MONDAY, MARCH 27, 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor

TONIGHT

COURT SQUARE THEATER,

Monday Evening, March 27th, at 8 o'clock

The only concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Court Square Theater this evening at eight o'clock promptly. The soloist will be Sylvain Noack, second concertmaster of the Orchestra and the program is as follows:

Schubert ..... Symphony in C-Major
Vieuxtemps ..... Concerto for Violin in A-Minor, No. 5
Tschaikowsky .. Suite for Full Orchestra, "Nut-Cracker."

N.Y. Times
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist.
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24.. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Mail
March 18, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Herald
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor, MAX FIEDLER.
Thurs. Ev., Mar. 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
FRI. EVG., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Tribune
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor Max Fiedler.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15. Soloist
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Sun
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Globe
March 18 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

Eve Sun
March 18, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

M.Y. Post
March 18, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15 Soloist.
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30 Soloist.
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Times
March 19 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
At Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday Eve., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Herald
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Sun
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Globe
March 18 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Mch. 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Times
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Mar. 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., Mar. 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist, Witek.

N.Y. Herald
March 19 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor, MAX FIEDLER.
Thurs. Evg., Mar. 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
Anton Witek
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
Alwin Schroeder
'Cello.
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Brooklyn.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist, WITEK.

N.Y. Sun
March 18, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Globe
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24, Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Times
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Herald
March 19 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Globe
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Times
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., Mar. 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., Mar. 24, Soloist, Witek.

N.Y. Herald
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., Mar. 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24. Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Globe
March 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
Violin.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'Cello.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24, Soloist Witek.

N.Y. Times
March 19 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., March 23, at 8:15. Soloist,
ANTON WITEK
VIOLIN.
Sat. Aft., March 25, at 2:30. Soloist,
ALWIN SCHROEDER
'CELLO.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN.
Friday Evg., March 24.. Soloist Witek.

[35]

THE SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY REPUBLICAN: MARCH 19, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER - - - SPRINGFIELD

Monday Evening, March 27, 1911, at 8.15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

SOLOIST

SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats on sale at Box Office of Theater next Thursday morning, March 23. Mail orders with checks or money orders, payable to Court Square Theater, filled in order of receipt before the opening of the public sale.

PRICES, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY UNION: MARCH 19, 1911.

Court Square Theater, Springfield

Monday Evening, March 27, 1911, at 8.15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

SILVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats on sale at Box Office of Theater next Thursday morning, March 23. Mail orders with checks or money orders payable to Court Square Theater filled in order of receipt before the opening of the public sale.

PRICES: $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

SPRINGFIELD DAILY NEWS, MARCH 21, 1911

COURT SQUARE THEATER
Monday Eve., March 27
At 8 o'clock

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Sale of seats opens at box office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY NEWS
MARCH 23, 1911

COURT SQUARE THEATER
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911, at 8 O'Clock.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats now on sale at boxoffice of theater.
$1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN
MARCH 22, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER
SPRINGFIELD,
Monday Evening, March 27, 1911,
—AT 8—

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST,
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Sale of seats opens at Box Office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices: $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN
MARCH 23, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER,
SPRINGFIELD
Only Concert This Year
Monday Eve., Mar. 27, 1911, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats Now on Sale at Box Office of Theater, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

SPRINGFIELD DAILY NEWS, MARCH 22, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER
Monday Eve., March 27
At 8 o'clock

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Sale of seats opens at box office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD UNION MARCH 23.

Court Square Theater, Springfield
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats Now on Sale at Box Office of Theater, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

[36]

FRIDAY, MARCH 24, 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIELDER, Conductor.

COURT SQUARE THEATRE,

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Monday Evening, March 27,
AT 8

Tickets go on sale Thursday Morning, March 23.

The program is one that will appeal to all music lovers.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN
MARCH 24, 1911

COURT SQUARE THEATER,
SPRINGFIELD
Only Concert This Year
Monday Eve., Mar. 27, 1911, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats Now on Sale at Box Office of Theater, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

SPRINGFIELD UNION
MARCH 24, 1911.

Court Square Theater, Springfield
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats Now on Sale at Box Office of Theater, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY NEWS
MARCH 24, 1911

COURT SQUARE THEATER
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911, at 8 O'Clock.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats now on sale at boxoffice of theater.
$1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD UNION MARCH 25. 1911.

Court Square Theater, Springfield
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats Now on Sale at Box Office of Theater, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY NEWS, MARCH 25, 1911

COURT SQUARE THEATER
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911, at 8 O'Clock.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats now on sale at boxoffice of theater.
$1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN
MARCH 25, 1911

COURT SQUARE THEATER,
SPRINGFIELD
Only Concert This Year
Monday Eve., Mar. 27, 1911, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats Now on Sale at Box Office of Theater, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c

SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD, SATURDAY, MARCH 25 191

COURT SQUARE THEATER . . SPRINGFIELD

Monday Evening, March 27, at 8

ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

SOLOIST

SYLVAIN NOACK

Violinist

Seats now selling at Box Office of Theater

PRICES . . . . $1.50, $1.00, 75c, and 50c

SPRINGFIELD UNION
MARCH 25. 1911.

Court Square Theater, Springfield
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist

Seats now on sale at boxoffice of theater.
$1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
MARCH 18, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Monday Eve, March 20, at 8.15
Soloist
Madame Kirkby-Luan
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
MARCH 18, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eve., March 20, at 8.15
Soloist:
Madame Kirkby-Lunn
Tickets at Heppe's, Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
MARCH 19, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Eve., Mar. 20, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
Madame KIRKBY-LUNN, Contralto
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
AMPHITHEATRE, 25 Cts.

PHILADELPHIA RECO[illegible]
MARCH 19, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Eve., Mar. 20, at 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
Madame Kirkby-Lunn, Contralto
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
Amphitheatre, 25c

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
MARCH 20, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
TO-NIGHT AT 8.15
Soloist
Madame Kirkby-Lunn
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
MARCH 20, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
TONIGHT, AT 8.15
Soloist.
Madame KIRKBY-LUNN
Tickets at Heppe's.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

BALTIMORE, SUN
MARCH 12, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
WEDNESDAY EVENING
MARCH 22, AT 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.)
MAX FIEDLER - - Conductor
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

SUN, BALTIMORE,
MARCH 15, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22, 8.15
WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette Streets.

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 15. März 1911.

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
Mittwoch, den 22. März, um 8.15 Uhr Abends,
Wagner Programm
Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles-und Fayette-Str.
(mz15,17,19,20,21)

SUN, BALTIMORE,
MARCH 16, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., March 22, At 8.15,
Wagner Programme.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

SUN, BALTIMORE,
MARCH 17, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22, 8.15
WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette Streets.

Baltimore Journal, Freitag, den 17. März 1911.

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
Mittwoch, den 22. März, um 8.15 Uhr Abends,
Wagner Programm
Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles-und Fayette-Str.
(mz15,17,19,20,21)

SUN, BALTIMORE,
MARCH 18, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22, 8.15
WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette Streets.

SUN, BALTIMORE
MARCH 18, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., March 22, At 8.15,
Wagner Programme.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

SUN, BALTIMORE,
MARCH 19, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
Wednesday Evening, March 22
at 8.15.
THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 MUSICIANS.)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
WAGNER PROGRAMME:
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nurenberg."
Prelude to "Lohengrin."
Funeral Music from "Gotterdammerung."
Prelude and "Love Death" from "Tristan and Isolde."
Prelude to "Parsifal."
"Siegfried Idyl."
Overture, "Tannhauser."
Seats now selling at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette streets.

„Die Sonntags-Post," Baltimore, Md.
, Sonntag, den 19. März 1911.

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
Mittwoch, den 22. März, um 8.15 Uhr Abends,
Wagner Programm
Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles-und Fayette-Str.
(mz15,17,19,20,21)

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
MARCH 20, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., March 22, At 8.15,
Wagner Programme.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

SUN, BALTIMORE,
MARCH 20, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Mar. 22, 8.15
WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

SUN, BALTIMORE
MARCH 21, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., March 22, At 8.15,
Wagner Programme.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD
MARCH 11, 191[illegible]

COURT SQUARE THEATER Springfield
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911
At 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
Sale of seats opens at Box Office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELDREPUBLICAN:
MARCH 12, 1911.

Court Square Theater, Springfield
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911
At 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
Sale of seats opens at Box Office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices: $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY UNION:
MARCH 12, 1911.

Court Square Theater, Springfield,
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911,
At 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
Sale of seats opens at Box Office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the theater with checks payable to Court Square theater. Prices $1.50, $1, 75c, and 50c.

MARCH 17, 1911.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIELDER, Conductor.
COURT SQUARE THEATRE,
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Monday Evening, March 27,
AT 8.15
Tickets go on sale Thursday Morning, March 23.
The program is one that will appeal to all music lovers.

SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD
MARCH 18, 1911

COURT SQUARE THEATER Springfield
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911
At 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
Sale of seats opens at Box Office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD
MARCH 22, 1911

COURT SQUARE THEATER Springfield
ONLY CONCERT THIS YEAR
Monday Eve., Mar. 27, 1911 at 8
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
SEATS NOW ON SALE AT BOX OFFICE OF THEATER, $1.50, $1.00, 75c, and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN
MARCH 21, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER
SPRINGFIELD,
Monday Evening, March 27, 1911,
—AT 8—
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST,
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
Sale of seats opens at Box Office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices: $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAI[illegible]Y NEWS
MARCH 18, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER
Monday Eve., March 27
At 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
Sale of seats opens at box office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD HOMESTEAD
MARCH 18, 1911

COURT SQUADE THEATER Springfield
Monday Eve., March 27, 1911
At 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
Sale of seats opens at Box Office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

SPRINGFIELD DAILY NEWS
MARCH 20, 1911.

COURT SQUARE THEATER
Monday Eve., March 27
At 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
SYLVAIN NOACK, Violinist
Sale of seats opens at box office, Thursday, March 23. Mail orders may now be sent to the Theater with checks payable to Court Square Theater. Prices, $1.50, $1.00, 75c and 50c.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 20, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Feb. 22, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI.
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Feb. 22, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI.
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT at 8:15, Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Feb. 21, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. World
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-night at 8.15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2.30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 21, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30 Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Press
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-night at 8.15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2.30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Evening Sun
Feb. 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Standard Union
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Heute Abend, um 8.15. Solist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sams. Nach., 25. Febr., um 2.30 Solist, Ferruccio Busoni
Ref. Sitze in Box Office und Tyson's.

N.Y. Times
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2.30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Feb. 23, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2.30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

Tribune
Feb. 23, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-night at 8:15. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Sat. Aft., Feb'y 25, at 2:30 Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Reserved Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Feb. 24, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 24, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Post
Feb. 24, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Evening Sun
Feb. 24, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 24, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Feb. 24, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-MORROW (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

Tribune
Feb. 24, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Reserved Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Globe
Feb. 24, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Times
Feb. 25, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 25, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Herald Feb. 25, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune
Feb. 25, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THIS (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Ferruccio BUSONI
Reserved Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Press
Feb. 25, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. World
Feb. 25, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30. Soloist, Ferruccio Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Staats-Ztg
Feb. 25, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Dirigent.
Heute (Samstag) Nachmittag um 2.30. Solist, Ferruccio Busoni
Ref. Sitze in Box Office und Tyson's.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
MARCH 12, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Mar. 20, at 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
Madame Kirkby-Lunn, Contralto
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
Amphitheatre, 25c

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
MARCH 12, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Mar. 20, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
Madame KIRKBY-LUNN, Contralto
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
AMPHITHEATRE, 25 Cts.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
MARCH 14, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Max Fiedler, Conductor
Monday Eve. March 20, at 8.15 Soloist Madame Kirkby-Lunn
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
MARCH 14, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra — Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., March 20, at 8.15 Soloist: Madame Kirkby-Lunn
Tickets at Heppe's, Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
MARCH 16, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra — Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., March 20, at 8.15 Soloist: Madame Kirkby-Lunn
Tickets at Heppe's, Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
MARCH 16, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Max Fiedler, Conductor
Monday Eve. March 20, at 8.15 Soloist Madame Kirkby-Lunn
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheatre, 25 cents

NORTH AMERICAN,
FEBRUARY 20, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tonight at 8.15.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Soloist,
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's.
Amphitheater, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
FEBRUARY 20, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
TONIGHT AT 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
FEBRUARY 12, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
WEDNESDAY EVE., FEB. 22, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Assisted by
THE ORATORIO SOCIETY and
Corinne Rider-Kelsey Janet Spencer
Daniel Beddoe Claude Cunningham
In Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Soloist, Anton Witek, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency

Baltimore Star
FEBRUARY 15, 1911

THE LYRIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Wed. Feb. 22, at 8.15
Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency

BALTIMORE,
FEBRUARY 15, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
WEDNESDAY EVE., FEB. 22, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Assisted by
THE ORATORIO SOCIETY and
Corinne Rider-Kelsey Janet Spencer
Daniel Beddoe Claude Cunningham
In Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Soloist, Anton Witek, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency

Baltimore Star
FEBRUARY 16, 1911

THE LYRIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Wed. Feb. 22, at 8.15
Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
FEBRUARY 17, 1911

THE LYRIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Wed. Feb. 22, at 8:15
Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency.

Baltimore Star
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
Wednesday Eve., Feb. 22, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Assisted by
THE ORATORIO SOCIETY and
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY JANET SPENCER
DANIEL BEDDOE CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
IN BEETHOVEN'S CHORAL SYMPHONY
Soloist, ANTON WITEK, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency.

ALTIMORE AMERICAN
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

THE LYRIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Wed. Feb. 22, at 8:15
Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
FEBRUARY 19, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
Wed. Evening, Feb. 22, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 MUSICIANS)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

PROGRAMME

BEETHOVEN . . Concerto for Violin in D major

BEETHOVEN . . Symphony in D minor, No. 9 (Chural)

SOLOISTS

CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY . . . Soprano
JANET SPENCER . . . . . Alto
DANIEL BEDDOE . . . . . Tenor
CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM . . . . . Bass

and

ANTON WITEK, Violin

BALTIMORE ORATORIO SOCIETY
JOSEPH PACHE, Conductor
TICKETS AT ALBAUGH'S AGENCY

Baltimore Star
FEBRUARY 20, 1911

THE LYRIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Wed. Feb. 22, at 8.15
Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
FEBRUARY 20, 191

THE LYRIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Wed. Feb. 22, at 8:15
Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency.

Baltimore Star
FEBRUARY 21, 1911

THE LYRIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Wed. Feb. 22, at 8.15
Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency

BALTIMORE AMERICAN,
FEBRUARY 21, 1911

THE LYRIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Wed. Feb. 22, at 8:15
Beethoven's Choral Symphony
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
FEBRUARY 22, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
This Eve., Feb. 22, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Assisted by
THE ORATORIO SOCIETY and
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY JANET SPENCER
DANIEL BEDDOE CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
IN BEETHOVEN'S CHORAL SYMPHONY
Soloist, ANTON WITEK, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency. Admission, $1.00.

Baltimore Star
FEBRUARY 22, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
This Eve., Feb. 22, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Assisted by
THE ORATORIO SOCIETY and
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY JANET SPENCER
DANIEL BEDDOE CLAUDE CUNNINGHAM
IN BEETHOVEN'S CHORAL SYMPHONY
Soloist, ANTON WITEK, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency. Admission, $1.00.

N.Y. Sun
Feb 18, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Evening Sun
Feb 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Feb. 18, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI.
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post
Feb 18 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Feb. 18, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Reserved Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Globe
Feb. 18 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Times
Feb. 18, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Eve., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Tribune
Feb. 18, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Evg., Feb. 23, 8:15.
Soloist, FERRUCCIO
BUSONI
Sat. Aft., Feb'y 25, at 2:30
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI
Reserved Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post
Feb. 18, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Feb. 19, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI.
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb 19 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune
Feb. 19, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Eve., Feb. 23, 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI
Sat. Aft., Feb'y 25, at 2:30
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI
Reserved Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Press
Feb. 19, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Staats Z.
Feb. 19, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Dirigent.
Donn. Abd., 23. Febr., um 8.15
Solist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sams. Nach., 25. Febr., um 2.30
Solist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Ref. Sitze in Box Office und Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 19, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. World
Feb. 19, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thur. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

Sales
Feb. 19, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Journal
Feb. 19, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Feb. 20, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Sat. Aft., Feb. 25, at 2:30.
Soloist, Ferruccio
Busoni
Reserved Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Journal
Feb. 20, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Feb. 23, at 8:15.
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI
Sat. Aft., Feb'y 25, at 2:30
Soloist, Ferruccio
BUSONI
Reserved Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE
FEBRUARY 11, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE,
TUESDAY EVE., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOISTS,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster st.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
FEBRUARY 11, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE,
TUESDAY EVE., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOISTS,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster st.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

PROVIDENCE SUNDAY JOURNAL,
FEBRUARY 12, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL
PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, February 14th
AT 8:15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
PROGRAMME

Handel	Overture in D-Major
Schubert	Symphony in C-Major No. 7
Liszt	Concerto in A-Major No. 2
Saint-Saens	"Omphale's Spinning Wheel"
Saint-Saens	"Danse Macabre"

Seats at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street.
$2.00 and $1.50.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE,
FEBRUARY 13, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE,
TUESDAY EVE., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOISTS,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster st.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET
FEBRUARY 13, 1911

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist.
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50
f9 5t

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
FEBRUARY 13, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE,
TUESDAY EVE., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOISTS,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster st.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET
FEBRUARY 14, 1911.

Infantry Hall Providence
TONIGHT at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist.
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50
f9 5t

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE
FEBRUARY 14, 1911.

Infantry Hall, Providence,
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
SEATS NOW SELLING AT STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
FEBRUARY 14, 1911.

Infantry Hall, Providence,
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
SEATS NOW SELLING AT STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 15. Februar 1911.

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
(feb15,16
Mittwoch, 22. Februar, um 8.15.
Beethoven's
Choral Symphony
Beethoven's
Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles- und Fayette-Str.

"Die Sonntags-Post," Baltimore, Md.,
Sonntag, den 19. Februar 1911.

LYRIC THEATER.
Mittwoch Abend, 22. Febr., um 8.15
Boston Symphonie Orchester
Max Fiedler, . . . Dirigent.
Assistirt von
Der Oratorien-Gesellschaft und
Corinne Rider-Kelsey, Janet Spencer,
Daniel Beddoe, Claude Cunningham,
in Beethoven's Choral-Symphonie.
Solist ANTON WITEK, Violinist.
Tickets in Albaugh's Agentur. feb19

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 22. Februar 1911

LYRIC THEATER.
Heute Abend, 22. Febr., um 8.15
Boston Symphonie Orchester
Max Fiedler, . . . Dirigent.
Assistirt von
Der Oratorien-Gesellschaft und
Corinne Rider-Kelsey, Janet Spencer,
Daniel Beddoe, Claude Cunningham,
in Beethoven's Choral-Symphonie.
Solist ANTON WITEK, Violinist.
Eintritt $1.00.
Tickets in Albaugh's Agentur. (feb22

PUBLIC LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
FEBRUARY 12, 1911.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
FEBRUARY 13, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE,
TUESDAY EVE., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOISTS,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster st.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
FEBRUARY 12, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

NORTH AMERICAN, PHILADELPHIA
FEBRUARY 12, 1911

ACADEMY
Monday Evg., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppes', 1119 Chestnut St.
AMPHITHEATER, 25 CENTS

EVENING TIMES,
FEBRUARY 15, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15.
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppes'.
Amphitheater, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
FEBRUARY 15, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15.
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA RECO
FEBRUARY 16, 191

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Soloist
Heinrich Warnke
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

NORTH AMERICAN, PHILAD
FEBRUARY 16, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Mon. Evg., Feb. 20, at 8.15.
Soloist:
Heinrich Warnke
Tickets at Heppes'.
Amphitheater, 25 cents.

Times Philadelphia
FEBRUARY 16, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15.
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppes'.
Amphitheater, 25 cents

PUBLIC LEDGER—PHILADELPHI
FEBRUARY 12, 1911.

LIC LEDGER—PHILADELPI
FEBRUARY 16, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Soloist
Heinrich Warnke
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
FEBRUARY 17, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15.
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppes'.
Amphitheater, 25 cents

PHILADELPHIA, RECORD
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Soloist
Heinrich Warnke
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PUBLIC LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8:15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

NORTH AMERICAN, PHILADELPHIA
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Mon. Evg., Feb. 20, at 8.15.
Soloist:
Heinrich Warnke
Tickets at Heppes'.
Amphitheater, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
FEBRUARY 18, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

NORTH AMERICAN
FEBRUARY 19, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Evg., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppes', 1119 Chestnut street
Amphitheater, 25 cents

PUBLIC LEDGER-
FEBRUARY 19, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

PUBLIC LEDGER
FEBRUARY 20, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Tonight at 8.15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cts.

Philadelphia
EVENING TIMES,
FEBRUARY 20, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Tonight, at 8.15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheater, 25 cents

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Evening, Feb. 20, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8:15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA, RECORD
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Soloist
Heinrich Warnke
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

PUBLIC LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8:15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

NORTH AMERICAN, PHILADELPHIA
FEBRUARY 18, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Mon. Evg., Feb. 20, at 8.15.
Soloist:
Heinrich Warnke
Tickets at Heppes'.
Amphitheater, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
FEBRUARY 18, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cents

NORTH AMERICAN
FEBRUARY 19, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Evg., Feb. 20, at 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppes', 1119 Chestnut street
Amphitheater, 25 cents

PUBLIC LEDGER-
FEBRUARY 19, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Eve., Feb. 20, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
SOLOIST
HEINRICH WARNKE
Violoncellist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

PUBLIC LEDGER
FEBRUARY 20, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Tonight at 8.15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheatre, 25 cts.

Philadelphia
EVENING TIMES,
FEBRUARY 20, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Tonight, at 8.15
Soloist
HEINRICH WARNKE
Tickets at Heppe's
Amphitheater, 25 cents

[40]

New York

N.Y. Herald
Jan 13, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-MORROW (Saturday) AFTERNOON, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA ELMAN.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Jan 14 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THIS (Saturday) AFTERNOON, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA ELMAN.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

Telegraph
Jan 8, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev'g, Jan. 12
Soloist, Mischa ELMAN
Sat. Aft. Jan. 14, at 2.30
Soloist, Mischa ELMAN
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

American
Jan 8, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Jan 7, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12 at 8.15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Jan 10, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8.15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Jan 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-night at 8.15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Jan 13, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Jan 7, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Jan 8, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Jan 9, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Jan 10, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Jan 11, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Jan 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft. Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Jan 13, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Jan 14, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30
Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

PROVIDENCE SUNDAY JOURNAL,
FEBRUARY 5, 1911.

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR.
SOLOIST,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, February 11th.
Prices $2.00 and $1.50

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
FEBRUARY 9, 1911.

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR.
SOLOIST,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, February 11th.
Prices $2.00 and $1.50

TIMES, PAWTUCKET,
FEBRUARY 9, 1911.

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist.
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence, Saturday, Feb. 11th.
PRICES : $2.00, $1.50
f9 5t

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE,
FEBRUARY 9, 1911.

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR.
SOLOIST,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, February 11th.
Prices $2.00 and $1.50

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE,
FEBRUARY 10, 1911.

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR.
SOLOIST,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, February 11th.
Prices $2.00 and $1.50

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
FEBRUARY 10, 1911.

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR.
SOLOIST,
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, February 11th.
Prices $2.00 and $1.50

TIMES, PAWTUCKET,
FEBRUARY 10, 1911

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist.
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence, Saturday, Feb. 11th.
PRICES : $2.00, $1.50
f9 5t

TIMES, PAWTUCKET
FEBRUARY 11, 1911.

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist.
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence.
PRICES : $2.00, $1.50
f9 5t

Baltimore American

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Third Concert
January 11th, 1911

Baltimore Star.

New York Times N.Y. Tribune

LYRIC THEATRE
American Jany 1st
Wednesday Evening, January 11, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER - - Conductor
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, at 8:15
American Jany 4th
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN,
VIOLINIST,
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, at 8:15
American Jany 5th
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN,
VIOLINIST,
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, at 8:15
American Jany 6th
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN,
VIOLINIST,
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, at 8:15
American Jany 7th
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN,
VIOLINIST,
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

New York Herald

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor.
Max Fiedler,
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
THURS. EV'G, JAN. 12
Soloist, Mischa
ELMAN
Sat. Aft. Jan. 14, at 2:30
Soloist, Mischa
ELMAN

N.Y. Tribune Jan 12, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor.
Max Fiedler,
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
THURS. EV'G, JAN. 12
Soloist, Mischa
ELMAN
Sat. Aft. Jan. 14, at 2:30
Soloist, Mischa
ELMAN

N.Y. Tribune Jan 12, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor.
Max Fiedler,
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Mischa
ELMAN
Sat. Aft. Jan. 14, at 2:30
Soloist, Mischa
ELMAN

N.Y. Tribune Jan 13, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor.
Max Fiedler,
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
TO-MORROW (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 2:30,
Soloist, Mischa
ELMAN

Journal Jan 14, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor.
Max Fiedler,
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.
THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 2:30,
Soloist, Mischa
ELMAN

Lyric Theater
American Jany 8th,
Wednesday Evening, January 11, At 8:15
THE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
Mischa Elman, Violinist

Programme:

HUMPERDINCK — Prelude to "Haensel and Gretel."
DVORAK — Symphony "From the New World."
LALO — Symphonie Espagnole for Violin.
STRAUSS — "Death and Transfiguration."

Seats now selling at Albaugh's, Charles and Fayette Sts.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, at 8:15
American Jany 8th
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN,
VIOLINIST,
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, at 8:15
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN,
VIOLINIST,
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette streets.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, AT 8:15
BOSTON
JAN 11 1911
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette Streets. Admission $1.00.

N.Y. Press Jan 8 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

Staats-Ztg Jan 8 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Don., 12. Jan., 8.15 N.
Solist: MISCHA
Elman
Son., 14. Jan., 2.30 N.
Solist: MISCHA
Elman

New York Staats-Ztg Jan 2 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Dirigent.
Reservirte Sitze an der Kasse und bei Tyson's.
Heute Abend um 8.15
Solist: MISCHA
Elman
Samst., 14. Jan., Nachm. 2.30: Solist: MISCHA
Elman

Staats-Ztg Jan 10 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Dirigent.
Reservirte Sitze an der Kasse und bei Tyson's.
Heute (Samstag) Nachmittag um 2.30
Solist: MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Tribune Jan 7 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Tribune Jan 8 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

Staats-Ztg Jan 8 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Times Jan 8 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Times Jan 8 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Herald Jan 11 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Herald Jan 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.

N.Y. Herald Jan 11 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist MISCHA
ELMAN.
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.

N.Y. Herald Jan 9 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.

N.Y. Herald Jan 10 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.

N.Y. Herald Jan 11 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.

N.Y. Herald Jan 12 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Times Jan 8 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Times

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
Elman

N.Y. Herald Jan 12 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30.
Soloist, MISCHA
ELMAN.

PROVIDENCE SUNDAY JOURNAL
JANUARY 1, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL
PROVIDENCE
TUESDAY EVENING
JANUARY 3, 1911, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
PROGRAMME:
Humperdinck...Prelude to "Hansel und Gretel"
Dvorak.....Symphony "From the New World"
Lalo.....Symphonie Espagnole for Violin
Sibelius .....(a) Valse triste (b) "Finlandia"
Seats now selling at Steinert's 327 Westminster street.
PRICES——$2.00, $1.50

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE
JANUARY 2, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
JANUARY 2, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
JANUARY 3, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
THIS EVENING at 8:15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE,
JANUARY 3, 1911.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
THIS EVENING at 8:15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET
JANUARY 3, 1911

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.
THIS EVENING at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence, Saturday, December 31.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.
d29-5t

TIMES, SATURDAY,
JANUARY 7, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Evening, Jan. 9, at 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.

TIMES, THURSDAY,
JANUARY 5, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler Conductor
Mon. Eve., Jan. 9, at 8.15
Soloist
MISCHA ELMA
Tickets at Heppes'.

TIMES, MONDAY,
JANUARY 2, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler Conductor
Mon. Eve., Jan. 9, at 8.15
Soloist
MISCHA ELMA
Tickets at Heppes'.

TIMES, TUESDAY,
JANUARY 3, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler Conductor
Mon. Eve., Jan. 9, at 8.15
Soloist
MISCHA ELMA
Tickets at Heppes'.

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA
JANUARY 9, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tonight, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Soloist
MISCHA ELMAN
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheatre, 25 cents

SUN, BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY
JANUARY 11, 1911.

Lyric Theatre
THIS EVENING AT 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts. Admission, $1.00.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
JANUARY 11, 1911.

Lyric Theatre
THIS EVENING AT 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts. Admission, $1.00.

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 11. Januar 1911

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
Heute Abend, 8.15 Uhr
Solist
Mischa Elman, Violinist
Billete zu verkaufen in Albaughs, Ticket-Office, Charles und Fayette-Str.
Eintritt $1.00
jan11)

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
JANUARY 10, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 10, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 9, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

New York
N. World
Jan. 8, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8.15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N. Y. World
Jan. 12, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-night at 8.15, Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft. Jan. 14, at 2.30 Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tysons.

N. Y. World
Jan. 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30, Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Globe
Jan. -1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8.15 Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Globe
Jan. 11, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8.15 Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Globe
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Globe
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Post
Jan. 7, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8.15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

New York
N. Y. Herald
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Globe
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Post
Jan. 7, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8.15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

New York
N. Y. Herald
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Globe
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Post
Jan. 7, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

New York
N. Y. Herald
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Globe
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Post
Jan. 7, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Jan. 12, at 8:15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

New York
N. Y. Herald
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30. Soloist, MISCHA Elman
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Globe
Jan. 12, 1911.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THURS. EV'G, JAN. 12 Soloist, Mischa ELMAN
Sat. Aft. Jan. 14, at 2:30. Soloist, Mischa ELMAN
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N. Y. Herald
Jan. 10, 1911

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THURS. EV'G, JAN. 12 Soloist, Mischa ELMAN
Sat. Aft., Jan. 14, at 2:30. Soloist, Mischa ELMAN
Reserved Seats at box office and Tyson's.

[43]

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
JANUARY 8, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Eve., Jan. 9, at 8.15.
Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Heppe's 1119 Chestnut Street.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
JANUARY 9, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
TONIGHT AT 8.15
Soloist
MISCHA ELMAN
Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 4. Januar 1911.

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
Mittwoch Abend, 11. Jan. um 8.15 Uhr
Soloist
Mischa Elman, Violinist
Billete zu verkaufen in Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles-und Fayette-Str.
jan4,6,8,10

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 5, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 5, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 6, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 6, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

Baltimore Journal, Freitag, den 6. Januar 1911.

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
Mittwoch Abend, 11. Jan. um 8.15 Uhr
Soloist
Mischa Elman, Violinist
Billete zu verkaufen in Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles-und Fayette-Str.
jan4,6,8,10

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 7, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 7, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist.
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 8, 1911

LYRIC THEATRE
Wednesday Evening
January 11
AT 8.15.
The Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 MUSICIANS.)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist

PROGRAM:
Humperdinek....Prelude to "Haensel and Gretel"
Dvorak....Symphony "From the New World"
Lalo..Symphonie Espagnole for Violin
Strauss..."Death and Transfiguration"

Seats now selling at Albaugh's, Charles and Fayette streets.

Die Sonntags-Post," Baltimore, Md., Sonntag, den 8. Januar

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.
Mittwoch Abend, 11. Jan. um 8.15 Uhr
Soloist
Mischa Elman, Violinist
Billete zu verkaufen in Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles-und Fayette-Str.
jan4,6,8,10

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
JANUARY 9, 1911.

LYRIC THEATRE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eve., Jan. 11, At 8.15.
Soloist,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Agency, Charles and Fayette sts.

PROVIDENCE SUNDAY JOURNAL,
DECEMBER 25, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, December 31.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL.
DECEMBER 29, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, December 31.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE,
DECEMBER 29, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, December 31.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

PAWTUCKET TIMES,
DECEMBER 30, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence, Saturday, December 31.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.
d29-5t

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
DECEMBER 30, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, December 31.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE,
DECEMBER 30, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, December 31.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE
DECEMBER 31, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
DECEMBER 31, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats now selling at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET
DECEMBER 31, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.
Tuesday Evening, January 3, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St., Providence, Saturday, December 31.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.
d29-5t

N.Y. Times
Dec 7 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30, Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Press
Dec 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, Josef. Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2.30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Post
Dec 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-night at 8:15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Dec 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8:15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Staats Ztg
Dec 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Dirigent.
Heute Abd. um 8.15 Solist: Josef HOFMANN.
Samst., 10. Dez., 2.30 Nachm. Solist: Josef HOFMANN.
Reservirte Sitze an Box Office und Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune
Dec 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Dec 8, 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Dec 8 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT, AT 8:15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Globe
Dec 8 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8.15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2.30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Eve Sun
Dec 8 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-Night at 8:15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Times
Dec 8 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-NIGHT AT 8:15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Dec 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-MORROW (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2:30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

Eve Sun
Dec 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler. Conductor.
TO-MORROW (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2:30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Tribune
Dec 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail
Dec 9, 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-MORROW (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2.30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Dec 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-MORROW (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2:30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Staats Ztg
Dec 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-MORROW (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2.30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Tribune
Dec 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post
Dec 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
TO-MORROW (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2:30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune
Dec. 10 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
HEUTE (Samstag) Nachmittag um 2.30 Solist: Josef HOFMANN
Reservirte Sitze an Box Office und Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune
Dec. 10 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THIS (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. World
Dec 10 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2.30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun
Dec 10 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THIS (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2:30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Press
Dec 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THIS (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2.30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald
Dec 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30. Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Times
Dec 10 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THIS (Saturday) AFTERNOON AT 2:30 Soloist, Josef Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 1, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Evening, Jan. 9, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
JANUARY 1, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Jan. 9, at 8.15
Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Heppe's 1119 Chestnut Street.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
JANUARY 2, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve., Jan. 9, at 8.15. Soloist: MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's.

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA
JANUARY 2, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve. Jan. 9, at 8.15. Soloist MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA,
JANUARY 3, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve. Jan. 9, at 8.15. Soloist MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
JANUARY 4, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve., Jan. 9, at 8.15. Soloist: MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
JANUARY 4, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve., Jan. 9 at 8.15. Soloist MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA.
JANUARY 4, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve. Jan. 9, at 8.15. Soloist MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA
JANUARY 6, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve. Jan. 9, at 8.15. Soloist MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
JANUARY 6, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve., Jan. 9, at 8.15. Soloist: MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
JANUARY 6, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve., Jan. 9 at 8.15. Soloist MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
JANUARY 7, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Mon. Eve., Jan. 9 at 8.15. Soloist MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA
JANUARY 7, 1911

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Evening, Jan. 9, at 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
JANUARY 8, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
To-morrow Evening, Jan. 9, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
Tickets at Heppe's, 1119 Chestnut St.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
JANUARY 9, 1911.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — TONIGHT AT 8.15. SOLOIST MISCHA ELMAN
Max Fiedler, Conductor — Tickets at Heppe's Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

[45]

Mail N.Y. Nov 11, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow, Saturday, Afternoon, at 2.30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Nov. 11, 1910

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow, Saturday, Afternoon, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Nov. 11 1910

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
To-morrow, Saturday, Afternoon, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 12 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
This Saturday Afternoon at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
MELBA
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov 12 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov 12 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Staats Ztg Nov 12 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Heute (Samstag) Nachmittag um 2.30.
Solistin Mme.
Melba
Reservirte Sitze an Box Office und Tyson's.

N.Y. World Nov 12 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Press Nov 12 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
This (Saturday) Afternoon at 2.30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Nov 12 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
THIS (Saturday) Afternoon at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Dec 2, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2.30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Globe Dec 3, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8.15
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2.30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail Dec 3, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8.15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Dec 3, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Dec 3 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Dec 3, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Thurs. Eve., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
HOFMANN
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30,
Soloist, Josef
HOFMANN
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Telegraph Dec 4 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8.15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2.30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Reserved Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. World Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8.15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2.30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Staats Ztg Dec 4 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Dirigent.
Donn., 8. Dez., 8.15 Abends
Solist: Josef
HOFMANN.
Samst., 10. Dez., 2.30 Nachm.
Solist: Josef
HOFMANN.
Reservirte Sitze an Box Office und Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Reserved Seats at box office and Tyson's.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8.15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

[46]

N.Y. Times Dec 4, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Dec 5 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Dec 5 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Dec 6 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Dec 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Dec 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8.15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Dec 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

Eve Sun Dec. 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Dec 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Reserved Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Dec 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Dec 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Reserved Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Dec 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. World Dec 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Dec 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Thurs. Ev., Dec. 8, at 8:15.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Sat. Aft., Dec. 10, at 2:30.
Soloist, Josef
Hofmann
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. American Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15

Programme:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero! o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30

Programme:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia." Soloist, MME.

Melba

Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15

Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero! o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30

Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia." Soloist, MME.

Melba

Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. World Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15

Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero! o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist Miss GERALDINE

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2.30.

Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia," Soloist, MME.

Melba

Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15

Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero! o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30

Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia." Soloist, MME.

Melba

Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.

Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero! o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30

Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia." Soloist, MME.

Melba

Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15

Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero! o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30

Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia." Soloist, MME.

Melba

Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15

Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero! o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30

Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia." Soloist, MME.

Melba

Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15

Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero! o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30

Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia." Soloist, MME.

Melba

Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

FARRAR

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

MELBA

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Nov. 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Nov. 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 7, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

FARRAR

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

MELBA

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Nov. 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's

N.Y. Times Nov. 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Eve. Sun Nov. 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail Nov. 8, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

FARRAR

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

MELBA

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

Eve. Sun Nov. 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Nov. 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Nov. 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 9, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2.30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2.30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at Box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

FARRAR

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

MELBA

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8.15
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2.30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Tribune Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2.30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12 at 2.30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at Box Office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Sun Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.

Melba

Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 10, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

TO-NIGHT AT 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine

Farrar

Sat. Aft., Nov. 12

N.Y. Tribune Oct. 26, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings. Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Matinees. Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.
A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. World Oct 26, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's. Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats. Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.
A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 27, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings. Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Matinees. Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.
A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Eve. Sun Oct. 27, 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Five Thursday Ev'gs. Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 25.
Five Saturday Mats Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.
A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 27, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Five Thursday Ev'g's, Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats., Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.
A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Eve Sun Oct 27, 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 27, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Post Oct. 27, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 27, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Mail Oct. 27, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct. 27, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct. 30, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor.

SOLOISTS:—
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS,
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees.
SATURDAYS,
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Staats Z. Oct 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester
MAX FIEDLER, Dirigent.

SOLISTEN:
Frl. Farrar
Mme. Melba
Hr. Hofmann
Hr. Elman
Hr. Busoni
Hr. Witek

5 Abend-Konzerte
Donnerstags
10. November,
8. Dezember,
12. Januar,
23. Februar,
23. März.

Fünf Matinees
Samstags
12. November,
10. Dezember,
14. Januar,
25. Februar,
25. März.

Programm-Wechsel bei jeder Aufführung.

Eine beschränkte Anzahl von Subskriptions-Sitzen sind jetzt an der Box-Office in Carnegie Hall zu haben.

N.Y. Tribune Oct. 30, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post. Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15
Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD; Air de Jeannot et Coulin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist Miss Geraldine.
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30
Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, Finlandia." Soloist, MME.
Melba
Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

Eve Sun Nov 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15
Program:
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist, Miss Geraldine.
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30
Program:
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred"; BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono"; STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck"; THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet"; SIBELIUS, "Finlandia."; Soloist, MME.
Melba
Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Tribune Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15
PROGRAMME:—
RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2; ISOUARD, Air de Jeannot et Colin; BACH, Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Misero o segno"; BEETHOVEN, Overture, "Egmont." Soloist Miss GERALDINE
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
PROGRAMME:—
SCHUMANN, Overture, "Manfred;" BRAHMS, Symphony No. 3; MOZART, Aria, "Dove Sono;" STRUBE, Comedy Overture, "Puck;" THOMAS, Mad Scene from "Hamlet;" SIBELIUS, "Finlandia." Soloist, MME.
Melba
Tickets at Box Office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Globe Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Mail Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Times Oct. 30, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Post Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Times Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Mail Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office and Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Oct. 29, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Nov. 5, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Thurs. Ev., Nov. 10, at 8:15.
Soloist, Miss Geraldine
Farrar
Sat. Aft., Nov. 12, at 2:30.
Soloist, MME.
Melba
Res. Seats at box office & Tyson's.

Staats Z. Nov. 6, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester
MAX FIEDLER, Dirigent.

Donnerst., 10. Nov., 8.15 Uh. Programm: Rachmaninoff, Symphonie No. 2; Isouard, Air de Jeannot et Colin; Bach, Brandenburg-Concert, No. 3; Mozart, Arie „Misero o Segno"; Beethoven, Ouverture, „Egmont". Solistin Frl. Geraldine
Farrar
Sa. 12. Nov., Nachm. 2.30
Programm: Schumann, Ouverture, „Manfred"; Brahms, Symphonie No. 3; Mozart, Arie, „Dove Sono"; Strube, Comödien-Ouverture, „Puck"; Thomas, Mad Scene aus „Hamlet"; Sibelius, „Finlandia". Solistin Mme.
Melba
Tickets an Box-Office und bei Tyson's.

N.Y. Post Oct. 24, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

[48]

American Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Mail Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Conductor, MAX FIEDLER

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees.
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

SOLOISTS:—
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS,
November 10,
December 8,
January 12
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees.
SATURDAYS,
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Times Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Eve Sun Oct 25 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Five Thursday Ev'gs.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Staats Ztg Oct 7 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester

MAX FIEDLER, Dirigent.

SOLISTEN:
Frl. Farrar
Mme. Melba
Hr. Hofmann
Hr. Elman
Hr. Busoni
Hr. Witek

5 Abend-Konzerte
Donnerstags
10. November,
8. Dezember,
12. Januar,
23. Februar,
23. März.

Fünf Matinees
Samstags
12. November,
10. Dezember,
14. Januar,
25. Februar,
25. März.

Programm-Wechsel bei jeder Aufführung.

Eine beschränkte Anzahl von Subskriptions-Sitzen sind jetzt an der Box-Office in Carnegie Hall zu haben.

N.Y. Mail Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Eve Sun Oct 22 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Matinees
S[illegible]YS
[illegible]ber 12,
[illegible]ber 10,
Jan[illegible]ary 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct 25 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Five Thursday Ev'g's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Times Oct 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Staats Ztg Oct 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester

MAX FIEDLER, Dirigent.

SOLISTEN:
Frl. Farrar
Mme. Melba
Hr. Hofmann
Hr. Elman
Hr. Busoni
Hr. Witek

5 Abend-Konzerte
Donnerstags
10. November,
8. Dezember,
12. Januar,
23. Februar,
23. März.

Fünf Matinees
Samstags
12. November,
10. Dezember,
14. Januar,
25. Februar,
25. März.

Programm-Wechsel bei jeder Aufführung.

Eine beschränkte Anzahl von Subskriptions-Sitzen sind jetzt an der Box-Office in Carnegie Hall zu haben.

N.Y. Herald Oct 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOISTS:—
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS,
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees,
SATURDAYS,
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

American Oct. 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct. 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Times Oct 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Staats Ztg Oct 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester

MAX FIEDLER, Dirigent.

SOLISTEN:
Frl. Farrar
Mme. Melba
Hr. Hofmann
Hr. Elman
Hr. Busoni
Hr. Witek

5 Abend-Konzerte
Donnerstags
10. November,
8. Dezember,
12. Januar,
23. Februar,
23. März.

Fünf Matinees
Samstags
12. November,
10. Dezember,
14. Januar,
25. Februar,
25. März.

Programm-Wechsel bei jeder Aufführung.

Eine beschränkte Anzahl von Subskriptions-Sitzen sind jetzt an der Box-Office in Carnegie Hall zu haben.

N.Y. Herald Oct 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOISTS:—
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS,
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees,
SATURDAYS,
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

American Oct. 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 23.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOISTS:—
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS,
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees,
SATURDAYS,
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct 24 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Five Thursday Ev'g's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct 24 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Five Thursday Ev'gs.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct 25 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

FIVE THURSDAY EVG.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.
FIVE SAT. MATS.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.
A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office.

N.Y. Herald Oct 25 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor

Five Thursday Ev'gs.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct 25 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Five Thursday Ev'g's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14, Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

Eve Sun Oct 25 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

American Oct. 23 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, Conductor.

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 23.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

HOLE IN PAGE

N.Y. Mail Oct. 1 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct. 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor.

SOLOISTS:—
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS,
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees.
SATURDAYS,
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct 3 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.,
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct. 6 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER,
Conductor.

FIVE THURSDAY EVS.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

FIVE SAT. MATS.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Times Oct 2 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Times Oct 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Times Oct 3 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.,
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Mail Oct. 4 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.,
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office. Carnegie Hall.

Eve Sun Oct 7 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 7 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct. 4 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER,
Conductor.

FIVE THURSDAY EVS.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

FIVE SAT. MATS.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct 7 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.,
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Tribune Oct 5 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Tribune Oct 7 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Herald Oct. 4 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER,
Conductor.

FIVE THURSDAY EVS.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

FIVE SAT. MATS.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct 7 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.,
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. World Oct. 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

B'WAY

Starts rig Oct. 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester

MAX FIEDLER,
Dirigent.

SOLISTEN:
Frl. Farrar
Mme. Melba
Hr. Hofmann
Hr. Elman
Hr. Busoni
Hr. Witek

5 Abend-Konzerte
Donnerstags
10. November,
8. Dezember,
12. Januar,
23. Februar,
23. März.

Fünf Matinees
Samstags
12. November,
10. Dezember,
14. Januar,
25. Februar,
25. März.

Programm-Wechsel bei jeder Aufführung.

Eine beschränkte Anzahl von Subskriptions-Sitzen sind jetzt an der Box-Office in Carnegie Hall zu haben.

N.Y. Press Oct. 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Press Oct. 2 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 3 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Post Oct 3 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 5 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.,
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 5 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Mail Oct 6 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Mail Oct. 8 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Post Oct. 8 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Tribune Oct 9 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor.

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Sun Oct 3 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Mail Oct 6 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings,
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23, March 23.

Five Saturday Mats.,
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.

A limited number of Subscription tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

[50]

HOLE IN PAGE

New York Papers

N.Y. Globe Sept 24

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Press Sept 25, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office. Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. American Sept 25 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor.

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts:
THURSDAYS,
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees:
SATURDAYS,
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Globe Sept 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Times Sept 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Sun Sept 25, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Fri. Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Mail Sept 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler
Conductor

Five Thursday Evg's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Herald Sept. 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER,
Conductor.

FIVE THURSDAY EVS.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
FIVE SATURDAY MATS.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Tribune Sept. 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Post Sept 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Sun Sept 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Globe Sept 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Times Sept 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Eve Sun Sept 28 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Eve Sun Sept 24

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Fri. Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Staats Ztg Sept 25, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL.

Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester

MAX FIEDLER,
Dirigent.

SOLISTEN:
Frl. Farrar
Mme. Melba
Hr. Hofmann
Hr. Elman
Hr. Busoni
Hr. Witek

5 Abend-Konzerte
Donnerstags
10. November,
8. Dezember,
12. Januar,
23. Februar,
23. März.

Fünf Matinees
Samstags
12. November,
10. Dezember,
14. Januar,
25. Februar,
25. März.

Programm-Wechsel bei jeder Aufführung.

Frühere Subskribenten haben bis zum Samstag, 1. Oktober, Zeit zur Erneuerung. Eine beschränkte Anzahl von Sitzen an neue Subskribenten zum Verkauf, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Montag, 3. Oktober.

N.Y. Post Sept 24, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Times Sept 25

[redacted]

N.Y. Staats Ztg Sept 25, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor.

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Herald Sept 25, 1910

CARNEGIE HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER,
Conductor.

SOLOISTS:—
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts.
THURSDAYS.
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees.
SATURDAYS.
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Globe Sept 24, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Mail Sept. 24, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Herald Sept 25, 1910

N.Y. Globe Sept 25, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Post Sept 28, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evg's.
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Sun Sept 28, 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 1, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Box Oct. 1, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 1, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

N.Y. Mirror Sept 25 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

Former subscribers have until Saturday, October 1, to renew. A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers. Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 3.

N.Y. Sun Sept 28, 1910

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler,
Conductor.

Five Thursday Evenings
Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12,
Feb. 23, March 23.
Five Saturday Mats.
Nov. 12, Dec. 10, Jan. 14,
Feb. 25, March 25.
Former subscribers have until Oct. 1st to renew.
A limited number of seats on sale to new subscribers, Box Office, Carnegie Hall, Oct. 3.

N.Y. Globe Oct. 1, 1910.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MAX FIEDLER
Conductor

SOLOISTS:
Miss Farrar
Mme. Melba
Mr. Hofmann
Mr. Elman
Mr. Busoni
Mr. Witek

Five Evg. Concerts
THURSDAYS
November 10,
December 8,
January 12,
February 23,
March 23.

Five Matinees
SATURDAYS
November 12,
December 10,
January 14,
February 25,
March 25.

Change of Programme Each Performance.

A limited number of Subscription Tickets now on sale at Box Office, Carnegie Hall.

[51]

Advertisements of the Second Concert of The Boston Symphony Orchestra in The American & The Star.
Baltimore, Maryland.

November-27th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
WEDNESDAY EVE., DEC. 7, AT 8:15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians).
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets, Wednesday, Nov. 30.

November-30th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-1st-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-4th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Wednesday Evening, Dec. 7, 1910
At 8:15.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 Musicians
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist:
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
PROGRAMME:
Berlioz, Overture, "The Roman Carnival."
Tschaikowsky, Symphony No. 5.
Beethoven, Concerto for Piano in G Major.
Brahms, Overture, "Academic."
Tickets at Albaugh's, Charles and Fayette Sts.

December-3rd-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-5th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-6th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, DEC. 7, AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Sts. Admission $1.00.

THE STAR.

November-30th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist,

December-1st-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-3rd-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

LYRIC THEATRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler Conductor.	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-7th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, DEC. 7, AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Sts. Admission $1.00.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
NOVEMBER 30, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor	Mon. Eve., Dec. 5, at 8.15 Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist Tickets at Heppe's.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
DECEMBER 2, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor	Mon. Eve., Dec. 5, at 8.15 Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist Tickets at Heppe's.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
DECEMBER 4, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Eve., Dec. 5, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN
Tickets at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
DECEMBER 5, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor	This Evening at 8.15 Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist Tickets at Heppe's. Amphitheatre, 25c.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 3, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST Josef Hofmann, Pianist Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette Street.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 3, 1910.

Lyric Theatre

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor	WED. EVE., DEC. 7, at 8.15. Soloist, JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist. Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 4, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
WEDNESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 7, 1910.
AT 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor,
Soloist.
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist.
PROGRAMME
BERLIOZ—
Overture, "The Roman Carnival."
TSCHAIKOWSKY—
Symphony No. 5.
BEETHOVEN—
Concerto for Piano in G Major.
BRAHMS—
Overture, "Academic."
Tickets at Albaugh's, Charles and Fayette streets.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 5, 1910.

Lyric Theatre

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	WED. EVE., DEC. 7, at 8.15. Soloist, JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist. Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 5, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST Josef Hofmann, Pianist Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette Street

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
DECEMBER 6, 1910.

Lyric Theatre

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	WED. EVE., DEC. 7, at 8.15. Soloist, JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist. Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE.
DECEMBER 6, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor	Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST Josef Hofmann, Pianist Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette Street.

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 7. Dezember 1910.

LYRIC THEATER.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister. (nov30,dez1,2,4,7)	Mittwoch Abend, 7. Dez., um 8.15 Uhr Soloist Josef Hofmann, Pianist Billete zu verkaufen in Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles und Fayette-Str.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
DECEMBER 7, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, DEC. 7, AT 8.15,
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist,
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
ADMISSION, $1.00.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
DECEMBER 7, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, DEC. 7, AT 8.15,
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist,
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
ADMISSION, $1.00.

[52]

Advertisements of the Second Concert of The Boston Symphony Orchestra in The American & The Star.
Baltimore, Maryland.

November-27th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
WEDNESDAY EVE., DEC. 7, AT 8:15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians).
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets, Wednesday, Nov. 30.

November-30th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Pianist.
Max Fiedler Conductor.

December-1st-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist
Max Fiedler Conductor. | Tickets at Albaugh's Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-2nd-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist,
Max Fiedler Conductor. | Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-4th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Wednesday Evening, Dec. 7, 1910
At 8:15.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 Musicians
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist:
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

PROGRAMME:
Berlioz, Overture, "The Roman Carnival."
Tschaikowsky, Symphony No. 5.
Beethoven, Concerto for Piano in G Major.
Brahms, Overture, "Academic."

Tickets at Albaugh's, Charles and Fayette Sts.

December-3rd-1910.

December-5th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist,

December-6th-1910

LYRIC THEAT
Boston Symphony | Wed. Eve., D SOLOIST Josef Hofm

December-7th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, DEC. 7, AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
HOFMANN, Pianist
at Albaugh's Ticket Office, and Fayette Sts. Admission $1.00.

THE STAR.

November-30th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist,

December-1st-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony Orchestra | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist
Max Fiedler Conductor. | Tickets at Albaugh's Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

December-2nd-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST.

December-3rd-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston Symphony | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST. Josef Hofmann, Pianist

December-5th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15

December-6th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
Boston | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15

December-7th-1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, DEC. 7, AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Sts. Admission $1.00.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
NOVEMBER 30, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Mon. Eve., Dec. 5, at 8.15 Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Max Fiedler, Conductor | Tickets at Heppe's.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
DECEMBER 2, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Mon. Eve., Dec. 5, at 8.15 Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Max Fiedler, Conductor | Tickets at Heppe's.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
DECEMBER 4, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Tomorrow Eve., Dec. 5, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN
Tickets at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
DECEMBER 5, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | This Evening at 8.15 Soloist JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Max Fiedler, Conductor | Tickets at Heppe's, Amphitheatre, 25c.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 3, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST Josef Hofmann, Pianist
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor | Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette Street.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 3, 1910.

Lyric Theatre
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15. Soloist, JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor. | Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 4, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
WEDNESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 7, 1910.
AT 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor, Soloist.
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist.
PROGRAMME
BERLIOZ—
Overture, "The Roman Carnival."
TSCHAIKOWSKY—
Symphony No. 5.
BEETHOVEN—
Concerto for Piano in G Major.
BRAHMS—
Overture, "Academic."
Tickets at Albaugh's, Charles and Fayette streets.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 5, 1910.

Lyric Theatre
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15. Soloist, JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor. | Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 5, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST Josef Hofmann, Pianist
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor | Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette Street

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
DECEMBER 6, 1910.

Lyric Theatre
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15. Soloist, JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist.
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor. | Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
DECEMBER 6, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15 SOLOIST Josef Hofmann, Pianist
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor | Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette Street.

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 7. Dezember 1910.

LYRIC THEATER.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA | Mittwoch Abend, 7. Dez., um 8.15 Uhr. Soloist Josef Hofmann, Pianist
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister. | Billete zu verkaufen in Albaughs Ticket-Office, Charles und Fayette-Str.
(nov30,de31,2,4,7)

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
DECEMBER 7, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, DEC. 7, AT 8.15,
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist,
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
ADMISSION, $1.00.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
DECEMBER 7, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE
THIS EVENING, DEC. 7, AT 8.15,
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist,
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
ADMISSION, $1.00.

[52]

Ads in The Baltimore Star Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Lyric 1910-1911
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
WED. EVES.: NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MAR. 22.
Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles Street, $7 and $5.
OCT 8 1910

The Lyric 1910-1911
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
WED. EVES.: NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MAR. 22.
Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles Street, $7 and $5.
OCT 10 1910

The Lyric 1910-1911
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
WED. EVES.: NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MAR. 22.
Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles Street, $7 and $5.
OCT 11 1910

The Lyric 1910-1911
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
WED. EVES.: NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MAR. 22.
Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles Street, $7 and $5.
OCT 12 1910

The Lyric 1910-1911
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
WED. EVES.: NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MAR. 22.
Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles Street, $7 and $5.
OCT 13 1910

The Lyric 1910-1911
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
WED. EVES.: NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MAR. 22.
Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles Street, $7 and $5.
OCT 14 1910

LYRIC THEATRE SEASON 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
OCT 15 1910
(100 Musicians)
Wednesday Evenings:
Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
SOLOISTS:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.
Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices, $7 and $5.

Lyric Theatre. Season 1910-1911.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
OCT 17 1910
(100 Musicians)
Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
SOLOISTS:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.
Season Tickets Now On Sale at Albaugh's, Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices $7 and $5.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R
NOVEMBER 18, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street, Providence, Saturday, November 19.
PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00. n15 7t

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 19, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22 at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats now on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street.
PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00.

THE LYRIC 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7 Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.
OCT 18 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7 Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.
OCT 19 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7 Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.
OCT 20 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7 Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.
OCT 21 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7 Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.
OCT 22 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7 Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.
OCT 23 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER Conductor
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7 Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.
OCT 24 1910

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
NOV - 2 1910

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
NOV - 3 1910

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
NOV - 4 1910

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL.
NOVEMBER 19, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22 at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats now on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street.
PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00.

PROVIDENCE SUNDAY JOURNAL.
NOVEMBER 20, 191

Infantry Hall Providence
Tuesday Eve., November 22,
—AT 8:15—
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
(The greatest pianist now in America.)
PROGRAMME
Rachmaninoff.....Symphony in E-Minor No. 2
Beethoven....Concerto in G-Major for Pianoforte
Brahms.....“Academic Festival” Overture
Seats at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St.,
$2.00 $1.50 $1.00

LYRIC THEATRE
Wednesday, November 9, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Madame MELBA
(Only appearance in Baltimore)
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
NOV 5 1910

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
NOV - 7 1910

LYRIC THEATRE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
NOV - 8 1910

LYRIC THEATRE
Tonight at 8:15.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Madame MELBA
(Only appearance in Baltimore)
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.
Admission $1.00.
NOV - 9 1910

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 20, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL
PROVIDENCE.
Tuesday Eve., November 22nd, at 8:15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN
Pianist
(The Greatest Pianist Now in America)
PROGRAMME
RACHMANINOFF
Symphony in E-Minor No. 2
BEETHOVEN
Concerto in G-Major for Pianoforte
BRAHMS
“Academic Festival” Overture
Seats at Steinert's, 327 Westminster St.
$1.50 and $2.00

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 21, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22 at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats now on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street.
PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL.
NOVEMBER 21, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22 at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats now on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street.
PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00.

[53]

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 22, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
This Evening at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST,
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. tt n22

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL
NOVEMBER 22, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
THIS EVENING . . . . . at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steiner's, 327 Westminster Street.
PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 22, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, Providence
THIS EVENING . . . . . at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steiner's, 327 Westminster Street.
PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.
NOVEMBER 22, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
This Evening at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street, Providence.
PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00. n15 7t

ANSONIA, DERBY, SHELTON, SEYMOUR
SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 10. 1910.
THE EVENING SENTINEL

WOOLSEY HALL, New Haven
Mon. Eve, Dec. 12, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist - JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, now selling at box office, Woolsey Hall. Tickets to gallery, 25 cents, sold on night of concert.

ANSONIA, DERBY, SHELTON, SEYMOUR
SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 3, 1910.
THE EVENING SENTINEL

WOOLSEY HALL, NEW HAVEN,
Mon. Eve., Dec. 12, at 8:15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist - JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00. Sale opens at Box Office, Woolsey Hall, Thursday, December 8, at 9 a. m. Orders by mail accompanied by check or money order payable to C. A. Ellis, and addressed to Boston Symphony Orchestra, 124 College street, New Haven, will be filled in order of receipt prior to opening of public sale. Tickets to gallery, 25 cents, sold on night of concert.

As in The Baltimore American. Boston Symphony Orchestra

Lyric Theatre Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians.)

Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

OCT 2 1910

SOLOISTS:

Melba, Rider-Kelsey, Hofmann, Elman, Witek

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices, $7 and $5.

Lyric Theatre Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians.)

Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

OCT 9 1910

SOLOISTS:

Melba, Rider-Kelsey, Hofmann, Elman, Witek

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices, $7 and $5.

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 10 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 11 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 12 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 13 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 14 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 15 1910

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15 1910 SOLOIST Mme. MELBA

Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

NOV - 7

LOST—Friday morning, between 11 and 12th, TWO DIAMOND RINGS, ONE FIVE DAILY LIST OF ARTICLES FOUND ON CARS OF UNITED RAILWAYS AND ELECTRIC COMPANY.

The following were found on the city and suburban street cars on Friday, October 8, 1910. Owners can secure them by applying with full description, at Howard and Franklin streets:

3 Pocket Books.	1 Basket.
2 Canes.	1 Shawl.
1 Hat.	1 Pair Gloves.
1 Bag.	1 Bottle Catsup.
1 Box Butter.	1 Can Paint.
1 Scholar's Companion.	1 Box Badges.
1 Bunch of Keys.	1 Prayer Book.
1 Jacket.	1 Pair Shoes.
1 Pin.	1 Box Powder.
1 Aixon.

Lyric Theatre. Season 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)

Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

SOLOISTS: MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season Tickets Now Selling at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices, $7 and $5.

OCT 17 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 18 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 19 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 20 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 21 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 22 1910

Lyric Theatre. Season 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)

Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

SOLOISTS: MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season Tickets Now On Sale at Albaugh's, Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices, $7 and $5.

OCT 23 1910

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15 1910 SOLOIST Mme. MELBA

Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

NOV - 8

LYRIC THEATRE

Wednesday, November 9, at 8:15

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

SOLOIST

Madame MELBA

(Only appearance in Baltimore)

PROGRAMME.

RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2, in E Minor. (First time in Baltimore)

MOZART . . Aria "Dove Sono," from "The Marriage of Figaro"

STRUBE . . . Comedy Overture, "Puck" (First time in Baltimore)

THOMAS . . Mad Scene from "Hamlet"

BEETHOVEN . Overture, "Leonora" No. 3

Seats at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

NOV - 6 1910

LYRIC THEATRE

Tonight at 8:15.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 Musicians)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Madame MELBA

(Only appearance in Baltimore)

Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets. Admission $1.00

NOV - 9 1910

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOVEMBER 17, 1910

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, Nov. 19.

PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00.

n15 4t

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.

PRICES $1.50 AND $2.00

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.,

NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street, Providence, Saturday, November 19.

PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00. n15 7t

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

NOVEMBER 18, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.

PRICES $1.50 AND $2.00

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOVEMBER 18, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, Nov. 19.

PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00. n15 4t

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOVEMBER 18, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.

PRICES $1.50 AND $2.00

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.

NOVEMBER 16, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street, Providence, Saturday, November 19.

PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. n15 7t

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.,

NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.

PRICES $1.50 AND $2.00

[54]

Ads in The Baltimore American. Boston Symphony Orchestra

Lyric Theatre Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians.)

Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

OCT 2 1910

SOLOISTS:

Melba, Rider-Kelsey, Hofmann, Elman, Witek

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices, $7 and $5.

Lyric Theatre Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians.)

Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

OCT 9 1910

SOLOISTS:

Melba, Rider-Kelsey, Hofmann, Elman, Witek

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices, $7 and $5.

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 10 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 11 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 12 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 13 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 14 1910

The Lyric. 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 15 1910

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15 SOLOIST Mme. MELBA. Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

NOV - 7 1910

THE LYRIC - - 1910-1911

FIVE CONCERTS BY THE

OCT 16 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 MUSICIANS)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

WEDNESDAY EVENINGS:

Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, March 22.

ASSISTING ARTISTS:

MESDAMES
NELLIE MELBA (Only appearance in Baltimore)
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY

MESSRS.
JOSEF HOFMANN
MISCHA ELMAN
ANTON WITEK (First appearance in Baltimore)

AND OTHERS.

ALSO THE BALTIMORE ORATORIO SOCIETY

Subscription sale for the season opens at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 109 North Charles Street, tomorrow, Monday morning, October 17.

Prices for the Series, $7 and $5.

Location. Boxes, $60.

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 17 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 18 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 19 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 20 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 21 1910

THE LYRIC 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER Conductor

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 109 N. Charles St., $7 and $5.

OCT 22 1910

Lyric Theatre. Season 1910-1911.

OCT 23 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)

Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

SOLOISTS: MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season Tickets Now On Sale at Albaugh's, Ticket Office, 109 N. Charles St. Prices, $7 and $5.

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15 SOLOIST Mme. MELBA. Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

NOV - 4 1910

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, at 8:15 SOLOIST Mme. MELBA. Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

NOV - 5 1910

LYRIC THEATRE

Wednesday, November 9, at 8:15

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

NOV - 6 1910

(100 Musicians)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

SOLOIST

Madame MELBA

(Only appearance in Baltimore)

PROGRAMME.

RACHMANINOFF, Symphony No. 2, in E Minor. (First time in Baltimore)

MOZART . . Aria "Dove Sono," from "The Marriage of Figaro"

STRUBE . . Comedy Overture, "Puck" (First time in Baltimore)

THOMAS . . Mad Scene from "Hamlet"

BEETHOVEN . Overture, "Leonora" No. 3

Seats at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

LYRIC THEATRE

Tonight at 8:15.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

NOV - 9 1910

(100 Musicians)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Madame MELBA

(Only appearance in Baltimore)

Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets. Admission $1.00.

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, Nov. 19.

PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00.

n15 4t

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,

NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.

PRICES $1.50 AND $2.00

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I., NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street, Providence, Saturday, November 19.

PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00. n15 7t

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

NOVEMBER 18, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.

PRICES $1.50 AND $2.00

TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOVEMBER 18, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, Nov. 19.

PRICES: $1.50 and $2.00. n15 4t

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOVEMBER 18, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.

PRICES $1.50 AND $2.00

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I. NOVEMBER 16, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street, Providence, Saturday, November 19.

PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. n15 7t

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I., NOVEMBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

SOLOIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.

PRICES $1.50 AND $2.00

[54]

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
NOVEMBER 6, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

To-morrow Eve. at 8.15
Soloist
Mme. MELBA
Amphitheatre

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
NOVEMBER 7, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

To-night at 8.15.
Soloist
Mme. MELBA
A few tickets at Heppe's, $2 & $2.50.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
NOVEMBER 7, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Tonight at 8:15.
Soloist
Mme. MELBA
A few tickets at Heppe's, $2 and $2.50.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL.
NOVEMBER 16, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 15, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.
NOVEMBER 15, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster Street, Providence, Saturday, November 19.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. n15 7t

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
NOVEMBER 9, 1910.

LYRIC THEATER
TONIGHT AT 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 MUSICIANS)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Madame MELBA
(Only Appearance in Baltimore).

Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette streets. Admission $1.00.

PROVIDENCE SUNDAY JOURNAL
OCTOBER 23, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
TUESDAY EVENING
October 25, at 8:15
First Concert
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST:
OLIVE FREMSTAD
SOPRANO
(Of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York.)

PROGRAMME.

Schumann ..... Overture, "Manfred"
Schumann ..... Symphony, No. 3, "Rhenish"
Gluck ..... Aria from "Armide"
Strauss ..... Tone Poem, "Don Juan"
Wagner ..... Prelude and "Liebestod" from "Tristan and Isolde" (vocal)

Seats now selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster st.
Prices: $2.00, $1.50

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
NOVEMBER 4, 1910

LYRIC THEATER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, At 8.15.
SOLOIST
Mme. Melba
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS
NOVEMBER 8, 1910.

LYRIC THEATER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, At 8.15.
SOLOIST
Mme. Melba
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS
NOVEMBER 7, 1910.

LYRIC THEATER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, At 8.15.
SOLOIST
Mme. Melba
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
NOVEMBER 2, 1910.

LYRIC THEATER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, At 8.15.
SOLOIST
Mme. Melba
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
NOVEMBER 3, 1910.

LYRIC THEATER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eve., Nov. 9, At 8.15.
SOLOIST
Mme. Melba
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette Streets.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
NOVEMBER 27, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Dec. 5, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN

Tickets at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
NOVEMBER 28, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor

This Evening, at 8.15
Soloist
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Heppe's.
Amphitheater 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
NOVEMBER 29, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor

Mon. Eve., Dec. 5, at 8.15
Soloist
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
Tickets at Heppe's

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
NOVEMBER 27, 1910

LYRIC THEATRE
WEDNESDAY EVENING, DEC. 7 AT 8.15.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians.)
MAX FIEDLER Conductor.
Soloist.
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist.

Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 E. Fayette street, Wednesday, Nov. 30.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
NOVEMBER 30, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15
SOLOIST
Josef Hofmann, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette Street.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
NOVEMBER 30, 1910.

Lyric Theatre

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15.
Soloist.
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist.
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE
DECEMBER 1, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Wed. Eve., Dec. 7, at 8.15
SOLOIST
Josef Hofmann, Pianist
Tickets at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette Street.

EVENING TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 15, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, Nov. 19.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.
n15 4t

EVENING BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 16, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 22, AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, SATURDAY, November 19.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

EVENING TRIBUNE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOVEMBER 16, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 22, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist

Seats on sale at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, Saturday, Nov. 19.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.
n15 4t

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 23, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-11
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.
Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.
Season Tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.
Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,
OCTOBER 23, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.
Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.
Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 23, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.
Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.
Prices: $7, $5, $3.50 Boxes: $75, $60, $40

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.,
OCTOBER 24, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL PROVIDENCE
Tuesday Eve., Oct. 25, at 8:15
FIRST CONCERT
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist, OLIVE FREMSTAD
(Of the Metropolitan Opera Company) New York.
Seats now selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster St., Providence.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.
o20 5t

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.
OCTOBER 25, 191

INFANTRY HALL PROVIDENCE
TONIGHT, AT 8:15
FIRST CONCERT
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist, OLIVE FREMSTAD
(Of the Metropolitan Opera Company) New York.
Seats now selling at STEINERT'S, 327 Westminster St., Providence.
PRICES: $2.00, $1.50.
o20 5t

THE EVENING STAR, Wash DC
OCTOBER 31, 1910.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 4:30,
NATIONAL THEATER.
Soloist:
Miss MARGARET KEYES, Contralto.
Seats, $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c., on sale Droop's music store, 13th and G. oc30-9t,15

Sunday STAR, Wash DC
OCTOBER 30, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 4:30,
NATIONAL THEATER.
Soloist:
Miss MARGARET KEYES, Contralto.
Seats, $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c., on sale Droop's music store, 13th and G. oc30-9t,15

BALTIMORE NEWS,
OCTOBER 29, 1910.

Lyric Theater. Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 MUSICIANS.)
Wednesday Evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7 Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
SOLOISTS:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.
Season tickets now on sale at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette streets.
PRICES, $7 AND $5.

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRE
OCTOBER 30, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
Madame MELBA
(Only appearance in Philadelphia)
Tickets at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut Street.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 30, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
SOLOIST
Madame MELBA
(Only appearance in Philadelphia)
Tickets at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
OCTOBER 30, 1910.

ACADEMY OE MUSIC
Monday Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor
Soloist
Madame MELBA
(Only appearance in Philadelphia)
Tickets at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.

LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
OCTOBER 30, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist
Madame MELBA
(Only appearance in Philadelphia)
Tickets at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 31, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
Soloist.
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Heppe's.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 31, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Mon. Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
A few tickets at Heppes', $2 and $2.50
Amphitheater, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
NOVEMBER 2, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
Soloist.
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Heppe's.

AMERICAN, PHILADELPHIA
NOVEMBER 7, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
TONIGHT AT 8.15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
A few tickets at Heppes', $2 and $2.50
Amphitheater, 25 cents.

LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
NOVEMBER 2, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
Soloist,
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Heppe's.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
NOVEMBER 2, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
Soloist
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Heppe's.

AMERICAN, PHILADELPHIA,
OCTOBER 31, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR.
Mon. Evg., Nov. 7, 8.15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Heppes'.

JE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER
NOVEMBER 1, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
MONDAY EVENING, Nov. 7, at 8.15.
Soloist
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Heppe's

AMERICAN, PHILADELPHIA
NOVEMBER 6, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR.
Tomorrow Eve. 8.15.
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
Amphitheater, 25 cents.

LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
NOVEMBER 6. 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Tomorrow Eve. at 8.15
Soloist,
Mme. Melba
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
NOVEMBER 7, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
TO-NIGHT AT 8.15
SOLOIST
Mme. MELBA
A few Tickets at Heppe's $2 and $2.50.
Amphitheatre, 25 cents.

LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
OCTOBER 30. 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Monday Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Soloist
Madame MELBA
(Only appearance in Philadelphia)
Tickets at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 31, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eve., Nov. 7, at 8.15
Soloist.
Mme. MELBA
Tickets at Heppe's.

THE EVENING STAR
OCTOBER 24, 191[illegible]

Wash D.C.

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6,
JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75.
Seats now on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts.
oc19-11t,25

THE EVENING STAR,
OCTOBER 25, 1910.

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6,
JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75.
Seats now on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts.
oc19-11t,25

THE EVENING STAR,
OCTOBER 26, 1910.

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6,
JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75.
Seats now on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts.
oc19-11t,25

THE EVENING STAR,
OCTOBER 27, 1910.

Season Sale Closes Saturday, Oct. 29. Only a few seats remaining.

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6,
JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75, on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts.
oc19-10t,35

THE EVENING STAR,
OCTOBER 28, 1910.

Season Sale Closes Saturday, Oct. 29. Only a few seats remaining.

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6,
JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75, on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts.
oc19-10t,35

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st, $7 and $5.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 23, 1910.

Lyric Theatre Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 MUSICIANS.)
WEDNESDAY EVENINGS, NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MARCH 22.
Soloists:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.
Season tickets now on sale at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette street.
PRICES, $7 AND $5.

HE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 20, 1910.

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st, $7 and $5.

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 21, 1910.

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st, $7 and $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
OCTOBER 21, 1910

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
OCTOBER 20, 1910

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 21, 1910.

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

NORTH AMERICAN, PHILADELPHIA
OCTOBER 15, 1910

Academy of Music— Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	SEASON 1910-1911. MONDAY EVENINGS, Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20. Season sale, Monday, Oct. 17, Heppes' Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut street. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 17, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)
MAX. FIEDLER, Conductor.
Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.
Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.
Prices: $7, $5, $3.50 Boxes: $75, $60, $40

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 18, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 27, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

EVENING BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA,
OCTOBER 20, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 20, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 27, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 21, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 27, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 21, 1910.

Academy of Music Season '10-'11
Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20 Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,
OCTOBER 21, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
MONDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, March 20.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA,
OCTOBER 21, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.; Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 27, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

Academy of Music Season '10-'11
Boston Symphony Orchestra Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20 Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA
OCTOBER 22, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.; Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,
OCTOBER 22, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
MONDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, March 20.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.
OCTOBER 19, 1910

INFANTRY HALL——PROVIDENCE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Oct. 25, Nov. 22, Jan. 3, Feb. 14, Apr. 4.
SOLOISTS:
Fremstad — Hofmann — Elman— Mero—Homer.
Season Tickets now on sale at STEINERT'S, Providence.
$6.00 and $5.00

TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.,
OCTOBER 18, 1910

INFANTRY HALL——PROVIDENCE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Oct. 25, Nov. 22, Jan. 3, Feb. 14, Apr. 4.
SOLOISTS:
Fremstad — Hofmann — Elman— Mero—Homer.
Season Tickets now on sale at STEINERT'S, Providence.
$6.00 and $5.00

EVENING BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.
OCTOBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL——PROVIDENCE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Oct. 25, Nov. 22, Jan. 3, Feb. 14, Apr. 4.
SOLOISTS:
Fremstad — Hofmann — Elman— Mero—Homer.
Season Tickets now on sale at STEINERT'S.
$6.00 and $5.00

EVENING BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.,
OCTOBER 18, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL——PROVIDENCE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ROCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Oct. 25, Nov. 22, Jan. 3, Feb. 14, Apr. 4.
SOLOISTS:
Fremstad — Hofmann — Elman— Mero—Homer.
Season Tickets now on sale at STEINERT'S.
$6.00 and $5.00

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,
OCTOBER 19, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL——PROVIDENCE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Oct. 25, Nov. 22, Jan. 3, Feb. 14, Apr. 4.
SOLOISTS:
Fremstad — Hofmann — Elman— Mero—Homer.
Season Tickets now on sale at STEINERT'S.
$6.00 and $5.00

EVENING BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.,
OCTOBER 19, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL——PROVIDENCE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Oct. 25, Nov. 22, Jan. 3, Feb. 14, Apr. 4.
SOLOISTS:
Fremstad — Hofmann — Elman— Mero—Homer.
Season Tickets now on sale at STEINERT'S.
$6.00 and $5.00

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER, TUESDAY
OCTOBER 18, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
MONDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, March 20.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75. $60, $40.

EVENING BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA,
OCTOBER 18, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.; Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 18, 1910

Academy of Music Season '10-'11
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 19, 1910

Academy of Music Season '10-'11
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 2[illegible], 1910

Academy of Music Season '10-'11
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

EVENING BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA
OCTOBER 19, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor
Mon. Eves.; Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 19, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.
Mon. Eves.: Nov. 27, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER MORNING,
OCTOBER 20, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
MONDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, March 20.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 20, 1910

The Lyric
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
1910-1911
Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

E SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 19, 1910.

The Lyric
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
1910-1911
Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
OCTOBER 19, 1910

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 19, 1910.

The Lyric
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
1910-1911
Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st, $7 and $5.

IE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 18, 1910.

The Lyric
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
1910-1911
Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.
Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,
OCTOBER 19, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
MONDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, March 20.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50, Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

SUNDAY STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C.,
OCTOBER 16, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS,
Nov. 8, Dec. 6, Jan. 10, Feb. 21, March 21.
NATIONAL THEATER
4:30.
Soloists:
Miss MARGARET KEYES, JOSEF HOFMANN, MEISCHA ELMAN, ALVIN SCHROEDER, Mme. JOMELLI.
SEASON SALE OF TICKETS OPENS NEXT TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 18, AT DROOP'S MUSIC STORE, 13TH AND G.
Season tickets, $10, $7.50, $5, $3.75.
Subscriptions accompanied by check may be mailed to Mrs. Greene, 2647 Conn. ave., local representative of the orchestra, before Oct. 18.

THE EVENING STAR, Wash D.C.
OCTOBER 20, 1910.

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6, JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75.
Seats now on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts. oc19-11t,25

THE EVENING STAR, Wash D.C.
OCTOBER 22, 1910

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6, JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75.
Seats now on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts. oc19-11t,25

THE EVENING STAR, Wash D.C.
OCTOBER 21, 1910.

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6, JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75.
Seats now on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts. oc19-11t,25

THE SUNDAY STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C.,
OCTOBER 23, 1910

--BOSTON--
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts, 1910-1911.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS, NOV. 8, DEC. 6, JAN. 10, FEB. 21, MARCH 21.
NATIONAL THEATER, 4:30.
Soloists:
MISS MARGARET KEYES,
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
MISCHA ELMAN,
ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MME. JOMELLI.
Season tickets, $10.00, $7.50, $5.00, $3.75.
Seats now on sale at Droop's Music Store, 13th and G sts. oc19-11t,25

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,
OCTOBER 16, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Monday Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20

Soloists
MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE

Season sale opens tomorrow morning, Monday, October 17, at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. Mail applications must be accompanied with checks to order of Miss H. Harris.

Prices, $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 16, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Monday Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20

Soloists
MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE

Season sale opens to-morrow morning, Monday, October 17, at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. Mail applications must be accompanied with checks to order of Miss H. Harris.

Prices, $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40

BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA,
OCTOBER 15, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.
Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.
Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.
Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40

HE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,
OCTOBER 17, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.
Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.
Season tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st.
Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,
OCTOBER 14, 1910.

Academy of Music	Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season sale, Mon., Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 17, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-11

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.
Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.
Season Tickets now on sale at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.
Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40.

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 15, 1910.

LYRIC THEATRE — SEASON 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 Musicians)

Wednesday Evenings: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22

SOLOISTS:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 E. Fayette st.
Prices, $7 and $5.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMOR
OCTOBER 17, 1910

Lyric Theatre — Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 MUSICIANS.)

WEDNESDAY EVENINGS, NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MARCH 22.

Soloists:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season tickets now on sale at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette street.

PRICES, $7 AND $5.

„Die Sonntags-Post", Baltimore, Md.
, Sonntag, den 16. Oktober 1910.

Lyric-Theater — Saison 1910—1911

Boston Symphonie Orchester,
(100 Musiker.)

Mittwoch Abends: 9. November; 7. Dezember; 11. Januar; 22. Februar und 22 März.

Solisten
Melba, Rider-Kelsey, Hofmann, Elman, Witek.

Saison-Billete jetzt zu verkaufen in Albaugh's Ticket-Office, 109 N. Charles-Straße.
Preise $7 und $5. (oft16)

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 17, 1910

Lyric Theatre — Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 MUSICIANS.)

WEDNESDAY EVENINGS, NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MARCH 22.

Soloists:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season tickets now on sale at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette street.

PRICES, $7 AND $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
OCTOBER 14, 1910

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, East Fayette Street, $7 and $5.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 16, 1910.

FIVE CONCERTS
By The

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Wednesday Evenings
November 9
December 7
January 11
February 22
March 22

ASSISTING ARTISTS
Mesdames
NELLIE MELBA
(Only Appearance in Baltimore)
CORINNE RIDER-KELSEY

Messrs.
JOSEF HOFMANN
MISCHA ELMAN
ANTON WITEK
(First Appearance in Baltimore)
and others

Also The Baltimore Oratorio Society.

Subscription sale for the season opens at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette street, tomorrow, Monday morning, October 17.

Prices for the series, $7 and $5 according to location. Boxes, $50.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 15, 1910.

The Lyric - - - - 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, March 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st., $7 and $5.

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 14, 1910.

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Abaugh's, 6 E. Fayette street, $7 and $5.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 18, 1910

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st, $7 and $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
OCTOBER 17, 1910.

Lyric Theater. Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
(100 MUSICIANS.)

Wednesday Evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

SOLOISTS:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season tickets now on sale at Albaugh's Ticket Office, Charles and Fayette streets.
PRICES, $7 AND $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,
OCTOBER 18, 1910.

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets now selling at Albaugh's, 6 East Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS

OCTOBER 13, 1910

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, East Fayette Street, $7 and $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,

OCTOBER 12, 1910

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, East Fayette Street, $7 and $5.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS,

OCTOBER 10, 1910.

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, East Fayette Street, $7 and $5.

Baltimore Journal, Mittwoch, den 12. Oktober 1910.

THE LYRIC
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister.

1910—1911

Mittwoch Abends: den 9. Nov., 7. Dez., 11. Jan., 22. Febr und 22. März.

Saison-Billete zu verkaufen in Albaughs, 109 N. Charles-Str. vom 17. Oktober ab. $7 und $5.

o18,12

THE BALTIMORE NEWS

OCTOBER 11, 1910

THE LYRIC—1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, East Fayette Street, $7 and $5.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,

OCTOBER 13, 1910.

The Lyric - - - - 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, March 22.

Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st., $7 and $5.

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,

OCTOBER 12, 1910

The Lyric 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Abaugh's, 6 E. Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,

OCTOBER 13, 1910.

The Lyric 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22.

Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Abaugh's, 6 E. Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,

OCTOBER 14, 1910.

The Lyric - - - - 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Max Fiedler, Conductor.

Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, March 22.

Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st., $7 and $5.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,

OCTOBER 15, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begins at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster St., Providence, on Monday morning, October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

THE EVENING TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.,

OCTOBER 14, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begins at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster st., on Monday morning, October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

o13 3t

THE EVENING BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.,

OCTOBER 13, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begin at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster st., on Monday morning. October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,

OCTOBER 13, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begin at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster st., on Monday morning. October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,

OCTOBER 14, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begin at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster st., on Monday morning. October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

THE PROVIDENCE SUNDAY JOURNAL, OCTOBER 16, 1910.

1910 1911

INFANTRY HALL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

FIVE CONCERTS

Tuesday Eve., Oct. 25 Tuesday Eve., Nov. 22 Tuesday Eve., Jan. 3
Tuesday Eve., Feb. 14 Tuesday Eve., April 4

ASSISTING SOLOISTS

OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano (Of the Metropolitan Opera House)
MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist
YOLANDE MERO, Pianist
LOUISE HOMER, Contralto (Of the Metropolitan Opera House)

Sale of season tickets opens at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster Street, Monday morning, October 17th.

PRICES: $6.00 AND $5.00 ACCORDING TO LOCATION.

EVENING BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.,

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1910.

AMUSEMENTS, EXCURSIONS, ETC.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begin at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster st., on Monday morning, October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

EVENING TIMES, PAWTUCKET, R. I.

OCTOBER 15, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begins at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster St., Providence, on Monday morning, October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

o13 3t

EVENING BULLETIN, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

OCTOBER 15, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begin at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster st., on Monday morning. October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,

OCTOBER 17, 1910.

INFANTRY HALL——PROVIDENCE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Oct. 25, Nov. 22, Jan. 3, Feb. 14, Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS:
Fremstad — Hofmann — Elman—Mero—Homer.

Season Tickets now on sale at STEINERT'S.

$6.00 and $5.00

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,

OCTOBER 18, 1910

INFANTRY HALL——PROVIDENCE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Oct. 25, Nov. 22, Jan. 3, Feb. 14, Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS:
Fremstad — Hofmann — Elman—Mero—Homer.

Season Tickets now on sale at STEINERT'S.

$6.00 and $5.00

PHILADELPHIA RECORD

OCTOBER 16, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Season 1910-1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 MUSICIANS)

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor

Monday Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20.

Soloists
(MELBA, KIRBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE

Season sale opens to-morrow morning, Monday, October 17, at Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. Mail applications must be accompanied with checks to order of Miss H. Harris.

Prices, $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL,

OCTOBER 15, 1910.

Infantry Hall Providence
SEASON SALE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Five Concerts—Tues. Eve., Oct. 25; Tues. Eve., Nov. 22; Tues. Eve., Jan. 3; Tues. Eve., Feb. 14; Tues Eve., Apr. 4.

SOLOISTS—OLIVE FREMSTAD, Soprano; JOSEF HOFMANN, Pianist; MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist; YOLANDE MERO, Pianist; LOUISE HOMER, Contralto.

Sale of season tickets begin at Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster st., on Monday morning. October 17th.

Prices $6 and $5, according to location.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD,

OCTOBER 2, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Monday Evenings, Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.

Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.

Season sale opens Monday, October 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut street.

Prices $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,

OCTOBER 2, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.

Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.

Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,

OCTOBER 2, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.

Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.

Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40

BALTIMORE, SUN

OCTOBER 2, 1910.

Lyric Theatre. Season 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians),

WEDNESDAY EVENINGS, NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MARCH 22.

Soloists:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st. Prices, $7 and $5.

BALTIMORE, SATURDAY,

OCTOBER 8, 1910. SUN

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Abaugh's, 6 E. Fayette street, $7 and $5.

Baltimore, Md., Journal

8. Oktober 1910.

THE LYRIC	1910—1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Kapellmeister. oct8,12	Mittwoch Abends: den 9. Nov., 7. Dez., 11. Jan., 22. Febr und 22. März. Saison-Billete zu verkaufen in Albaughs, 109 N.-Charles-Str. vom 17. Oktober ab. $7 und $5.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 10, 1910.

The Lyric - - - - -	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, March 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st., $7 and $5.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
OCTOBER 9, 1910

Lyric Theatre. Season 1910-1911.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians),

WEDNESDAY EVENINGS, NOV. 9, DEC. 7, JAN. 11, FEB. 22, MARCH 22.

Soloists:
MELBA, RIDER-KELSEY, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WITEK.

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, at Albaugh's Ticket Office, 6 East Fayette st. Prices, $7 and $5.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD,

OCTOBER 9, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Monday Evenings, Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.

Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.

Season sale opens Monday, October 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut street.

Prices $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS,

OCTOBER 9, 1910.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
SEASON 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.

Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.

Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,

OCTOBER 9, 1910

ACADEMY OF MUSIC
Season 1910-1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(100 Musicians)
MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.

Monday Evenings: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20.

Soloists: MELBA, KIRKBY-LUNN, HOFMANN, ELMAN, WARNKE.

Season sale opens Monday, Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St.

Prices: $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes: $75, $60, $40.

STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C.,

OCTOBER 9, 1910

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.
Season of Five Concerts.
TUESDAY AFTERNOONS,
Nov. 8, Dec. 6, Jan. 10, Feb. 21, March 21.

NATIONAL THEATER
4:30

Soloists:
Miss MARGARET KEYES, JOSEF HOFMANN, MEISCHA ELMAN, ALVIN SCHROEDER, Mme. JOMELLI.

Season tickets, $10, $7.50, $5, $3.75. Old subscribers who have not renewed must do so by October 12. Subscriptions accompanied by check may be mailed to Mrs. Greene, 2647 Conn. ave. local representative of the orchestra.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMO
OCTOBER 10,]

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Abaugh's, 6 E. Fayette street, $7 and $5.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,

OCTOBER 10, 1910.

Academyof Music	Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season sale, Mon., Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

EVENING BULLETIN—PHILADELPHIA,

OCTOBER 11, 1910.

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor	Mon. Eves.; Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season sale, Monday, Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

NORTH AMERICAN, PHILADELPHIA,

OCTOBER 11, 1910

Academy of Music—	SEASON 1910-1911.
Boston Symphony Orchestra MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	MONDAY EVENINGS, Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, March 20. Season sale, Monday, Oct. 17, Heppes' Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut street, $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER, MORNING,

OCTOBER 12, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	MONDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, March 20. Season sale, Monday, Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS,

OCTOBER 12, 1910.

Academyof Music	Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20, Season sale, Mon., Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE MORNING,

OCTOBER 12, 1910

The Lyric - - - -	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Max Fiedler, Conductor.	Wed. Eves., Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, March 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Albaugh's, 6 E. Fayette st., $7 and $5.

EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE,

OCTOBER 11, 1910.

The Lyric	1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	Wed. Eves.: Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, Mar. 22. Season tickets on sale Oct. 17 at Abaugh's, 6 E. Fayette street, $7 and $5.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD

OCTOBER 12, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season sale Mon., Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER,

OCTOBER 14, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	MONDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, March 20. Season sale, Monday, Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut St. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $60, $40.

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

OCTOBER 14, 1910

Academy of Music Season 1910-1911
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAX FIEDLER, Conductor.	Mon. Eves.: Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 9, Feb. 20, Mar. 20. Season sale Mon., Oct. 17, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut st. $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes $75, $60, $40.

[61]

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 30

BSO
Pops

1911 - 1912

Shipman's Scrap Book
FOR DUPLICATE ORDER NUMBER 12
ASA L. SHIPMAN'S SONS
NEW YORK

TEMBER 2, 1911

POST, EVENING TRANSCRIPT

Boston Symphony Concerts

The Thirty-First Season Opens in October

THE first public rehearsal of the thirty-first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, and the first concert on the following evening. The soloist on the opening programme will be Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera Company, the young soprano who has sprung into such favor in the last two seasons. The annual auction sales of seats are but three weeks distant. The dates for these sales are as follows: Monday, Sept. 25, at 10 A. M., the $18 rehearsal seats; Tuesday, Sept. 26, 10 A. M., $10 rehearsal seats; Thursday, Sept. 28, 10 A. M., $18 concert seats, and Friday, 10 A. M., $10 concert seats.

Nothing definite regarding his plans for the season has yet come from Mr. Fiedler and it is likely that no announcement can be made concerning the works he purposes playing until a fortnight or so. He has been spending the greater part of the summer with his family in the little town of Garmisch in Bavaria, where Richard Strauss has his summer home, and he will at least know definitely whether he will have a new Strauss work to perform. When he left in the spring he had vague hopes that he would be able to bring one back with him. Mr. Fiedler is booked to sail from Bremen on Tuesday, Sept. 19, which will bring him to Boston a week later. On the same steamer with him will come Anton Witek and several other members of the orchestra who have been spending the summer abroad.

Two interesting events are scheduled for the early part of the season. On Oct. 21 the orchestra will be thirty years old, the first public rehearsal having been given in the old Music Hall on Oct. 21, 1881. On Oct. 22 falls the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt. Both of these events will be commemorated by special programmes.

The orchestra has laid out for it the longest season in its history, thirty-one weeks, and the largest number of concerts, 118. The extra week in the season is accounted for by a second trip to the Middle West. The five monthly Southern trips will be made as usual and the first trip to the West will come in the end of January and the second in Easter week, in April. The last concert in Boston falls on Saturday evening, May 4, and this will be Mr. Fiedler's farewell, for the coming season is the fourth and last of his engagement.

It has been quite impossible for the orchestra to accept more than a small part of the out-of-town engagements which have been offered it, and it will be a keen disappointment to the management if the season is not a better one than the winter of 1910-1911. The only definite sign of the times so far is the New York subscription for the ten concerts in that city, which is now and has been since the first of July very nearly as large as it was last season, with the general sale still to come next month. Artistically there is no reason why the orchestra should not maintain the high standard of the past. Few changes are being made in the personnel and the lively sympathy existing between Mr. Fiedler and his men will bring even greater results in the future than it has in the past.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,

SEPTEMBER 3, 1911.

SYMPHONY SEASON IS NEARLY HERE

Alma Gluck Selected as Soloist For First Concert.

The Symphony Orchestra will begin its thirty-first annual series of concerts on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, with a public rehearsal, and on Saturday evening, Oct. 7, with its first concert. Alma Gluck, the soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who has won such unusual favor in the last two years, will be the soloist on the first program.

The annual auction sales of seats are only three weeks distant. The dates are as follows: Monday, Sept. 25, the $18 seats for the twenty-four public rehearsals; Tuesday, Sept. 26, the $10 rehearsal seats; Thursday, Sept. 28, the $18 concert seats, and Friday, Sept. 29, the $10 concert seats.

While Boston will have its usual allotment of twenty-four rehearsals and concerts, the total length of the season will be thirty-one weeks instead of the usual thirty, for in addition to the regular five monthly trips to the South, two Western trips will be made instead of the usual one, the first in the end of January and the second in Easter week.

The final concert of the season will come on Saturday evening, May 4, and this concert will be Mr. Fiedler's farewell, this being the last year of his engagement.

When Mr. Fiedler left Boston last spring he had vague hopes of being able to bring back an important new work by Richard Strauss, but whether this will come to anything is not known. Two special programs for the early part of the season have been definitely settled upon, one to celebrate the thirtieth birthday of the orchestra, which falls on Oct. 21, and the other to celebrate the Liszt centenary, which falls on Oct. [illegible] changes are expected in the per-

MONITOR, BOSTON

SEPTEMBER 2, 1911

MAX FIEDLER closes his engagement as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the spring of 1912. Mr. Fiedler will have been in Boston four years.

The annual auction sales of seats for the Friday matinees, or public rehearsals, and for the Saturday evening concerts of the Symphony orchestra occur as follows:

Sept. 25, at 10 a. m., $18 rehearsal seats; Tuesday, Sept. 26, 10 a. m., $10 rehearsal seats; Thursday, Sept. 28, 10 a. m., $18 concert seats; Friday, 10 a. m., $10 concert seats.

Mme. Alma Gluck, the young soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be the soloist at the first two concerts of the Symphony orchestra at Symphony hall, Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, and Saturday evening, Oct. 7.

The Symphony orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary in October with a special program. The first concert the orchestra gave was a public rehearsal in old Music hall on Oct. 21, 1881.

Mr. Fiedler will give special Liszt programs near the hundredth anniversary of Liszt's birth, the date of which is Sunday, Oct. 22.

The orchestra has laid out for it the longest season in its history, 31 weeks, and the largest number of concerts, 118. The extra week in the season is accounted for by a second trip to the middle West. The five monthly southern trips will be made as usual and the first trip to the West will come in the end of January and the second in Easter week, in April. The last concert in Boston falls on Saturday evening, May 4, and this will be Mr. Fiedler's farewell.

Mr. Fiedler has been spending the greater part of the summer with his family in the little town of Garmisch in Bavaria, where Richard Strauss has his summer home. He is booked to sail from Bremen on Tuesday, Sept. 19, which will bring him to Boston a week later. On the same steamer with him will come Anton Witek and several other members of the orchestra who have been spending the summer abroad.

It is among the possibilities that Mr. Fiedler will bring the production rights of a new Strauss work with him, that new "Alpine symphony" or something el[illegible]

SUNDAY GLOBE-

SEPTEMBER 3, 1911.

Boston Symphony Season But Five Weeks Distant.

Symphony hall has been undergoing for the last three weeks the usual ordeal of fall housecleaning, making ready for the hard work of the winter. The musical season is nearer at hand than it is easy to realize. The first public rehearsal and concert, falling on Friday afternoon, Oct 6, and Saturday evening, Oct 7, respectively, are now but five weeks distant and the auction sales of seats for the season are only three weeks away.

The dates of the auction sales are as follows: Monday, Sept 25, at 10 a m, the $18 seats for the rehearsals; Tuesday, Sept 26, at 10 a m, the $10 seats for rehearsals; Thursday, Sept 28, at 10 a m, the $18 seats for the concerts, and Friday, Sept 29, at 10 a m, the $10 seats for the concerts.

The usual 24 public rehearsals will be given on Friday afternoons and the 24 concerts on Saturday evenings. There will be seven weeks during the season without concerts, the five weeks when the orchestra is on its monthly southern trips and two weeks when it will be in the middle west.

This year two trips to the west will be made instead of the usual one, the orchestra going to that part of the country in the last week of January and in Easter week in April. This will bring the final concert of the season on Saturday evening, May 4.

As yet few members of the orchestra have returned to town. A majority of them are at various resorts in New England, but an unusually large number went abroad for the summer and they will begin to drift back about the middle of the month.

Mr Fiedler is booked to sail from Bremen Sept 19, and on the same ship with him will come Anton Witek. Mr Fiedler has spent the greater part of the summer in the little town of Garmisch, in Bavaria, which is the summer home of Richard Strauss. When he left here in the spring he was in hopes that he would have a new work by Strauss to place on his programs this winter, but so far he has sent no word of his plans. He had, however, decided in the spring to give two special programs early in the season, one to celebrate the 30th birthday of the orchestra, which falls on Oct 21, and the other to celebrate the Liszt centenary, which falls on Oct 22. The soloist at the first concert will be Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan opera house, New York.

In general, the outlook for the orchestra has never been more favorable. Very few changes will be made in the personnel, none of any moment. Therefore there is every reason to believe that the performances of the orchestra will fully maintain the high standard of the past.

From the other point of view, the financial, the outlook is quite as encouraging and the management will be greatly disappointed if the wonderful record made by the orchestra last season is not surpassed.

It is significant of the esteem in which the orchestra is held that 95 percent of last year's New York subscribers have already renewed their subscriptions for the coming season. This is something which has never happened in the history of orchestral music in this country.

As soon as word comes from Mr Fiedler full announcement of the plans for the season will be made.

BOSTON SUNDAY POST, SEPTEMBER

Symphony Season Is Five Weeks Off

Alma Gluck to Be Soloist of First Concert —Strauss Likely to Contribute to Interest of Concerts

The musical season is but five weeks distant, for the Symphony Orchestra will begin its 31st annual series of concerts on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, with a public rehearsal and on Saturday evening, Oct. 7, with its first concert. Alma Gluck, the soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who has won such unusual favor in the last two years, will be the soloist.

The annual auction sales of seats are only three weeks distant. The dates are as follows: Monday, Sept. 25, the $18 seats for the 24 public rehearsals; Tuesday, Sept. 26, the $10 rehearsal seats; Thursday, Sept. 28, the $18 concert seats, and Friday, Sept. 29, the $10 concert seats.

While Boston will have its usual allotment of 24 rehearsals and concerts, the total length of the season will be 31 weeks instead of the usual 30, for in addition to the regular five monthly trips to the South, two Western trips will be made instead of the usual one, the first in the end of January and the second in Easter week. This will bring the final concert of the season on Saturday evening, May 4, and this concert will be Mr. Fiedler's farewell, this being the final year of his Boston engagement.

As yet little or nothing is known of his general plans for the season, but word is expected from him daily. When he left Boston last spring he had vague hopes of being able to bring back an important new work by Richard Strauss, but whether this will come to anything is not known, reports which have come to this country regarding this work being most indefinite and conflicting. Mr. Fiedler had, however, before sailing, settled on two special programmes for the early part of the season, one to celebrate the 30th birthday of the orchestra, which falls on Oct. 21-22.

Mr. Fiedler is booked to sail from Bremen on Tuesday, Sept. 19, which will bring him to Boston a week later. On the same ship with him will come Anton Witek and several other members of the orchestra who have been on the other side this summer. Mr. Fiedler spent the greater part of the summer in Garmisch, in Bavaria, a small town near Munich which has become a favorite resort for musicians, Richard Strauss having his summer home there.

The general outlook for the orchestra is most encouraging and the management will be sorely disappointed if the wonderful record of last season is not surpassed. The one tangible indication so far is the extraordinary subscription already booked for its New York concerts. The Boston Symphony seems now to have won an impregnable position in that city.

No changes of moment are to be made in the personnel and there is every reason to believe that the past high standard of performance will be fully maintained.

RECORD, SATURDAY,

SEPTEMBER 9, 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The great musical anniversary of the coming season is the centenary of Franz Liszt which falls on Oct. 22 next. All over the world Liszt Festivals are to be given in commemoration of this event, the greatest one being in Heidelberg, where some of the greatest conductors of Europe will be employed.

Mr. Fiedler, a great lover and admirer of Liszt, has set his Liszt commemorative programme for the third rehearsal and concert, on Oct. 20 and 21 respectively. Curiously enough, on this day falls the 13th anniversary of the first concert of the orchestra but Mr. Fiedler will celebrate this event with a special programme at the second rehearsal and concert on Oct. 13 and 14 respectively.

The chief work which will be given on the Liszt programme will be the great Dante Symphony.

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY

SEPTEMBER 9, 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The great musical anniversary of the coming season is the centenary of Franz Liszt which falls on Oct. 22 next. All over the world Liszt Festivals are to be given in commemoration of this event, the greatest one being in Heidelberg, where some of the greatest conductors of Europe will be employed.

Mr. Fiedler, a great lover and admirer of Liszt, has set his Liszt commemorative programme for the third rehearsal and concert, on Oct. 20 and 21 respectively. Curiously enough, on this day falls the 13th anniversary of the first concert of the orchestra but Mr. Fiedler will celebrate this event with a special programme at the second rehearsal and concert on Oct. 13 and 14 respectively.

The chief work which will be given on the Liszt programme will be the great Dante Symphony.

HERALD, BOSTON,

SEPTEMBER 3, 1911.

SALE OF SEATS FOR SYMPHONY

Annual Auction Will Be Held on Monday, Sept. 25, and on 26th, 28th and 29th

PUBLIC REHEARSAL OCT. 6

Mr. Fiedler Will Sail from Bremen Sept. 21, Accompanied by Anton Witek.

But five weeks now remain until the opening of the 31st season of the Symphony Orchestra, and the annual auction sales of seats come in three weeks, beginning on Monday morning, Sept. [illegible]. The sales will be held in Symphony Hall, as usual, on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 25, 26, 28 and 29. On Monday the $18 seats for the 24 public rehearsals will be sold; on Tuesday the $10 seats of the rehearsals; on Thursday the $18 seats of the concerts, and on Friday the $10 seats. The first public rehearsal will be given on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, with Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera Company as soloist. The first concert will be given on the following evening.

Mr. Fiedler is still in Germany, but is booked to sail from Bremen on Tuesday, Sept. 21. On the same ship with him will come Anton Witek, the concert master of the orchestra. Mr. Fiedler has been spending the greater part of the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, not far from Munich. Garmisch is the summer home of Richard Strauss and a very considerable colony of notable musicians is found there every year. Nothing definite has yet been heard from Mr. Fiedler regarding his plans for the season, but it was settled before he left Boston last spring that early in the season he would give two special programs, one to celebrate the 30th birthday of the orchestra, which falls on Oct. 21, and the other to celebrate the centenary of Liszt, which falls on Oct. 22. Just when he will give these two programs will not be known much before his arrival in Boston.

The outlook for the orchestra at this time is favorable, and the management will be surprised if the record of last year is not surpassed. A hint of what is in store for it comes from New York, where subscribers have been renewing since last spring. The subscription for these 10 concerts is today but very little short of the entire subscription of last year, and the books have not yet been opened to the general public for new subscribers.

The general scheme of the season calls for one interesting innovation. Two trips to the middle West will be made, instead of the usual one. The first will come in the last week of January and in the second in Easter week in April. A total of 118 concerts have been booked for the 31 weeks, which is the largest number the orchestra has ever given in a season. No changes of moment are contemplated in the personnel of the orchestra.

HERALD, THURSDAY,

SEPTEMBER 7, 1911.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The 80 members of the Symphony Orchestra that have been in Bar Harbor during the summer giving daily concerts under the direction of Gustav Strube return to Boston the end of this week. Every steamer arriving now brings back some of the members of the orchestra who have been spending the summer in Europe. As has been the custom in the past the first time the orchestra, that is to say, the major part of it, will be brought together will be on Saturday, Oct. 30, when it has its first rehearsal for the Worcester Festival.

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

THIRTY YEARS OF THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

At Last It Purposes to Celebrate an Anniversary—English Opera at the Metropolitan—A Hint as to Its Future—The "Greek" Debussy—A Moral from Antwerp—An Expert Visitor Hears Mr. Caruso's Voice—Miss Garden Discusses the English Language—The Advancing Russians

EXACTLY why those in authority over the Symphony Orchestra have chosen to celebrate next month the thirtieth anniversary of the first concert of the band is hard to say. The tenth and the twenty-fifth year of its existence passed unheeded, except in the chronology of the programme book, and the fiftieth is still remote by a whole musical generation. Probably the "celebration" is a part of the recent policy of a more vigorous life for the orchestra and a wider publicity for its doings and fortunes. Perhaps, too, there was thought that one or two players who were members of the original orchestra still sit in their places, while in the parquet and the balconies, especially on Saturday evenings, are listeners who have followed the orchestra through its three decades. These veterans of the auditorium and the stage deserved an anniversary before it was too late; while perhaps it is time for the whole orchestra and its present public to taste the joys of retrospective glories.

When theatres and opera houses commemorate their anniversaries, they sometimes "reconstitute" the performance with which their existence began. Mr. Fiedler could easily replay the programme that Mr. Henschel chose for the first concert of the orchestra; but he could not "reconstitute" the band—since death and age and distance have scattered it, and he could not bring back the old Music Hall. No magic could make the audiences of 1911 the audiences of 1881; and different ears and different standards hear and judge now. All this is the pleasure and the pain of progress. The Symphony Orchestra began as a local band for a relatively small and intimate public. Now, after thirty years, it is the foremost orchestra in America and one of the three or four foremost orchestras of the world. Thirty or forty cities hear it annually; at home it plays to the cosmopolitan and diversified public of the newer Boston. One thing, however, the management of the orchestra could do in its "celebration." Gossip ran last winter that a bust of Mr. Higginson was to be set up in the foyer of Symphony Hall. The thirtieth anniversary of the beginnings of the orchestra might well be the occasion of this memorial to the man who has made its past and its present possible. H. T. P.

TRAVELER. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

During the coming musical season the Franz Liszt centenary will be celebrated all over the world on the date of Oct. 22, the greatest one being in Heidelberg, at which the greatest conductors in Europe will be employed.

Mr. Fiedler is to commemorate the occasion with a special programme for the Symphony rehearsal and concert on Oct. 20 and 21. Curiously enough, the 13th anniversary of the orchestra falls on these dates. Mr. Fiedler will celebrate this event with a special programme on Oct. 13 and 14.

The chief work which will be given on the Liszt programme will be the Dante symphony. It is in two movements, the first called the Inferno; the second, the Purgatorio, and like the "Faust" symphony, at the end of the second movement it employs a chorus, but in this case it is a chorus of women's voices.

The soloist at these concerts will be Rudolph Ganz. He will play the concerto in E-flat major.

SUNDAY GLOBE—SEPTEMBER 10, 1911

Symphony Orchestra Will Give Liszt Centenary Program.

The Symphony orchestra will begin its season with an abundance of anniversaries. On Oct 22 falls the centenary of the birth of Franz Liszt, and on the same day occurs the 30th anniversary of the first concert given by the orchestra in old Music hall, under Mr Henschel. Both of these events will be duly celebrated with special programs. Mr Fiedler has placed the 30th anniversary program at the second concert on Oct 14 and the Liszt anniversary program at the third concert on Oct 21.

The principal work on the Liszt program will be the "Dante Symphony," which has been promised for the last two years, but not performed. In the minds of many the "Dante" symphony is even a greater work than the "Faust," but it is not nearly so well known. It has appeared on our Symphony programs but twice, the first time in February, 1886, and the second in May, 1903, Mr Gericke being conductor in both instances. It has not been given in New York for over 30 years. It is a work in two parts, the first being named the "Inferno," the second the "Purgatorio." As in the "Faust" symphony, a chorus is used in the finale, but in the "Dante" the chorus is of women's instead of men's voices.

The soloist will be Rudolph Ganz, who makes his appearance here after an absence of several seasons. He will play the E flat concerto. The symphonic poems will be represented by "Les Preludes" and "Tasso."

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1911

SYMPHONY SEASON TO OPEN OCT. 22

Will Mark 30th Anniversary of First Concert in Old Music Hall.

The Symphony Orchestra will begin its season, so to say, with an embarrassment of anniversaries. On Oct. 22 falls the centenary of the birth of Franz Liszt, and on the same day is the thirtieth anniversary of the first concert given by the orchestra in old Music Hall under Mr. Henschel. Both of these events will be duly celebrated with special programs, and Mr. Fiedler has placed the thirtieth anniversary program at the second concert, Oct. 14, and the Liszt anniversary program at the third concert, Oct. 21.

The principal work on the Liszt program will be the "Dante" symphony. In the minds of many the "Dante" symphony is even a greater work than the "Faust," but it is not nearly so well known. As a matter of fact, the "Dante" symphony has appeared on Symphony programs but twice, the first time in February, 1886, and the second time in May, 1903, Mr. Gericke being conductor in both instances. It is a work in two parts, the first being named the "Inferno," the second the "Purgatorio," and, as in the "Faust" symphony, a chorus is used in the finale, but the "Dante" uses a female chorus instead of a male.

The soloist on this occasion will be Rudolph Ganz, who makes his appearance here after an absence of several seasons, and he will play the E flat concerto. The symphonic poems will be represented by "Les Preludes" and "Tasso."

A detailed account of the coming Symphony season will appear in next Sunday's Journal.

HERALD, BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 10, 1911.

DANTE SYMPHONY TO BE PLAYED HERE

Will Be a Feature at the Centenary of Liszt's Birth.

The Symphony Orchestra will begin its season with an embarrassment of anniversaries. On Oct. 22 falls the centenary of the birth of Litzt, and on the same day is the 30th anniversary of the first concert given by the orchestra in Music Hall under Mr. Henschel. Both of these events will be celebrated with special programs. Mr. Fiedler has arranged the 30th anniversary program for the second concert, on Oct. 14th, and the Liszt program at the third concert, on Oct. 21.

The principal work on the Liszt program will be the "Dante Symphony." To many the "Dante Symphony" is even a greater work than the "Faust," but it is not so well known. It has appeared on the Symphony program but twice—in February, 1886, and in May, 1903. It has not been given in New York for over 30 years. The work includes the "Inferno" and the "Purgatorio," and, as in the "Faust" symphony, a chorus is used in the finale, but the "Dante" uses a female chorus instead of a male, this being the "Paradiso."

The soloist will be Rudolph Ganz. He will play Liszt's E flat concerto. The symphonic poems will be represented by "Les Preludes" and "Tasso."

The management of the orchestra hopes to be able to make full announcement regarding the season next week.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1911.

But Three New Faces Will Be Seen in the Symphony

There will be only three new faces in the Symphony Orchestra this year. One of these new members will be an addition to the membership of the orchestra, while the other two replace members who have retired.

The additional member will be Modeste Alloo, who will share with Mr. Hampe the position of first trombone. Mr. Alloo is a Belgian and comes very highly recommended. Sir Edward Elgar, some years ago, wrote for him and dedicated to him a trombone concerto.

The other two members will be viola players, coming from abroad. They will take the places of Henry Heindl and one other of the viola players who retired from the orchestra last year. Mr. Heindl is one of the old guard, as he was a member of the original orchestra in 1881, and until his illness a year ago he had the remarkable record of never having missed a rehearsal or concert in twenty-nine years. Mr. Heindl retires on pension.

SUNDAY POST, SEPTEMBER 10, 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Symphony Orchestra will begin its 31st season with an embarrassment of anniversaries. On October 22 falls the centenary of the birth of Franz Liszt and on the same day is the thirtieth anniversary of the first concert given by the orchestra in old Music Hall under Mr. Henschel. Both of these events will be duly celebrated with special programmes and Mr. Fiedler has placed the thirtieth anniversary programme at the second concert, on Oct. 14 and the Liszt anniversary programme at the third concert on Oct. 21.

The principal work on the Liszt programme will be the "Dante Symphony" which Mr. Fiedler has promised for the last two years, but has not until now found time to produce. In the minds of many, the "Dante" is even a greater work than the "Faust" symphony, but it is not nearly so well known. As a matter of fact the "Dante" symphony has appeared on the Symphony programmes but twice, the first time in February, 1886, and the second time May, 1903. Mr. Gericke being conductor in both instances. It has not been given in New York for over 30 years. The work is in two parts, the first, "Inferno," the second, "Purgatorio" and, as in the "Faust" symphony, a chorus is used in the finale, but the "Dante" symphony requires a female instead of a male chorus for the section, "Paradiso."

The soloist at the Liszt celebration will be Rudolph Ganz, who makes his appearance here after an absence of several seasons, and who will play the E-flat concerto. The Symphonic poems will be represented by "Les Preludes" and "Tasso."

The management of the orchestra hopes to be able to make full announcement regarding the season next week.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1911

News of Music

SEEMINGLY, Richard Strauss has finished his new symphony or expects to finish it in time for performance in America in the course of the winter. Anyhow, it appears definitely in the announcements of the Philadelphia Orchestra, wherein it is called the "Alpen" symphony, with an explanatory sentence saying that "it represents the tendency of the composer to return to an earlier, classically simple tradition, not unlike the sprightly naïveté of Mozart." If this gloss be true, evidently Strauss, born perverse and liking it, has been impressed by the Alps in his own peculiar fashion. Since Mr. Fiedler is tireless with Strauss's music, he will hardly let the new symphony go long unheard in Boston. It is Strauss's first orchestral piece since the "Domestica" of 1905.

Hereabouts, too, we shall not lack new music by Reger and at the beginning of the season. Long since, the impending Worcester Festival announced his choral piece, "The Nuns," and in October at the Symphony Concerts, Mr. Fiedler will play Reger's "Overture to a Comedy" for the first time in America. The particular comedy is unindicated and perhaps imaginary, like the tragedy to which Reger wrote a thunderous and restless prologue two years ago.

GLOBE—THURSDAY. SEPTEMBER 14, 1911

NEW SYMPHONY PLAYERS.

There Will Be Only Three Changes in the Personnel of the Orchestra This Season.

There will be only three new faces in the Symphony orchestra this year. One of these new members will be an addition to the membership of the orchestra, while the other two replace members who have retired.

The additional member will be Modeste Alloo, who will share with Mr Hampe the position of first trombone. Mr Alloo's engagement is due to the policy of the orchestra to have extra men so far as possible among the wind players, for modern music is so exacting that it is difficult for one solo player to do all the work required of him in the season. Mr Alloo is a Belgian and comes very highly recommended. In fact, Sir Edward Elgar some years ago wrote for him and dedicated to him a trombone concerto.

The other two members will be viola players, coming from abroad. They will take the place of Henry Heindl and one other of the viola players, who retired from the orchestra last year. Mr Heindl is one of the old guard, as he was a member of the original orchestra in 1881, and until his illness a year ago he had the remarkable record of never having missed a rehearsal or concert in 29 years. He retires on pension.

SEPTEMBER 14, 1911.

NEW SYMPHONY PLAYERS.

There will be three new members in the Symphony Orchestra this season, two viola players and a solo trombone player. Modeste Alloo, a Belgian, will share the position of first trombone player with Mr. Hampe. One of the viola players takes the place of Henry Heindle, who retires on pension, having been a member of the original orchestra in 1881.

HERALD, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1911

NEW PLAYERS FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

Modeste Alloo, Trombone, and Two Viola Players Secured.

There will be only three new faces in the Symphony orchestra this year. Two will replace members who have retired.

Mr. Modeste Alloo, who will share with Mr. Hampe the position of first trombone. Mr. Alloo's engagement is due to the policy of the orchestra to have extra men so far as possible among the wind players. Mr. Alloo is a Belgian, and comes very highly recommended. In fact, Sir Edward Elgar, some years ago, wrote for him and dedicated to him a trombone concerto.

The other two members will be viola players, coming from abroad. They will take the place of Mr. Henry Heindl and one other of the viola players who retired from the orchestra last year. Mr. Heindl is one of the old guard, as he was a member of the original orchestra in 1881, and until his illness a year ago he had the remarkable record of never having missed a rehearsal or concert in 29 years. Mr. Heindl retires on pension.

RECORD, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER, 14, 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

There will be only three new faces in the Symphony orchestra this year. One of these new members will be in addition to the membership of the orchestra, while the other two replace members who have retired.

The additional member will be Mr. Modeste Alloo, who will share with Mr. Hampe the position of first trombone.

Mr. Alloo is a Belgian and comes very highly recommended. In fact Sir Edward Elgar, some years ago, wrote for him and dedicated to him a trombone concerto.

The other two members will be viola players coming from abroad. They will take the place of Henry Heindl and one other of the viola players who retired from the orchestra last year. Mr. Heindl retires on pension.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1911 EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

New "Symphony Men"

A new first trombone-player, Mr. Alloo, a Belgian highly reputed with his instrument, will join the Symphony Orchestra in October, thus continuing the reorganization of the brass choir that has been going forward since Dr. Muck's time. Two new viola players, both Europeans, will also join the band—one to replace Henry Heindl, who retired on pension last spring after twenty-nine years of continuous service, from the beginnings indeed of the orchestra itself.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 16, 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The annual auction sales of the Symphony Orchestra begin on Sept. 25 with the sale of the $18 seats for the rehearsals. All the sales will begin at 10 a.m. As has always been the rule the second balcony will be withheld from sale for the rehearsals.

The thirty-first annual prospectus of the orchestra, which has just been issued, promises a season full of interest for the patrons of that institution. The usual 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts will be given on successive Fridays and Saturdays, beginning Oct. 6 and 7, respectively, and ending May 3 and 4, with the exception of seven weeks when the orchestra will be away. For the first time since the orchestra was organized the season will run a course of 31 weeks, 30 weeks for many years past being the maximum. The season will be most exacting in the amount of work to be done. The management has scheduled 118 concerts in 26 different cities, and in addition to these there will be the usual two concerts in aid of the Pension Fund, making 122 concerts in all, or an average of practically four a week.

The list of soloists which has been prepared by Mr. Ellis is as representative as ever for it includes all the great artists available for such work during the coming winter. Mr. Fiedler, whose last year it is, has made a most ambitious plan and will announce a list of novelties which at least promise as much as any he has announced in past years and contains some items of more than usual importance.

The singers will be Elena Gerhardt, Alma Gluck, Berta Morena and Madame Schumann-Heink. The violinists will be Kathleen Parlow, Maud Powell, Efrem Zimbalist, Anton Witek and Sylvain Noack. The pianists will be Katherine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Bachaus, Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, Josef Hofmann and George Proctor; and Alwin Schroeder will be the 'cellist.

Boston Symphony Begins Thirty-First Year

New Soloists in Departments of Voice, Violin and Piano Appear and New Reger and Bantock Pieces Are Heard Early

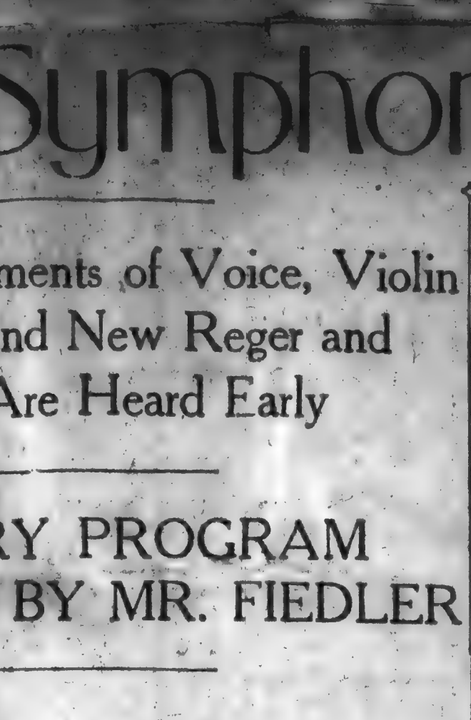
LISZT CENTENARY PROGRAM ANNOUNCED BY MR. FIEDLER

AUCTION SALES of the Symphony concert seats for the coming season are held at Symphony hall the week of Monday, Sept. 25, in the following order:

Monday, Sept. 25, $18 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals; Tuesday, Sept. 26, $10 seats for the rehearsals; Thursday, Sept. 28, $18 seats for the Saturday evening concerts; Friday, Sept. 29, $10 seats for the concerts.

The sales will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning. The second balcony rehearsal seats will be withheld from the auction and the traditional practise of selling them on the day of the rehearsals for 25 cents each will be continued.

HAROLD BAUER
Pianist who has made wide appeal in America as concert artist returns this season



(Photo by Mishkin, New York)
MISS KATHLEEN PARLOW
Young Canadian violinist taught by Auer has already found place in heart of American musical public

EFREM ZIMBALIST
New product of Leopold Auer's violin classes in St. Petersburg Conservatory made his first appearance Oct. 27

Soloists Representative

The thirty-first annual prospectus of the orchestra which has just been issued promises a season full of interest for the patrons of that institution. The usual 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts will be given on successive Fridays and Saturdays beginning Oct. 6 and 7 and ending May 3 and 4, with the exception of seven weeks when the orchestra will be away, five times on its southern trips and twice in the West. The dates when the orchestra will be away are Nov. 10 and 11, Dec. 8 and 9, Jan. 12 and 13, Feb. 2 and 3, Feb. 23 and 24, March 22 and 23, April 12 and 13. For the first time since the orchestra was organized the season will run a course of 31 weeks, 30 weeks for many years past being the maximum. The season will be most exacting in the amount of work to be done. The management has scheduled 118 concerts in 26 different cities and in addition to these there will be the usual two concerts in aid of the pension fund, making 120 concerts in all, or an average of practically four a week. This with the rehearsing and traveling which will have to be done means plenty of occupation for Mr. Fiedler and the men under him. The second trip to the West is an innovation. Each trip will last a week and Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit, which heretofore have had a single concert each year, will have two concerts.

The prospects of the orchestra, the managers say, have never been more promising. The support given to it in Boston is now, as it has ever been, loyal and enthusiastic. Its patronage in cities outside of Boston has each year shown a continual increase until practically it plays "to capacity" in every city that it visits. The list of soloists prepared by Mr. Ellis is as representative as ever, for it includes all the great artists available during the coming winter. Mr. Fiedler, now in the last year of his conductorship, has a list of novelties which is said to promise much.

The total number of soloists engaged up to the present time is 17. It is likely that some additions will be made to this number in the course of the season. Of the 17 three will be drawn from the orchestra, Messrs. Witek and Noack, violins, and Mr. Schroeder, 'cellist.

Young Violinists Appear

The list comprises four singers, five violinists, seven pianists and one 'cellist. The singers will be Mmes. Elena Gerhardt, Alma Gluck, Berta Morena and Ernestine Schumann-Heink. The violinists will be Kathleen Parlow, Maud Powell, Efrem Zimbalist, Anton Witek and Sylvain Noack. The pianists will be Katharine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Bachaus, Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, Josef Hofmann and George Proctor; and the 'cellist, Alwin Schroeder.

Three of the soloists, Miss Gerhardt and Messrs. Bachaus and Zimbalist, will be new. These artists come to America this season for the first time. Miss Gerhardt is a young German soprano who has made a specialty of concert work. Her career has been in a general way under the tutelage of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nikisch. She has figured largely in European concerts in the last three or four years and is a great favorite in Germany and in England.

Wilhelm Bachaus, a German pianist, is said to be the possesor not merely of a highly developed technique but to have musical and temperamental qualities which place him in the first rank of artists of his kind.

Zimbalist, like Mischa Elman and Kathleen Parlow, is a pupil of Leopold Auer of St. Petersburg. Like Elman, he is a Russian Jew and a graduate of the St. Petersburg Conservatory of Music, where during his studies he took all the prizes that were offered. He is 22 years old and is regarded in Europe as Elman's only rival. His concerts in Berlin and London are reported to have been quite as popular as Elman's.

Mme. Alma Gluck will sing with the Symphony orchestra for the first time, although she is not unknown here in Boston. Mme. Gluck's rise in her profession has been extraordinarily rapid. Though a Roumanian by birth, she has lived in America practically all her life and all her studies and all her career have been in this country. Three years ago she was taking minor parts in the Metropolitan Opera Company; today, according to the managers, she is one of the most sought after singers before the public.

Mme. Berta Morena has sung in opera in Boston and three years ago she was soloist with the Symphony orchestra.

(Photo by Apeda Studio, New York)
MISS KATHARINE GOODSON
English pianist remembered for recital and orchestral appearances of recent season is in Symphony schedule

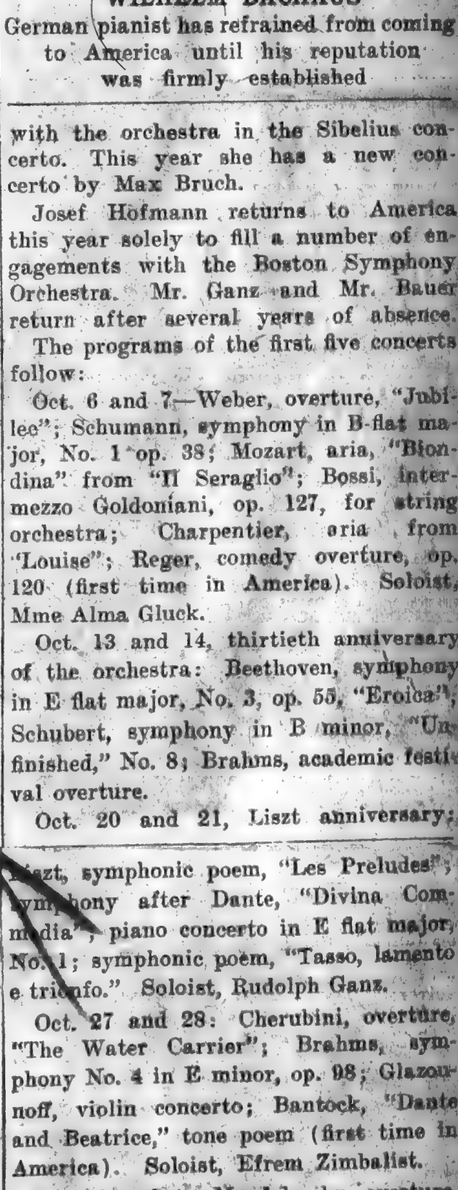
(Copyright by Gessford, New York)
JOSEF HOFMANN
Accounted among the greatest piano interpreters Mr. Hofmann comes to Boston second successive year

Annual Bidding for Season Seats Which Takes Place in Symphony Hall Is Preliminary to Starting Work of Concerts

TWO WESTERN TRIPS AMONG ITEMS IN 1911-2 PROSPECTUS

MME. OLGA SAMAROFF
American pianist who has won Symphony solo honors in past years will reappear

(Photo by Windealt Studio, Oak Park, Ill.)
RUDOLPH GANZ
Swiss pianist known in Boston plays with orchestra in Liszt anniversary program



WILHELM BACHAUS
German pianist has refrained from coming to America until his reputation was firmly established

The successor of Milka Ternina in Munich, she is in the front rank of dramatic sopranos. Madame Schumann-Heink holds a place all her own in the affections of the American public and her appearances with the Symphony orchestra are always brilliant.

Miss Kathleen Parlow, the young Canadian violinist who made her debut in Boston with the orchestra toward the end of last season, won a success that made a return engagement inevitable.

Mme. Maud Powell was last heard with the orchestra in the Sibelius concerto. This year she has a new concerto by Max Bruch.

Josef Hofmann returns to America this year solely to fill a number of engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Ganz and Mr. Bauer return after several years of absence.

The programs of the first five concerts follow:

Oct. 6 and 7—Weber, overture, "Jubilee"; Schumann, symphony in B-flat major, No. 1 op. 38; Mozart, aria, "Biondina" from "Il Seraglio"; Bossi, intermezzo Goldoniani, op. 127, for string orchestra; Charpentier, aria from "Louise"; Reger, comedy overture, op. 120 (first time in America). Soloist, Mme Alma Gluck.

Oct. 13 and 14, thirtieth anniversary of the orchestra: Beethoven, symphony in E flat major, No. 3, op. 55, "Eroica"; Schubert, symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," No. 8; Brahms, academic festival overture.

Oct. 20 and 21, Liszt anniversary; Liszt, symphonic poem, "Les Preludes"; symphony after Dante, "Divina Commedia"; piano concerto in E flat major, No. 1; symphonic poem, "Tasso, lamento e trionfo." Soloist, Rudolph Ganz.

Oct. 27 and 28: Cherubini, overture, "The Water Carrier"; Brahms, symphony No. 4 in E minor, op. 98; Glazounoff, violin concerto; Bantock, "Dante and Beatrice," tone poem (first time in America). Soloist, Efrem Zimbalist.

Nov. 3 and 4: Mendelssohn, overture, "Melusine"; Strauss, tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; d'Indy, symphonic variations "Istar," op. 42; Chabrier, overture, "Gwendoline."

(Photo by Grainer)
MME. BERTA MORENA
Metropolitan opera soprano has been heard with Symphony players in Boston and elsewhere

(Photo by H. Godfrey Turner, New York)
MME. MAUD POWELL
Violinist remembered for her reading of Sibelius concerto will restate her interpretive views to Bostonians

REDUCTION

RATIO

13x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

HAROLD BAUER.

EFREM ZIMBALIST

Thirty-first Season of Boston's Famed Orchestra Has Every Promise of Being Unusually Brilliant.

The 31st annual prospectus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been just issued, promises a season full of interest. The management has scheduled 118 concerts in 26 different cities, and in addition to these there will be the two concerts in aid of the pension fund, making 120 concerts in all, or an average of practically four a week. The usual 24 public rehearsals will be given on successive Fridays and Saturdays, beginning Oct. 6 and 7, respectively, and ending May 3 and 4, with the exception of the seven weeks when the orchestra will be away, five times on its southern trips and twice in the West. Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit, which, heretofore have had to be content with a single concert a year, are to have two concerts. The popularity of the orchestra in outside cities has been constantly increasing, and the demand for it more than it can satisfy.

Mr. Fiedler, whose last year it is with the orchestra, has made ambitious plans and will produce a list of novelties which will equal any he has given in the past and contain also items of unusual importance.

Great Array of Soloists.

Mr. Ellis has prepared a list of soloists which includes all the great artists available for such work during the coming winter. The total number is 17 and it is likely some additions will be made during the season. Of this number three will be drawn from the orchestra, Messrs. Witek and Noack, first and second concert masters, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the principal 'cellist.

The list includes four singers, five violinists, seven pianists and one 'cellist. The singers will be Eleona Gerhardt, Alma Gluck, Berta Morena and Mme. Schumann-Heink; the violinists, Kathleen Parlow, Maud Powell, Efrem Zimbalist, Anton Witek and Sylvain Noack; the pianists, Katherine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Bachaus, Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, Josef Hofmann and George Proctor; 'cellist, Alwin Schroeder.

Three of these are newcomers to Boston, Miss Gerhardt and Messrs. Bachaus and Zimbalist. Miss Gerhardt is a soprano, pupil of Mrs. Arthur Nikisch and her career has been under the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch. She has been a great favorite in Germany. Wilhelm Bachaus is said to be the possessor of highly developed technique, and also to have musical qualities which place him in the front rank of artists. Zimbalist, Elman, is a pupil of Auer of Petersburg, and has studied with him for a number of years. He is also a pupil of Auer and a graduate of the Imperial Conservatory of Music. In Berlin and London he is regarded as Elman's rival.

Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera Company is known here, although this is her first appearance with the Symphony Orchestra. Berta Morena has sung here in opera, and three years ago sang with the Symphony. Mme. Schumann-Heink needs no introduction to Boston.

Kathleen Parlow, the young Canadian girl, made her debut with the orchestra last season, and made a profound impression. Maud Powell has not been heard here since she conquered with ease the stupendous difficulties of the Sibelius concerto. This year she will play a new concerto by Max Bruch.

In the list of pianists the names of Katherine Goodson and Olga Samaroff will excite pleasurable anticipations, as will the names of the old Boston favorites, Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, Josef Hofmann and George Proctor, who represents the local pianists.

The annual auction sales of the Symphony orchestra come this year in the last week of the month, beginning Monday, Sept. 25. On that date the $18 seats for the rehearsals will be sold; on the 26th the $10 seats for the rehearsals; on the 28th the $18 seats; on the 29th the $10 seats for the concerts. Sales will begin at 10 in the morning. As usual the second balcony will be withheld from sale for rehearsals.

Following are the programmes for the first five weeks of the Symphony season:

OCT. 6TH ANR 7TH.

Overture, "Jubilee" ..... Weber
Symphony in B-flat major, No. 1, Op. 38 ..... Schumann
Aria, "Biondina" from "Il Seraglio" ..... Mozart
"Intermezzi Goldoniani," Op. 127 (Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 6), for string orchestra ..... Bossi
Aria from "Louise" ..... Charpentier
Comedy Overture, Op. 120 (first time in America) ..... Reger
Soloist, Miss Alma Gluck.

OCT. 13th AND 14TH, 86TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ORCHESTRA.

Symphony in E-flat major, No. 3, Op. 55, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven
Symphony in B-minor, "Unfinished," No. 8 ..... Schubert
Academic Festival Overture ..... Brahms

OCT. 20TH AND 21ST, LISZT ANNIVERSARY.

(Franz Liszt born Oct. 22, 1811.)
Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes" ..... Liszt
Symphony after Dante "Divina Commedia" ..... Liszt
Concerto for pianoforte in E-flat major, No. 1 ..... Liszt
Symphonic poem, "Tasso, lamento e trionfo" ..... Liszt
Soloist, Rudolph Ganz.

OCT. 27TH AND 28TH.

Overture, "Der Wasserträger" ..... Cherubini
Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Op. 98 ..... Brahms
Concerto for Violin ..... Glazounoff
"Dante and Beatrice," tone poem (first time in America) ..... Bantock
Soloist, Efrem Zimbalist.

NOV. 3D AND 4TH.

Overture, "Meluzine" ..... Mendelssohn
Tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra" ..... Strauss
Symphonic variations, "Istar," Op. 42 ..... d'Indy
Overture, "Gwendoline" ..... Chabrier

The thirty-first annual prospectus of the orchestra, which has just been issued, promises a season full of interest for the patrons of that institution. The usual 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts will be given on successive Fridays and Saturdays, beginning Oct. 6 and 7, respectively, and ending May 3 and 4, with the exception of seven weeks when the orchestra will be away. For the first time since the orchestra was organized the season will run a course of 31 weeks, 30 weeks for many years past being the maximum. The season will be most exacting in the amount of work to be done. The management has scheduled 118 concerts in 26 different cities, and in addition to these there will be the usual two concerts in aid of the Pension Fund, making 122 concerts in all, or an average of practically four a week.

The list of soloists which has b pared by Mr. Ellis is as represent ever for it includes all the grea available for such work during th winter. Mr. Fiedler, whose last, is, has made a most ambitious will announce a list of novelties least promise as much as any he nounced in past years and conta items of more than usual import

The singers will be Elena Alma Gluck, Berta Morena and Schumann-Heink. The violinist Kathleen Parlow, Maud Powell Zimbalist, Anton Witek and Noack. The pianists will be K Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, Jo mann and George Proctor; and Schroeder will be the 'cellist.

4

RECORD SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The annual auction sales of the Symphony Orchestra begin on Sept. 25 with the sale of the $18 seats for the rehearsals. All the sales will begin at 10 a.m. As has always been the rule the second balcony will be withheld from sale for the rehearsals.

THE SYMPHONY YEAR

THE FIRST ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR 1911-1912

The Thirty-First Year of the Orchestra —A Schedule That Calls for More Concerts in the West Than Heretofore, and So Lengthens by a Week the Season in Boston—Mr. Fiedler's Final Year as Conductor and His Ambitions for It—The Annual Array of Singers, Pianists and Violinists—A Comprehensive and Promising List

WITH the Symphony Concerts of Friday afternoon, Oct. 6 and Saturday evening, Oct. 7, to begin the new season, the orchestra enters upon its thirty-first year. It will celebrate the thirty years that are past, on Oct. 13 and 14, by the first pair of concerts it has ever undertaken in honor, as it were, of itself. More particularly and in much more characteristic fashion, it will also signalize the anniversary by the lengthening of its working weeks by one. Hitherto the concerts in Boston have extended over thirty weeks—for the twenty-four pairs that precendent ordinarily broken by the five intervals during which the orchestra visits New York and other cities to the South and the one interval during which it goes into the Middle West. There it has gathered a numerous public that seems to wish for more concerts. Accordingly, this season, the orchestra will go twice into the Middle West—once at the end of January as heretofore and once at the middle of April. Thus its concerts in Boston will continue over one more week than heretofore, ending on Friday afternoon, May 3 and Saturday evening, May 4. The six additional concerts in the Middle West raise the total number that the orchestra will undertake in its seven months of active work to 120, practically four concerts a week—to say nothing of rehearsals and travel—and so the most exacting task the management has yet set for it. To New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, it will go at monthly intervals as of old, and already its audiences there are assured. It will give its occasional concerts in Worcester, Providence, Springfield, New Bedford and other New England cities where it is annually and eagerly expected. On eight Thursdays from November through April, it will go to Cambridge, and in Boston it will not miss its two concerts for its own Pension Fund.

Mr. Fiedler's Final Year

Fortunately for such a scheme, Mr. Fiedler has the physical strength, the nervous vitality, and the liking for work that make the schedule possible, and this year, he will be free at least from the labor of choral concerts with the Cecilia that he undertook last winter. If Mr. Fiedler, as his men say, drives them hard, especially in the preparation of new music, he does not grow intolerable once pictured his days and nights as study of new pieces, rehearsals, concerts, journeys, meals and sleep, declared that this in the season was a conductor's life and wondered why young men should seek it painfully. He forgot that the same spirit that spurs him through these labors, tingles also in these young men. Additional concerts aside, Mr. Fiedler bids fair to be more famous than ever this winter. He will return to Boston for the final year of his conductorship, to his last opportunity to perform with the Symphony Orchestra the music that he particularly cherishes and the music that he wishes particularly to bring to hearing. Until next Saturday, aside from the programmes of the first five pairs of concerts, printed elsewhere in this newspaper, we can get a detailed list of the music that he wishes to undertake. It is an open secret, however, that it will be rich in new or novel pieces and that it will include, as the "programmists" say, "symphonies" of "large dimensions." The five programmes, with their Reger and Bantock, Strauss and d'Indy, Beethoven, Schumann and Brahms sufficiently herald it. Whatever Mr. Fiedler's merits or demerits as a conductor—and the first far outweigh the second—an expectant and admiring public awaits him. The audience of the Symphony Concerts likes the substance and the arrangement of his carefully compiled programmes, his eagerness for the magnificences and the brilliances of sound, his liking for vivid effect and contrast. In the better sense of the word, he has "popularized" the concerts beyond any of his predecessors, and a grateful public has rewarded him accordingly. In the outlying cities it has been still more grateful.

The Usual Arrangements

In a few trifling respects the additional journeys to the West has altered the arrangements for the concerts in Boston. Otherwise they remain as of recent years. They will begin at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, and Saturday evening, Oct. 7. They will continue from week to week through Nov. 3 and 4—the longest consecutive series. Then, the trips, as the orchestra calls them, begin, and there will be no concerts on Nov. 10 and 11, Dec. 8 and 9, Jan. 12 and 13, Feb. 2 and 3, Feb. 23 and 24, March 22 and 23 and April 12 and 13. Since Christmas falls on Monday, it will not affect the course of the concerts, and the shift of the afternoon concert from Good Friday to the preceding Thursday will be made as usual. Finally, the season will end on May 3 and 4, when it is almost safe to surmise, Mr. Fiedler will take leave of the orchestra with Beethoven's Choral Symphony in which he excels.

The tickets for the concerts will be sold by auction as heretofore, starting from the established price of $18 for the better seats and $10 for the less desirable. The tickets at $18 for the afternoon concerts will be sold at Symphony Hall on Monday morning, Sept. 25; the tickets at $10 for the afternoon concerts on Tuesday morning, Sept. 26; the tickets at $18 for the evening concerts on Thursday morning, Sept. 28; and the tickets at $10 for the evening concerts on Friday morning, Sept. 29. Long ago, the regular public of the concerts mastered the conditions that govern these sales and learned the scale of bids that usually prevails. It is the custom of the orchestra so to sell its tickets in Boston. No other band in America dares so to rely upon premiums.

"The Soloists"

For seventeen of the twenty-four pairs of concerts a "soloist" has been already engaged or will come from the ranks of the orchestra, and the official outgivings hint at additions to the list. Seemingly, then, few of the concerts will be wholly orchestral, and the management seems to be receding from the policy, begun a few years ago, of giving every fourth or fifth pair to the band alone. On the other hand it still holds firmly to its announced course of engaging only such singers, pianists and violinists as deserve by their acknowledged rank to appear with such an orchestra. The exception, sometimes fortunate, sometimes unfortunate, has been one or another resident virtuoso. For the new season the choice of soloists accords altogether with this policy. The singers will be Mmes. Gluck and Morena of the Metropolitan Opera House, Mme. Schumann-Heink of Europe and America and Miss Elena Gerhardt, the German concert singer, who comes for the first time to the United States at midwinter. The pianists will be Messrs. Hofmann, Bauer, Ganz, Bachaus and Proctor and Mmes. Samaroff and Goodson. The violinists will be Mmes. Parlow and Powell and Mr. Zimbalist for fiddering virtuosi and Messrs. Witek and Noack from the first desk of the orchestra itself. Furthermore, for one pair of concerts Mr. Schroeder will play a 'cello piece.

The Four Singers

Of the chosen singers, Mme. Schumann-Heink is a favorite there many years to the regular audiences of the Symphony Concerts and to the miscellaneous public that seeks them occasionally. It is, moreover, a curious and amusing fact that she has often been in better voice and sung more skilfully and expressively at the Symphony Concerts than at any of her own recitals in Boston. The orchestra, the audience, the whole occasion seem to stimulate her. Miss Morena is less familiar to the audiences of Symphony Hall, but she has sung at the Symphony Concerts three years ago, and earlier she took the part of Sieglinde in a performance of "Die Walküre" by the Metropolitan Company at the Boston Theatre. She was then, she is now, a very comely woman, cherished and painted by the artist Lenbach. She is also a dramatic singer whose tones have increased in security, warmth and eloquence with the years. Miss Gluck, also of the Metropolitan Opera House, is one of its younger singers who has risen there, by the rather unusual attribute in a lyric theatre in 1911, of skill in the pure art of song. Last winter she sang in Boston at one of the concerts of the Händel and Haydn Society and not a few Bostonians have heard her at the Metropolitan as the Blessed Spirit in the revival of Orpheus. There they could hear the beauty of her transparent voice, the delicate intelligence and the refined artistry of her singing. The newcomer, Miss Gerhardt, is one of the few singers in Germany who is content with the concert-room. There and, indeed, in all northern and western Europe, she has sung often with orchestras and in recitals of her own. Occasionally, Mr. Nikisch, whose protégée she is, accompanies her in them. She is a comely woman of the blonde German type and of poised and practised stage presence. Her voice is a rich and expressive soprano and she commands both beauty and eloquence of tone. She has cultivated the grand style not for rhetorical effect, but for an unusual breadth and power of diction and climax. She has large imagination and in her singing are both repose and vitality.

The Pianists

Of the pianists, Mr. Hofmann returns from Europe for ten appearances with the Symphony Orchestra only. After years of mistrust of Boston because it had once seemed indifferent to him, he came again to it last autumn as a matured pianist. It heard him gladly; it applauded him yet more last spring. "Has Boston changed?" he wrote amusingly, after the concert of April, "or is it the pianist?" Probably it is both. Mr. Bauer likewise returns to a public that has long admired his studious talents, the intellectual understanding that underlies his playing and the poised emotion that warms it. Mr. Ganz, who has now settled in Berlin, has been as long—or longer—absent. He used to strike fire; by report it burns the brighter now. Mme. Goodson won her first American public here in Boston and she has kept it by the vitality and the elastic moods of her playing of the romantic music—she is likely to play Tschaikowsky's concerto—which is her best field. Mme. Samaroff has regained health and spirits again. She can summon again the nervous energy, the large resource and the sure precision of her playing with an orchestra. The public of the Symphony Concerts has long followed her career. The newcomer remains—Mr. Bachaus, German, blonde, and still believably youthful. His technique, of mingled power and finesse, dates him to the school of Rosenthal and Godowsky; but he has a warmer and a more elastic temperament. The sixties and the seventies would have called him romantic.

The Violinists

Of the violinists, two are members of the orchestra, Mr. Witek of the refinements of technique and the subtleties of tonal shading, and Mr. Noack with his silvery tone and his French sense, though he is Dutch by birth, of the golden mean of adroit expression. Two more are women: the most distinguished of the elder women of the violin, Mme. Powell, and the most remarkable of the younger, Miss Parlow. Mme. Powell is established now, beyond peradventure, among the remarkable violinists of our time and she is one of the few American virtuosi, whom European audiences—and not "press notices" sent from Europe—have really acclaimed. At her usual interval of three or four years, she returns to the Boston Orchestra, this time to play Bruch's new concert-piece. Miss Parlow, who was first played with the orchestra last spring, proved that, young as she is, she was both virtuoso, in her command of her instrument and feeling for it, and interpretative artist in her response to her music. Her concerto, Tschaikowsky's, happened to be ill-chosen for her best powers. She will choose more wisely next autumn. Finally, there is one more newcomer—Mr. Zimbalist. Auer, the Russian virtuoso who is counted the foremost teacher of the violin, schooled him as he schooled Mr. Elman and Miss Parlow, and launched him as a virtuoso in Europe. His progress has been rapid in Germany and in England; and he is now to try his fortunes in America. To see and to hear he recalls the younger Elman and in his playing are the same Slav traits. So run the present announcements of the Symphony Orchestra. Once it belonged to Boston only. Now, with its wider and wider field, it is almost national.

H. T. P.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The Music for the First Five Pairs—New Pieces by Reger and Bantock—Strauss's "Zarathustra" and d'Indy's "Istar"—The Two Anniversary Programmes

MR. FIEDLER has sent to Boston his programmes for the first five Symphony Concerts of the new musical year. They include the pieces chosen for the concerts that are to commemorate the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the band and the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Liszt. For the first of these anniversaries, the programme is properly classical—Beethoven, Brahms and Schubert. For the second, it includes Liszt's "Dante" symphony, so seldom played that it will come as novel music to many that hear it.

The other three programmes bear witness Mr. Fiedler's sympathies for contemporar music and his zeal to bring interesting ne music to speedy hearing in Boston. The the lists include Strauss's "Zarathustra of which Mr. Fiedler has given very el quent performances; d'Indy's richly imag ined and scored set of variations, "Istar Chabrier's overture to his opera, "Gwende line"; Glazounoff's concerto for violin which has not yet been played here; Ban tock's tone poem "Dante and Beatrice," first heard last spring in London and very glowing, if a little theatrical music; and Reger's newest orchestral piece an overture to an imaginary or an unnamed comedy.

In detail the five programmes go:

Oct. 6 and 7:

Weber: Overture, "Jubilee."
Schumann: Symphony in B-flat major (The Spring).
Mozart: Aria, "Biondina" from "Il Seraglio."
Bossi: "Intermezzi Goldoniani," for String Orchestra.
Charpentier: Air from "Louise."
Reger: Comedy Overture, Op. 120. (First Time in America)
Soloist: Miss Alma Gluck (of the Metropolitan Opera House)

Oct. 13 and 14, for the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the orchestra:

Beethoven: Symphony No. 3, "Eroica."
Schubert: Symphony in B-Minor, "Unfinished."
Brahms: Academic Overture.

Oct. 20 and 21, for the Liszt centenary:

Liszt: Symphonic Poem, "Les Préludes."—Symphony After Dante's "Divina Commedia."—Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1.—Symphonic Poem, "Tasso."
Soloist: Rudolph Ganz.

Oct. 27 and 28:

Cherubini: Overture, "The Water Carrier."
Brahms: Symphony No. 4 in E-minor.
Glazounoff: Concerto for Violin.
Bantock: Tone Poem, "Dante and Beatrice." (First Time in America)
Soloist: Efrem Zimbalist.

Nov. 3 and 4:

Mendelssohn: Overture, "Meluzine."
Strauss: Tone Poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra."
d'Indy: Symphonic Variations, "Istar," Op. 42.
Chabrier: Overture, "Gwendoline."

REDUCTION

RATIO

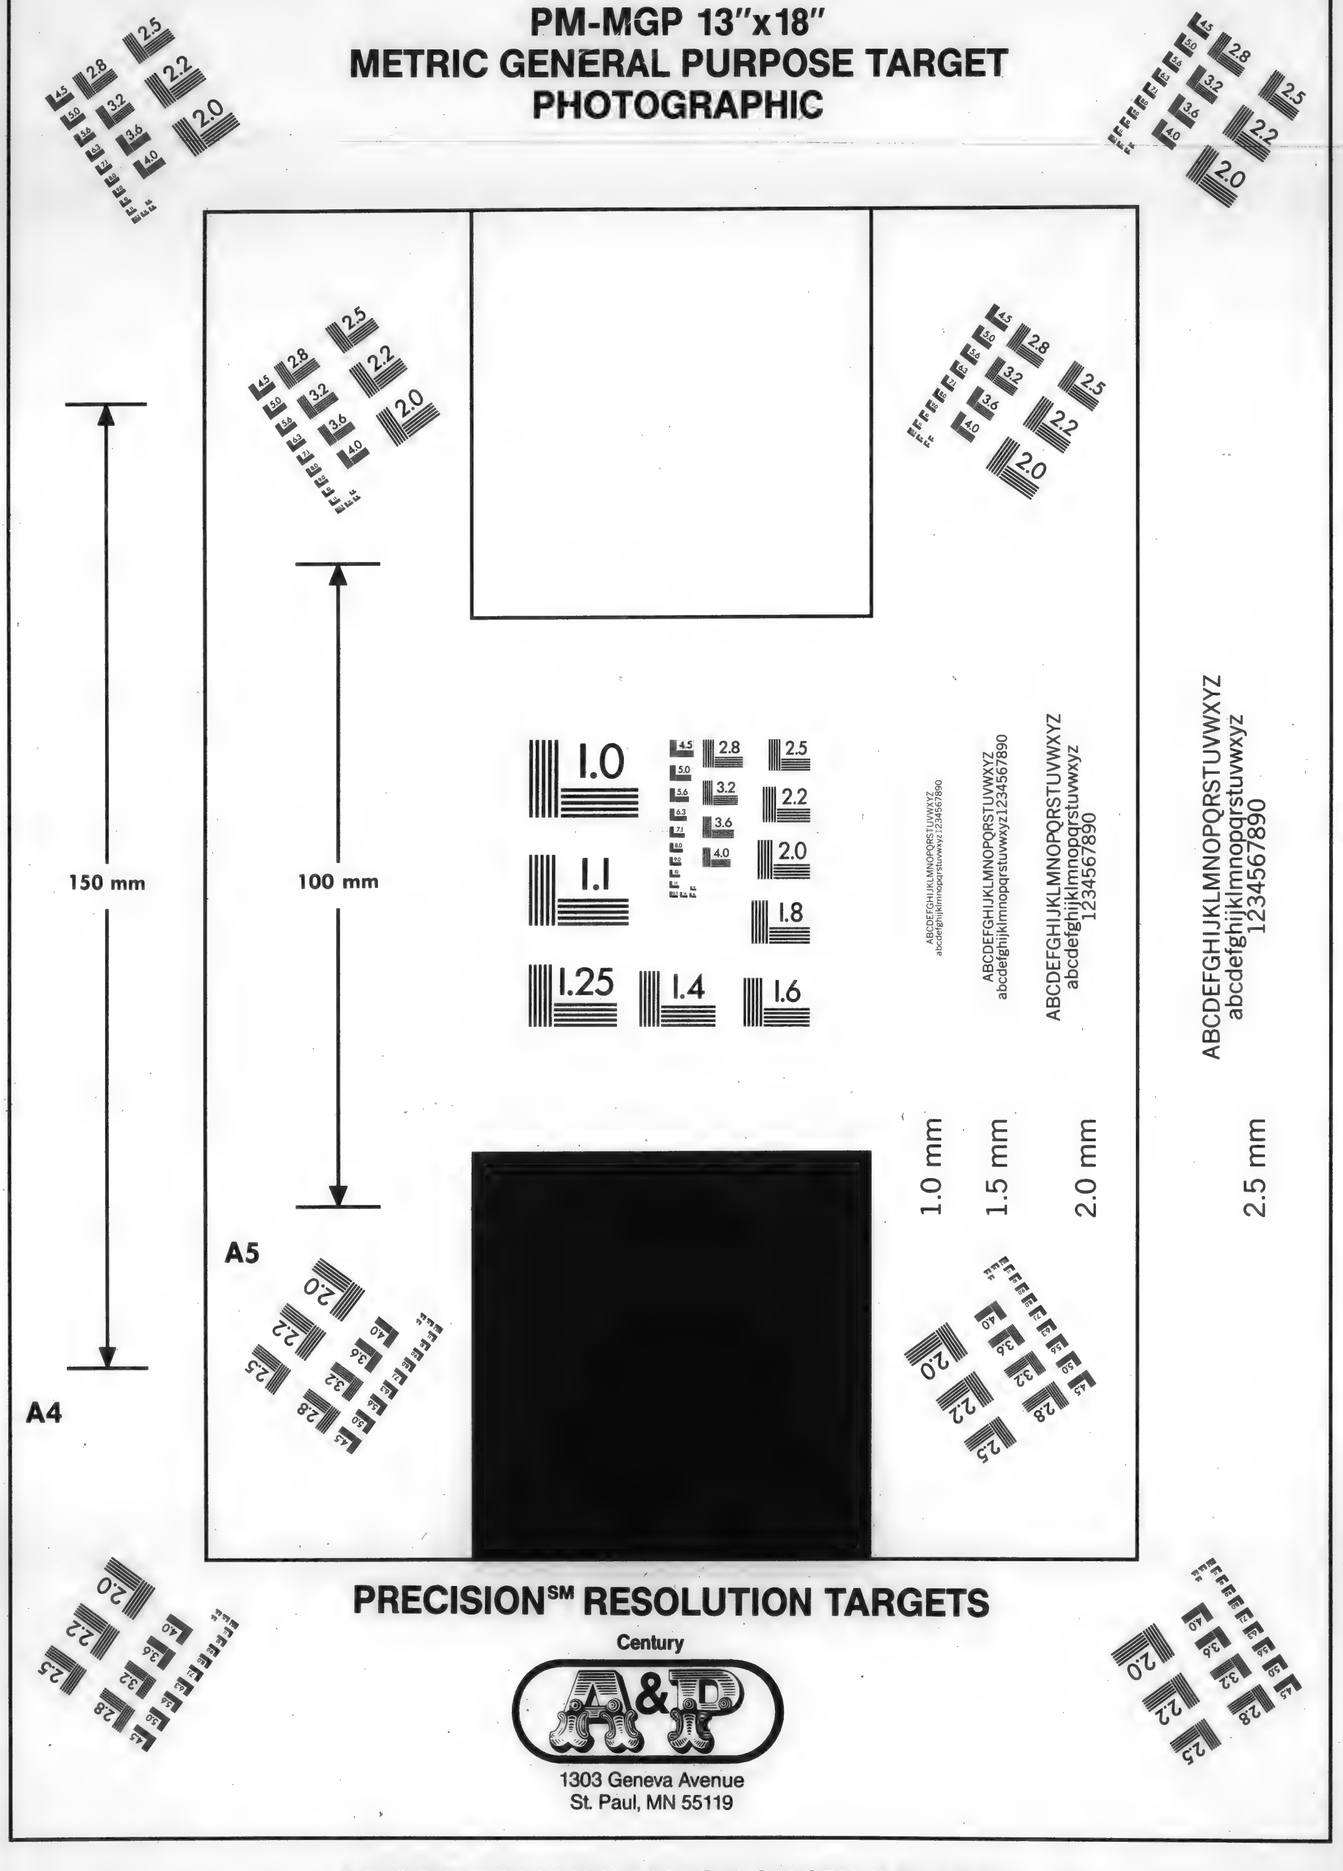
12x

2.5 mm 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

SOLOISTS OF THE SEASON'S SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERTS.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Symphony Announces Season's Plans.

List of Soloists a Large and Distinguished One.

Nielsen and Mardones in Concert Tour—Notes.

The 31st season of the Symphony orchestra will open with the usual public rehearsal on Friday afternoon, Oct 6, and with the concert on Saturday evening, Oct 7, and will continue with the exception of seven weeks, when the orchestra will be away, until Saturday evening, May 4. The Fridays and Saturdays that will be omitted are respectively: Nov 10 and 11, Dec 8 and 9, Jan 12 and 13, Feb 2 and 3, and 23 and 24, March 23 and 23, and April 12 and 13. During the past five years the orchestra has been away but six different weeks during the season, but an extra western trip has been placed in the schedule for next April, which accounts for the difference this year.

The annual auction sales of seats will open a week from tomorrow morning, Monday, Sept 25. As has been the custom in the past, four days will be given to these sales. On Monday, Sept 25, the $18 seats for the rehearsals will be sold, beginning at 10, and on Tuesday at the same hour, the $10 seats for the rehearsals. There will be sold at 10 on Thursday, Sept 28, the $18 seats for the concerts, and at the same hour on Friday, Sept 29, the $10 seats for the concerts.

There will be 17 soloists, four singers, all women; seven pianists, five violinists and one 'cellist. It is a list of high artistic merit. As is customary, three of these will be drawn from the ranks of the orchestra itself—the concert master, Mr Witek, his assistant, Mr Noack, and the first 'cello, Mr Schroeder. The visiting performers all promise to be worthy of the organization and the concerts under whose auspices they are to appear.

The list of singers includes Mmes Schumann-Heink, Berta Morena, Alma Gluck and Miss Elena Gerhardt. It will have been four years since last Mme Schumann-Heink has appeared here with the Symphony orchestra and the opportunity to hear her again under such conditions will be welcomed by her host of admirers in Boston. Mme Schumann-Heink still holds the first rank of contraltos of her day, and it is a question whether there is any artist now before the public who enjoys such general popularity as does she.

Soloists of Distinction.

Mme Berta Morena is one of the admired dramatic sopranos of the Metropolitan opera company who was heard here with much success three years ago. Mme Morena succeeded Mme Ternina, the principal soprano in the Munich opera. She has been a visitor to America several seasons and has won for herself a high place in the estimation of the musical public.

Miss Gerhardt's appearance here will be her first in America. Miss Gerhardt has figured largely in musical circles in Europe during the past few years as a concert singer. She is a pupil of Mrs Arthur Nikisch and her first essays as a public singer were made under the auspices of Mr and Mrs Nikisch. Efforts have been made for the last two or three seasons to bring her to America, but none were successful until this year. Miss Gerhardt is described as having a soprano voice of unusual beauty and she is said to sing with most artistic taste. Altogether, her coming is expected to add much to the pleasure of the season.

Mme Gluck, now one of the principal lyric sopranos of the Metropolitan opera house, is not unknown in Boston. She appeared here last year as a soloist with the Handel and Haydn society in Verdi's "Requiem," when her purity of voice and refinement of style were justly admired. Two years ago in March she sang Mimi in a performance of "La Boheme" at the Boston opera house by the Metropolitan company.

The career of this young singer is more than ordinarily interesting. While by birth she is a Rumanian, practically her whole life has been spent in America, all her musical instruction has been received in this country and all her singing has been done here. Three years ago she was engaged by the Metropolitan company for very minor roles, and made her first appearance in America as Sophia, in "Werther," at the first performance of opera given in the new theatre. The next season she commanded attention by her exquisite singing in Gluck's "Orpheus." She has since then progressed rapidly in her career. Mme Gluck is unusually gifted, both in temperament and in beauty. This will be her first appearance with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Seven Pianists to Appear.

The list of pianists includes the names of Katherine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Bachaus, Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, Josef Hofmann and George Proctor. The return of both Miss Goodson and Mme Samaroff will be heartily welcomed in Boston. Miss Goodson two or three years ago made a most favorable impression here, both at her appearances with the Symphony orchestra and in her recitals.

Of the younger pianists none has more friends and admirers in Boston that Olga Samaroff. A year ago last spring she was very ill in this city for a number of weeks, and last year she did practically no concert work. Last spring she became the wife of Mr Stokowski, the conductor of the Cincinnati orchestra, and will make only a limited number of concert appearances this winter. One of these will be in Boston with the Symphony orchestra.

Of the men, the one newcomer is Wilhelm Bachaus. Bachaus is a young German who has been making a very considerable name for himself in Europe during the last two or three years and he is making his first visit to America. It is said that he is an artist of very unusual attainments.

Josef Hofman came into his own in Boston last winter and stands without question as one of the two or three very great pianists in the world.

Harold Bauer, an old Boston favorite, returns after an absence of several years and the same is true of Rudolph Ganz. George Proctor is the representative of the local pianists.

The list of violinists is as comprehensive in its way as the list of pianists and singers. It comprises Kathleen Parlow, Maud Powell, Efrem Zimbalist, Anton Witek and Sylvain Noack. Kathleen Parlow made her debut here toward the end of last season. Like Elman and Zimbalist she is a pupil of Leopold Auer of St Petersburg, and showed plainly all the characteristics of that great teacher. With her performance of the Tschaikowsky concerto she aroused unusual enthusiasm. Her return will be welcomed by all lovers of the violin, for Miss Parlow is undoubtedly one of the great artists of the world.

Equally welcome will be the coming of that most admirable violinist, Maud Powell. Her position among the greatest violinists has been firmly fixed for many years. At her last appearance here she brought out the Sibelius concerto and accomplished a tour de force with its stupendous difficulties. This time she will bring to its first hearing in Boston the new concert piece by the venerable Max Bruch. At the Norfolk (Conn) music festival last June Miss Powell played the new piece for the first time in America. It was performed for the first time anywhere last winter in Berlin by Willy Hess, former concertmaster of the orchestra.

Zimbalist for a New Violinist.

Efrem Zimbalist, the young Russian violinist, who is coming to America this year for the first time, promises to be a highly interesting personality. As already noted, he, like Elman and Parlow, is a pupil of Auer. In Europe he is regarded as Elman's only rival, and among connoisseurs many consider him a greater artist than that remarkable youth. He is about Elman's age, and for the last two or three years has had really a sensational success in Berlin, London and others of the larger European cities.

The two violinists that will be drawn from the orchestra, Messrs Witek and Noack, are easily able to stand in the distinguished company in which they have been placed. Mr Witek's performance of the Beethoven concerto a year ago when he made his debut as soloist was one of the musical events of the season, and Mr Noack's two appearances as soloist with the orchestra have given great delight to all lovers of music.

The only 'cellist on the list is Alwin Schroeder, the justly admired principal of the 'cello section of the orchestra.

The plans for the season which Mr Fiedler has made will command general admiration. As is generally known, this season will be his last as conductor of the orchestra, his engagement ending next May. He is placing particular stress on two anniversary programs which he has prepared for the second and third concerts, the second the anniversary of the 30th birthday of the orchestra, and the third to celebrate the centenary of Liszt's birth. Curiously enough, these two anniversaries fall on the same day. Liszt was born on Oct 22, 1811, and the first concert of the orchestra was given in old Music hall Oct 22, 1881.

The Liszt program, which will be played Oct 21 and 22, includes the "Dante" symphony which has been played here by the Symphony orchestra only twice; the two symphonic poems, "Les Preludes" and "Tasso," and the E flat concerto, which will bring forward Rudolf Ganz as soloist.

Two Anniversary Programs.

For the 30th anniversary of the orchestra, which will be marked by a special program Oct 13 and 14, Mr Fiedler has placed three works which, generally considered, have been the greatest favorites in the orchestra's repertory, the "Eroica" symphony by Beethoven, Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony and Brahms' Festival overture.

Mr Fiedler is sailing from Bremen on Tuesday and will arrive in Boston a week later. On the same ship with him comes Mr Witek.

The program of the first rehearsal and concert, Oct 6 and 7, is as follows:

Weber, "Jubilee" overture; Schumann, symphony in B flat major, No. 1; Mozart, aria, "Biondina," from "Il Seraglio"; Bossi, intermezzi, Coldoniani, op 127, for string orchestra; Charpentier, aria from "Louise"; Reger, comedy overture, op 120 (first time in America); solist, Mme Gluck.

The 30th anniversary of the orchestra will be observed Oct 13 and 14 and the Liszt anniversary Oct 20 and 21. On the fourth program, Oct 27 and 28, Mr Zimbalist will play the Glazounoff concerto, which this summer he brought to its first hearing in England. Bantock's tone-poem, "Dante and Beatrice," will be played for the first time in America. Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and the "Istar" symphonic variations of d'Indy stand on the fifth programs of Nov 3 and 4.

SYMPHONY VIOLIST 30 YEARS.

To have completed 30 years of service as a member of the Boston symphony orchestra is an honor won by Henry Heindl of 18 Cranston st, Jamaica Plain.

Mr Heindl has played under all the conductors of the organization, from Georg Henschel, the conductor of the original orchestra in 1881, on down the line under the leadership of Gericke Nikisch, Paur, De Muck and Mr Fiedler.

During the first 10 years Mr Heindl

HENRY HEINDL,
Who Completes 30 Years of Service With the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

was principal violist of the orchestra, and during the 30 years the viola has remainded his instrument.

Until he succumbed to an attack of nervous prostration last year, Mr Heidl had not missed a concert or rehearsal of the orchestra in the 29 years of his membership. Such a record entitles him to a holiday and the pension upon which he now retires on at the age of 68.

Learning the violin and the clarinet in his early youth in Wirtzburg, Bavaria, his birthplace, Mr Heindl performed as a musician the six years of military service which his country required. Entering the army at 18, he was stationed at Nuremburg, the city of the poet,cobbler, Hans Sachs, and his mastersingers.

Here Heindl became a member of the principal banc of the Bavarian regiments. It numbered 50 men. The conductor was a skilled musician, Baumann by name, who had already espoused the cause of the then revolutionary Richard Wagner, and arranged much of his music for military band—the overtures to "Rienzi" and "Tannhauser," the prelude to "Lohengrin," and selections from these operas. He was the first conductor, as Mr Heindl contends to transcribe Wagner's music for a band of wind and percussion instruments.

There was a renarsal of two hours each morning and the daily dress parade at noon. Then the day was free.

There was a small orchestra of perhaps a dozen pieces in which Mr Heindl played first violin, and its music is now a golden memory. Baumann himself arranged all the parts and with such skill that the venerable musician claims that not a theme or a note was missing. The art of arranging is a science which he contends is less ably practiced in America than abroad.

Receiving his honorable discharge from the service in 1867, the young musician started for America, and landed in New York with his valise, his fiddle case, and no money. Visiting the German musicians' headquarters, he learned that a brother whom he sought was in Boston.

He came on to this city with others who were engaged to play in the old Continental theatre. Then other opportunities offered which led him into the Harvard musical association, the Beethoven club, of which Wolf Fries was cellist, and the old Germania orchestra and band.

The latter was Boston's chief purveyor of music in the late 60s. Weddings, balls, receptions, parties, processions, all were incomplete without music by the Germania.

Mr Heindl laughed the other evening with true German heartiness as he recalled the days after the war, when business eagerly resumed its course. It was then possible for a man to make $12 and $15 a night playing for a dance.

"Why," said the genial old musician, "as a young man and a comparative stranger, I made $2700 the first year after I came to Boston, and not so long afterward I made $3700 in one year. In those days we used to laugh at $5 jobs if we didn't care to do them, but today musicians are earning $5 when they can."

HERALD, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1911

Personal Notes.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that the season of 1911-12 will be Mr. Fiedler's last year of service as conductor. It is rumored that he will afterward conduct the orchestra at Manchester, Eng.—Sir Charles Halle's Orchestra, which was led by Hans Richter until his resignation, and that the position will be kept open for Mr. Fiedler by the engagement of "guest conductors" for this season. And who will succeed Mr. Fiedler in Boston? There is a general impression that this successor will sign his name Dr. Karl Muck.

The face of Mr. Henry Heindl, viola player, will be missed this season by the audiences at the Symphony concerts. He has for many years been associated with the musical life of this city and highly regarded as a musician and a man. May he long enjoy his well-earned rest!

The designs for the prizes offered by the Commonwealth Government for postage stamps suitable to the reign of George V. have been sh[illegible] bourne. One comp[illegible] surface of th[illegible] map the King's he[illegible] Jack, Sydney Harbor, [illegible] black man, and a map of Australia. In the western states of North America the ability to introduce the words "eagle" and "bugle" into one and the same sentence has long been considered the test of a true and inspired orator.

TIMES,
Brooklyn, N. Y.
SEP 16 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

The Brookyn Philharmonic Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Max Fiedler, Conductor, will be given on Friday evenings. The initial concert is scheduled for November 10. The Symphony Concerts for Young People, will as usual, be given on Saturday afternoons. Walter Damrosch will begin this season on Saturday, November 11.

CITIZEN,
Brooklyn, N. Y.
SEP 16 1911

Boston's season of orchestral music is now less than a month distant, for the Symphony Orchestra will begin its thirty-first annual series of concerts on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, with a public rehearsal, and on Saturday evening, Oct. 7, with its first concert. Alma Gluck, the soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who has won such unusual favor in the last two years, will be the soloist.

EAGLE,
Brooklyn, N. Y.
SEP 17 1911

Whatever concerns the Boston Symphony Society is of interest in Brooklyn. The following is from the Boston Evening Transcript: A new first trombone player, Mr. Alloo, a Belgian highly reputed with his instrument, will join the Symphony Orchestra in October, thus continuing the reorganization of the brass choir that has been going forward since Dr. Muck's time. Two new viola players, both Europeans, will also join the band—one to replace Henry Heindl, who retired on pension last spring after twenty-nine years of continuous service, from the beginnings indeed of the orchestra itself.

Soloists Who Will Be Heard At Symphony Concerts

Alma Gluck,
Soprano.

Maud Powell,
Violinist.

BOSTON SUNDAY POST, SEPTEMBER 17, 1911

SYMPHONY SEATS TO BE SOLD SEPT. 25

The management of the Symphony Orchestra has issued the prospectus of its thirty-first season, which begins with a public rehearsal on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, and a concert on Saturday evening, Oct. 7. The season will be brought to an end in Boston on Saturday, May 4. There will be the usual twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four concerts.

The annual auction sales of seats have been set for the last week in September in Symphony Hall, beginning a week from tomorrow morning, Sept. 25, at 10 o'clock. As has been the custom in the past four days will be devoted to them. On Monday, the 25th, the $18 seats for the rehearsals will be sold; on Tuesday at the same hour the $10 seats for the rehearsals; on Thursday, Sept. 26, at 10 o'clock the $18 seats for the concerts will be sold and on Friday, Sept. 29, the $10 seats.

Mr. Fiedler has made most interesting plans for his concerts, and Mr. Ellis the manager of the orchestra, has succeeded in engaging a most representative list of artists as soloists. Additional interest is lent to the season by the fact that it will be Mr. Fiedler's last year in Boston, for his contrac expires next spring.

The soloists that have been engaged up to the present time number seventeen. Of singers there will be four. These will be Elena Gerhardt, who is this year coming to America for the first time; Alma Gluck, the charming lyric soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House; Berta Morena, one of the principal dramatic singers of the same institution, and Mme. Schumann-Heink. The list of violinists comprises Kathleen Parlow, Maud Powell, Efrem Zimbalist, and the first and second concertmasters of the orchestra, Anton Witek and Sylvan Noack. The pianists will be Katharine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Bachaus, Harold Bauer, Rudolf Ganz, Josef Hofmann and George Proctor. The veteran Alwin Schroeder will be the only 'cellist.

The programs of the first five concerts will be as follows:

OCT. 6 AND 7.

Overture, "Jubilee" ..... Weber
Symphony in B flat major, No. 1, Op. 38. Schumann
Aria, "Biondino," from "Il Seraglio" .. Mozart
"Intermezzi Goldoniani," Op. 127 ..... Bossi
(Nos. 1, 2, 5 and 6), for string orchestra.
Aria from "Louise" ..... Charpentier
Comedy Overture, Op. 120 ..... Reger
(First time in America.)
Soloist—Alma Gluck.

OCT. 13 AND 14.

(Thirtieth anniversary of the orchestra.)
Symphony in E flat major, No. 3, Op. 55, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," No. 8 ..... Schubert
"Academic Festival Overture" ..... Brahms

OCT. 20 AND 21.

(Liszt centenary.)
Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes" ..... Liszt
Symphony, after Dante's "Divina Commedia" ..... Liszt
Concerto for piano in E-flat major, No. 1. Liszt
Symphonic poem, "Tasso, lamento e trionfo" ..... Liszt
Soloist—Rudolph Ganz.

OCT. 27 AND 28.

Overture, "Der Wassertrager" ..... Cherubini
Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98... Brahms
Concerto for violin ..... Glasounoff
Tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice" .... Bantock
(First time in America.)
Soloist—Efrem Zimbalist.

NOV. 3 AND 4.

Overture, "Melusine" ..... Mendelssohn
Tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra" .. Strauss
Symphonic variations, "Istar," Op. 42... d'Indy
Overture, "Gwendoline" ..... Chabrier

Olga Samaroff,
Pianist.

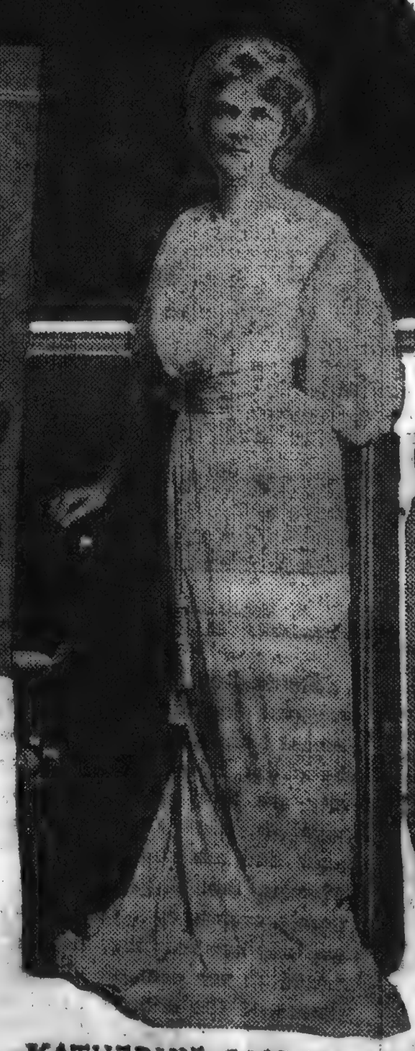
Symphony Orchestra Preparations Event in Musical World

BERTA MORENA Soprano

HAROLD BAUER
PIANIST

MME SAMAROFF Pianist

MAUD POWELL Violinist



KATHERINE GOODSON
PIANIST

EFREM ZIMBALIST
VIOLINIST

The 31st annual prospectus of the Symphony Orchestra promises a season full of interest for the patrons of that institution. The usual 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts will be given on successive Fridays and Saturdays beginning Oct. 6 and 7 respectively, and ending May 3 and 4, with the exception of seven weeks when the orchestra will be out of town on tour—five times on its Southern trips and twice in the West. The dates when the orchestra will be away are Nov. 10 and 11, Dec. 8 and 9, Jan. 12 and 13, Feb. 2 and 3, and 23 and 24; March 22 and 23, and April 12 and 13. For the first time since the orchestra was organized the season will run a course of 31 weeks, 30 weeks for many years past being the maximum. The management has scheduled 118 concerts in 36 different cities and in addition to these there will be the usual two concerts in aid of the pension fund, making 120 concerts in all, or an average of practically four concerts a week. This with the rehearsing and travelling which will have to be done means a very exacting winter for Mr. Fiedler and the men under him. The two trips to the West are an innovation. Each will last a week and Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit, which heretofore have had to be content with a single concert each year, will have two concerts.

The annual auction sales come this year in the last week of this month, beginning on Monday, Sept. 25. All the sales will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning. On the 25th, the $18 seats for the rehearsals will be sold; on the 26th the $10 rehearsal seats; on the 28th, Thursday, the $18 concert seats, and on the 29th, Friday, the $10 seats for the concerts. As has always been the rule the second balcony will be withheld from sale for the public rehearsals.

The list of soloists which has been prepared by Mr. Ellis is as representative as ever, including the greatest artists available for such work during the coming winter. Mr. Fiedler, whose Boston engagement comes to an end next spring, has made very ambitious plans and will announce a list of novelties which at least promise as much as any he has announced in past years and contain some items of more than usual importance.

The total number of soloists engaged up to the present time is 17. It is likely that some additions will be made to this number in the course of the season. Of the 17 three will be drawn from the orchestra, Messrs. Witek and Noack, respectively the first and second concertmaster, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the principal 'cellist.

The list comprises four singers, five violinists, seven pianists and one 'cellist. The singers will be Elena Gerhardt, Alma Gluck, Berta Morena and Madame Schumann-Heink. The violinists will be Kathleen Parlow, Maud Powell, Efrem Zimbalist, Anton Witek and Sylvain Noack. The pianists will be Katherine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Bachaus, Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, Josef Hoffmann and George Proctor. Alwin Schroeder will be the 'cellist.

Of the entire list of soloists three will be newcomers to Boston, Miss Gerhardt and Messrs. Bachaus and Zimbalist. Miss Gerhardt is a young German woman who has made a specialty of concert work. She is a soprano, a pupil of Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, and her career has generally been under the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch. She has figured largely in European music centres in the last three or four years. Wilhelm Bachaus is a German pianist who tours America for the first time. He has for some years past held a high position in the estimation of connoisseurs in England and Germany. He is said to be the possessor not merely of a highly developed technique but to have musical and temperamental qualities which place him in the first rank of artists of his order.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

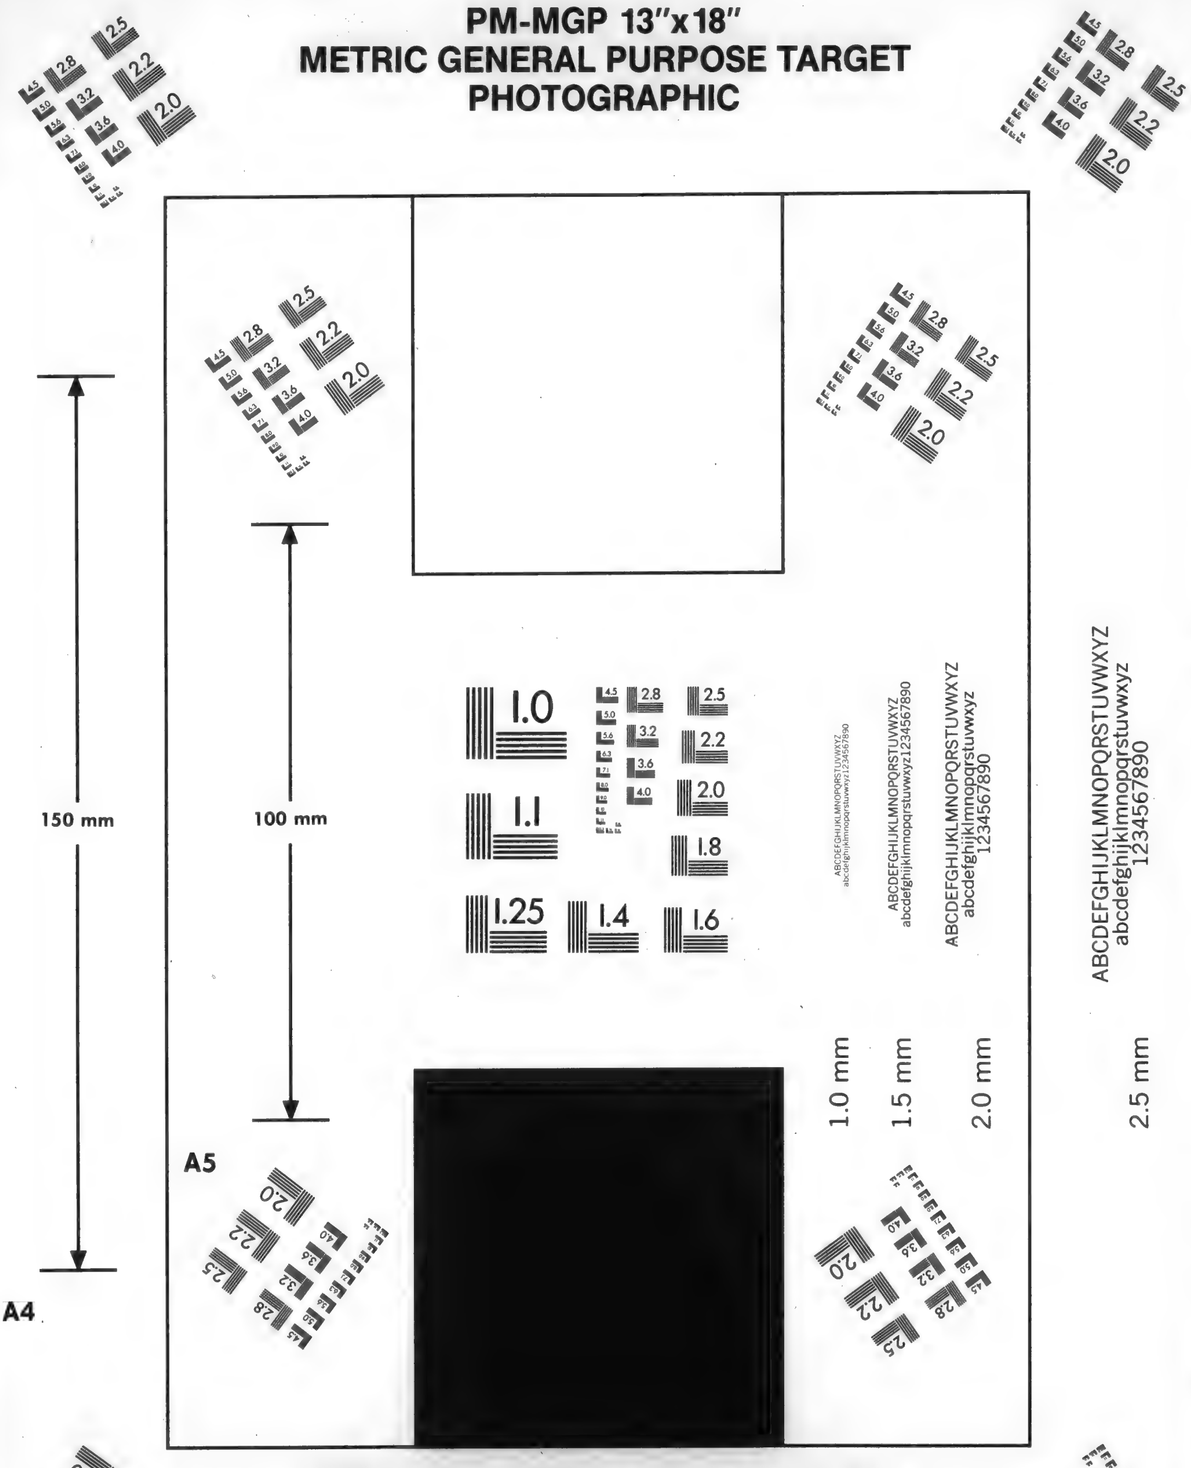
2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

FAMOUS LIST OF ARTISTS ENGAGED FOR THE 1911-1912

NOTED ARTISTS WHO ARE ENGAGED BY THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MANAGEMENT TO ENTERTAIN BOSTON

MME. OLGA SAMAROFF - PIANIST

MAUD POWELL - VIOLINIST

MME ERNESTINE SCHUMANN-HEINK - CONTRALTO.

ALMA GLUCK SOPRANO

MISS KATHLEEN PARLOW - VIOLINIST

RUDOLPH GANZ PIANIST.

EFREM ZIMBALIST VIOLINIST

JOSEF HOFFMAN PIANIST.

WILHELM BACHAUS PIANIST

HAROLD BAUER PIANIST

Noted Europeans, Never Before Heard in Boston, Engaged to Appear This Season

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

THE most brilliant list of soloists that ever assisted at a Symphony Orchestra season has been engaged for the coming year by Manager Ellis.

The artists are picked from the greatest in the world, whether they are singers, pianists, violinists or 'cellists, and they include several famous Europeans, who have never been heard with the Boston Symphony before.

The singers include Elena Gerhardt, a concert singer of much reputation in Germany and England, who pays her first visit to the United States; Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera; Berta Morena, the dramatic soprano, and Mme. Schumann-Heink.

The violinists are Kathleen Parlow, the young woman whose debut with the Boston Orchestra last year was sensational; Maud Powell, Efrem Zimbalist, who makes his first American appearance, but who in Europe is a rival of Mischa Elman; Anton Wytek and Sylvan Noak.

The pianists will be Katherine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Harold Bauer, Rudolf Ganz, Josef Hofman and George Proctor. Wilhelm Bachaus is a famous European pianist who makes his first appearance this season. Alwin Schroeder of the orchestra will be the only 'cellist this season.

The annual auction sale of seats has been set for the last week in September in Symphony Hall, commencing Monday morning, September 25, at 10 o'clock. The auction will occupy four days. On Monday at 10 a. m. the $18 seats for the rehearsals will be sold; on Tuesday at the same hour the $10 seats for the rehearsals will be put up; on Thursday, September 29, at 10 a. m., the $18 seats for the concerts will be sold, and on Friday, September 29, the $10 concert seats will be auctioned off.

Mr. Fiedler's Final Year.

This will be Mr. Fiedler's fourth and final year with the orchestra, and it promises to be the most successful season ever given. The programs for the first five concerts have been prepared.

The thirty-first season of the Symphony Orchestra begins with a public rehearsal on Friday afternoon, October 6, and a concert Saturday evening, October 7. The entire season will cover a total of thirty-one weeks, which is one week longer than usual.

This has been brought about by an extra trip to the West, which will be made in April. Consequently the season will be brought to an end in Boston on Saturday evening, May 4. There will be the usual twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four concerts. The Fridays and Saturdays which will be omitted on account of the absence of the orchestra on its five Southern trips and its two Western trips, are respectively November 10 and 11, December 8 and 9, January 12 and 13, February 2 and 3 and 23 and 24, March 22 and 23, and April 12 and 13.

The Southern trips will come in November, December, January, February and March, while the first Western trip will come the last week in January and the second in Easter week April 8. The season will not only be the longest the orchestra has had in years, but the most exacting, for a total of 118 concerts will be given in twenty-six different cities, and to this total must be added the customary two concerts in aid of the pension fund of the orchestra, so that the total concerts will be 120.

Opening Concert October 16.

The opening concert October 6 will introduce Miss Alma Gluck, the young soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, who has never before sung with the Symphony but who was heard as Mimi in La Boheme during the visit of the Metropolitan here two years ago.

She will sing examples of ancient and modern operatic airs with "Biondina," from Mozart's "Il Seraglio," and a song from Charpentier's "Louise."

On this occasion Mr. Fielder will perform for the first time in America, a Comedy Overture by Reger, Opus 120.

The second concert will mark the thirtieth anniversary of the orchestra and will be severely classic with symphonies by Beethoven and Schumann and Brahms Academic Festival Overture. There will be no soloist upon this occasion.

The third concert celebrates the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt and the program will be entirely Liszt, including his Symphony, "Les Preludes," "Divina Commedia" and "Tasso, Lamento e Trionfo." Rudolph Ganz, the soloist on this occasion, will perform the Liszt concert in E flat Major No. 1.

In the fourth concert is a novelty, a tone poem "Dante and Beatrice" by Bantock, whose Children's Crusade was performed last year by the Cecilia Symphony combination.

...NY SEASON

...LOVERS THE COMING YEAR

...ORENA - SOPRANO

MISS KATHARINE GOODSON - PIANIST

...ians Chosen from the Greatest Virtuosos for Conductor Fiedler's Final Year

...st of violinists shows unusual ... Of all the new artists that came ... last year none made so profound ...ession as Kathleen Parlow, when, ...the end of the season, she played ...haikowsky Concerto. The enthusi... ...ich she had created in Europe and ... New York was found here and it ...ithout saying that she would be in ...r's soloists.

...Kubelik first came to America with ...raordinary technique he was fol... ...fter by a number of other pupils ...master, Sevcik, and so when Elman ...d to dazzle the musical world with ...nishing gifts other promised violin... ...mediately went to his teacher, Leo... ...er, and we are getting more Auer ...

Kathleen Parlow was the repre... ...ve that came last year, and this ... another one will come in the person ...em Zimbalist. Zimbalist, from all ...ts, is not only a very great violin... ...t has a most interesting personality. ...lman, he is a Russian Jew, a native ... southern part of that country. He ...nty-two years old, and for the last ...years has been Elman's only rival in ...ncert halls of Europe. Much is ex... ...m of him.

...srs. Witek and Noack, sound artists, ...will always be welcome in Symphony ...rts.

...the list of pianists there is one ...e name and a number of favorites. ...stranger is William Bachaus. Al... ...h Mr. Bachaus has been well and ...arly known in Europe for a number ...ars, this will be his first visit to ...ca. Most favorable reports have preceded him and it is expected that he will win solid favor with the American public. The presence at the concert of two such pianists as Mme. Samaroff and Miss Goddson will be welcomed by their many friends.

Here Are the Programs:

October 6 and 7.

Weber.....Overture, "Jubilee"
Schumann.....Symphony in B flat major, No. 1, Op. 38
Mozart.....Aria, "Biondina," from "Il Seraglio"
Bossi.....Intermezzi Goldoniani, Op. 127 (No. 1, 2, 5 and 6), for string orchestra.
Charpentier.....Aria from "Louise"
Reger.....Comedy overture, Op. 120 (first time in America)
Soloist—Miss Alma Gluck.

October 13. and 14

Thirtieth Anniversary of the Orchestra.
Beethoven.....Symphony in E flat major, No. 3, Op. 55, "Eroica"
Schubert.....Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," No. 8
Brahms.....Academic Festival Overture

October 20 and 21.

Liszt Auniversary.
(Franz Liszt, born October 22, 1811.)
Liszt—Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes"
Symphony after Dante, "Divina Commedia"
Piano concerto in E flat major, No. 1
Symphonic poem, "Tasso, lamento e trionfo"
Soloist—Rudolph Ganz.

October 27 and 28.

Cherubini.....Overture, "Der Wassertrager"
Brahms.....Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98
Glazounoff.....Violin concerto
Bantock.....'Dante and Beatrice,' tone poem. (First time in America.)
Soloist—Efrem Zimbalist.

November 3 and 4.

Mendelssohn.....Overture, "Melusine"
Strauss.....Tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"
D'Indy.....Symphonic variations, "Istar," Op. 42
Chabrier.....Overture, "Gwendoline"

THE BOSTON HERALD, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 191...

Conductor Fiedler of Symphony Visits Friend Richard Strauss

Max Fiedler, on Left, and Richard Strauss at the Strauss Villa, Garmisch, Bavaria

He Has Been Spending Summer in Garmisch, the Home of the Composer.

A letter received yesterday from Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, says that he is to sail tomorrow from Cherbourg on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. He will arrive in New York a week from today and come directly to Boston.

He has been spending the entire summer in Garmisch, which is incidently the home or Richard Strauss, who is his intimate friend, and 10 days ago he was photographed with the famous composer outside of Mr. Strauss's villa.

Anton Witek, concert master of the orchestra, returns on the same steamship.

JOURNAL—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 191...

Max Fiedler Returning

A letter received yesterday from Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, says that he will sail from Cherbourg tomorrrow on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. He is due in New York next Tuesday and will come directly to Boston.

He has been spending the entire summer in Garmisch, in Bavaria, and will spend two or three days in Paris before sailing.

On the same ship will come Anton Witek, concert master of the orchestra.

TRANSCRIPT, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1911

Strauss's New Suite

Apropos of publications, Strauss has finished his mature revision of the Suite for thirteen wind instruments that he wrote more than twenty-five years ago. The music runs in a prelude, romance, gavotte and fugue, and it enlists two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets, two bassoons, a double bassoon and four horns, since even the youthful Strauss was primarily orchestral. The Suite will soon be published and Mr. Fiedler has put it among the new pieces for our Symphony Concerts next winter. The alleged new "Alpine" symphony by Strauss does not appear there, though Mr. Fiedler dwelt all summer near the composer and should know what work he has in hand.

Mme. Samaroff Restored

By mid-winter, Mme. Samaroff, the pianist, evidently expects to regain her nervous energy and her ...ality for exacting performances, and she will undertake both recitals and orchestral concerts. In the recitals, she will make a round ofthe cities of the Middle West. For the orchestral concerts she will come to the East that first discovered and has most applauded her talents. In Boston she plays with the Symphony Orchestra on March 1 and 2. It will be interesting to see whether marriage has warmed a temperament that has remained somewhat cold in spite of the nervous energy that propells it.

Items of the Day

Mr. Fiedler has gone from his home in Hamburg to Paris where he has spent a few days. He sails tomorrow from Cherbourg for New York where he is expected on Tuesday next. He will come forthwith to Boston.

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 19, 1911

FIEDLER SAILS FOR AMERICA TOMORROW

A letter received yesterday from Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, says that he is sailing from Cherbourg tomorrow on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. He is due in New York next Tuesday and will come directly to Boston.

He has been spending the entire summer in Garmisch, in Bavaria, and will spend two or three days in Paris before sailing.

On the same ship will come Anton Witek, concert master of the orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchest... ...ill begin its season with an em... ...rrassment of anniversaries. On ...ctober 22 falls the centenary of the ...rth of Liszt, and on the same day ... the 30th anniversary of the first ...oncert given by the orchestra in ...usic Hall under Mr. Henschel. ...oth of these events will be cele... ...rated with special programs. Mr. ...iedler has arranged the 30th anni... ...ersary program for the second con... ...ert on October 14th, and the Liszt ...rogram at the third concert on Oc... ...ber 21.

The principal work on th... ...rogram will be the "Dant... ...ony." To many the "Dan... ...ony" is even a greater w... than ...e "Faust," but it is not ... well ...own. It has appeared on the Sym... ...ony program but twice—in Febru... ...y, 1886, and in May, 1903. It has ...t been given in New York for over ... years. The work includes th... ...nferno" and the "Purgatorio," and, ...s in the "Faust" symphony, a chor... ...s is used in the finale, but the ...Dante" uses a female chorus instead ... a male, this being the "Para... ...so."

The soloist will be Rudolph Ganz. ...e will play Liszt's E flat concerto. ...he symphonic poem will be repre... sented by "Les Preludes" and "Tasso."

The management of the orchestra ho...s to be able to make full an... nou...ment regarding the seaso... next week.

REDUCTION

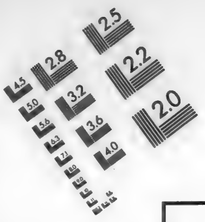
RATIO

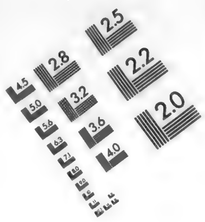
12x

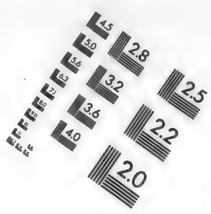
2.0 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

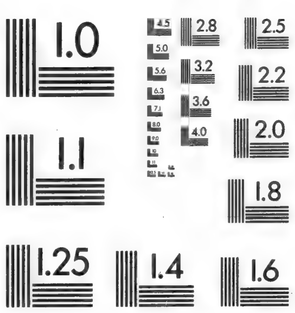






150 mm

100 mm



ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 mm

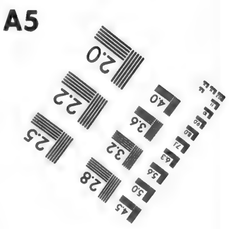
1.5 mm

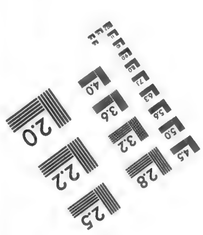
2.0 mm

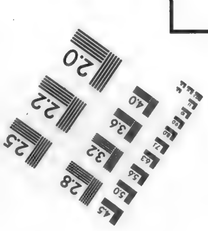
2.5 mm

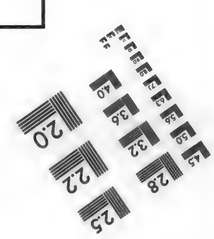
A5

A4









PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

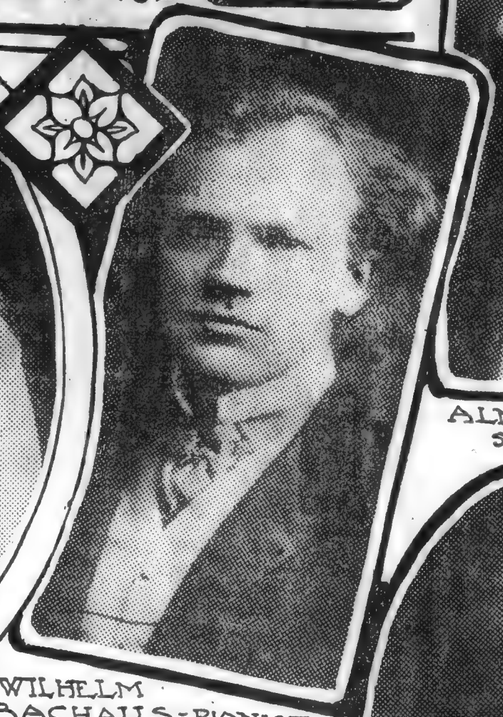
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

Symphony Orchestra Season of 1911-1912 Begins Friday, Oct. 6 With Regular Season of 30 Weeks Extended to 31; Sales Next Week

JOSEF HOFMANN PIANIST
(Hall Studio, N. Y.)

BERTA MORENA SOPRANO



WILHELM BACHAUS - PIANIST

ALMA GLUCK SOPRANO

KATHLEEN PARLOW VIOLINIST

RUDOLPH GANZ

HAROLD BAUER - PIANIST

EFREM ZIMBALIST VIOLINIST

Conductor Fiedler Has Elaborate Plans—Interesting Novelties.

WILL BE HIS LAST SEASON

Beginning Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, Boston will have the usual 24 public rehearsals on Friday afternoons and 24 concerts on Saturday evenings by the Symphony orchestra. The regular season of 30 weeks has this year been extended to 31 in order that the orchestra may make a second trip to the middle West. The dates on which there will be no rehearsals and concerts are, Nov. 10 and 11; Dec. 8 and 9; Jan. 12 and 13; Feb. 2, 3, 23 and 24; March 22 and 23, and April 12 and 13.

The annual auction sales will begin a week from tomorrow (Monday) Sept. 25. As has been the custom four days will be given to these sales. On Monday, the 25th, the $18 seats for the rehearsals will be sold; on Tuesday, the $10 seats for the rehearsals; on Thursday, Sept. 28, the $18 seats for the concerts and on Friday, Sept. 29, the $10 seats. On all days the auction will begin promptly at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Fiedler, whose last season it will be as conductor of the orchestra, will sail from Bremen on the 19th. He has made elaborate plans for the season and will announce a list of interesting novelties. He has prepared two special programs for the second and third concerts. At the second concert he will celebrate the 30th anniversary of the first concert of the orchestra, which took place on Oct. 22, 1881. This program will include "Eroica," Beethoven's symphony, Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony and Brahms's "Academic Festival" overture. The third concert will celebrate the centenary of Liszt's birth. The program will include the "Dante" symphony, "Les Preludes," "Tasso," and the piano concerto in E-flat, with Mr. Ganz as pianist.

The list of soloists which Mr. Ellis has prepared represents the best artists who will be in America. The names of 17 are announced, and it is probable that one or two other artists will appear during the course of the season. Of the 17 three are drawn from the orchestra—Messrs. Witek and Noack, the accomplished violinists who occupy the first desk, and Alwin Schroeder, 'cellist.

There will be four singers. Of these two have never been heard here with the orchestra and one will be new to Boston. This is Miss Elena Gerhardt, a pupil of Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, and a protegee of the distinguished conductor. Miss Gerhardt is said to possess a soprano voice of unusual beauty and to sing with skill and taste. Her work has been devoted entirely to the concert stage and in the last several years she has been one of the most prominent figures in the musical world of Germany and London.

Mme. Alma Gluck has already appeared in Boston in concert and opera. She has risen from minor parts in the Metropolitan Opera Company to a foremost place among its lyric sopranos, and is much sought after for the concert stage. Her charming personality, voice and art have given her a distinguished position among American singers.

The other two singers will be Madame Schumann-Heink and Madame Berta Morena. Madame Schumann-Heink will be warmly welcomed.

Madame Morena has made for herself an assured place in operatic music in this country, and is among the skilled singers of Wagner music.

The list of pianists is comprehensive. Josef Hofmann is coming to America especially to fill a series of engagements with the Boston Symphony. The list comprises in addition to Mr. Hofmann, Katherine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Bachaus, Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz and George Proctor. Of these the only newcomer is Mr. Bachaus, a young German pianist who has held a prominent place in Europe for the past few years and is coming to America for the first time. He is said to be highly proficient technically and a musician of more than ordinary attainments.

Miss Goodson and Mme. Samaroff are both favorites in this city, and the same is true of Harold Bauer and Rudolph Ganz.

Last year Symphony patrons heard for the first time Leopold Auer's pupil, the Canadian girl, Kathleen Parlow. This year not only will Miss Parlow be here to represent her teacher, but another pupil, Efrem Zimbalist, a young Russian, will make his debut in America at the fourth concert. Like Elman, he is a Russian Jew, and comes from the southern part of that country. He is a graduate of the St. Petersburg Conservatory, where he took all the honors offered for the violin. He is 22 years old, and for the last two years has played with unusual success on the continent. The other violinist, in addition to the two from the orchestra, is that interesting artist, Maud Powell. She will play Bruch's new Concerto, which was performed for the first time in Germany last year by Willy Hess. The programs for the first five concerts are as follows:

I.—OCT. 6 AND 7.

Overture, "Jubilee".....Weber
Symphony in B flat major, No. 1, op 38, Schumann
Aria, "Biondina," from "Il Seraglio".Mozart
"Intermezzi Goldoniani," op. 127, Nos. 1, 2, 5 and 6, for string orchestra.....Bossi
Aria from "Louise".....Charpentier
Comedy overture, op. 120.....Reger
(First time in America.)
Soloist, Miss Alma Gluck.

II.—OCT. 13 AND 14.

30th Anniversary of the Orchestra.
Symphony in E flat major, No. 3, op. 55, "Eroica".....Beethoven
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," No. 8.....Schubert
Academic Festival Overture.....Brahms

III.—OCT. 20 and 21.

(Liszt born Oct. 22, 1811.)
Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes".....Liszt
Symphony after Dante "Divina Commedia".....Liszt
Concerto for pianoforte in E flat major, No. 1.....Liszt
Symphonic poem, "Tasso, lamento e trionfo".....Liszt
Soloist, Rudolph Ganz.

IV.—OCT. 27 AND 28.

Overture, "Der Wassertraeger".....Cherubini
Symphony No. 4 in E minor, op. 98...Brahms
Concerto for violin.....Glazounoff
Tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice".....Bantock
(First time in America.)
Soloist, Efrem Zimbalist.

V.—NOV. 3 AND 4.

Overture, "Melusine".....Mendelssohn
Tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra".Strauss
Symphonic variations, "Istar," op. 42..d'Indy
Overture, "Gwendoline".....Chabrier

THE BOSTON AMERICA THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1911

om EVE. JOURNAL

dress New York City.

te

ELENA GERHARDT, GERMAN SOPRANO, WHO IS COMING HERE

ELENA GERHARDT

FAMOUS GERMAN SINGER COMING

One of the most interesting new comers in music during the coming season will be Elena Gerhardt, the young German singer who has attracted such notice in Europe during the last three years. Miss Gerhardt is not only a singer of great skill and the possessor of an unusually beautiful soprano voice, but she is also a woman of exceeding beauty. Still in her twenties, she has taken her place among the very first ranks of interpreters of songs of to-day. Her appearance in Boston will be with the Symphony Orchestra, for which she is one of the soloists of the coming year. Miss Gerhardt has additional intrest for Boston in that she is a protege of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nikisch. She was a pupil of Mrs. Nikisch, and Mr. Nikisch has often been her accompanist at recitals in London, Berlin and other European cities.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plans Ten Concerts Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced its series of five evening and five afternoon concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall during the coming season, beginning on November 9 and 11. Max Fiedler will again be the conductor, this being the fourth and final year of his engagement with the orchestra. The soloists announced for the year are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

The directors of the MacDowell Chorus, Kurt Schindler, conductor, announced to-day that during the season the chorus will give two concerts in Carnegie Hall with the co-operation of the Philharmonic Orchestra and will likewise sing in several concerts of the regular Philharmonic subscrip-

MONITOR, BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 20, 1911

(Photo by Hall's Studio, New York)

MISS ELENA GERHARDT

German soprano is among Symphony orchestra soloists coming to America first time this season

Miss Elena Gerhardt has made her way to popularity in the European concert world chiefly in the interpretation of songs. She was brought to general notice a few years ago under the management of Daniel Mayer, the London impressario, who gave Mischa Elman his first important hearings, and she has sung frequently in concerts directed by Arthur Nikisch. Miss Gerhardt comes to America for the first time this season after securely establishing her artistic place in England and Germany.

GLOBE—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1911

RARE VOICE AND BEAUTY.

Elena Gerhardt, a German Singer of Fame, Who Will Be Heard Here With the Symphony Orchestra.

Elena Gerhardt, one of the soloists for the coming year of the Symphony orchestra, has the reputation of being one of the most beautiful women in Germany. Still in her 20s she has entered the rank of the most important interpretative singers of the day.

ELENA GERHARDT.

Miss Gerhardt will have further interest for Boston in that Mr and Mrs Arthur Nikisch are responsible for her entry into public life. She was a pupil of Mrs Nikisch and it was the great conductor himself who launched her on her career.

Often he is her accompanist at her recitals in London and elsewhere in Europe. Miss Gerhardt will come to America in January and appear here with the orchestra in mid-February.

Paper Clipping Bureau in the ... Building

t .....

ess .....

.....

Mrs. Ona B. Talbot, the woman impresario of Indianapolis, visited New York on business connected with her coming concert season. Mrs. Talbot interviewed Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is also manager of Geraldine Farrar's concert tour, and obtained his advice on the Sunday concerts he proposes giving in Indianapolis the coming season.

Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink,
Engaged for coming Symphony season.

NOTED SOLOIST FOR SYMPHONY CONCERT

One of the noted soloists engaged for the coming season of the Symphony Orchestra is Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, the most popular contralto the opera stage has had since the palmy days of Scalchi. But in recent years Mme. Schumann-Heink has confined her appearances on this side of the ocean to the concert stage, where she has made a success no less remarkable than that which has distinguished her efforts in Wagnerian roles. Her operatic undertakings are now limited to Germany, and she is as strong a magnet today in Bayreuth and in Munich as she was fifteen years ago, when she made her debut in the Wagnerian theater.

This season her appearances in the East will be made only with the Symphony Orchestra. Then she will tour the West.

Elena Gerhardt Is Arousing Boston Music Lovers' Interest

Elena Gerhardt.

Soprano Soloist for Symphony Orchestra, Protege of Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch.

HAS WON SUCCESS ABROAD

One of the most interesting personalities among new-comers to America in music during the coming season will be Elena Gerhardt, the young German singer who has attracted much notice in Europe during the last three years. Miss Gerhardt is not only a singer of great skill and the possessor of an unusually beautiful soprano voice, but she is also a woman of exceeding beauty.

She is still in her twenties. Her appearance in Boston will be with the Symphony orchestra, for which she is one of the soloists of the coming year.

Miss Gerhardt has additional interest for Boston in that she is a protege of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, who have taken great interest in her career. She was a pupil of Mrs. Nikisch, and Mr. Nikisch has often been her accompanist at her recitals in London, Berlin and other European cities.

THE SYMPHONY YEAR

The Thirty-First Year of Boston's Famous Orchestra. Mr. Fiedler's Final Year as Conductor and His Ambitions for It.

WITH the Symphony concerts of Friday afternoon, Oct. 6 and Saturday evening, Oct. 7 to begin the new season, the orchestra enters upon its 31st year. It will celebrate the 30 years that are past, Oct. 13 and 14, by the first pair of concerts it has ever undertaken in honor, as it were, of itself. More particularly and in much more characteristic fashion, it will also signalize the anniversary by the lengthening of its working weeks by one. Hitherto the concerts in Boston have extended over 30 weeks—for the 24 pairs that precedent ordains, broken by the five intervals during which the orchestra visits New York and other cities to the South and the one interval during which it goes into the Middle West. There it has gathered a numerous public that seems to wish for more concerts. Accordingly, this season, the orchestra will go twice into the Middle West—once at the end of January as heretofore and once at the middle of April. Thus its concerts in Boston will continue over one more week than heretofore, ending on Friday afternoon, May 3 and Saturday evening, May 4. The six additional concerts in the Middle West raise the total number that the orchestra will undertake in its seven months of active work to 120 practically four concerts a week—to say nothing of rehearsals and travel—and so the most exacting task the management has yet set for it. To New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, it will go at monthly intervals as of old, and already its audiences there are assured. It will give its occasional concerts in Worcester, Providence, Springfield, New Bedford and other New England cities where it is annually and eagerly expected. On eight Thursdays from November through April, it will go to Cambridge and in Boston it will not miss its two concerts for its own pension fund.

Mr. Fiedler's Final Year.

Fortunately for such a scheme, Mr. Fiedler has the physical strength, the nervous vitality and the liking for work that makes the schedule possible, and this year, he will be free at least from the labor of choral concerts with the Cecilia that he undertook last winter. If Mr. Fiedler, as his men say, drives them hard, especially in the preparation of new music, he does not spare himself. He once pictured his days and nights as study of new pieces, rehearsals, concerts, journeys, meals and sleep, declared that this in the season was a conductor's life and wondered why young men should seek it painfully. He forgot that the same spirit that spurs him through these labors, tingles also in these young men. Additional concerts aside, Mr. Fiedler bids fair to be more zealous than ever this winter. He will return to Boston for the final year of his conductorship, to his last opportunity to perform with the Symphony orchestra the music that he particularly cherishes and the music that he wishes particularly to bring to hearing. Until next Saturday, aside from the program of the first five pairs of concerts, printed elsewhere we must await a detailed list of the music that he wishes to undertake. It is an open secret, however, that it will be rich in new or novel pieces and that it will include, as the "programmists" say, "several works" of "large dimensions." The five programs, with their Reger and Bantock, Strauss and d'Indy, Beethoven, Schumann and Brahms sufficiently herald it. Whatever Mr. Fiedler's merits or demerits as a conductor—and the first far outweigh the second—an expectant and admiring public awaits him. The audience of the Symphony concerts likes the substance and the arrangement of his diversified programs, his eagerness for the magnificences and the brilliances of sound, his liking for vivid effect and contrast. In the better sense of the word, he has "popularized" the concerts beyond any of his predecessors and a grateful public has rewarded him accordingly. In the outlying cities it has been still more grateful.

The Usual Arrangements.

In a few trifling respects the additional journey to the West has altered the arrangements for the concerts in Boston. Otherwise they remain as of recent years. They will begin at Symphony hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, and Saturday evening, Oct. 7. They will continue from week to week through Nov. 3 and 4—the longest consecutive series. Then, the trips, as the orchestra calls them, begin, and there will be no concerts on Nov. 10 and 11, Dec. 8 and 9, Jan. 12 and 13, Feb. 2 and 3, Feb. 23 and 24, March 22 and 23 and April 12 and 13. Since Christmas falls on Monday, it will not affect the course of the concerts, and the shift of the afternoon concert from Good Friday to the preceding Thursday will be made as usual. Finally, the season will end on May 3 and 4 when, it is almost safe to surmise, Mr. Fiedler will take leave of Boston, with Beethoven's choral symphony in which he excels.

The tickets for the concerts will be sold by auction as heretofore, starting from the established prices of $18 for the better seats and $10 for the less desirable. The tickets at $18 for the afternoon concerts will be sold at Symphony hall on Monday morning, Sept. 25; the tickets at $10 for the afternoon concerts on Tuesday morning, Sept. 26; the tickets at $18 for the evening concerts on Thursday morning, Sept. 28; and the tickets at $10 for the evening concerts on Friday morning, Sept. 29. Long ago, the regular public of the concerts mastered the conditions that govern these sales and learned the scale of bids that usually prevails. It is the custom of the orchestra so to sell its tickets in Boston. No other band in America dares so to rely upon premiums.

"The Soloists."

For 17 of the 24 pairs of concerts a "soloist" has been already engaged or will come from the ranks of the orchestra, and the official outgivings hint at additions to the list. Seemingly, then, few of the concerts will be wholly orchestral, and the management seems to be receding from the policy, begun a few years ago, of giving every fourth or fifth pair to the band alone. On the other hand it still holds firmly to its announced course of engaging only such singers, pianists and violinists as deserve by their acknowledged rank to appear with such an orchestra. The exception, sometimes fortunate, sometimes unfortunate, has been one or another resident virtuoso. For the new season the choice of soloists accords altogether with this policy. The singers will be Mmes. Gluck and Morena of the Metropolitan opera house, Mme. Schumann-Heink of Europe and America and Elena Gerhardt, the German concert singer, who comes for the first time to the United States at midwinter. The pianists will be Messrs. Hofmann, Bauer, Ganz, Bachaus and Proctor and Mmes. Samaroff and Goodson. The violinists will be Mlle. Parlow and Powell and Mr. Zimbalist for wandering virtuosi and Messrs. Witek and Noack from the first desk of the orchestra itself. Furthermore, at one pair of concerts Mr. Schroeder will play a 'cello piece.

The Four Singers.

Of the chosen singers, Mme. Schumann-Heink has been familiar these many years to the regular audiences of the Symphony concerts and to the miscellaneous public that seeks them occasionally. It is, moreover, a curious and amusing fact that she has often been in better voice and sung more skilfully and expressively at the Symphony concerts than at any of her own recitals in Boston. The orchestra, the audience, the whole occasion seem to stimulate her. Miss Morena is less familiar to the audiences of Symphony hall, but she sung at the Symphony concerts three years ago, and earlier she took the part of Sieglinde in a performance of "Die Walkure" by the Metropolitan company at the Boston theater. She was then, she is now, a very comely woman, cherished and painted by the artist Lenbach. She is also a dramatic singer whose tones have increased in security, warmth and eloquence with the years. Miss Gluck, also of the Metropolitan opera house, is one of its younger singers who has risen there, by the rather unusual attribute in a lyric theater in 1911, of skill in the pure art of song. Last winter she sang in Boston at one of the concerts of the Handel and Haydn society and not a few Bostonians have heard her at the Metropolitan as the Blessed Spirit in the revival of Orpheus. There they could hear the beauty of her transparent voice, the delicate intelligence and the refined artistry of her singing. The newcomer, Miss Gerhardt, is one of the few singers in Germany who is content with the concert room. There and, indeed, in all Northern and Western Europe, she has sung often with orchestras and in recitals of her own. Occasionally, Mr. Nikisch, whose protege she is, accompanies her in them. She is a comely woman of the blonde German type and of poised and practised stage presence. Her voice is a rich and expressive soprano and she commands both beauty and eloquence of tone. She has cultivated the grand style not for rhetorical effect, but for an unusual breadth and power of diction and climax. She has large imagination and in her singing are both repose and vitality.

The Pianists.

Of the pianists, Mr. Hofmann returns from Europe for 10 appearances with the Symphony orchestra only. After years of mistrust of Boston because it had once seemed indifferent to him, he came again to it last autumn as a matured pianist. It heard him gladly; it applauded him yet more last spring. "Has Boston changed?" he wrote amusingly, after the concert of April, "or is it the pianist?" Probably it is both. Mr. Bauer likewise returns to a public that has long admired his studious talents, the intellectual understanding that underlies his playing and the poised emotion that warms it. Mr. Ganz, who has now settled in Berlin, has been as long—or longer—absent. He used to strike fire; by report it burns the brighter now. Mme. Goodson won her first American public here in Boston and she has kept it by the vitality and the elastic moods of her playing of the romantic music—she is likely to play Tschaikowsky's concerto—which is her best field. Mme. Samaroff has regained health and spirits again. She can summon again the nervous energy, the large resource and the sure precision of her playing with an orchestra. The public of the Symphony concerts has long followed her career. The newcomer remains—Mr. Bachaus, German, blonde, and still believably youthful. His technique, of mingled power and finesse allies him to the school of Rosenthal and Godowsky; but he has a warmer and a more elastic temperament. The 60s and the 70s would have called him romantic.

The Violinists.

Of the violinists, two are members of the orchestra, Mr. Witek of the refinements of technique and the subtleties of tonal shading and Mr. Noack with his silvery tone and his French sense, though he is Dutch by birth, of the golden mean of adroit expression. Two more are women: the most distinguished of the elder women of the violin, Mme. Powell, and the most remarkable of the younger, Miss Parlow. Mme. Powell is established now, beyond peradventure among the remarkable violinists of our time and she is one of the few American virtuosi, whom European audiences — and not "press notices" sent from Europe—have really acclaimed. At her usual interval of three or four years, she returns to the Boston orchestra, this time to play Bruch's new concert-piece. Miss Parlow, when she first played with the orchestra last spring, proved that young as she is, she was both virtuoso, in her command of her instrument and feeling for it, an interpretative artist in her response to her music. Her concerto, Tschaikowsky's, happened to be ill-chosen for her best powers. She will choose more wisely next autumn. Finally, there is one more newcomer—Mr. Zimbalist. Auer, the Russian virtuoso who is counted the foremost teacher of the violin schooled him as he schooled Mr. Elman and Miss Parlow and launched him as a virtuoso in Europe. His progress has been rapid in Germany and in England, and he is now to try his fortunes in America. To see and to hear he recalls the younger Elman and in his playing are the same Slav traits. So run the present announcements of the Symphony orchestra. Once it belonged to Boston only. Now, with its wider and wider field, it is almost national.—[H. T. P. in Boston Transcript.

The Symphony Concerts.

Mr. Fiedler has sent to Boston his programs for the first five Symphony concerts of the new musical year. They include the pieces chosen for the concerts that are to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the founding of the band and the 100th anniversary of the birth of Liszt. For the first of these anniversaries, the program is properly classical—Beethoven, Brahms and Schubert. For the second, it includes Liszt's "Dante" symphony, so seldom played that it will come as novel music to many that hear it. The other three programs bear witness to Mr. Fiedler's sympathies for contemporary music and his zeal to bring interesting new music to speedy hearing in Boston. Thus, the lists include Strauss' "Zarathustra," of which Mr. Fiedler has given very eloquent performances; d'Indy's richly imagined and scored set of variations, "Istar"; Chabrier's overture to his opera, "Gwendoline"; Glazounoff's concerto for violin, which has not yet been played here; Bantock's tone poem "Dante and Beatrice," first heard last spring in London and very glowing, if a little theatrical music; and Reger's newest orchestral piece an overture to an imaginary or an unnamed comedy.

In detail the five programs go:

Oct. 6 and 7:

Overture, "Jubilee," Weber
Symphony in B-flat major, "The Spring," Schumann
Air, "Biondina" from "Il Seraglio," Mozart
"Intermezzi Goldoniani," for string orchestra, Bossi
Air from "Louise," Charpentier
Comedy overture, Op. 120 (first time in America) Reger
Soloist, Miss Alma Gluck (of the Metropolitan opera house).

Oct. 13 and 14, for the 30th anniversary of the founding of the orchestra:

Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," Beethoven
Symphony in B-minor, "Unfinished," Schubert
Academic overture, Brahms

Oct. 20 and 21, for the Liszt centenary:

Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes"; symphony after Dante's "Divina Commedia"; concerto for pianoforte No. 1; symphonic poem, "Tasso." Liszt
Soloist, Rudolph Ganz.

Oct. 27 and 28:

Overture, "The Water Carrier," Cherubini
Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Brahms
Concerto for violin, Glazounoff
Tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice," (first time in America). Bantock
Soloist, Efrem Zimbalist.

Nov. 3 and 4:

Overture, "Melusina," Mendelssohn
Tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," Strauss
Symphonic variations, "Istar," D'Indy
Overture to "Gwendoline," Chabrier

TIMES

...m ...

dress ... New York City.

te ...

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five evening and five afternoon concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall during the coming season. The evening concerts will be on Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on Saturday afternoons, Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 24, and March 23. Max Fiedler will again be the conductor, this being the fourth and final year of his engagement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The soloists announced for the year are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann, and Alwin Schroeder.

The orchestra has already a very large subscription for the season, and the tickets for those who have already subscribed will be ready for delivery at the box office, Carnegie Hall, to-morrow, (Monday,) Sept. 25. The general sale of season tickets will open at the box office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, Oct. 9.

Mr. Fiedler is due to land in New York on Tuesday next.

EPTEMBER 2[illegible] 1911
THE BOSTON TRAVELER, FRIDAY, S[illegible]

NOTED BEAUTY WILL SING WITH SYMPHONY

ELENA GERHARDT.

Elena Gerhardt, who is down as one of the soloists for the coming year of the Symphony Orchestra, has the reputation of being one of the most beautiful women in Germany. Still in her 20's she has entered the rank of the most important interpretative singers of our time, and her coming to America this year will bring altogether the most interesting personality of the season.

Miss Gerhardt will have further interest for Boston in that Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nikisch are responsible for her entering into public life. She was a pupil of Mrs. Nikisch, and it was the great conductor himself who launched her on her career. Often he is her accompanist at her recitals in London and elsewhere in Europe. Miss Gerhardt comes to America in January, and appears here with the orchestra in mid-February.

HERALD, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1911.

NEW VIOLA PLAYERS FOR SYMPHONY

Otto Hartmann-Pauer.

S. Spoor.

SYMPHONY ENGAGES TWO VIOLA PLAYERS

Conductor Fiedler Secures Distinguished Musicians.

During his stay abroad this summer Mr. Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, engaged two viola players, who are expected not only to add great strength to the viola section of the orchestra, but add distinction to the orchestra itself. One, Otto Hartman-Pauer, comes from Berlin. Mr. Hartmann-Pauer is one of a most distinguished musical family, being a grandson of Ernst Pauer, the fam[illegible] pianist, composer and ped[illegible] a nephew of Max [illegible] distinguished pianist [illegible] tmann-Pauer comes fro[illegible] Berlin Philharmonic orch[illegible] here for several years [illegible] has been at the first desk of viola section [illegible]

The other new member is S. Spoor, who is a Dutchman from Amsterdam. Mr. Spoor has for the last several years been at the first desk of the viola section in the famous Amsterdam orchestra of which Mengelburg is the conductor.

Both of these gentlemen will arrive in Boston next week.

[illegible]

Anniversaries will be a feature of the season's programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The centenary of the birth of Franz Liszt falls on Oct. 22, and on the same day occurs the 30th anniversary of the first concert given by the orchestra in old Music Hall, under Mr. Henschel. Both of these events will be celebrated with special programmes. The principal work on the Liszt programme will be the "Dante Symphony," which has been promised for the last two years, but not performed. The orchestra will begin its regular rehearsals Sept. 30.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1911

MR. FIEDLER'S PROGRAMMES

HIS PIECES FOR THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The Range of His Sympathies and the Ordering of His List—New and Novel Music in Plenty—As Diversified a Choice from the Moderns—Strauss and Debussy Amply Represented—The Usual and the Unusual Classics—Occasional Rediscoveries and a Few Rare Items.

MR. FIEDLER is as ambitious as he is tireless and the new season will end his term as the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra. For only seven months more will he possess it as a highly sensitive and responsive instrument upon which he can play what music he will and in what manner he will. Mr. Fiedler, again, has breadth of musical view and sympathies and a due sense of his obligation, in the choice of his pieces, to the varying tastes and standards of his hearers. He frankly prefers modern and ultra-modern music to the established classics. He is a romantic by temperament. Yet, in his three years of work with the Symphony Orchestra, he has not overlooked the classics, mindful of those that prefer such music and, perhaps, willing to remind them that these very classics are the source whence the ultra-modern music (that they despise) has drawn its life. By temperament, again, Mr. Fiedler inclines to the music of the romantic north. He plays the music of Sibelius willingly; he likes the Scandinavian and the Russian composers; he has a kindly eye for Elgar, Bantock and the bolder English youngsters. Yet he keeps his ear open to such symphonic music as a few Italian composers write (chiefly for German audiences) while artistic curiosity and obligation, if not eager liking, stimulate him to the newer Parisian composers. The recent music of established, rising or even unknown composers, the world over, steadily interests Mr. Fiedler. He believes rightly that his audiences in Boston are musically curious and open-minded, willing to be interested, though they may not be impressed, and sensibly intolerant of a perpetual diet of "classic masterpieces." Like his predecessors, he has fulfilled his obligation to keep the public of the Symphony Concerts informed as to new music.

From the first, moreover, Mr. Fiedler's programmes have been catholic and well-arranged, and he has been particularly apt in the choice of his lighter pieces and his concluding overtures. A few repine at the length of his programmes; but what is an ambitious conductor to do, with the schedule that he has planned for the year to accomplish. No conductor of the Symphony Orchestra ever did or probably ever will, play all the pieces he purposed for a particular season. Invariably as the weeks come and go, he adds to his list or subtracts from it. If he is worth his salt as a conductor he will scheme out more than he can achieve. If he has Mr. Fiedler's temperament, he is the more certain to do so. Wisely, the official circular announces his list as music "intended for performance" next season. None the less, by the precedent of three years, Mr. Fiedler will put by very few of the important items in his list.

New and Novel Music

First of all, the conductor's schedule is rich in new or novel music:

Arensky: Variations for String Orchestra.
Balakireff: Overture on Spanish Themes.
Berger: Variations and Fugue.
Bantock: Tone-poem, "Dante and Beatrice."
Three Dances.
Bruneau: Prelude to the opera, "Messidor."
Debussy: Gigue Triste.
Dubois: Symphonie Française.
Elgar: Symphony No. 2.
Suite, "The Wand of Youth."
Suite, Dream-Children."
Enesco: Symphony in E-flat.
Roumanian Rhapsody.
Gilson: Symphonic Variations.
Glazounoff: Suite "In the Middle Ages."
Grieg: Romance with Variations.
Herbert: Introduction to Act III. of the opera, "Natoma."
Holbrooke: Tone-poem, "Ulalume."
Lendva: Scherzo.
Liadoff: Legend, "Kikmorra."
Mahler: Symphonies No. 2 and No. 3.
Moussorgsky: Fantasia, "Night on the Bald Mountain."
Nicodé: Scherzi from "Gloria."
Sibelius: Symphony, No. 4.
Overture, "Karelia."
Sinigaglia: Suite, "Piedmont."
Smyth: Overture to the opera, "The Wreckers."
Strasser: Symphony in G.
Strauss: Suite for Wind Instruments.
Two Military Marches.
Wallace: Tone-poem, "Villon."
Weiner: Humoreske. (Op. 5.)

The striking items in this widely ranging list are the new symphony by Elgar, first performed in London last May and described soon afterwards at length in this place; the new symphony by the sombre, rugged and puissant Sibelius; the "Gigue Triste," which completes Debussy's series of orchestral "Images," of which we heard "Iberia" and "Rondes des Printemps" last year; and the symphonies of Mahler. It is indeed time that the Boston Orchestra should play Mahler's music and that the audiences of the Symphony Concerts should come to know it as strangely impressive, uneven, subtle and eloquent. The ann[illegible]i Ninth Symphony is the piece that [illegible]ying composer left unfinished. The secon[illegible] which is very long and which requires a numerous chorus, is accounted his masterpiece. Last season Mr. Fiedler announced it; this season, may he and a coöperating management perform it.

Last spring, again, Mr. Fiedler enthusiastically discovered Enesco, the Roumanian composer, who dwells and works in Paris. This winter the conductor evidently intends to continue these discoveries. Similarly, he has unearthed the two Belgian composers, Gilson and Nicodé, whose music has been very seldom played in America. Beyond any other conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Fiedler has heeded the music of English composers, and this year he has chosen from them Bantock's impassioned, if theatrical, tone-poem, "Dante and Beatrice"; Wallace's finely imaginative tone-portrait, "Villon"; Holbrooke's fantastic "Ulalume," after Poe, and the overture to Miss Smyth's opera, "The Wreckers." Novel Russian music is sufficiently plentiful, but of the designated [illegible] only Moussorgsky's fantasy promises unusual interest. Outside his operas he wrote little for orchestra, but so unique and influential a composer has long deserved a hearing at the Symphony Concerts. For once, too, the academic Parisian composers are to have an inning with Dubois's "French Symphony"; while Strasser and his symphony were a discovery of last summer in Germany. Finally, Mr. Fiedler has unearthed one more piece by Grieg, who wrote little comparatively for orchestra; and noted, as well he might, that the introduction to the third act is the most eloquent music in Mr. Herbert's "Natoma." Since the conductor spent the summer as a near neighbor to Strauss and yet does not announce the heralded "Alpine" symphony, it is safe to infer that it is not finished and will not be. Thus, Mr. Fiedler must be content with such trifles as the youthful Suite for wind instruments and the thunderous military marches written for the composer's "august master."

The Moderns

French, Russian, Italian and American composers fare well in the list of more or less familiar modern music that Mr. Fiedler has chosen:

Bizet: Suite, "Roma."
Borodin: "A Steppe Sketch."
Bossi: "Intermezzi Goldoniani."
Bruckner: Symphonies, Nos. 7 and 8.
Chabrier: Overture to the Opera, "Gwendoline."
Charpentier: "Italian Impressions."
Chausson: Symphony in B flat.
Debussy: Nocturnes.
The Afternoon of a Faun.
Iberia.
Rondes de Printemps.
Dvorák: Symphonies in B flat and D minor.
Tragic Overture.
Suite (Op. 98).
Franck: Tone-poem, "Les Æolides."
"Psyché."
D'Indy: Symphonic Variations, "Istar."
Liszt: Dante Symphony.
Symphonic Poems, "Tasso," "Mazeppa," "Orpheus," "Les Préludes."
"Mephisto Waltzes."
Loeffler: Tone-poem, "The Death of Tintagiles."
MacDowell: Indian Suite.
Rimsky-Korsakoff: "Antar."
"Scheherazade."
Sgambati: Serenade from Symphony No. 1.
Sinding: Symphony No. 1.
Strauss: "Zarathustra."
"Sinfonia Domestica."
"Don Juan."
"Til Eulenspiegel."
Symphony in F.
Dance from "Salome."
Love-Scene from "Feuersnot."
Svendsen: Legend, "Zorahayda."
Tschaikowsky: Symphony No. 4.
Serenade for Strings.
Suite in D minor.
"The Voyavode."
Wagner: Sundry overtures and operatic fragments.

As this modern music runs, Mr. Fiedler purposes to be as generous with the pieces of Strauss on his programmes as he is eloquent in the performance of them, and he evidently contemplates a comprehensive survey of Debussy's orchestral music, from the earliest times. He is relatively sparing of Tschaikowsky, but disposed to Rimsky-Korsakoff, whose richly imagined "Antar" has not been played here since Mr. Gerike's time. Last year Mr. Fiedler departed from custom and undertook no symphony of Bruckner. By way of amends he proposes two—of the longest—for this year, and one, the eighth, is that in which Bruckner rose highest. Evidently, too, Mr. Fiedler has been exploring Dvorák's music and would restore it to the concert-rooms, whence it has nearly fallen. He picked from French composers more promisingly when he chose Chausson's finely and purely imagined symphony and two of Franck's most delicate tone-poems. The Liszt centenary counsels a larger choice than usual from his pieces, and the "Dante" symphony, as some hold it, is a neglected masterpiece. Mr. Fiedler is kind to the orchestral Italians (who are not always interesting), and in Loeffler and MacDowell he has chosen the two most individual and imaginative American composers.

The Classics

There are pieces by the classic composers that have evaded even thirty years of Symphony Concerts and Mr. Fiedler has diligently spied out some of them and set them on his list: Beethoven's orchestral version of a fugue written in his last years; a quartet for wind instruments with orchestra by Mozart; and a concerto for string orchestra by Corelli, the violinist, whose music the virtuosi have played through two hundred years. All three he purposes to play this season, and for his other classical pieces he will range through:

Bach: Suite in D, No. 3.
Beethoven: Symphonies Nos. 3, 4, 6, 8, and 9.
Sundry Overtures.
Berlioz: Three movements from the symphony, "Romeo and Juliet."
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini."
Brahms: Symphonies No. 2 and No. 4.
Tragic Overture.
Variations on a Theme by Haydn.
Cherubini: Overtures to the operas, "Ali Baba" and "The Water-Carrier."
Haendel: Concerti Grossi.
Haydn: Symphony in G.
Mendelssohn: Overture, "The Fair Melusina."
Mozart: Symphonies in G minor and E flat.
Schubert: Unfinished Symphony.
Schumann: Symphonies in B flat and C.
Weber: Jubilee Overture.

Now classics are presumed to speak for themselves.

H. T. P.

MORNING TELEGRAPH,

ss New York City.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five evening and five afternoon concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall during the coming season. The evening concerts will be on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 23. Mr. Max Fiedler will again be the conductor, this being the fourth and final year of his engagement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The soloists announced for the year are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Mr. Josef Hofmann and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

Mr. Fiedler is due to land in New York on Tuesday next.

[10]

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The annual auction sales of the Symphony orchestra will begin on Monday, Sept. 25, in Symphony hall at 10 a.m. the $18 seats for the rehearsals will be sold.

Lovers of the new in music will find ample grounds for pleasurable anticipation in the list of novelties which Conductor Fiedler plans to give during the coming season. He has on his list a total of 38 works that are strange to the programmes of Symphony hall and of these three have been heard in Boston—Corelli's Concerto for string orchestra, Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody and Moussorgski's "Une nuit sur le mont chauve."

Among the most important novelties promised are Elgar's new Symphony in E flat, No. 2 and Sibellus' Fourth Symphony.

England will be represented by a tone poem "Ulalume" by Josef Holbrooks, and Wallace's Symphonic Poem, "Villon." Bantock will also be represented by a tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice" and Three Dances.

From Russian composers are noted a set of "Variations" by Arensky, an overture by Balakireff, a "Suite" by Glasounoff and a Fantasy by Moussorgski.

Of French music Fiedler promises Debussy's "Gigue" and Dubois' "Smyphonic Francaise" and Gilson's "Variations Symphonicques."

THE BOSTON AMERICAN

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1911.

MANY NOVELTIES ON SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Auction Sale of Seats for Coming Season Will Open Tomorrow Morning.

The annual auction sale of seats for the Symphony concerts will begin in Symphony Hall to-morrow morning. The $10 seats will be sold on Tuesday at the same hour. There will be no seats sold on Wednesday, but on Thursday the $18 seats for the concerts will be sold and the $10 seats on Friday. There will be the usual rule governing the sale. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold.

The management of the orchestra has announced a special list of the works which Mr. Fiedler expects to put on his programs during the coming season. A glance over it will rather astonish European musicians, for nowhere on the other side of the Atlantic is such a comprehensive selection of works ever found in the prospectus of an orchestra. English, French, German, Russian, American, Roumanian, Italian, Finnish, Norwegian and Danish composers are represented. The list includes no less than thirty-eight works which have never been played at Symphony concerts, and of these thirty-five will be absolutely new to Boston and a considerable number quite new to America.

Among the English composers represented are Bantock, with two novelties, Elgar with his new symphony and two new suites, Josef Holbrooke, a name quite new to America, Wallace and Ethel Smyth.

The Russian composers are represented by Arensky, Balakireff, Borodin, Clasounoff, Liadoff, Moussorgski, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Tschanikowsky.

The French have Berlioz, Bossi, Bruneau, Chabrier, Charpentier, Chausson, Debussy, Dubois, Gilson and d'Indy. The works of the classic composers have full representation in a list that strikes one at first glance as being singularly novel.

If one were to pick out the novelties that promises the most they would be Bantock's new tone poem "Dante and Beatrice," Debussy's "Gigue, Enesco's "Symphony in E flat," Holbrooke's tones poem "Ulalume," Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies," Regor's "Comedy Overture," and Wallace's Symphonic Poem, "Villon."

ADVERTISER, MONDAY SEPTEMBER 25, 1911

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AUCTION SALES TODAY

A very important preliminary to the musical season of 1911-1912 begins this morning when the $18 seats for the 24 public rehearsals will be sold at auction in Symphony hall, at 10 a.m. The first rehearsal will be on Friday, Oct. 6, the last on Friday, May 3, and they will be given on every Friday afternoon in the intervening weeks except Nov. 10, Dec. 6, Jan. 12, Feb. 2 and 23, March 22 and April 12.

The $18 seats include all the seats on the floor from the first row to KK, KK being the first row under the balcony; the seats on the sides of the first balcony and the first four rows in the center.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

Tomorrow at 10 a.m. the $10 seats will be sold. These include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the center of the first balcony. The second balcony is not sold for the Friday afternon rehearsals, these being hold out for rush seats to be sold on the day of the concerts.

It is generally understood that to the premiums which will be bid today for the various seats the upset price of $18 will be added.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1911

SYMPHONY SEAT SALE TOMORROW

Striking Novelties to Be Introduced in Season's Program.

The annual auction sale of seats for the Symphony concerts will begin in Symphony Hall tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, when the $18 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold. The $10 seats will be sold on Tuesday at the same hour. There will be no seats sold on Wednesday but on Thursday the $18 seats for the concerts will be sold and the $10 seats on Friday.

The management of the orchestra has announced a special list of the works which Mr. Fiedler expects to put on his program during the coming season. Among the striking novelties are Bantock's new tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice," Debussy's "Gigue," Enesco's symphony in E-flat, Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume," Mahler's second and ninth symphonies, Reger's "Comedy Overture" and Wallace's symphony poem, "Villon." There are no less than thirty-eight works never before played at the Symphony concerts and all but two of these are new to Boston.

The full list prepared by Mr. Fiedler, the popular conductor of the orchestra, is as follows:

Arensky—*Variations for string orchestra.
Bach—Suite in D major, No. 3.
Balakireff—*Overture on Spanish themes.
Bantock—*Tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice."
*Three dances.
Beethoven—Symphonies, Nos. 3, 4, 6, 8 and 9. Various overtures.
Beethoven—*Great fugue for orchestra, op. 133.
Berger—*Variations and fugue, op. 97.
Berlioz—Three movements from the "Romeo and Juliet."
Berlioz—Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini."
Bizet—Suite, No. 3. "Roma."
Borodin—Eine Steppenskizze aus Mittel-Asien.
Bossi—Intermezzo Goldoniana, op. 127.
Brahms—Symphonies, Nos. 2 and 4. Overture, "Tragic."
Brahms—Variations on a theme by Josef Haydn, op. 56a.
Bruckner—Symphonies, Nos. 7 and 8.
Bruneau—*Prelude to the opera "Messidor."
Chabrier—Overture to the opera "Gwendoline."
Chausson—Symphony in B-flat, op. 20.
Charpentier—Orchestral suite, "Impressions of Italy."
Cherubini—Overtures, "Ali Baba" and "The Water Carrier."
Corelli—*Concerto for string orchestra.
Debussy—L'Apres midi d'un Faune; *Gigue; Rondes de Printemps; Iberia; Nocturnes.
Dubois—*Symphonie Francaise.
Dvorak—Symphonies in E-flat and D minor; *overture, "Tragic;" rhapsody; *suite after op. 98.
Elgar—*Symphony in E-flat, No. 2; *suites, "Wand of Youth" and "Dream Children."
Enesco—*Symphony in E-flat, op. 13. *Rumanian rhapsody.
Franck—Symphonic poems, "The Aeolidae" and "Psyche."
Gilson—*Variations symphoniques.
Glasounoff—*Suite, "Au Moyen Age." Scenes de ballet.
Grieg—*Romance with variations, op. 51.
Handel—Concerti grossi.
Haydn—Symphony in G major.
Herbert, V.—*Prelude to act III. of the opera "Natoma."
Holbrooke—*Tone poem "Ulalume."
d'Indy—Symphonic variations, "Istar," op. 42.
Lendval—*Scherzo, op. 7.
Liandoff—*Legend, "Kikimorra."
Liszt—Symphony, "Dante;" symphonic poems; "Les Preludes," "Tasso," "Orpheus," "Mazeppa;" "Der Nachtlicher Zug und zwei Mephistowalzer."
Loeffler—Symphonic poem, "The Death of Tintagiles."
MacDowell—Suite No. 2, in E minor, "Indian."
Mahler—*Symphonies, Nos. 2 and 9.
Mendelssohn—Overture "The Fair Melusine."
Moussorgski—*Fantasy, "Une nuit sur le mont chauve."
Mozart—Symphonies in G minor and E flat major. *Quartet for wind instruments, with orchestra.
Nicode—*Two Scherzos for "Gloria."
Reger—*Comedy overture, op. 120; serenade.
Rimsky-Korsakoff—"Antar;" "Scheherazade."
Schubert—Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished."
Schumann—Symphonies in B flat major and G major.
Sgambati—Serenade from Symphony, No. 1, op. 16.
Sibelius—Symphonies Nos. 1 and *4; *overture "Karelia."
Sinding—Symphony, No. 1.
Sinigaglia—*Suite "Piemonte."
Smyth—*Overture to opera, "The Wreckers."
Strasser—*Symphony in G major.
Strauss—Tone poems—"Thus Spake Zarathustra;" "Symphonia Domestica;" "Don Juan;" "Till Eulenspiegel;" *suite for wind instruments, op. 4; symphony in F minor, op. 12; *dance from "Salome;" love scene from "Feuersnot;" *two marches.
Svendsen—Legend, "Zorahayda."
Tschaikowsky—Symphony in F minor, No. 4; serenade for strings, op. 48. Suite, No. 1, in D minor, op. 43; "The Voyavode," orchestral ballads.
Wagner—Selections.
Wallace—*Symphonic poem, "Villon."
Weber—Overture, "Jubilee."
Weiner—*Humoreske, op. 5, "Fasching."
*First time at these concerts.

GLOBE—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1911.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Annual Sale of $18 Season Tickets for the Public Rehearsals Will Begin This Morning.

An important preliminary to the coming musical season will begin at 10 o'clock this morning, when the $18 seats for the 24 public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be sold in Symphony hall.

The $18 seats include all the seats on the floor from the first row to KK. KK being the first row under the balcony; the seats on the sides of the first balcony and the first four rows in the center.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid.

Tomorrow morning the $10 seats will be sold. These include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the center of the first balcony. The second balcony is not sold for the Friday afternoon rehearsals, these being held out for rush seats to be sold on the day of the concerts.

To the premiums which will be bid

GLOBE—SEPTEMBER 24, 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Symphony Novelties For Season.

Fifty-Fourth Worcester Festival to Be Held This Week.

Ballet at Boston Opera to Convene—Notes.

The management of the Boston symphony orchestra has made public the list of works from which Mr Fiedler will make up his programs this season. There are 59 composers named, representing a comprehensive range of orchestral literature in nationalities and periods of history.

Mr Fiedler is habitually vigilant in the search for promising novelties. The presence of the star denoting "first time" opposite 38 of the numbers indicates his interest in music not heretofore performed at these concerts.

In this large group the 2d and 9th symphonies of the late Gustav Mahler possess a significance. Walter Damrosch and his orchestra performed the 2d in New York Dec 8, 1908, and there were then observed the enormous demands of the score for woodwind and brass. The 9th symphony was published shortly after Mahler's death.

Debussy's "Gigue Triste," the first of his suite of three orchestral pieces, "Images," and the last to be published and performed, is included. Last season the second, "Iberia," and the third, "Rondes de Printemps," were brought forward for the first time here. Both of these are to be repeated and with them the composer's "L'Apres midi d'un Faune" and the "Nocturnes."

Before taking the position in December as general music director of the court orchestra at Meiningen, the fertile and prolific Max Reger has passed his opus 118, a piece for solo contralto, male chorus and orchestra, and has written an op 120, a comedy overture, which will be heard.

Richard Strauss will have a novelty or two, not his projected alpine symphony, but a dance from Salome, two marches and a youthful suite (op 4) for wind instruments, which Mr Barrere and his wind choir in New York brought to a first performance in America last February.

No list of novelties this year would be complete without Mr Elgar's second symphony, which first smote the ear of man last May 24 at a London festival concert. At the same hour and place Bantock's tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice," was brought forward for the first time, and is to be heard in Boston, together with three dances by him new to these concerts. Two suites of Elgar's, "Wand of Youth" and "Dream Children," are also announced.

Georg Enesco, whose suite for orchestra last year introduced his name to the symphony program, will contribute two numbers. His symphony in E flat was played last February by the New York symphony society for the first time in America. His Rumanian poem was played here by Mr Loney and the orchestral club as long ago as January, 1902. It had been brought out in Paris in 1898 by Edouard Colonne. He had heard in Paris the young Enesco's suite for violin and piano, and asked him to compose something for orchestra. This poem was the result. The composer was then less than 17.

Modern Frenchmen Represented.

The modern Frenchman are otherwise represented by d'Indy's "Istar," by a symphonic Francaise by Dubois (first time here), which was brought out at a Colonne concert a year ago last March; by the overture to Chabrier's ill-fated opera, "Gwendoline," by Chausson's symphony in B flat, by the orchestral suite "Impressions of Italy," written by Charpentier during his residence in Rome as a prize pupil of the Paris conservatory, and by the prelude to the opera "Messidor" (first time here), upon Zola's libretto of the French revolution, by Bruneau, a prize pupil at the conservatory in 'cello and composition, later a critic for "Gil Blas" and "Le Figaro."

From Richard Strauss there will be four tone poems, "Thus Spoke Zarathustra," the "Domestic" symphony, "Don Juan" and "Till Eutenspiegel"; the early symphony in F minor and the love scene from "Feuersnot." There will be the seventh and eighth symphonies of Bruckner, and from Brahms symphonies two and four, the "Tragic" overture and the Variations on a theme by Haydn.

Foremost among the Russians, Tschaikowsky has been drawn upon for his fourth symphony, the Serenade for strings, the suite in D minor, and the orchestral ballad, "The Voyavode." Then there will be Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Antar" and "Scheherazade"; Moussorgski's Fantasy, "Une nuit sur le mont chauve" (first time), Liadoff's "Kikimorra" (first time), which Modest Altschuler and his Russian symphony orchestra introduced to America last season; Balakireff's overture on Spanish themes (first time); "The Steppes" of Borodin, who wrote letters to his wife from Weimar about Liszt's playful insistence upon his making an arrangement of the piece for four hands piano, and how they played it together; Glazounoff's suite, "From the Middle Ages" (first time), and scenes from the ballet.

Of the Finns, several novelties by Sibelius will be given, together with his first symphony. There will be also Arensky's Variations for string orchestra (first time), and from others of the north country, Grieg's Romance with variations, op 51 (first time), Sinding's first symphony, and Svendsen's legend "Zorahayda."

The Italians have Bossi and his Intermezzi Goldoniani, Sgambati's serenade from symphony No 1, and Sinigaglia's suite "Piemonte" (first time).

Beside Elgar and Bantock, there will be from the British isles Joseph Holbrooke and a tone poem "Ulalume" (first time), the overture to Ethel Smyth's opera "The Wreckers," which was first produced five years ago at the city opera, Leipsic, and Wallace's symphonic poem "Villon" (first time).

Classics Not Neglected.

From the standard repertory of the orchestra come Beethoven's third, fourth, sixth, eighth and ninth symphonies, various overtures and the Great Fugue for orchestra, op. 133 (first time); Bach's suite in D major, No. 3; Handel's concerto grossi, Haydn's G major symphony, Schubert's "Unfinished" and Schumann's E flat major and C major symphonies, two symphonies of Mezart and a quartet for wind instruments with orchestra for a novelty, overtures by Weber and Mendelssohn, and selections from the music dramas of Richard Wagner.

For the Americans thus far chosen there is by Mr Loeffler "The Death of Tintagiles," MacDowell's "Indian" suite, the prelude to act 3 of Herbert's opera "Natoma," and Variations and Fugue by Wilhelm Berger, a resident of Germany, who was born in Boston in 1861 and whose father was then employed in this city in a music store.

The annual auction sale of seats for the Symphony concerts will begin in Symphony hall tomorrow (Monday) morning at 10, when the $18 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold. The $10 seats will be sold on Tuesday at the same hour. There will be no sale of seats on Wednesday, but there will be sold on Thursday the $18 seats for the concerts, and the $10 seats on Friday. There will be the usual rule governing the sale. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only and not for the choice. No more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

LOST, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 191

HERALD, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1911

SYMPHONY CONCERT SEAT AUCTION TODAY

First Sale of Tickets for Public Rehearsals.

The $18 seats for the 24 public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be sold at auction in Symphony Hall at 10 o'clock this morning. The first rehearsal will be on Friday, Oct. 6, the last on Friday, May 3, and they will be given on every Friday afternoon in the intervening weeks except Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 2 and 23, March 22 and April 12.

The $18 seats include all the seats on the floor, from the first row to [illegible] the first row under the balcony, the seats on the sides of the first balcony and the first four rows in the centre.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, not for the choice. Not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold. Tickets will be delivered in the hall and must be paid for as soon as bought or they will be immediately resold.

Tomorrow morning, at 10 o'clock, the $10 seats will be sold. They include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the centre of the first balcony. The second balcony is not sold for the Friday afternoon rehearsals, but is held for rush seats, to be sold on the day of the concerts.

To each premium bid today the price of $18 will be added.

SYMPHONY SEAT SALE

Auction for Rehearsals at 10 O'Clock Today

A very important preliminary to the musical season of 1911-1912 begins this morning when the $18 seats for the 24 public rehearsals will be sold at auction in Symphony Hall at 10 o'clock. The first rehearsal will be on Friday, Oct. 6, the last on Friday, May 3, and they will be given on every Friday afternoon in the intervening weeks except Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 2 and 23, March 22 and April 12.

The $18 seats include all the seats on the floor from the first row to KK, KK being the first row under the balcony; the seats on the sides of the first balcony and the first four rows in the centre.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the hall and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock the $10 seats will be sold. These include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the centre of the first balcony. The second balcony is not sold for the Friday afternoon rehearsals, these being held out for rush seats to be sold on the day of the concerts.

It is generally understood that to the premiums which will be bid today for the various seats the upset price of $18 will be added.

GREAT ORCHESTRAL NOVELTIES FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY PATRONS

Fiedler's List of Compositions Most Representative in History of His Boston Engagement—35 Works Unknown Here—Auction Sale of Seats Tomorrow

Tomorrow morning the sale of seats for the 31st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will commence at 10 o'clock in Symphony Hall. The management has issued a list of the novelties which Mr. Fiedler will present, partly or entirely, in the course of the winter, and the list is very representative. In fact, the music-lover could hardly expect to enjoy such varied and eclectic programmes in any other country of the world. There are 38 prospective works which have never been played at Symphony concerts. Of these 35 will be new to Boston, and in a number of instances, new to America.

Among the most important novelties are Mahler's two monster symphonies, numbers 2 and 3, a fourth symphony of Sibelius, very recently composed, the "Dance" from Richard Strauss' "Salome," Debussy's "Gigue" from his latest orchestral suite, which will be performed for the first time in this country by the Symphony Orchestra; a number of important works by the young men who are fearsomely regarded in England, and who are practically unknown on this side of the water, such as Joseph Holbrooke and William Wallace; Granville Bantock's new tone-poem, "Dante and Beatrice," a Comedy Overture by Reger; a Symphony in E Flat and a "Roumanian Rhapsody" by Georges Enesco, the Roumanian composer and violinist whose fame has grown rapidly of late years in Paris; "Variations Symphoniques," by Paul Gilson, the singular Belgian composer; Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain"; two Scherzos from Nicode's "Gloria."

In England much has been said of Elgar's second symphony, performed on a number of occasions last winter in London. Those who have followed musical events in this city remember what Bostonians in general thought of Elgar's first symphony. Mr. Fiedler is fond of the first symphony and he will no doubt give equally hearty performances of No. 2. The English have a way of distinguishing themselves, hence the remark of Ernest Newman, perhaps the most competent and independent of English critics, that Joseph Holbrooke "might have written the last two movements of the 'Fantastic Symphony' (Berlioz), and Berlioz might have written the bulk of 'The Bells'" (Holbrooke), need not appal us. Joseph Holbrooke is mentioned by English enthusiasts as a new young Daniel come to judgment. In this country most of us take our Berlioz quite seriously. Mr. Holbrooke, by nature an innovator, tried an interesting experiment in London Jan. 20, 1908, when he gathered together an audience in a darkened theatre and entertained them with his "Illuminated Symphony, or Symphonic Poem," "Apollo and the Seamen," which demanded a concealed orchestra and soloists, and the text of the poem that was the poetic basis of "Apollo and the Seamen" thrown on an illuminated screen.

Mr. Holbrooke is a graduate with honors from the Royal Academy of Music, and he has composed in many forms. He has set much of Poe to music, "The Raven," "The Masque of the Red Death," "Annabel Lee" (scene for voice and orchestra) and "Ullalume." "Ullalume" is the tone-poem to be performed in Boston.

Mr. Vincent Wallace's "Villon" will be heard here. It was very enthusiastically praised when performed last winter under Damrosch in New York.

Wallace is a Scotchman from Clyde, the son of a surgeon and a singular man. If he had not composed what is called very original music he would yet have earned the eternal gratitude of music students by his admirable book, "The Threshold of Music." He, too, studied at the Royal Academy, but only for two years, and for the rest is practically self-taught.

"Villon" is the sixth of some important Symphonic Poems, and Wallace has also published volumes of "Spanish Songs," "Freebooters' Songs," "Jacobite Songs," a symphony, "The Creation," an overture, "In Praise of Scottish Poetry," incidental music to "Pelleas et Melisande."

The "Dance of the Seven Veils" from Salome, is an extraordinary tone-poem in itself and a very subtle resume of the entire drama. It was promised for last season but the performance was necessarily postponed. Sibelius' fourth symphony is the work of a giant of a bygone age, suddenly come out of the north, whose third symphony, in contrast to the first and second, was a conspicuous failure when given in New York and other cities and a surprising failure after some of the magnificent works which had preceded it. Mr. Fiedler examined the score of the third symphony last winter and corroborated the opinion of New York critics when he declared it entirely unworthy of performance. Obviously, Mr. Fiedler thinks differently of Symphony No. 4, and we can hope that Sibelius will come into his own again. Moussorgsky's "Nuit sur le Mont Chauve" will probably be performed from the version that was finished by Rimsky-Korsakoff after the death of the composer. "Une Nuit" was composed in 1866, and first performed in Paris 20 years later. It is one of the pieces mentioned as most typical of Moussorgsky's "irregular" talent.

There are other excellent things. Certain masterpieces of the modern French school will be performed again after a lapse of some years, among them D'Indy's "Istar" variations, Chausson's symphony. Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," Franck's two symphonic poems, "The Eolidae," and "Psyche," Charles M. Loeffler's "The Death of Tintagiles," after Maeterlinck. Those who heard D'Indy's variations when they were last played in this city will recall their singular construction and the Oriental legend which serves as an excuse for one of the most brilliant and poetic achievements of the past half century in music—the princess who, to rescue her lover, descended to the bottom of Hades, and who, as she passed each of the seven circles of Hell, was derobed of one of her garments until she arrived in her natural beauty at her goal; the variations which, contrary to the accepted form, instead of becoming more rich and more complex as they develop, proceed from their most florid and ornamented state to the point where the theme itself throbs out with a rapture of beauty that is not easily forgotten, once heard. In direct contrast to this superb tonal edifice is Debussy's most subtly impressionistic feat, "The Afternoon of a Faun," after Mallarme. Mr. Loeffler's tone-poem is to be classed with works of the modern French type, though the composer resides in an eminently mundane manner at Medfield, Mass. This symphonic poem may rank as the most imaginative and finely written piece for the orchestra ever penned by Mr. Loeffler.

It has been absent from the Symphony programmes for too many seasons. Richard Strauss' early suite for wind instruments, op. 4, will be heard for the first time in this city and four of the great symphonic poems will be played: "Thus Spake Zarathustra," "Symphonia Domestica," "Till Eulenspiegel," as well as the F minor symphony, the love scene from "Feuersnot" and two new marches.

Chabrier's overture to "Gwendoline" must not be forgotten, nor Bruneau's prelude to his opera, "Messidor." The Russian composers will be well represented: Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Antar" and "Scherazade" (after the Arabian Nights," a New Overture on Russian Themes by Balakireff, whose second symphony should be heard here; Borodin's dexterous little tone picture, "A Steppe Sketch from Middle Asia," and Arensky's "Variations for String Orchestra," as yet unheard in this city.

For the classics there will be overtures and symphonies Nos. 3, 4, 6, 8 and 9, and the great fugue for orchestra, op. 133 of Beethoven. This fugue has been awaited here more than a season. Brahms' symphonies Nos. 2 and 4, the Mozart Symphonies in G minor and E flat major, and for novelty of an exceptional nature a quartet for wind instruments with orchestra.

A number of Liszt's symphonic poems will be played, and at the second concert of the season, in celebration of that composer's centenary, Rudolph Ganz will play the E flat concerto; MacDowell's second Indian Suite will be played.

Tschaikowsky will be represented by the fourth Symphony in F minor, an orchestral suite, and the orchestral ballad, after Pushkin's tale, "The Voyvode."

At the sale of seats tomorrow the $18 seats for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons will be disposed of. On the following day the sale will be devoted to the $10 seats for the same concerts. There will be no sale on Wednesday. On Thursday there will be the sale of the $18 seats for the Saturday evening concerts and on Friday the $10 seats for those concerts will be sold. The rules of previous seasons will govern the auctions. No more than four seats can be obtained on one bid at one time and the seats will be sold in their regular order only. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as quickly as sold.

The first five programmes of the season follow:

I.—OCT. 6 AND 7.

Overture, "Jubilee".....Weber
Symphony in B flat major, No. 1, Op. 38.....Schumann
Aria, "Biondina," from "Il Seraglio"...Mozart
"Intermezzi Goldoniani," Op. 127, Nos. 1, 2, 5 and 6, for string orchestra.....Bossi
Aria from "Louise".....Charpentier
Comedy overture, Op. 120.....Reger
(First time in America.)
Soloist, Miss Alma Gluck.

II.—OCT. 13 AND 14.
30th Anniversary of the Orchestra.

Symphony in E flat major, No. 3, Op. 55, "Eroica".....Beethoven
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," No. 8.....Schubert
Academic Festival Overture.....Brahms

III.—OCT. 20 AND 21.
(Liszt born Oct. 22, 1811.)

Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes".....Liszt
Symphony after Dante "Divina Commedia".....Liszt
Concerto for pianoforte in E flat major, No. 1.....Liszt
Symphonic poem, "Tasso, lamento e trionfo".....Liszt
Soloist, Rudolph Ganz.

IV.—OCT. 27 AND 28.

Overture, "Der Wassertraeger".....Cherubini
Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98....Brahms
Concerto for violin.....Glazounoff
Tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice".....Bantock
(First time in America.)
Soloist, Efram Zimbalist.

V.—NOV. 3 AND 4.

Overture, "Melusine".....Mendelssohn
Tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"..Strauss
Symphonic variations, "Istar," Op. 42...D'Indy
Overture, "Gwendoline".....Chabrier

MME SCHUMANN HEINK. ©AIME DUPONT

MISS KATHLEEN PARLOW.

JOSEPH HOFMANN. PIANIST.

RUDOLPH GANZ. PIANIST.

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 191[illegible]

HIGHEST PREMIUM $78

Good Prices for Symphony Rehearsals

Auction Shows Usual Keen Competition

$5 More Than Last Year Paid for Best Seats

General Average, However, Below That of 1910

The bidding for seats in the twenty-four Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra showed as keen an interest at the opening sale today as last year, but at the same time a different interest. The highest premium paid, $78, for seats Nos. 18 and 19, in row K, was higher than any recorded last September. On the other hand the average bids were slightly lower. As usual the lower floor of the hall was loosely filled half way back, with women far outnumbering men, bidding more timidly, perhaps, but showing much more elation when successful.

The bidding began with a premium of $5 offered for seat No. 1 in row A, which rapidly rose to $16.50, a higher initial bid and a lower final premium than those of last year. The rest of the row sold at premiums of from $17.50 to $20.50, except the last seat, which brought only $13.50, the lowest premium of the sale. Last year's prices ranged from $17 to $25.50; those of the year before falling much lower, $8 to $20.

The second row likewise showed a falling off from last year's record, though an increase over two years ago. Premiums ranged from $17 to $25. In the next three rows the bids rose regularly until an aisle seat, No. 19, in row F brought $58, higher than any price paid last year for any seat as good. The initial bids for seats in the first six rows ran from $5 up to $40, with an average of about $20.

The high bidding came much earlier than last year, but reached its maximum for the same three seats in row G that brought $70 last year. This morning they sold for $62 apiece. The next few seats dropped to $40 and $33.50. From row G back, last year's premiums were not extravagant until rows L, M and N were reached. A seat in N last year brought the highest price, $73. This morning the high bids came more rapidly. In row K $78 and $75 were premiums paid the single seats of two adjoining pairs, and the former proved the highest price of the sale. After one or two of these flurries some woman, making as high an initial bid as $40, would obtain her seats at that figure with no one bidding against her.

At times the bidding was very rapid and very spirited. Walter Jackson, the auctioneer, experienced difficulty once or twice in speaking the advancing figures quickly enough. As usual a group of ticket brokers with orders from patrons for particular seats occupied the front row on one side and rushed a few of the bids in a very lively manner. Messrs. Herrick, Burke, Wadsworth, Pratt and Heard, who, besides others, bid in this manner, paid most of the prices that overtopped last year's record, though the two seats in row K that sold for $78 went to a private bidder.

Only the $18 seats on the floor, including all rows back to JJ, and those in the balcony back to D were sold today. The premiums were paid in addition to the upset price of $18, which brings the cost of the $78 seats up to an even $100 apiece. Tuesday morning the $10 seats for the rehearsals will be auctioned off; and Thursday and Friday the seats for the Saturday evening concerts. As usual the seats in the second balcony for the Friday rehearsals will remain "rush" seats sold at twenty-five cents unreserved.

The seats about the centre aisle were the most in demand. The premiums for them averaged from $40 to $50. Occasionally, however, an aisle seat went very cheap where a bidder on a number farther in utilized his privilege of taking the next three seats at the price bid. Many quite innocent old ladies were surprised to find themselves in possession of very good seats at ridiculously small figures. At other times someone would bid, as in row D, $29.50 for four seats near the outside, and then three minutes later find someone else paying only $24 for four others almost on the centre aisle. In some ways the Symphony Orchestra becomes a lottery, with advantages, however, to the quick-minded. This year the majority of bidders have secured their seats at a slightly lower price than they were forced to pay last year, while a few individuals have brought up the total receipts by some exceptionally high premiums. Old subscribers cling desparately to the places they have been accustomed to year after year—and pay the price.

TRIBUNE

m _____

Idress _____ New York City.

ate _____

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five evening and five afternoon concerts, to be given in Carnegie Hall during the coming season. The evening concerts will be on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 23. Max Fiedler will again be the conductor, this being the fourth and final year of his engagement with the orchestra.

The soloists announced for the year are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar, Mrs. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Alwin Schroeder.

The orchestra has already a large subscription for the season, and the tickets for those who have already subscribed will be ready for delivery at the box office Carnegie Hall, to-morrow. The general sale of season tickets will open at the box office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 9.

Mr. Fiedler is due to land in New York on Tuesday.

[12]

Special List of Works Announced by Mr. Fiedler for the Coming Season of Symphony Concerts

Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink.

Miss Maud Powell.

Comprehensive Selection Has Been Prepared, with Many Novelties.

35 WORKS NEW TO BOSTON

Many New to America—Auction Sale of Seats Will Open Tomorrow.

The annual auction sale of seats for the Symphony concerts will begin in Symphony Hall tomorrow (Monday) morning at 10 o'clock when the $18 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold. The $10 seats will be sold on Tuesday at the same hour. There will be no seats sold on Wednesday, but on Thursday the $18 seats for the concerts will be sold and the $10 seats on Friday. There will be the usual rule governing the sale. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

The management of the orchestra has announced a special list of the works which Mr. Fiedler expects to put on his programs during the coming season. Nowhere on the other side of the Atlantic is such a comprehensive selection of works ever found in the prospectus of an orchestra. English, French, German, Russian, American, Roumanian, Italian, Finnish, Norwegian and Danish composers are represented. The list includes 38 works which have never been played at Symphony concerts and of these 35 will be new to Boston, and many new to America.

Among the English composers represented are Bantock, with two novelties; Elgar, with his new symphony and two new suites; Josef Holbrooke, a name new to America, represented by a tone poem; Wallace and Ethel Smyth.

The Russian composers are represented by Arensky, Balakireff, Borodin, Glasounoff, Liadoff, Moussorgski, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Tschaikowsky.

The French have Berlioz, Bossi, Bruneau, Chabrier, Charpentier, Chausson, Debussy, Dubois, Gilson and d'Indy. The works of the classic composers have full representation.

The novelties that promise the most seem to be Bantock's new tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice"; Debussy's "Gigue," Enesco's "Symphony in E-flat," Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume"; Mahler's "Second and Ninth Symphonies," Reger's "Comedy Overture" and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon."

The full list as announced by Mr. Fiedler includes:

Arensky, A.: *Variations for String Orchestra.
Bach, J. S.: Suite in D Major, No. 3.
Balakireff, M. A.: *Overture in Spanish Themes.
Bantock, G.: *Tone Poem, "Dante and Beatrice." "Three Dances."
Beethoven, L. V.: Symphonies, Nos. 3, 4, 6, 8 and 9. Various Overtures.
Bethoven, L. V.: *Great Fugue for Orchestra, Op. 133.
Berger, W.: *Variations and Fugue, Op. 97.
Berlioz, H.: Three Movements from the "Romeo and Juliet."
Berlioz, H.: Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini."
Bizet, G.: Suite, No. 3, "Roma."
Borodin, A.: Eine Steppenskizze aus Hittel-Asien.
Bossi, E.: Intermezzi Goldoniani, Op. 127.
Brahms, J.: Symphonies, Nos. 2 and 4. Overture "Tragic."
Brahms, J.: Variations on a Theme by Josef Haydn, Op. 56a.
Bruckner, A.: Symphonies, Nos. 7 and 8.
Bruneau, A.: *Prelude to the Opera "Messidor."
Chabrier, E.: Overture to the Opera "Gwendoline."
Chausson, E.: Symphony in B-flat, Op. 20.
Charpentier, G.: Orchestral Suite, "Impressions of Italy."
Cherubini, L.: Overtures, "Ali Baba," and "The Water Carrier."
Corelli, A.: *Concerto for String Orchestra.
Debussy, C. A.: L'Apres midi d'un Faune; *Gigue; Roudes de Printemps; Iberia; Nocturnes.
Dubois, T.: *Symphonie Francaise.
Dvorak, A.: Symphonies in B-flat and D-minor; *Overture, "Tragic"; Rhapsody; *Suite after Op. 98.
Elgar, E.: *Symphony in E-flat, No. 2. *Suites, "Wand of Youth" and "Dream Children."
Enesco, G.: *Symphony in E-flat, Op. 13. "Rumanian Rhapsody."
Franck, C.: Symphonic poems, "The Aeolidae" and "Psyche."
Gilson, P.: *Variations Symphoniques.
Glasounoff, A.: *Suite, Au Moyen Age." Scenes de Ballet.
Grieg, E.: *Romance with Variations, Op. 51.
Handel, G. F.: Concerti Grossi.
Haydn, J.: Symphony in G major.
Herbert, V.: *Prelude to Act III. of the Opera "Natoma."
Holbrooke, J.: *Tone Poem, "Ulalume."
D'Indy, V.: Symphonic Variations, "Istar." Op. 42.
Lendval, E.: *Scherzo, Op. 7.
Liandoff, A. C.: *Legend, "Kikimorra."
Liszt, F.: Symphony, "Dante"; Symphonic Poems: "Les Preludes," "Tasso," "Orpheus," "Mazeppa"; "Der Nachtlicher Zug und zwei Mephistowalzer."
Loeffler, C. M.: Symphonic Poem, "The Death of Tintagiles."
MacDowell, E. A.: Suite No. 2, in E minor, "Indian."
Mahler, G.: *Symphonies, Nos. 2 and 9.
Mendelssohn, F. B.: Overture, "The Fair Zelusine."
Moussorgski, M. P.: *Fantasy, "Une nuit sur le mont chauve."
Mozart, W. A.: Symphonies in C minor and E-flat major. *Quartet for wind instruments, with orchestra.

Miss Katherine Goodson.

Mme. Samaroff.

Nicode, J. L.: *Two Scherzos for "Gloria."
Reger, M.: *Comedy Overture, Op. 120; Serenade.
Rimsky-Korsakoff, N.: "Antar"; "Scheherazade."
Schubert, F.: Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished."
Schumann, R.: Symphonies in B-flat major and C major.
Sgambati, G.: Serenade from Symphony, No. 1, Op. 16.
Sibelius, J.: Symphonies Nos. 1 and *4; *Overture "Karelia."
Sinding, C.: Symphony, No. 1.
Sinigaglia, L.: *Suite "Piemonte."
Smyth, Ethel: *Overture to Opera, "The Wreckers."
Strasser, E.: *Symphony in G major.
Strauss, R.: Tone Poems—"Thus Spake Zarathustra"; "Symphonia Domestica"; "Don Juan"; "Till Eulenspiegel"; *Suite for wind instruments, Op. 4; Symphony in F minor, Op. 12; *Dance from "Salome"; Love Scene from "Feuersnot"; "Two Marches.
Svendsen, J. S.: Legend, "Zorahayda."
Tschaikowsky, P. I.: Symphony in F minor, No. 4; Serenade for Strings, Op. 48. Suite, No. 1, in D minor, Op. 43; "The Voyavode," Orchestral Ballade.
Wagner, R.: Selections.
Wallace, W.: *Symphonic Poem, "Villon."
Weber, C. M. V.: Overture, "Jubilee."
Weiner, L.: *Humoeske, Op. 5, "Fasching."

*Indicates first time at these concerts.

Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World
From ... CROSS N. Y. HERALD
Address ...
Date SEP 21 1911

Frl. Maria Hrabe, eine bekannte Violinistin, hat sich mit Ernst Huber, einem Mitgliede des Boston Symphonic Orchesters, vermählt. Die Trauung fand in der St. Josephs Kirche im Bronx statt.

BIG PREMIUMS PAID FOR SEATS AT SYMPHONY

First Two Seats Bring $78, an Increase of $5 Over Last Year's Prices.

Premiums of $78 each were given for two $18 seats at the annual auction sale for the 24 public rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra for the coming season. The seats which brought the high prices were 16 and 18 on the right side of the centre aisle in row K. This premium is $5 each more than the highest price paid at the auction last year.

There was a large attendance when Auctioneer Arthur Jackson opened the auction at 10 o'clock, most of those present being brokers and speculators. A representative of the management claimed that if the patrons themselves attended the sales the excessive premium charges would undoubtedly be stopped as an unnecessary extravagance.

The bidding was spirited and the auction was conducted from a fence-like arrangement about 20 feet square. A large placard, showing the location of every seat, towered high over the head of the auctioneer, and an active young man skipped up and down a large step-ladder blue-pencilling the seats as they were sold.

It took three hours to sell half of the house.

The $18 seats embrace all those on the floor from row A to double K, which is the first row under the balcony, all the side seats of the first balcony, and the first four rows in the centre of the balcony. Not more than four seats were sold to any single bidder and all were delivered and paid for as sold.

In row A $20.50 was the highest bid for seats on the centre aisle, which was $5 less than the sum paid last year. Row B, on the extreme right, opened for $15 and gradually increased to $29 for seats 15 and 16 on the right of the centre aisle. The last seat at the extreme right of row B sold for $16.50.

Row C opened at $15 and brought premiums of $33 on the centre aisle and the seat next to it sold for $30. In row D seats at the extreme right side aisle sold for $20 and jumped to $29.50, while seats on the centre aisle brought $32.50.

Seats 17 and 18 on row E brought $39, while 19-20, the end seats across the same aisle, brought $32.50, while seats next to them sold for $32. Seat 18 on the right side of the centre aisle sold for $51. The end seat on the left of the centre aisle brought $53, while seat 20, two in from the aisle, brought $51, having opened at $40. Seat 21 went for $41, and others ranged from $32 to $34.

Row G opened at $20 and went to $44 for seats on the centre aisle, while three seats on the left of the same aisle brought $62 each. Seats adjoining sold for $40, while two seats further in brought $30. At this point the bidding was the sharpest of the day.

The highest bid in row H was $54, and in row I, centre aisle, seats 19-20 went for $60. Seats 21-22 sold for $42 each, 29 on left of centre went for $50, and the same bidder bought the seat adjoining for $45.

Row K, which yielded the largest premiums of the sale, was uniformly high, opening at $33. Seats 16-17 on the centre aisle brought $75, 18-19, across, brought $78, the record price for the sale. A decline occurred in rows L and M, the former having some $58 bids and the other $59. From this point the prices declined.

BIG PREMIUMS PAID FOR SEATS AT SYMPHONY

(Continued from Page One.)

Tomorrow at 10 o'clock the $10 seats for the 24 rehearsals will be sold. These seats will include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the centre of the first balcony. The second balcony is not sold until the day of each rehearsal. Thursday at 10 o'clock the $18 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be auctioned and Friday at the same time the $10 seats for the Saturday night concerts.

From EVENING WORLD,
Address New York City.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give five Thursday evening and five Saturday afternoon concerts at Carnegie Hall this season, beginning on Nov. 9 and 11. Max Fiedler's four year engagement as conductor ends next spring. He is expected to arrive from Europe next Tuesday. Subscribers who have renewed may get their tickets on Monday. The general sale will open on Oct. 9.

From HERALD,
Address New York City.
Date

Miss Kathleen Parlow, the Canadian violinist heard here last season, will return to this country next month. During the season she will play with the New York Philharmonic Society, the Boston Symphony Society and the Russian Symphony Society, besides appearing in recital.

BY RECORD FIGURES FOR SEATS FOR THE SYMPHONY SEASON

Higher Premium Than Top Notch of Previous Year, $78 Each Being Paid for Two in Middle Aisle

BIDDING IS LIVELY

Large Attendance of Bidders to Obtain Tickets for the Friday Rehearsals of the Orchestra

The highest premium at the sale today in Symphony hall of the $18 season seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was $78; the average sale is expected to prove of the same total value as last year.

The center aisle seats brought the highest premiums in the middle of the first section. Aisle U was reached by 1:30 p. m. when the sale was adjourned to 2 p. m.

The rest of the floor, 15 aisles, and the first four rows in the first balcony will be auctioned off this afternoon.

Bidding was sharp at times, more so for the first dozen rows than for those following. The record bid came shortly after noon. Row K opened at $33 and soon climbed until seats 16 and 17 on the right of the middle aisle brought the highest figure up to that time of $75. The next bid reached $78 and the party took two seats, the first on the left of the middle aisle across from the $75 seats. The highest premium of last year was $73.

Middle aisle seats in F brought $53 and $51 and on each side $41 and $32; the corresponding seats in G brought $63 and $43.

The general average through the center was about $50, with the seats midway between the aisles bringing about $40 and the extreme left and right sections bringing $30.

The last aisle opened at $31.50, the next four $41.50, the next two $36, the next $32, the next two $32.50.

The end seats on the middle aisle in row U brought $52, the end seats on the left aisle brought $38 and $33 and the outside end seat $33.50.

Seats sold include all on the floor from the first row to KK, the first row under the balcony; the seats on the sides of the first balcony and the first four rows in the center.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice, and not more than four seats will be sold on one bid.

The $10 seats will be sold Tuesday at 10 a. m. These include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the center of the first balcony. The second balcony is not sold for the Friday afternoon rehearsals, these being held out for rush seats on the day of the concerts.

STANDARD
From ...
Brooklyn, N ...
Address ...

Katharine Goodson, the pianist, is to return to this county in January, 1912, to begin her fourth tour of America. Miss Goodson comes this time under the management of Antonia Sawyer. Miss Goodson will make a tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will play with the Minneapolis, New York Philharmonic and the New York Symphony orchestras. She will make the Tschaikowsky concerto in B flat minor, a feature of her orchestral appearances in America this coming season. Miss Goodson played this concerto but once on her previous tours of the United States and that was in New Haven with the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Horatio W. Parker. In addition to the Tschaikowsky concerto, Miss Goodson will play the Grieg concerto, the Liszt concerto in E flat major, the Hinton concerto in D minor, the Brahms concerto in D minor, and the Saint-Saens concerto in G minor.

JOURNAL—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 191

Dramatic Soprano Coming To Boston

Berta Morena

WILL SING WITH THE SYMPHONY THIS YEAR

One of the distinguished artists who will appear during the coming Symphony season is Berta Morena, the German dramatic soprano, who made her operatic debut in Munich a dozen years ago. During most of her artistic career she has been a member of the Munich Court and National Theater, but in 1908 she sang in New York and Boston with the Metropolitan Opera Company, and the following year she came to Bston to appear as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra.

Symphony Rehearsal Seat Auction Today

A very important preliminary to the musical season of 1911-1912 begins this morning when the $18 seats for the twenty-four public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be sold at auction in Symphony Hall at 10 o'clock. The rehearsals will begin on Friday, Oct. 6, and end on Friday, May 3, and they will be given every Friday afternoon in the intervening weeks except Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 2 and 23, March 22 and April 12.

The $18 seats include all the seats on the floor from the first row to KK, the first row under the balcony; the seats on the sides of the first balcony and the first four rows in the center.

Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock the $10 seats will be sold. These include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the center of the first balcony. The second balcony is not sold for the Friday afternoon rehearsals, these being held out to be sold on the day of the concerts.

It is generally understood that to the premiums which will be bid today for the various seats the upset price of $18 will be added.

JOURNAL—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1911

$78 PREMIUM PAID FOR CHOICE SEATS

It remained for a private bidder to get the supposedly best seats—Nos. 18 and 19 in row K—at the auction yesterday of locations for the twenty-four Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The premium was set at $78, which is higher than the price paid last year. Those disposed of during the day embraced the $18 seats on the floor as far back as row JJ. The $10 seats are to be auctioned off today, and the Saturday evening concert seats will go under the hammer on Thursday and Friday.

Many brokers and a large number of women bidders were at the sale, and the seats about the center aisle were the most in demand. The premiums for these averaged from $40 to $50. The bidding opened with an offer of a premium of $5 for seat No. 1 in row A, but the price rose to $16.50 before it was sold. The rest of the row sold at premiums from $17.50 to $25.50. Walter Jackson was the auctioneer.

RECORD, MONDAY

SYMPHONY PRICES LOWER

Premiums on $18 Seats Drop a Bit

At the auction sale of $18 seats for the Friday rehearsals, 31st season of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony hall, prices fell off a little from 1910.

The bids for seats in the first 36 rows on the floor, or from A to K K, and for the sides of the first balcony and first four rows in the centre, were premiums over the regular $18 price per seat.

Bids were accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for choice; and not more than four seats were sold on one bid. On an average, premium on seats in the first five rows was from $1 to $5 less than last year.

Up to 11.15 the high premium was $41 for a seat in the centre of E row.

In A row the high this year was $20.50, compared with $35.50 last year.

Seats in B and C rows commanded the high premium, and as the sale progressed steadily high premiums were being bid.

In B row the high premium was $25, last year $31.

High for D row $32.50, last year $33. E row brought considerably higher premiums, centre aisle seats went for $39 and $41 each.

$78 A RECORD PREMIUM.

In G row off the center aisle $62 premium was paid, while seat adjoining went for $40.

In several instances seats in from the aisles went for higher premium than those on the aisle. In H row, for instance, a seat in from the aisle was bid up to $54, while aisle seats went for $44 and $53 premium.

In I high was $60; J $50, while in K row on the center aisle the premium was run up to $75; just opposite on the center aisle seats 18 and 19 went for $78 permium, the highest premium paid at the sale, and comparing with $73, the highest paid last season.

In L row high premium was $58, and in M, $59. Center aisle seats in N went for $51 premium.

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 191

HIGHEST PREMIUM $27.

Best Price at Sale of $10 Seats for Symphony Rehearsals Lower Than Last Year.

At the sale of $10 seats for Symphony rehearsals yesterday, the highest premium, $27, was $5 less than the highest at last year's sale.

The smallest premiums of the day were $6, for several seats in two broken rows at the rear of the hall, and other premiums ranged from that amount to $27, many reaching figures between $11 and $24. The lowest premium for this class of seats last year was $10.

A number of seats on the rear of the floor that were not called for after having been once sold, were resold and in very case much below the original selling prices, which in some instances were cut down one-third.

POST, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 191

$10 SYMPHONY SEATS SOLD

Yesterday the $10 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1911-12 were sold, the prices as a whole being about the same as last year. The seats that were sold were the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows on the first balcony. An end seat in row KK brought a premium of $27. Most of the seats in this row brought bids of more than $20, and the cheapest seats brought bids of $6.80.

On Thursday and Friday the seats for the Saturday night concerts will be sold, on Thursday, the $18 seats and on Friday the $10 seats, the premium bid being each time added to the "upset" price of $18 or $10.

ADVERTISER, TUESDAY SEPTEMBER 26, 191

PRICES FOR SYMPHONY HALL SEATS LESS THAN IN 1910

Premiums on All Seats Drop Despite Exciting Bidding at Auction Held Yesterday.

At the auction sale of $18 seats for the Friday rehearsals, 31st season of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony hall, prices fell off a little from 1910.

The bids for seats in the first 36 rows on the floor, or from A to K K, and for the sides of the first balcony and first four rows in the centre, were premiums over the regular $18 price per seat.

Bids were accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for choice; and not more than four seats were sold on one bid. On an average, premium on seats in the first five rows was from $1 to $5 less than last year.

Up to 11.15 the high premium was $41 for a seat in the centre of E row.

In A row the high this year was $20.50, compared with $35.50 last year.

Seats in B and C rows commanded the high premium, and as the sale progressed steadily high premiums were being bid.

In B row the high premium was $25, last year $31.

High for D row $32.50, last year $33. E row brought considerably higher premiums, centre aisle seats went for $39 and $41 each.

In G row off the center aisle $62 premium was paid, while seat adjoining went for $40.

In several instances seats in from the aisles went for higher premium than those on the aisle. In H row, for instance, a seat in from the aisle was bid up to $54, while aisle seats went for $44 and $53 premium.

In I high was $60; J $50, while in K row on the center aisle the premium was run up to $75; just opposite on the center aisle seats 18 and 19 went for $78 premium, the highest premium paid at the sale, and comparing with $73, the highest paid last season.

In L row high premium was $58, and in M, $59. Center aisle seats in N went for $51 premium.

Today at 10 a.m. the $10 seats for the 24 rehearsals will be sold. These seats will include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the centre of the first balcony.

The second balcony is not sold until the day of each rehearsal. Thursday at 10 a.m. the $18 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be auctioned, and Friday at the same time the $10 seats for the Saturday night concerts.

HERALD, SEPTEMBER 26, 1911

HIGH PREMIUMS FOR SYMPHONY

Two Seats Bring $78 Each, an Increase of $5 Over Last Year's Prices.

$18 SEATS AUCTIONED OFF

Society Women Often Pay More Than Shrewd Brokers and Speculators.

Society women and girls bidding with spirit against shrewd ticket brokers and speculators was a feature yesterday at the annual auction sale of $18 seats for the 24 public Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra for the season of 1911-'12. The first of these concerts will be given Oct. 6 and the last on May 3.

The high mark on the floor was nearly equalled by two balcony premiums, seat 5 in row A on the right bringing $76 and seat 3 in row B behind it selling for $73. The balcony sides averaged slightly better than last season, some aisle seats going for from $40 to $50.

At times coveted seats were pleaded for at brisk $1 jumps. Instances were frequent when a woman, young or old, with a determined toss of the head would rout completely a keen professional bidder, willingly meeting a stiff extra fee for the satisfaction derived in defeating a paid rival.

The management says that if more patrons showed this interest by buying in person the growing extravagance represented in premiums would be materially reduced. But many are either too lazy, indifferent or busy, and, in consequence, they have to pay not only the premiums, but substantial brokers' fees besides.

The highest premiums paid yesterday for $18 seats were $78 each for seats 16 and 18, end seats on the right of the centre aisle in row K. This is $5 a seat in excess of the highest premium yielded last season, which was $73 for two seats in row M. It means that the purchaser had to give $96 for each seat, or $192 for the pair, as the flat price of $18 has to be tacked on to every premium.

There was an average attendance when Auctioneer Arthur Johnson opened the sale in Symphony Hall at 10 A. M. All the leading brokers and speculators were represented and the women music lovers turned out in force as the morning progressed. Some of them have had years of training and are familiar with the strategy of the professional bidders who sit down front.

A fence 20 feet high stood in the middle of the stage and tacked to it was a chart of the floor seats. Auctioneer Johnson stood out near the footlights on the alert to detect every little syllable or finger-beck, and, perched on a lofty ladder behind was a nimble young man who checked off the seats with a blue crayon as fast as they were sold. It took three hours to auction off one-half of the floor chairs.

The $18 seats embrace all those on the floor from row A to double K, which is the first row under the balcony, all the side seats of the first balcony, and the first four rows in the centre of the balcony. Not more than four seats were sold to any single bidder and all were delivered and paid for as sold.

In row A $20.50 was the highest bid for seats on the centre aisle, which was $5 less than the sum paid last year. Row B, on the extreme right, opened for $15 and gradually increased to $29 for seats 15 and 16 on the right of the centre aisle. The last seat at the extreme right of row B sold for $16.50.

Row C opened at $15 and brought premiums of $33 on the centre aisle and the seat next to it sold for $30. In row D seats at the extreme right side aisle sold for $20 and jumped to $29.50, while seats on the centre aisle brought $32.50.

Seats 17 and 18 on row E brought $39, while 19-20, the end seats across the same aisle, brought $42 each. In row F seats on the right aisle brought $32.50, while seats next to them sold for $32. Seat 18 on the right side of the centre aisle sold for $51. The end seat on the left of the centre aisle brought $53, while seat 20, two in from the aisle, brought $51, having opened at $40. Seat 21 went for $41, and others ranged from $32 to $34.

Row G opened at $20 and went to $44 for seats on the centre aisle, while three seats on the left of the same aisle brought $62 each. Seats adjoining sold for $40, while two seats further in brought $30. At this point the bidding was the sharpest of the day.

The highest bid in row H was $54, and in row I, centre aisle, seats 19-20 went for $60. Seats 21-22 sold for $42 each, 29 on left of centre went for $50, and the same bidder bought the seat adjoining for $45.

Row K, which yielded the largest premiums of the sale, was uniformly high, opening at $33. Seats 16-17 on the centre aisle brought $75, 18-19, across, brought $78, the record price for the sale. A decline occurred in rows L and M, the former having some $58 bids and the other $59. From this point the prices declined.

Today at 10 o'clock the $10 seats for the 24 rehearsals will be sold. These seats will include the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows in the centre of the first balcony. The second balcony is not sold until the day of each rehearsal. Thursday at 10 o'clock the $18 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be auctioned and Friday at the same time the $10 seats for the Saturday night concerts.

BOSTON GLOBE—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1911

HIGHEST SEAT PREMIUM $78

Symphony Rehearsal Auction Sale.

Best Price Secured Is $5 Above Last Year's Top Figure.

Nearly All the Floor Taken by Agencies.

At the annual auction sale of seats for the 24 public rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra held yesterday morning at Symphony hall, the highest premiums were of $78 each, paid for two $18 seats in row K. This is $5 more than the highest recorded last year. The general average of premiums ran about the same as last year, however.

Auctioneer Arthur Jackson began the sale at 10 a m.

A large gathering was on hand, the women far outnumbering the men. Nearly all the high premiums were paid by representatives of ticket agencies, and the greater part of the floor was secured by these men, to fill orders that had been given them.

The first row, as usual, did not bring any great amount of bids nor high premiums, the average premium being something less than $20 right through the row. Row B showed more interest and a slightly increased premium for the middle portion.

Row C opened at a premium of $16, and the end seats at the right aisle side for premiums of $23 on the right side and $25 on the left side of the aisle. At the midule aisle the premiums had jumped to $27 each for the four seats to the left, and $33 for the end seat on the right of that aisle. Row D opened at $20 as a premium, and $32.50 was the highest premium secured in the whole row, although the average was close to $28 premium for each seat in the row.

Row F Brings $53 Extra for Seat.

Row E opened at a premium of $19.50, and the best premium secured was $42 for three seats at the right of the central aisle. In row F the opening premium was the same as the row ahead of that, but the best premium was $53, and several others sold at premiums of $51.

In row G the best premium leaped to $62 each for three seats to the left of the central aisle and the opening premium in that row was $21. The last seats in the row sold at premiums of $23 each. Most of the seats in that row averaged about $35 each in premiums.

Row H opened with a premium of $23, while $54 each for three seats was the best that row could produce, the last two seats in that row and the first two in row I bringing premiums of $25 each. Two seats in row I brought premiums of $60 each, but the other seats brought an average of about $35 premium each.

Row K opened with a premium of $31 each on the first four seats, the next four brought a premium of $32 each and then jumped to premiums of $39 each. The two end seats at the right of the central aisle brought a premium of $75 each and the two on the opposite side premiums of $78 each, the best premiums of the day's sale and probably of the season. Then the premiums dropped to $51, $50, $49, and gradually down until the last seats in row K sold at premiums of $32 each.

Row M Shows Falling Off.

In the next row the best premium secured was $58 each for a group of three seats, and the next best was two which sold for premiums of $50 each. The row closed at premiums of $35.50 each. In row M, which is usually about where the highest premiums are found each season, the best secured this morning was $53 for one seat, and the next best premium in that row was $40 each for six seats.

In row N a premium of $59 each was secured for the two end seats at the left of the right aisle, and the seats at the sides of the central aisle brought premiums of $50 and $52 each, the highest being for the seats at the left side of the aisle. In row O the best premium secured was $53 for the two seats at the left of the right aisle, but seven other seats sold for premiums of $51 each in that row, the ends of the row selling at premiums of $31 each seat. In row P the high premium was $49 each for a group of four seats to the right of the right aisle. One other seat sold for a premium of $45 and several more sold at premiums of $43 and $40 each.

In row Q the best premium secured was $51 for four end seats, two on either side of the right aisle and a premium of only a dollar less was paid each for the four seats, two on either side of the center aisle. In the next row $51.50 was the best premium secured and the whole row did not average about $32 each in premiums. Row S had $51 as the highst premium given but the whole row averaged a considerably higher premium than did row R.

Row T opened at a premium of $21 and closed at a premium of $31, while the highest premium given was $46.50 for one seat, which was not an end one but was required by a ticket agency to make up the order in that row. The row averaged premiums of about $36 each. Row U opened at $31.50 and the best premium secured in that row was $41.50.

POST, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1911

$96 FOR SEAT AT SYMPHONY

Rush to Get Rows Where Hats May Be Worn

When the officials of Symphony Hall enforced the "no hat" rule last winter they builded better than they knew, as the first auction sale of Symphony seats for the season of 1911-12 yesterday, in Symphony Hall, proved. The prices for the seats in the last two rows on either side of the first balcony, against the walls, where hats may be worn, reached figures that ranged some 10 per cent higher than the figures of last season, and the bidders were women, who bid personally (not removing their hats) or through agents who were present. This unforeseen rise in prices occasioned an astonished rustle on the part of the people present who had waited until prices should fall the expected amount to purchase seats in the last rows. Instead, the bidding became brisker than ever. Suddenly a man whispered to his neighbor, "They're all hats!" and an illumined smile sped over the faces in Symphony Hall.

As a whole, the averages tallied pretty closely with those of last year. The bidding was steady, the market "firmer," so to speak, and the prices rose and fell in a logical manner, as the most desired seats were approached and disposed of. Certain individual bids went higher than the highest bids last season. The seats Nos. 18 and 19 in row K went at a premium of $78, or, adding the "upset" price, $18, a total of $96, as against a seat in row N, which went at $78, or a total of $91, last year. A second pair of seats in row K yesterday morning netted a premium of $75, and the seat No. 5 in row A of the first balcony brought $76. The average for the back row on this side of the balcony, thanks to the ladies, was nearly $40.

On both floor and balcony there was a decided rally as the last seats were reached, and no doubt many who attended wished that they had bought earlier in the fray, or decided to wait over until the sale of the $10 seats this morning. From about rows L to X, just over the middle of the aisle that divides Symphony Hall crosswise, the averages were highest, having reached a general figure of $45 to $50.

There were more people present at this auction sale than there were last year, and the effect of the late scare in the copper market, which it was feared would influence the prices of Symphony seats this season, had no very apparent effect.

This morning the $10 seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Symphony Orchestra will be sold, the sale opening at 10 o'clock. Tomorrow, Wednesday, there will be no sale. On Thursday the $18 seats for the Saturday night concerts will be sold, and on Friday the last Symphony sale this season, the $10 seats for the same events will be disposed of.

ADVERTISER, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1911

$26.50 HIGH PREMIUM FOR $10 SYMPHONY SEATS

Attendance Not so Large as on Monday's Auction, but Bidding Was Very Lively.

At the sale yesterday morning of $10 seats at the Symphony orchestra Friday afternoon rehearsals the highest premium paid was $26.50, the seats being those on the floor beneath the first balcony and the few rear rows in the first balcony itself. The attendance at the sale was not so large as on the day previous when the better seats were sold, but the bidding was lively.

At the similar sale last year the best premium secured on these seats was $32.

That was the first row offered for sale and it opened with a premium of $20, and the three end seats in the row sold at premiums of $17.50 each, but all the central portion of row KK sold for premiums of over $20 each per seat.

As the distance back from the stage increased the amount of premiums offered steadily decreased. The next row, LL, opened at premiums of $18 and closed at $16, with $24.50 the best premium secured in the row.

Row MM opened at premiums of $16, closed with premiums of $15.50, and $17.50 was the best secured in the row. In row NN, the best premium was $18, although $17 and $17.50 were paid as premiums for other seats in the same row, and the smallest premium in that row was $13.50 each for two seats.

In Row OO the high premium was $16 and the lowest was $11 for one seat. In row PP the best premium was $11.50 and the smallest $9.50.

Several seats that had not been called for promptly were resold, and in all cases brought much less than when first knocked down by the auctioneer.

HERALD, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1911

$30 FOR $10 SEAT AT SYMPHONY

That Was the Highest Premium for 500 Seats at the Public Rehearsals.

Dispatch and generous bidding characterized the auction sale yesterday at Symphony Hall of the $10 seats for the 24 public Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

There were 500 of the $10 seats and they were snapped up in less than two hours by music lovers and agents for ticket brokers.

The highest premium was $30 each for several in row KK.

Tomorrow the $18 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be auctioned, and the $10 seats will be sold Friday.

STAATSZEITUNG,

n ____

ress New York City.

SEP 24 1911

Die Sommertemperatur iſt in New-York eine faſt noch ungebrochene, aber ein Anzeichen einer nicht allzu fernen Aenderung der Witterungsverhältniſſe liegt doch ſchon vor: die Leitungen unſerer großen Symphonie-Orcheſter ſenden uns ausführliche Programme für die kommende Saiſon.

Das Boſtoner Symphonie-Orcheſter wird auch in der kommenden Saiſon ſeine üblichen fünf Abend- und fünf Nachmittags-Konzerte in Carnegie Hall abhalten, und zwar werden die Erſteren am 9. Nov., 7. Dez., 11. Jan., 22. Febr. und 21. März ſtattfinden, während die Matinee-Konzerte an den Nachmittagen des 11. Nov., 9. Dez., 13. Jan., 24. Febr und 23. März zur Abhaltung gelangen werden. Die muſikaliſche Leitung der Geſellſchaft liegt auch in dieſem Jahre in Händen von Max Fiedler, und zwar handelt es ſich um das vierte und letzte in ſeinem Kontrakt vorgeſehene Jahr.

Die Soliſten-Liſte iſt wieder eine höchſt glänzende, denn ſie enthält die Namen der Damen Schumann-Heink, Farrar, Homer und Kathleen Parlow, ſowie der Herren Joſeph Hofmann und Alwin Schröder. Wie uns die Leitung mittheilt, iſt faſt die geſammte Subſkription des Vorjahres erneuert worden wozu zahlreiche neue Abonnenten getreten ſind. Die bereits abonnirten Billets können von morgen, dem 25. Sept. an, an der Kaſſe in Carnegie Hall abgeholt werden. Der Verkauf der übrigbleibenden Saiſon-Tickets beginnt Montag, den 9. Oktober.

Herr Fiedler hat ſich letzte Woche in Bremen nach Amerika eingeſchifft und wird kommenden Dienstag hier erwartet.

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1911

SYMPHONY SEATS BRING GOOD PRICES

Yesterday the $10 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1911-12 were sold, the prices as a whole being about the same as last year. The seats that were sold were the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows on the first balcony An end seat in row KK brought a premium of $27. Most of the seats in this row brought bids of more than $20, and the cheapest seats brought bids of $6.80.

From SUN,

Address New York City.

Date 24 19

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five evening and five afternoon concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall in the coming season. The evening concerts will be on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 23. Max Fiedler will again be the conductor, this being the fourth and final year of his engagement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The soloists announced for the year are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Alwin Schroeder. The orchestra has already a very large subscription for the season, and the tickets for those who have already subscribed will be ready for delivery at the box office, Carnegie Hall, tomorrow. The general sale of season tickets will open at the box office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 9. Conductor Fiedler is due to land in New York on Tuesday next.

[15]

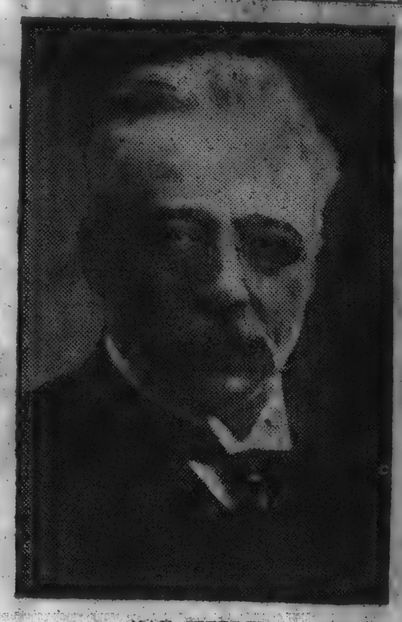
GLOBE—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

CONDUCTOR OF THE SYMPHONY HERE

Max Fiedler Returns From Europe.

Brings With Him Many New Works For Performance This Winter.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Symphony orchestra, and Mrs Fiedler arrived in Boston from New York yesterday afternoon and went directly to their apartments in Hemenway chambers, which will be their home for the next seven months.



MAX FIEDLER.

They landed in Hoboken Tuesday after having a stormy crossing from Bremen on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. Both are in exceedingly good health, Mrs Fiedler having quite recovered from her illness of last spring.

Mr and Mrs Fiedler spent a greater part of the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, where is the home of Richard Strauss, and Mr Fiedler saw a great deal of the great composer.

"I only wish," said Mr Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months. Besides working on this Strauss is writing a motet for 20 voices; he is composing stage music for one of Rheinhardt's stage plays and is at work on a one-act opera.

"He has played for me so far as he could the first movement of his symphony and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.'

"In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak. Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with but with everything diminished to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work.

"Bostonians will be interested to know that I have been in correspondence with Debussy this last summer and he assures me that his 'Gigue,' which is the first part of the composition of which 'Rondes de Printemps' and 'Iberia' are respectively the second and third, will be published this winter in time for performance in Boston, and I expect to give the first performance of it in America."

THE BOSTON AMERICAN THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911.

GOOD DEMAND AT SYMPHONY SALE

Society and its duly authorized agents were at Symphony Hall at 10 a. m. to-day, when the auction sale of $18 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts at Symphony Hall began. As usual, the great chart of the hall was shown on the platform and as seats were sold they were crossed off by a crayon on the end of a long pole.

The seats in front and in the rear of the hall are not so eagerly sought as those in the centre, and the bidding was not very spirited, as the A, B and C were run off at prices averaging $25 to $30 more than the regular price of the tickets.

The keen competition began at row K, and for seats on the aisle in row N. In the centre of the hall the highest premium of the day was paid. Those seats were knocked down for $52 each, making the actual price of those $18 seats $70, or a trifle more than $3 per concert.

The best known society people were not present in person, and such agents as Herrick, Connolly and others had orders to buy in many pairs of seats. Some wealthy peole sent their butlers or maids to secure the seats.

The sale of $10 Saturday evening seats will begin at 10 o'clock to-morrow, Friday morning.

BOSTON GLOBE—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1911

HIGHEST SEAT PREMIUM $78

Symphony Rehearsal Auction Sale.

Best Price Secured Is $5 Above Last Year's Top Figure.

Nearly All the Floor Taken by Agencies.

At the annual auction sale of seats for the 24 public rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra held yesterday morning at Symphony hall, the highest premiums were of $78 each, paid for two $18 seats in row K. This is $5 more than the highest recorded last year. The general average of premiums ran about the same as last year, however.

Auctioneer Arthur Jackson began the sale at 10 a m.

A large gathering was on hand, the women far outnumbering the men. Nearly all the high premiums were paid by representatives of ticket agencies, and the greater part of the floor was secured by these men, to fill orders that had been given them.

The first row, as usual, did not bring any great amount of bids nor high premiums, the average premium being something less than $20 right through the row. Row B showed more interest and a slightly increased premium for the middle portion.

Row C opened at a premium of $16, and the end seats at the right aisle side for premiums of $23 on the right side and $25 on the left side of the aisle. At the midule aisle the premiums had jumped to $27 each for the four seats to the left, and $33 for the end seat on the right of that aisle. Row D opened at $20 as a premium, and $32.50 was the highest premium secured in the whole row, although the average was close to $28 premium for each seat in the row.

Row F Brings $53 Extra for Seat.

Row E opened at a premium of $19.50, and the best premium secured was $42 for three seats at the right of the central aisle. In row F the opening premium was the same as the row ahead of that, but the best premium was $53, and several others sold at premiums of $51.

In row G the best premium leaped to $62 each for three seats to the left of the central aisle and the opening premium in that row was $21. The last seats in the row sold at premiums of $23 each. Most of the seats in that row averaged about $35 each in premiums.

Row H opened with a premium of $23, while $54 each for three seats was the best that row could produce, the last two seats in that row and the first two in row I bringing premiums of $25 each. Two seats in row I brought premiums of $60 each, but the other seats brought an average of about $35 premium each.

Row K opened with a premium of $31 each on the first four seats, the next four brought a premium of $32 each and then jumped to premiums of $39 each. The two end seats at the right of the central aisle brought a premium of $75 each and the two on the opposite side premiums of $78 each, the best premiums of the day's sale and probably of the season. Then the premiums dropped to $51, $50, $49, and gradually down until the last seats in row K sold at premiums of $32 each.

Row M Shows Falling Off.

In the next row the best premium secured was $58 each for a group of three seats, and the next best was two which sold for premiums of $50 each. The row closed at premiums of $35.50 each. In row M, which is usually about where the highest premiums are found each season, the best secured this morning was $53 for one seat, and the next best premium in that row was $40 each for six seats.

In row N a premium of $59 each was secured for the two end seats at the left of the right aisle, and the seats at the sides of the central aisle brought premiums of $50 and $52 each, the highest being for the seats at the left side of the aisle. In row O the best premium secured was $53 for the two seats at the left of the right aisle, but seven other seats sold for premiums of $51 each in that row, the ends of the row selling at premiums of $31 each seat. In row P the high premium was $49 each for a group of four seats to the right of the right aisle. One other seat sold for a premium of $45 and several more sold at premiums of $42 and $40 each.

In row Q the best premium secured was $51 for four end seats, two on either side of the right aisle and a premium of only a dollar less was paid each for the four seats, two on either side of the center aisle. In the next row $51.50 was the best premium secured and the whole row did not average about $32 each in premiums. Row S had $51 as the highest premium given but the whole row averaged a considerably higher premium than did row R.

Row T opened at a premium of $21 and closed at a premium of $31, while the highest premium given was $46.50 for one seat, which was not an end one but was required by a ticket agency to make up the order in that row. The row averaged premiums of about $36 each. Row U opened at $31.50 and the best premium secured in that row was $41.50.

POST, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1911

$96 FOR SEAT AT SYMPHONY

Rush to Get Rows Where Hats May Be Worn

When the officials of Symphony Hall enforced the "no hat" rule last winter they builded better than they knew, as the first auction sale of Symphony seats for the season of 1911-12 yesterday, in Symphony Hall, proved. The prices for the seats in the last two rows on either side of the first balcony, against the walls, where hats may be worn, reached figures that ranged some 10 per cent higher than the figures of last season, and the bidders were women, who bid personally (not removing their hats) or through agents who were present. This unforeseen rise in prices occasioned an astonished rustle on the part of the people present who had waited until prices should fall the expected amount to purchase seats in the last rows. Instead, the bidding became brisker than ever. Suddenly a man whispered to his neighbor, "They're all hats!" and an illumined smile sped over the faces in Symphony Hall.

As a whole, the averages tallied pretty closely with those of last year. The bidding was steady, the market "firmer," so to speak, and the prices rose and fell in a logical manner, as the most desired seats were approached and disposed of. Certain individual bids went higher than the highest bids last season. The seats Nos. 18 and 19 in row K went at a premium of $78, or, adding the "upset" price, $18, a total of $96, as against a seat in row N, which went at $78, or a total of $91, last year. A second pair of seats in row K yesterday morning netted a premium of $75, and the seat No. 5 in row A of the first balcony brought $76. The average for the back row on this side of the balcony, thanks to the ladies, was nearly $40.

On both floor and balcony there was a decided rally as the last seats were reached, and no doubt many who attended wished that they had bought earlier in the fray, or decided to wait over until the sale of the $10 seats this morning. From about rows L to X, just over the middle of the aisle that divides Symphony Hall crosswise, the averages were highest, having reached a general figure of $45 to $50.

There were more people present at this auction sale than there were last year, and the effect of the late scare in the copper market, which it was feared would influence the prices of Symphony seats this season, had no very apparent effect.

This morning the $10 seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Symphony Orchestra will be sold, the sale opening at 10 o'clock. Tomorrow, Wednesday, there will be no sale. On Thursday the $18 seats for the Saturday night concerts will be sold, and on Friday the last Symphony sale this season, the $10 seats for the same events will be disposed of.

From SUN,

Address New York City.

Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five evening and five afternoon concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall in the coming season. The evening concerts will be on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 23. Max Fiedler will again be the conductor, this being the fourth and final year of his engagement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The sololists announced for the year are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Alwin Schroeder. The orchestra has already a very large subscription for the season, and the tickets for those who have already subscribed will be ready for delivery at the box office, Carnegie Hall, tomorrow. The general sale of season tickets will open at the box office, Carnegie Hall, Monday, October 9. Conductor Fiedler is due to land in New York on Tuesday next.

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1911

SYMPHONY SEATS BRING GOOD PRICES

Yesterday the $10 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1911-12 were sold, the prices as a whole being about the same as last year. The seats that were sold were the last nine rows on the floor and the last five rows on the first balcony An end seat in row KK brought a premium of $27. Most of the seats in this row brought bids of more than $20, and the cheapest seats brought bids of $6.80.

ADVERTISER, WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 27, 1911

$26.50 HIGH PREMIUM FOR $10 SYMPHONY SEATS

Attendance Not so Large as on Monday's Auction, but Bidding Was Very Lively.

At the sale yesterday morning of $10 seats at the Symphony orchestra Friday afternoon rehearsals the highest premium paid was $26.50, the seats being those on the floor beneath the first balcony and the few rear rows in the first balcony itself. The attendance at the sale was not so large as on the day previous when the better seats were sold, but the bidding was lively.

At the similar sale last year the best premium secured on these seats was $32.

That was the first row offered for sale and it opened with a premium of $20, and the three end seats in the row sold at premiums of $17.50 each, but all the central portion of row KK sold for premiums of over $20 each per seat.

As the distance back from the stage increased the amount of premiums offered steadily decreased. The next row, LL, opened at premiums of $18 and closed at $16, with $24.50 the best premium secured in the row.

Row MM opened at premiums of $16, closed with premiums of $15.50, and $17.50 was the best secured in the row. In row NN, the best premium was $18, although $17 and $17.50 were paid as premiums for other seats in the same row, and the smallest premium in that row was $13.50 each for two seats.

In Row OO the high premium was $16 and the lowest was $11 for one seat. In row PP the best premium was $11.50 and the smallest $9.50.

Several seats that had not been called for promptly were resold, and in all cases brought much less than when first knocked down by the auctioneer.

HERALD, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1911

$30 FOR $10 SEAT AT SYMPHONY

That Was the Highest Premium for 500 Seats at the Public Rehearsals.

Dispatch and generous bidding characterized the auction sale yesterday at Symphony Hall of the $10 seats for the 24 public Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

There were 500 of the $10 seats and they were snapped up in less than two hours by music lovers and agents for ticket brokers.

The highest premium was $30 each for several in row KK.

Tomorrow the $18 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be auctioned, and the $10 seats will be sold Friday.

STAATSZEITUNG,

n

ress New York City.

SEP 24 1911

Die Sommertemperatur ist in New-York eine fast noch ungebrochene, aber ein Anzeichen einer nicht allzu fernen Aenderung der Witterungsverhältnisse liegt doch schon vor: die Leitungen unserer großen Symphonie-Orchester senden uns ausführliche Programme für die kommende Saison.

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester wird auch in der kommenden Saison seine üblichen fünf Abend- und fünf Nachmittags-Konzerte in Carnegie Hall abhalten, und zwar werden die Ersteren am 9. Nov., 7. Dez., 11. Jan., 22. Febr. und 21. März stattfinden, während die Matinee-Konzerte an den Nachmittagen des 11. Nov., 9. Dez., 13. Jan., 24. Febr und 23. März zur Abhaltung gelangen werden. Die musikalische Leitung der Gesellschaft liegt auch in diesem Jahre in Händen von Max Fiedler, und zwar handelt es sich um das vierte und letzte in seinem Kontrakt vorgesehene Jahr.

Die Solisten-Liste ist wieder eine höchst glänzende, denn sie enthält die Namen der Damen Schumann-Heink, Farrar, Homer und Kathleen Parlow, sowie der Herren Joseph Hofmann und Alwin Schröder. Wie uns die Leitung mittheilt, ist fast die gesammte Subskription des Vorjahres erneuert worden wozu zahlreiche neue Abonnenten getreten sind. Die bereits abonnirten Billets können von morgen, dem 25. Sept. an, an der Kasse in Carnegie Hall abgeholt werden. Der Verkauf der übrigbleibenden Saison-Tickets beginnt Montag, den 9. Oktober.

Herr Fiedler hat sich letzte Woche in Bremen nach Amerika eingeschifft und wird kommenden Dienstag hier erwartet.

[15]

GLOBE—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

CONDUCTOR OF THE SYMPHONY HERE

Max Fiedler Returns From Europe.

Brings With Him Many New Works For Performance This Winter.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Symphony orchestra, and Mrs Fiedler arrived in Boston from New York yesterday afternoon and went directly to their apartments in Hemenway chambers, which will be their home for the next seven months.

MAX FIEDLER.

They landed in Hoboken Tuesday after having a stormy crossing from Bremen on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. Both are in exceedingly good health, Mrs Fiedler having quite recovered from her illness of last spring.

Mr and Mrs Fiedler spent a greater part of the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, where is the home of Richard Strauss, and Mr Fiedler saw a great deal of the great composer.

"I only wish," said Mr Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months. Besides working on this Strauss is writing a motet for 20 voices, he is composing stage music for one of Rheinhardt's stage plays and is at work on a one-act opera.

"He has played for me so far as he could the first movement of his symphony and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.'

"In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak. Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with but with everything diminished to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work.

"Bostonians will be interested to know that I have been in correspondence with Debussy this last summer and he assures me that his 'Gigue,' which is the first part of the composition of which 'Rondes de Printemps' and 'Iberia' are respectively the second and third, will be published this winter in time for performance in Boston, and I expect to give the first performance of it in America."

THE BOSTON AMERICAN THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911.

GOOD DEMAND AT SYMPHONY SALE

Society and its duly authorized agents were at Symphony Hall at 10 a. m. to-day, when the auction sale of $18 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts at Symphony Hall began. As usual, the great chart of the hall was shown on the platform and as seats were sold they were crossed off by a crayon on the end of a long pole.

The seats in front and in the rear of the hall are not so eagerly sought as those in the centre, and the bidding was not very spirited, as the A, B and C were run off at prices averaging $25 to $30 more than the regular price of the tickets.

The keen competition began at row K, and for seats on the aisle in row N. In the centre of the hall the highest premium of the day was paid. Those seats were knocked down for $52 each, making the actual price of those $18 seats $70, or a trifle more than $3 per concert.

The best known society people were not present in person, and such agents as Herrick, Connolly and others had orders to buy in many pairs of seats. Some wealthy peole sent their butlers or maids to secure the seats.

The sale of $10 Saturday evening seats will begin at 10 o'clock to-morrow, Friday morning.

ADVERTISER, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

ENTHUSIASTIC OVER NEW STRAUS SYMPHONY

MAX FIEDLER ARRIVES FOR SEASON'S WORK

Boston Audience Will Hear First Production of Comedy Overture by Max Reger.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Symphony orchestra, and Mrs. Fiedler arrived in Boston from New York yesterday afternoon and went directly to their apartments in Hemenway chambers, which will be their home for the next seven months.

They landed in Hoboken Tuesday after having a stormy crossing from Bremen on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. Both are in exceedingly good health, Mrs. Fiedler having quite recovered from her illness of last spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler spent a greater part of the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, where is the home of Richard Strauss, and Mr. Fiedler saw a great deal of the great composer.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions, in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months. Besides working on this, Strauss is writing a Motet for 20 voices; he is composing stage music for one of Rheinhardt's stage plays and is at work on a one-act opera.

"He has played for me so far as he could the first movement of his Symphony and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.'

"In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak. Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with but with everything diminished to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work.

"My first novelty which I will play at the first concert will be a Comedy Overture by Max Reger, Opus 120, on which the printer's ink is still fresh, as it is just from the press. I have brought with me the score and parts and my performance of it will be the first performance anywhere in the world.

"Bostonians will be interested to know that I have been in correspondence with Debussy this last summer and he assures me that his 'Gigue,' which is the first part of the composition of which 'Rondes de Printemps' and 'Iberia' are respectively the second and third, will be published this winter in time for performance in Boston, and I expect to give the first performance of it in America.

"In the list that I sent on I have named 38 works that are new to Boston. Of course, speaking confidentially, I doubt that I shall perform all of them but the best of them I certainly shall bring before the Symphony audiences. Of the works by comparatively new men I regard the Enesco Symphony as the most remarkable.

"We had a very jolly crossing for there were many musicians on board. Among those were Witek and Hoffmann of our own orchestra, Stock, the conductor of the Chicago orchestra, which is coming here this year, I understand, and should have a very warm welcome; Dippel of the Chicago Opera company, and Wilhelm Stengel, the husband of Madame Sembrich. I am very well and more than ready to start in on the season's work."

SYMPHONY SEAT SALE CONTINUES TODAY

The third day of the auction sales of Symphony season tickets comes today at 10 a.m. at Symphony Hall, when the $18 seats for the 24 Saturday night concerts will be sold. The same rules and regulations will prevail at this sale as prevailed at that of the $18 seat sale on Monday.

POST, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

HAS NOVELTIES FOR SYMPHONY

Max Fiedler Returns With 38 New Works

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Fiedler arrived in Boston yesterday. Both are in exceedingly good health, Mrs. Fiedler having quite recovered from her illness of last spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler spent a greater part of the summer at Garmisch in Bavaria, where is the home of Richard Strauss, and Mr. Fiedler saw a great deal of the great composer.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions, in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months. Besides working on this, Strauss is writing a motet for 20 voices; he is composing stage music for one of Rheinhardt's stage plays and is at work on a one-act opera.

Anxious to Play It

"He has played for me so far as he could the first movement of his symphony and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestra rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.' In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak.

"Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with but with everything diminished to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work.

First Time in World

"My first novelty which I will play at the first concert will be a comedy overture by Max Reger, Opus 120, on which the printer's ink is still fresh as it is just from the press. I have brought with me the score and parts and my performance of it will be the first performance anywhere in the world.

"Bostonians will be interested to know that I have been in correspondence with Debussy this last summer and he assures me that his 'Gigue,' which is the first part of the composition of which 'Rondes de Printemps' and 'Iberia' are respectively the second and third, will be published this winter in time for performance in Boston and I expect to give the first performance of it in America.

38 New Works

"In the list that I sent on I have named 38 works that are new to Boston. Of course, speaking confidentially, I doubt that I shall perform all of them but the best of them I certainly shall bring before the Symphony audiences. Of the works by comparatively new men I regard the Enesco Symphony as the most remarkable.

"We had a very jolly crossing, for there were many musicians on board. Among those were Witek and Hoffman of our own orchestra; Stock, the conductor of the Chicago Orchestra, which is coming here this year, I understand, and should have a very warm welcome; Dippel of the Chicago Opera Company and Wilhelm Stengel, the husband of Madame Sembrich. I am very well and more than ready to start in on the season's work."

HERALD, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

MAX FIEDLER HAS RETURNED

Symphony Orchestra Conductor and Wife Back in Boston for Seven Months.

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Fiedler arrived in Boston from New York yesterday afternoon and went directly to their apartments in Hemenway Chambers, which will be their home for the next seven months. They landed in Hoboken Tuesday, after having a stormy crossing from Bremen on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. Both are in good health, Mrs. Fiedler having recovered from her illness of last spring.

They spent the greater part of the summer at Garmisch, Bavaria, where is the home of Richard Strauss, and Mr. Fiedler saw a great deal of the composer.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions, in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer, and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months. Besides working on this, Strauss is writing a Motet for 20 voices; he is composing stage music for one of Rheinhardt's stage plays, and is at work on a one-act opera.

"He has played for me, so far as he could, the first movement of his symphony, and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.' In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields, and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak. Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with, but with everything diminished to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work.

"My first novelty which I will play at the first concert will be a comedy overture by Max Reger, opus 120, on which the the printer's ink is still fresh, as it is just from the press. I have brought with me the score and parts, and my performance of it will be the first performance anywhere in the world.

"Bostonians will be interested to know that I have been in correspondence with Debussy this last summer, and he assures me that his 'Gigue,' which is the first part of the composition of which 'Rondes de Printemps' and 'Iberia' are respectively the second and third, will be published this winter in time for performance in Boston, and I expect to give the first performance of it in America.

"In the list that I sent on I have named 38 works that are new to Boston. Of course, speaking confidentially, I I doubt that I shall perform all of them, but the best of them I certainly shall bring before the Symphony audiences. Of the works by comparatively new men, I regard the Enesco symphony as the most remarkable.

"We had a very jolly crossing, for there were many musicians on board. Among those were Witek and Hoffmann of our own orchestra, Stock, the conductor of the Chicago Orchestra, which is coming here this year, I understand, and should have a very warm welcome; Dippel of the Chicago Opera Company and Wilhelm Stengel, the husband of Mme. Sembrich. I am very well and more than ready to start in on the season's work."

THE BOSTON AMERICAN, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

FIEDLER TELLS SYMPHONY PLANS

Max Fieder, conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, is in Boston for the opening of the season. In an interview he outlined plans for the Symphony season and told of some works that Boston will hear this year for the first time. He said:

"Bostonians will be interested to know that I have been in correspondence with Debussy this last Summer and he assures me that his 'Gigue,' which is the first part of the composition of which 'Rondes de Printemps' and 'Iberia' are respectively the second and third, will be published this Winter in time for performance in Boston and I expect to give the first performance of it in America.

38 New Works.

"In the list that I sent on I have named thirty-eight works that are new in Boston. Of course, speaking confidentially, I doubt that I shall perform all of them, but the best of them I certainly shall bring before the Symphony audiences. Of the works by comparatively new men I regard the Enesco Symphony as the most remarkable.

Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler spent a greater part of the Summer at Garmisch in Bavaria, where is the home of Richard Strauss, and Mr. Fiedler saw a great deal of the great composer.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this Winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions, in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months. Besides working on this, Strauss is writing a motet for twenty voices; he is composing stage music for one of Rheinhardt's stage plays and is at work on a one-act opera.

The "Alps Symphony."

"He has played for me so far as he could the first movement of his symphony and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestra rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.' In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak.

"Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with but with everything diminished to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work.

"My first novelty which I will play at the first concert will be a comedy overture, by Max Reger, Opus 120, on which the printer's ink is still fresh as it is just from the press. I have brought with me the score and parts and my performance of it will be the first performance anywhere in the world.

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1911

Mr. Fiedler has set at rest the rumors that Strauss's new "Alpine" symphony would be ready for performance in the current musical year. The conductor and the composer talked much about it while they were living at Garmisch in Bavaria, last summer. The first part—the ascent and descent of a high mountain is written but not revised. The second and concluding part is not even sketched. Strauss, moreover, has other and more imperative tasks in hand, like music to decorate one of Reinhardt's impending productions.

ADVERTISER, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1911

$52 BEST PRICE FOR SATURDAY NIGHT CONCERTS

Symphony Concerts Seats Again Prove Attraction to Music Lovers—Great Variance in Prices.

Yesterday's sale of Saturday night concert seats for the 1911-12 season of Boston Symphony Orchestra brought high premiums for choice seats. In the first eight rows many seats in from the aisles went for $2 to $6 premium. In D row a center aisle seat was bid up to $12.50. From D row premiums advanced. In H $16.50 was high; I, $19.50; J, $21.50; K, $32; L, $25; M, $34; N, $52; O, $27.50, and P, $30, all for center aisle seats in those rows.

The highest premium was $52, for center aisle seat in N row.

The lowest premium was $1.50 for several seats at the right in the first three rows.

One man, who has bought seats at previous sales, was anxious to get two, and when he found that the price was soaring in row S, he bought only one, for which he paid $31. He was also the highest bidder for the next choice and he took the adjoining seat, getting it for $18.

JOURNAL—FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1911

Symphony Concert Seats Bring Large Premiums

Lively bidding was going on yesterday for seats for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this winter. One of the $18 seats went at $70.

With bids of 50 cents and $1 a well-dressed young woman forced a ticket speculator to pay a premium of $19.50 for seats Nos. 19 and 20 in row I. Seats adjoining them sold for only $6 premium.

For seats 18 and 19 on the left of the center aisle in row H a premium of $52 was paid. This was the largest premium paid for the Saturday evening concerts. The highest premium paid for the Friday afternoon rehearsals was $26 above this.

This morning at 10 o'clock the $7.50 seats will go on sale for the Saturday evening concerts.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

SYMPHONY SEATS AT $52

Highest Price Paid for Saturday-Night Concerts—It Was for Aisle Sittings in Row N

The sum of $52 was paid for two aisle seats in row N at this morning's sale of tickets for the twenty-four Saturday night Symphony concerts. The price came after a series of gradual advances which began to manifest themselves when row I was reached. The lowest premium was $1.50 for several seats at the right in the first three rows.

As an illustration of the sometimes unaccountable fluctuation in prices, two seats directly in front of those that brought $52 were sold at $27.50. There were other wide variations in prices, many of the discrepancies being in the prices of seats beside each other. At other times the differences were for corresponding seats across the centre aisle. In row F two end seats at the extreme left sold for a premium of $2, while the next three went for $12.50. In row I two seats on the centre aisle sold for $19.50, while the three adjoining ones brought only $6, and the lowest premium for seats in the row was $2.

For seats in row J there was spirited bidding. Two at the left of the centre aisle brought $21.50. The ones beside them were sold for $8.50, while two others not far away, desirable seats too, brought only $4. Row K seemed to be a favorite, and one man took four seats at a premium of $28. These were centre aisle seats, and all through the sale these places brought the best prices. The next best price was $32 on the left of the centre aisle, in row K, while an adjoining single seat was disposed of at $20. Another single seat farther along to the left, but an aisle seat, brought $25, and the last two left seats in the row found buyers at $5. In row L $25 was the highest price received, while in row M the highest was $34, which was paid for two seats, one at each side of the centre aisle. One man, who has bought seats at previous sales, was anxious to get two, and when he found that the price was soaring in row S, he bought only one, for which he paid $31. He was also the highest bidder for the next choice and he took the adjoining seat, getting it for $18. Thus he got seats 17 and 18 in the row.

Toward the rear of the hall there was a constant sagging in prices, and in row W, the last one before the broad cross aisle is reached, the prices ranged from $5 to $9.50. In row X, the front one in the rear section of the hall, the prices started at $6 for the extreme right-aisle seats, and throughout this row there were slight fluctuations in prices. Thereafter the premiums were comparatively low.

[16]

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

MAX FIEDLER HOME FROM TRIP ABROAD

Symphony Leader Tells of New Production For First Concert.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Fiedler arrived in Boston from New York yesterday afternoon and went directly to the Hemenway Chambers, where they will make their home for the next seven months. Both are in exceedingly good health, Mrs. Fiedler having quite recovered from her illness of last spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler spent a greater part of the summer at Garmisch in Bavaria, where Richard Strauss lives, and Mr. Fiedler saw a great deal of the composer.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.' In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak. Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with, but with everything diminished to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work.

"My first novelty which I will play at the first concert will be a 'Comedy Overture' by Max Reger, on which the printer's ink is still fresh, as it is just from the press. I have brought with me the score and parts and my performance of it will be the first anywhere in the world.

"Bostonians will be interested to know that I have been in correspondence with Debussy this last summer, and he assures me that his 'Gigue,' which is the first part of the composition of which 'Rondes de Printempts' and 'Iberia' are respectively the second and third, will be published this winter in time for performance in Boston, and I expect to give the first performance of it in America.

"In the list that I sent on I have named thirty-eight works that are new to Boston. Of course, speaking confidentially, I doubt that I shall perform all of them, but the best of them I certainly shall bring before the Symphony audiences. Of the works by comparatively new men I regard the Enesco symphony as the most remarkable."

RECORD, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

FIEDLER BACK FOR SEASON

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Symphony orchestra, and Mrs Fiedler, are now in Hemenway chambers, which will be their home for the next seven months.

They landed in Hoboken Tuesday after having a stormy crossing from Bremen on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. Both are in exceedingly good health, Mrs. Fiedler having quite recovered from her illness of last spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler spent a greater part of the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, where is the home of Richard Strauss, and Mr. Fiedler saw a great deal of the great composer.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions, in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months. Besides working on this, Strauss is writing a Motet for 20 voices; he is composing stage music for one of Rheinhardt's stage plays and is at work on a one-act opera.

"He has played for me so far as he could the first movement of his Symphony and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.'

$52 FOR SYMPHONY SEAT

Today's sale of Saturday night concert seats for the 1911-12 season of Boston Symphony Orchestra brought high premiums for choice seats. In the first eight rows many seats [illegible] from the aisles went for $2 to $6 premium. In D row premiums advanced. In H $16.50 was high; I, $19.50; J, $21.50; K, $32; [illegible] $25; M, $34; N, $52; O, $27.50, and P, $30 all for center aisle seats in those rows.

The highest premium was $52, for center aisle seat in N row.

HERALD, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

BRISK BIDDING FOR SYMPHONY CONCERT SEATS

Premiums Average Lower Than for Rehearsals; $52 Being the Highest Bid.

Two seats sold for $70 each today in Symphony Hall at the auction sale of $18 seats for the series of 24 Saturday evening concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra for the season of 1911-12.

There was a premium of $52 paid for seats numbered 18 and 19 on the left of the centre aisle in row M. It was the highest premium paid for seats for the Saturday evening concerts and was $26 lower than the high premium paid for the Friday afternoon rehearsals.

The seats auctioned today were all those on the floor with the exception of the last seven rows, and also included both sides of the first balcony and the first four rows of the balcony centre. There was a good attendance. The sale began at 10 o'clock. Bidding was brisk and prices averaged about as usual.

There were the customary freak jumps and slumps in the bidding. High premiums are usually the result of a desire to procure seats which patrons have been accustomed to use for years. There was also the usual rivalry between ticket brokers and individual buyers.

A fashionably dressed young woman with huge ostrich plumes in her hat forced a ticket speculator by her successive bids of 50 cents and $1 to pay $19.50 premiums for seats No. 19 and 20 on the end of the centre aisle in row I, suddenly quitting when that figure was reached. Seats adjoining them sold for $6 premiums.

The seats in row A at the opening of the sale brought premiums of $1 and $1.50, but the aisle seats sold for twice as much.

The highest premium paid for a seat in row E, sales of which started at $1, was $9.50 each for three seats on the aisle.

Choice seats in row F brought $15, and the highest in row G was $12. The two end seats on each side of the centre aisle in row H, numbers 17, 18, 19 and 20, each brought bonuses of $16.50. In row I $19.50 was the highest.

Row K opened at $4.50. A broker bought four seats on the right of the centre aisle and paid $28 premium for each, while the two end seats across the aisle sold for $32 a seat. The highest in row L was $25. In row N the two end seats on the right of the centre aisle sold for $16 premiums and the two end seats across the aisle, because of rivalry of bidders, jumped to $50, while inner seats next them sold for $12 and $19 each.

At 10 o'clock tomorrow the sale of $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will begin.

HERALD, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1911.

HIGH PREMIUMS FOR SATURDAY CONCERT SEATS

Auction of $10 Seats at Symphony Hall Brings Out the Largest Crowd.

The highest premiums paid today at the auction sale of $10 seats for the 24 Saturday evening Symphony concerts were $17, which was higher than the best price for these seats last year.

An advertisement in the newspapers yesterday announced that the $7.50 seats would be auctioned today and caused some confusion. Patrons who looked for these seats were informed that the advertising men had sent to the newspapers a slip that was six years old and that nothing cheaper than $10 seats had been available for several years.

There was a larger attendance today than at any time during this week's sale. An absence of bidding on the part of brokers was noticeable. The seats sold included the last seven rows on the floor, from row LL to row SS, the last four rows in the balcony centre and the entire centre of the second balcony. The sides of the upper balcony are held for sale on the nights of the concerts.

Premiums of $15 were scattered according to the eagerness of patrons to get seats which they have had in other seasons. Some of the seats on the floor went for a premium of $1.50, but the average premium was about $6.

WOMAN'S WIT BEATS BROKER

She Suddenly Stops High Bidding on Tickets for Symphony Concerts.

$18 SEATS AUCTIONED OFF

Premiums Average Lower Than for Rehearsals — Highest Bid Yesterday $52.

"Eighteen! I've got $18. Who'll give $19? That lady offers $19. Will anyone give $20. Do I hear $20?

"Nineteen-fifty," chirped the ticket speculator.

"Do you say $20?" asked the auctioneer, glancing at the young lady under a plumed hat of the latest dimensions, whose rapid raises of 50 cents and $1 in the musical jackpot, had aroused the sporting blood of her professional rival.

"Twenty?" reiterated he of the glib tongue, from his exalted position behind the footlights, and he lingered on the figure, but the ostrich plumes didn't wag assent this time, and, as a result, the speculator was caught in his own trap, giving $19.50 bonus on each of two seats when seats on both sides of them sold for $6 and $7 premiums at the auction yesterday in Symphony Hall of the $18 seats for the 24 Saturday evening concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the coming season.

The highest premium paid at yesterday's sale was $52 each for seats 18 and 19 on the left of the centre aisle in row M. Added to the flat price of $18 this meant that the purchaser had to pay $70 seat, which was $26 a seat less than the highest premium paid for the Friday afternoon rehearsals.

The seats sold yesterday were all those on the floor, excepting the last seven rows from KK to SS, both sides of the first balcony, and the first four rows of the balcony-centre. The highest premium paid for balcony seats was $16 for seats numbered 28, 29, 30 and 31 in row A.

There was a good attendance. The sale began at 10 o'clock. Bidding was brisk and prices averaged about as usual.

There were the customary freak jumps and slumps in the bidding. High premiums are usually the result of a desire to procure seats which patrons have been accustomed to use for years. There was also the usual rivalry between ticket brokers and individual buyers.

The seats in row A at the opening of the sale brought premiums of $1 and $1.50, but the aisle seats sold for twice as much.

The highest premium paid for a seat in row E, sales of which started at $1, was $9.50 each for three seats on the aisle.

Choice seats in row F brought $15, and the highest in row G was $12. The two end seats on each side of the centre aisle in row H, numbers 17, 18, 19 and 20, each brought bonuses of $16.50. In row I $19.50 was the highest.

Row K opened at $4.50. A broker bought four seats on the right of the centre aisle and paid $28 premium for each, while the two end seats across the aisle sold for $32 a seat. The highest in row L was $25. In row N the two end seats on the right of the centre aisle sold for $16 premiums and the two end seats across the aisle, because of rivalry of bidders, jumped to $50, while inner seats next them sold for $12 and $19 each.

At 10 o'clock tomorrow the sale of $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will begin.

At 10 o'clock today the sale of $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will begin.

TRAVELER, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1911

Musical Events

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The 31st season of the Symphony orchestra will begin on next Friday afternoon when the first public rehearsal of the season will be given, and Saturday evening, which brings the first concert. It will mark the first appearance with the Symphony orchestra of Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera House, a lyric soprano, who in two seasons has come into the foremost rank of contemporary singers. Mme. Gluck has been heard here in choral concert and also in opera, creating a most favorable impression. She will sing a Mozart aria as her first number, and as her second the soprano air from Charpentier's "Louise."

Mr. Fiedler will introduce one of the season's novelties at the first concert, the comedy overture, opus 120, by Max Reger. The symphony will be Schumann's ever-welcome B-flat Major, and the concert will open with Weber's "Jubilee" overture.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings at 8, on Oct. 19, Nov. 16, December 14, January 18, February 8 and 29, March 28 and April 25. The soloists so far engaged are Katharine Goodson, pianist; Lilla Ormond, contralto; Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Rudolph Ganz, pianist; Josef Hofmann, pianist; Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist.

POST, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1911

PRIZE SEATS BROUGHT $52

Highest Premium Paid for Saturday Symphony Tickets

Two 24-night Saturday Symphony concert tickets sold at a premium of $52 in yesterday's auction sale of seats. The prize seats were situated in row N and were next to the main aisle.

Two seats directly in front of those that brought a premium of $52 were sold at a premium of $27.50. In row F two end seats went for $2 extra, while the two next to them went for $12.50. In row I two seats on the centre aisle were bid up to $19.50, while three adjoining ones brought only $6 and a short distance away in the same row only $2.

Seats at the extreme right in the first three rows brought $1.50. They are so near the orchestra that few of the acoustical effects can be gained and too far to one side to make their occupants conspicuous.

For seats in row J there was spirited bidding. Two at the left of the centre aisle brought $21.50. The ones beside them were sold for $3.50, while two others not far away, desirable seats too, brought only $4. Row K seemed to be a favorite, and one man took four seats at a premium of $28. These were centre aisle seats, and all through the sale these places brought the best prices. The next best price was $32, on the left of the centre aisle, in row K; while an adjoining single seat was disposed of at $20. Another single seat [illegible] farther along to the left, but an aisle s[illegible], brought $25, and the last two left se[illegible] in the row found buyers at $5. In ro[illegible]L $25 was highest price received, while [illegible] row M the highest was $34, which [illegible]as paid for two seats, one at each [illegible]de of the centre aisle. One man who [illegible]d bought seats at previous sales was [illegible]xious to get two, and when he found [illegible]hat the price was soaring in row S he [illegible]ought only one, for which he paid $31. [illegible] was also the highest bidder for the [illegible]ext choice and he took the adjoining [illegible]t, getting it for $18. Thus he got seats [illegible] and 18 in the row.

Toward the rear [illegible] the hall there was a constant sagging [illegible]in prices, and in row W, the last one [illegible]efore the broad cross aisle is reached, [illegible]e prices ranged from $5 to $9.50. In r[illegible]w X, the front one in the rear section [illegible] of the hall, the prices started at $6 f[illegible] the extreme right aisle seats, and throu[illegible]hout this row there were slight fluctuat[illegible]ns in prices. Thereafter the premiums [illegible]ere comparatively low.

HERALD, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30. 1911.

$17 PREMIUMS AT SYMPHONY SALE

Prices for $10 Seats Exceed Those of Last Year.

The highest premiums paid yesterday at the auction sale of $10 seats for the 24 Saturday evening Symphony concerts were $17, which was higher than the best price for these seats last year.

An advertisement in the newspapers Thursday announced that the $7.50 seats would be auctioned yesterday and caused some confusion. Patrons who looked for these seats were informed that the advertising man had sent to the newspapers a slip that was six years old and that nothing cheaper than $10 seats had been available for several years.

There was a larger attendance yesterday than at any time during this week's sale. An absence of bidding on the part of brokers was noticeable. The seats sold included the last seven rows on the floor, from row LL to row SS, the last four rows in the balcony centre and the entire centre of the second balcony. The sides of the upper balcony are held for sale on the nights of the concerts.

Premiums of $15 were scattered according to the eagerness of patrons to get seats which they have had in other seasons. Some of the seats on the floor went for a premium of $1.50, but the average premium was about $6.

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1911.

Symphony Concert Seats Sell High at Auction

More good prices were realized in the auction sales yesterday of the $10 seats for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Those disposed of yesterday brought premiums as high as $17. An absence of bidding on the part of the brokers was noticed. The seats sold included the last seven rows on the floor. The sides of the upper balcony are held for sale on the nights of the concerts. Premiums of $15 were scattered, according to the eagerness of patrons to get seats which they have held during other seasons.

JOURNAL—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

MAX FIEDLER HOME FROM TRIP ABROAD

Symphony Leader Tells of New Production For First Concert.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Fiedler arrived in Boston from New York yesterday afternoon and went directly to the Hemenway Chambers, where they will make their home for the next seven months. Both are in exceedingly good health, Mrs. Fiedler having quite recovered from her illness of last spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler spent a greater part of the summer at Garmisch in Bavaria, where Richard Strauss lives, and Mr. Fiedler saw a great deal of the composer.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.' In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak. Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with, but with everything diminished to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work.

"My first novelty which I will play at the first concert will be a 'Comedy Overture' by Max Reger, on which the printer's ink is still fresh, as it is just from the press. I have brought with me the score and parts and my performance of it will be the first anywhere in the world.

"Bostonians will be interested to know that I have been in correspondence with Debussy this last summer, and he assures me that his 'Gigue,' which is the first part of the composition of which 'Rondes de Printempts' and 'Iberia' are respectively the second and third, will be published this winter in time for performance in Boston, and I expect to give the first performance of it in America.

"In the list that I sent on I have named thirty-eight works that are new to Boston. Of course, speaking confidentially, I doubt that I shall perform all of them, but the best of them I certainly shall bring before the Symphony audiences. Of the works by comparatively new men I regard the Enesco symphony as the most remarkable."

RECORD, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

FIEDLER BACK FOR SEASON

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Symphony orchestra, and Mrs Fiedler, are now in Hemenway chambers, which will be their home for the next seven months.

They landed in Hoboken Tuesday after having a stormy crossing from Bremen on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. Both are in exceedingly good health, Mrs. Fiedler having quite recovered from her illness of last spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler spent a greater part of the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, where is the home of Richard Strauss, and Mr. Fiedler saw a great deal of the great composer.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions, in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months. Besides working on this, Strauss is writing a Motet for 20 voices; he is composing stage music for one of Rheinhardt's stage plays and is at work on a one-act opera.

"He has played for me so far as he could the first movement of his Symphony and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.'

$52 FOR SYM- PHONY SEAT

Today's sale of Saturday night concert seats for the 1911-12 season of Boston Symphony Orchestra brought high premiums for choice seats. In the first eight rows many seats from the aisles went for $2 to $6 premium. In D row premiums advanced. In H $6.50 was high; I, $19.50; J, $21.50; K, $32; L, $25; M, $34; N, $52; O, $27.50, and P, $20. All for center aisle seats in those rows.

The highest premium was $52, for center aisle seat in N row.

HERALD, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1911

BRISK BIDDING FOR SYMPHONY CONCERT SEATS

Premiums Average Lower Than for Rehearsals; $52 Being the Highest Bid.

Two seats sold for $70 each today in Symphony Hall at the auction sale of $18 seats for the series of 24 Saturday evening concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra for the season of 1911-12.

There was a premium of $52 paid for seats numbered 18 and 19 on the left of the centre aisle in row M. It was the highest premium paid for seats for the Saturday evening concerts and was $26 lower than the high premium paid for the Friday afternoon rehearsals.

The seats auctioned today were all those on the floor with the exception of the last seven rows, and also included both sides of the first balcony and the first four rows of the balcony centre. There was a good attendance. The sale began at 10 o'clock. Bidding was brisk and prices averaged about as usual.

There were the customary freak jumps and slumps in the bidding. High premiums are usually the result of a desire to procure seats which patrons have been accustomed to use for years. There was also the usual rivalry between ticket brokers and individual buyers.

A fashionably dressed young woman with huge ostrich plumes in her hat forced a ticket speculator by her successive bids of 50 cents and $1 to pay $19.50 premiums for seats No. 19 and 20 on the end of the centre aisle in row I, suddenly quitting when that figure was reached. Seats adjoining them sold for $6 premiums.

The seats in row A at the opening of the sale brought premiums of $1 and $1.50, but the aisle seats sold for twice as much.

The highest premium paid for a seat in row E, sales of which started at $1, was $9.50 each for three seats on the aisle.

Choice seats in row F brought $15, and the highest in row G was $12. The two end seats on each side of the centre aisle in row H, numbers 17, 18, 19 and 20, each brought bonuses of $16.50. In row I $19.50 was the highest.

Row K opened at $4.50. A broker bought four seats on the right of the centre aisle and paid $28 premium for each, while the two end seats across the aisle sold for $32 a seat. The highest in row L was $25. In row N the two end seats on the right of the centre aisle sold for $16 premiums and the two end seats across the aisle, because of rivalry of bidders, jumped to $50, while inner seats next them sold for $12 and $19 each.

At 10 o'clock tomorrow the sale of $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will begin.

HERALD, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1911.

HIGH PREMIUMS FOR SATURDAY CONCERT SEATS

Auction of $10 Seats at Symphony Hall Brings Out the Largest Crowd.

The highest premiums paid today at the auction sale of $10 seats for the 24 Saturday evening Symphony concerts were $17, which was higher than the best price for these seats last year.

An advertisement in the newspapers yesterday announced that the $7.50 seats would be auctioned today and caused some confusion. Patrons who looked for these seats were informed that the advertising men had sent to the newspapers a slip that was six years old and that nothing cheaper than $10 seats had been available for several years.

There was a larger attendance today than at any time during this week's sale. An absence of bidding on the part of brokers was noticeable. The seats sold included the last seven rows on the floor, from row LL to row SS, the last four rows in the balcony centre and the entire centre of the second balcony. The sides of the upper balcony are held for sale on the nights of the concerts.

Premiums of $15 were scattered according to the eagerness of patrons to get seats which they have had in other seasons. Some of the seats on the floor went for a premium of $1.50, but the average premium was about $6.

WOMAN'S WIT BEATS BROKER

She Suddenly Stops High Bidding on Tickets for Symphony Concerts.

$18 SEATS AUCTIONED OFF

Premiums Average Lower Than for Rehearsals — Highest Bid Yesterday $52.

"Eighteen! I've got $18. Who'll give $19? That lady offers $19. Will anyone give $20. Do I hear $20?

"Nineteen-fifty," chirped the ticket speculator.

"Do you say $20?" asked the auctioneer, glancing at the young lady under a plumed hat of the latest dimensions, whose rapid raises of 50 cents and $1 in the musical jackpot, had aroused the sporting blood of her professional rival.

"Twenty?" reiterated he of the glib tongue, from his exalted position behind the footlights, and he lingered on the figure, but the ostrich plumes didn't wag assent this time, and, as a result, the speculator was caught in his own trap, giving $19.50 bonus on each of two seats when seats on both sides of them sold for $6 and $7 premiums at the auction yesterday in Symphony Hall of the $18 seats for the 24 Saturday evening concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the coming season.

The highest premium paid at yesterday's sale was $52 each for seats 18 and 19 on the left of the centre aisle in row M. Added to the flat price of $18 this meant that the purchaser had to pay $70 seat, which was $26 a seat less than the highest premium paid for the Friday afternoon rehearsals.

The seats sold yesterday were all those on the floor, excepting the last seven rows from KK to SS, both sides of the first balcony, and the first four rows of the balcony-centre. The highest premium paid for balcony seats was $16 for seats numbered 28, 29, 30 and 31 in row A.

There was a good attendance. The sale began at 10 o'clock. Bidding was brisk and prices averaged about as usual.

There were the customary freak jumps and slumps in the bidding. High premiums are usually the result of a desire to procure seats which patrons have been accustomed to use for years. There was also the usual rivalry between ticket brokers and individual buyers.

The seats in row A at the opening of the sale brought premiums of $1 and $1.50, but the aisle seats sold for twice as much.

The highest premium paid for a seat in row E, sales of which started at $1, was $9.50 each for three seats on the aisle.

Choice seats in row F brought $15, and the highest in row G was $12. The two end seats on each side of the centre aisle in row H, numbers 17, 18, 19 and 20, each brought bonuses of $16.50. In row I $19.50 was the highest.

Row K opened at $4.50. A broker bought four seats on the right of the centre aisle and paid $28 premium for each, while the two end seats across the aisle sold for $32 a seat. The highest in row L was $25. In row N the two end seats on the right of the centre aisle sold for $16 premiums and the two end seats across the aisle, because of rivalry of bidders, jumped to $50, while inner seats next them sold for $12 and $19 each.

At 10 o'clock tomorrow the sale of $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will begin.

At 10 o'clock today the sale of $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will begin.

TRAVELER, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1911

Musical Events

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The 31st season of the Symphony orchestra will begin on next Friday afternoon when the first public rehearsal of the season will be given, and Saturday evening, which brings the first concert. It will mark the first appearance with the Symphony orchestra of Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera House, a lyric soprano, who in two seasons has come into the foremost rank of contemporary singers. Mme. Gluck has been heard here in choral concert and also in opera, creating a most favorable impression. She will sing a Mozart aria as her first number, and as her second the soprano air from Charpentier's "Louise."

Mr. Fiedler will introduce one of the season's novelties at the first concert, the comedy overture, opus 120, by Max Reger. The symphony will be Schumann's ever-welcome B-flat Major, and the concert will open with Weber's "Jubilee" overture.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings at 8, on Oct. 19., Nov. 16. December 14, January 18, February 8 and 29, March 28 and April 25. The soloists so far engaged are Katharine Goodson, pianist; Lilla Ormond, contralto; Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Rudolph Ganz, pianist; Josef Hofmann, pianist; Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist.

POST, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1911

PRIZE SEATS BROUGHT $52

Highest Premium Paid for Saturday Symphony Tickets

Two 24-night Saturday Symphony concert tickets sold at a premium of $52 in yesterday's auction sale of seats. The prize seats were situated in row N and were next to the main aisle.

Two seats directly in front of those that brought a premium of $52 were sold at a premium of $27.50. In row F two end seats went for $2 extra, while the two next to them went for $12.50. In row I two seats on the centre aisle were bid up to $19.50, while three adjoining ones brought only $6 and a short distance away in the same row only $2.

Seats at the extreme right in the first three rows brought $1.50. They are so near the orchestra that few of the acoustical effects can be gained and too far to one side to make their occupants conspicuous.

For seats in row J there was spirited bidding. Two at the left of the centre aisle brought $21.50. The ones beside them were sold for $8.50, while two others not far away, desirable seats too, brought only $4. Row K seemed to be a favorite, and one man took four seats at a premium of $28. These were centre aisle seats, and all through the sale these places brought the best prices. The next best price was $32, on the left of the centre aisle, in row K; while an adjoining single seat was disposed of at $20. Another single seat farther along to the left, but an aisle seat, brought $25, and the last two left seats in the row found buyers at $5. In row L $25 was highest price received, while in row M the highest was $34, which was paid for two seats, one at each side of the centre aisle. One man who had bought seats at previous sales was anxious to get two, and when he found that the price was soaring in row S he bought only one, for which he paid $31. He was also the highest bidder for the next choice and he took the adjoining seat, getting it for $18. Thus he got seats 17 and 18 in the row.

Toward the rear of the hall there was a constant sagging in prices, and in row W, the last one before the broad cross aisle is reached, the prices ranged from $5 to $9.50. In row X, the front one in the rear section of the hall, the prices started at $6 for the extreme right aisle seats, and throughout this row there were slight fluctuations in prices. Thereafter the premiums were comparatively low.

HERALD, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1911.

$17 PREMIUMS AT SYMPHONY SALE

Prices for $10 Seats Exceed Those of Last Year.

The highest premiums paid yesterday at the auction sale of $10 seats for the 24 Saturday evening Symphony concerts were $17, which was higher than the best price for these seats last year.

An advertisement in the newspapers Thursday announced that the $7.50 seats would be auctioned yesterday and caused some confusion. Patrons who looked for these seats were informed that the advertising man had sent to the newspapers a slip that was six years old and that nothing cheaper than $10 seats had been available for several years.

There was a larger attendance yesterday than at any time during this week's sale. An absence of bidding on the part of brokers was noticeable. The seats sold included the last seven rows on the floor, from row LL to row SS, the last four rows in the balcony centre and the entire centre of the second balcony. The sides of the upper balcony are held for sale on the nights of the concerts.

Premiums of $15 were scattered according to the eagerness of patrons to get seats which they have had in other seasons. Some of the seats on the floor went for a premium of $1.50, but the average premium was about $6.

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1911.

Symphony Concert Seats Sell High at Auction

More good prices were realized in the auction sales yesterday of the $10 seats for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Those disposed of yesterday brought premiums as high as $17. An absence of bidding on the part of the brokers was noticed. The seats sold included the last seven rows on the floor. The sides of the upper balcony are held for sale on the nights of the concerts. Premiums of $15 were scattered, according to the eagerness of patrons to get seats which they have held during other seasons.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY,

SEPTEMBER 30, 1911

The First Symphony Concert

To begin the season, the first pair of Symphony Concerts falls on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next, at the usual hours, 2.30 and eight, and the usual place, Symphony Hall. Mr. Fiedler will begin the final year of his conductorship with a programme that traverses Weber's "Jubilee" overture, distinctly an opening and occasional piece; Schumann's full-voiced and elate Symphony of the Spring (No. 1—B-flat) and an "Overture to a Comedy" by Reger, to be played for the first time in any concert-room. Mr. Reger has often been most interesting when his music was touched with humor and contrasting melancholy. Between those pieces, Miss Gluck, the most promising and achieving of the younger singers of the Metropolitan, will sing a concert piece out of Mozart, and the fragment of Charpentier's "Louise," in which the girl begins her new life of freedom.

ADVERTISER, SATURDA

SEPTEMBER 30, 1911

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The 31st season of the Symphony Orchestra will begin next Friday afternoon, when the first public rehearsal of the season will be given, and Saturday evening, which brings the first concert. It will mark the first appearance with the Symphony of Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan opera, a lyric soprano who in two seasons has come into the foremost rank contemporary singers.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1911

SYMPHONY SEASON.

Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Solo Soprano.

The thirty-first season of the Symphony Orchestra will begin next Friday afternoon, when the first public rehearsal of the season will be given, and Saturday evening, which brings the first concert. It will mark the first appearance with the Symphony Orchestra of Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera House, a lyric soprano, who in two seasons has come into the foremost rank of contemporary singers.

Mme. Gluck has been heard here in a choral concert and has made an appearance here in opera, creating a most favorable impresssion, and she will undoubtedly give due distinction to the opening concert. She will sing a Mozart aria as her first number, and as her second aria the big soprano solo from Charpentier's "Louise."

Mr. Fiedler does not wait for much of the season to pass to begin his novelties, and at his first concert he will present a comedy overture, Opus 120, by Max Reger. This will be its first hearing in this country. A new work by Reger is always an important event, musically speaking. The symphony will be Schumann's ever-welcome one in B flat major, and the concert will open with Weber's "Jubilee" overture.

CONCERTS FOR HARVARD.

Symphony Orchestra Will Be Heard in Sanders Theatre.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, this season. Concerts will be given on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, the dates being, October 19, November 16, December 14, January 18, February 8 and 29, March 28 and April 25.

The soloists will be Katherine Goodson, pianist; Lilla Ormond, contralto; Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Rudolph Ganz, pianist, Josef Hofmann, pianist, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist. The unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at Kent's University book store, Harvard square, on Saturday morning, October 14. A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

RECORD, SUNDAY,

OCTOBER 1, 1911

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston next Friday afternoon, has announced for Boston a list of novelties, some of which are to be heard in Philadelphia. Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise;" Elgar's new "Symphony;" Josef Holbrooke's tone poem "Ulalume;" a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra;" Mahler's Second and Ninth symphonies, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon." Altogether Fiedler announces 38 works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary with a program consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven; "The Unfinished" of Schubert, and the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. On October 20 and 21 will come the Liszt centennial celebration, the chief item of which will be the "Dante" symphony.

Last year's subscribers to the Philadelphia concerts may renew their subscriptions for the five concerts by making application to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's piano rooms, before Wednesday, October 11. The public sale of season tickets will open at the piano rooms on Monday morning, October 16.

SUNDAY POST,

OCTOBER 1, 1911

FIRST SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The 31st season of the Symphony Orchestra will begin on next Friday afternoon, when the first public rehearsal of the season will be given, and Saturday evening, which brings the first concert. It will mark the first apearance with the Symphony Orchestra of Madame Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera House, a lyric soprano who in two seasons has come into the foremost rank of contemporary singers. Madame Gluck has been heard here in a choral concert and has made an appearance here in opera, creating a most favorable impression, and she will undoubtedly give due distinction to the opening concert. She will sing a Mozart aria as her first number and as her second aria the big soprano tune from Charpentier's "Louise."

Mr. Fiedler at his first concert will present a Comedy Overture, opus 120, by Max Reger, to be heard for the first time in this country. The symphony will be Schumann's ever welcome one in B-flat major and the concert will open with Weber's "Jubilee" Overture.

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University. During the coming season the concerts will be given on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, the dates being Oct. 19, Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 18, Feb. 8, Feb. 29, March 28 and April 25.

The soloists that have been engaged so far are Katharine Goodson, pianist; Lilla Ormond, contralto; Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Rudolph Ganz, pianist; Josef Hofmann, pianist; Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist.

Subscribers of last season may secure their old seats by making application to George H. Kent, University Book Store, on or before Oct. 11. On receipt of check tickets will be mailed.

The unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at George H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard square, Cambridge, on Saturday morning, Oct. 14. A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

HERALD, BOSTON,

OCTOBER 1, 1911

MME. ALMA GLUCK IN SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Orchestra Season Begins Friday, Max Fiedler Conducting.

The 31st season of the Symphony orchestra will begin next Friday afternoon with the public rehearsal and Saturday evening with the concert. It will mark the first appearance with the Symphony orchestra of Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera House, a lyric soprano who in two seasons has come into the foremost rank of contemporary singers. Mme. Gluck has been heard here in concert and in opera when she created a most favorable impression. She will sing an aria by Mozart and the air from "Louise."

Mr. Fiedler will conduct a comedy overture, opus 120, by Max Reger. This will be its first performance in this country. The symphony will be Schumann's B-flat major and the program will include movements from Bossi's "Goldoni Intermezzi."

CAMBRIDGE CONCERT SERIES

The Boston Symphony orchestra will give its usual series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University. The concerts will be on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, Oct. 19, Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 18, Feb. 8, Feb. 28, March 28 and April 25. The soloists engaged so far are Katharine Goodson, pianist; Lilla Ormond, contralto; Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Rudolph Ganz, pianist; Josef Hofmann, pianist, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist.

Subscribers of last season may secure their old seats by making application to George H. Kent, University Book Store, on or before Wednesday, Oct. 11. On receipt of check tickets will be mailed.

The unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at George H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard square, Cambridge, Saturday morning, Oct. 14. A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

OAKL.

NEW YORK City

SEP 26 1911

According to a late Boston dispatch yesterday Boston will pay something like $75,000 to hear the Boston Symphony concerts this season. Up to noon yesterday the auction of seats had brought in about $20,000 for the "$18" seats alone.

[18]

SUNDAY GLOBE-

OCTOBER 1, 1911.

Boston Symphony Season Begins Next Friday.

The 31st season of the Symphony orchestra will begin next Friday afternoon, the program being repeated Saturday evening at the first concert. It will mark the first appearance with the Symphony orchestra of Mme Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan opera house, a lyric soprano who in two seasons has come into the foremost rank of contemporary singers.

Mme Gluck has been heard here in a choral concert and has made an appearance here in opera, creating a most favorable impression, and she will undoubtedly give due distinction to the opening concert. She will sing a Mozart number and the big soprano aria from Charpentier's "Louise."

Mr Fiedler does not wait for much of the season to pass to begin his novelties and at his first concert will present "A Comedy Overture," opus 120, by Max Reger. This will be its first hearing in this country. The symphony will be Schumann's ever welcome one in B-flat major and the concert will open with Weber's "Jubilee" overture.

Cambridge Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will give its usual series of eight concerts in Saunders theatre, Harvard university this season on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, the dates being Oct 19, Nov 16, Dec 14, Jan 18, Feb 8 and 29, March 28 and April 25.

The soloists engaged so far are Katharine Goodson pianist, Lilla Ormond contralto, Kathleen Parlow violinist, Rudolph Ganz pianist, Josef Hofmann pianist and Heinrich Warnke 'cellist.

Subscribers of last season may secure their old seats by making application to the university book store on or before Wednesday, Oct 11. On receipt of check tickets will be mailed.

The unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at the university book store Saturday morning, Oct 14. A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,

OCTOBER 1, 1911.

Symphony Season Will Commence This Week

The thirty-first season of the Symphony Orchestra will begin next Friday afternoon, when the first public rehearsal of the season will be given, and Saturday evening, which brings the first concert. It will mark the first appearance with the Symphony Orchestra of Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera House, who will sing a Mozart aria as her first number and the big soprano song from Charpentier's "Louise."

Mr. Fiedler does not wait to begin his novelties, and at his first concert he will present a "Comedy Overture," by Max Reger. This will be it first hearing in this country. The symphony will be Schumann's, in B-flat major, and the concert will open with Weber's "Jubilee" overture.

Cambridge Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give eight concerts in Sanders Theater, Harvard University, on Thursday evenings, the dates being Oct. 15, Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 18, Feb. 8, Feb. 29, March 28 and April 25. The soloists so far engaged are Katharine Goodson, pianist; Lilla Ormond, contralto; Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Rudolph Ganz, pianist; Josef Hofmann, pianist; Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS.

OCTOBER 1, 1

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the Winter; some of which are sure to be heard in Philadelphia.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise;" Elgar's new "Symphony;" Josef Holbrooke's tone poem "Ulalume;" a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra;" Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's Symphonic Poem "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year.

Last year's subscribers to the Philadelphia concerts may renew their subscriptions for the five concerts by making application to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's Piano Rooms, before Wednesday, October 11. The public sale of season tickets will open at the piano rooms on Mon

EVENING NEWS,

Buffalo, N. Y.

Boston Symphony's Anniversary.

Next month the Boston Symphony Orchestra will celebrate its 30th anniversary. One or two of the original members still occupy their places in the orchestra and there are many in the audience, especially on Saturday evenings who have followed the fortunes of this organization through its three decades. It would be easy for Mr. Fiedler to repeat the original program, given by Mr. Henschell, but it would be played by new performers almost entirely. From 1881 to 1911 this orchestra has grown from a small, a purely local band to the first in the country and one of the great ones in the world, playing annually to 30 or 40 cities besides its weekly concerts in the home city.

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY,

OCTOBER 2, 1911

FOR three days last week the sale of seats for the Symphony Concerts of the current musical year followed the usual course and yielded the expected revenue. On the fourth day—the Friday on which the cheaper seats for the Saturday evening concerts were sold—came the significant change. Never before had the sale attracted so many bidders who were plainly seeking tickets for their personal use; never before had the bidding been so keen and the premiums so high. Of late years a part of the seats for the concerts on Saturdays have not been taken for the season. This year very few of the cheaper seats for those evenings remain unsold. In other words, the Symphony Concerts are gaining the new public that of late the management has been diligently seeking. It could depend, for the concerts on Saturdays, upon the instructed and habituated audiences that have long frequented them. The new public that it was eager to attract was the public that is gradually awakening to the interest and the pleasure of such concerts. It has not too much money to spend upon its pleasures; it is distinctly of the newer and more cosmopolitan Boston; it is a little suspicious of its own new liking for music in its higher forms. It needed to be sought warily as the management has sought it. It needed to be encouraged shrewdly as Mr. Fiedler's programmes and performances have encouraged it. Even so, the outcome was uncertain; but by the tokens of last Friday it has begun to risk the Symphony Concerts, and when once it has tested the pleasure of them it is likely to remain faithful to them. Now, upon the rise of such a public, its interest and its loyalty, not a little of the more distant future of the concerts depends.

The Founder's Bust

Workmen are now making ready the niche in the corridor of Symphony Hall on the Huntington-avenue side that is to contain a bust of Mr. Higginson to be transferred thither, if we are not mistaken, from the Museum of Fine Arts, where it has stood these many months. It is to be set in place without ceremony—in all likelihood before the concerts of next Friday and Saturday.

The Cambridge Concerts

The Symphony Orchestra anonunces its usual series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge to begin on Thursday evening, Oct. 19, and to continue on Thursday evenings, Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 18, Feb. 8, Feb. 29, March 28 and April 25. As heretofore, the programmes will consist of pieces recently played at the Symphony Concerts in Boston and under the new policy, which the management of the orchestra began last year, the quality of the assisting virtuosi will be higher than it once was. Thus Mr. Hofmann, Mr. Ganz and Mme. Goodson, the pianists, and Miss Parlow, the violinist, are all to play with the orchestra in Cambridge. Miss Ormond will be the singer at one of the concerts and Mr. Warnke will play a concerto for violoncello at another. The arrangements for the sale of tickets remain as heretofore: Subscribers of last season may secure their old seats by application to George H. Kent, at the University Book Store, on or before Wednesday, Oct. 11, and on receipt of check, the tickets will be mailed to them. The unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at the University Book Store on Saturday morning, Oct. 14.

Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to give its usual series of five concerts in the Academy of Music during the coming winter. The dates of these are Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18.

The season for the orchestra is opening most prosperously. Max Fiedler, who has been spending the last five months abroad, returns to America this week for his final tour in this country, for his engagement of four years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to an end next spring. The orchestra is announcing its usual brilliant list of soloists. They will be Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Mr. Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special programme. The sale of season tickets will open at Miss Harris's agency, in Heppe's piano rooms, on Monday, October 16.

INQUIRER,

Philadelphia, Pa.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to give its usual series of five concerts in the Academy of Music during the coming winter. The dates of these are Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18.

The season for the orchestra is opening most prosperously. Mr. Max Fiedler, who has been spending the last five months abroad, returns to America this week for his final tour in this country, for his engagement of four years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to an end next spring.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is announcing its usual brilliant list of soloists. They will be Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Mr. Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program.

The sale of season tickets will open at Miss Harris' Agency, in Heppe's Piano Rooms, on Monday, October 16.

AMERICAN,

Philadelphia, Pa.

SEP 24 1911

©DUPONT

LOUISE HOMER, CONTRALTO

The admirable Boston Symphony Orchestra will as usual give five concerts in Philadelphia in the coming musical season. The personnel of the notable organization will be in the main unchanged. The conductor will be Max Fiedler, who, however, will make this year his final tour of the country. Doctor Fiedler's engagement with the orchestra was for four years, so that at the expiration of the current season the Boston players will again be in search of a new director. Doctor Fiedler returns to America this week after five months spent abroad.

There will be a distinguished alignment of soloists, including Ernestine Schumann-Heink, the contralto; Kathleen Parlow, the Canadian violinist; Josef Hofmann, the pianist, and Louise Homer, the New York Metropolitan's fine contralto. The concerts will be given in the Academy of Music on Monday evenings. The dates are November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18.

ess ____

Max Fiedler is expected to arrive in Boston Tuesday or Wednesday of this week. With him will be Anton Witek, and several other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concert season of this orchestra will open Friday afternoon October 6, with a public rehearsal, and on Saturday evening the first concert will be given, with Alma Gluck, of the Metropolitan Opera Company as soloist.

Boston will have its usual allotment of twenty-four rehearsals and concerts, but the length of the season will be thirty-one weeks instead of the usual thirty, for in addition to the regular trips to the South, two Western trips will be made instead of the usual one; the first at the end of January and the second in Easter week. This will bring the final concert on Saturday evening, May 4, 1912. This season will close, Mr. Fiedler's engagement with the Boston Symphony. Many will regret his departure, for under his direction the visits of the Boston Orchestra have become events looked forward to by music-lovers through the country with eager anticipation.

PRESS,

om ____

Philadelphia, Pa.

dress ____

te ____

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to give its usual series of five concerts in the Academy of Music during the coming Winter. The dates of these are Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18.

The season for the orchestra is opening most prosperous. Mr. Max Fiedler, who has been spending the last five months abroad, returns to America this week for his final tour in this country, for his engagement of four years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to an end next Spring.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is announcing its usual brilliant list of soloists. They will be Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Mr. Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program.

RECORD,

om ____

dress ____ PHILADELPHIA, PA.

—Katharine Goodson, the pianist, is to return to this country in January, 1912, to begin her fourth tour of America. She will make a tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will play with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic and the New York Symphony Orchestra. Negotiations with other orchestras are in progress. From the home of the pianist in England word comes that she will make the Tschaikowsky concerto in B-flat minor a feature of her orchestral appearances here. Miss Goodson played this concerto but once on her previous tours of the United States and that was in New Haven with the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Horatio W. Parker. In addition to the Tschaikowsky concerto, Miss Goodson will play the Grieg concerto, the Liszt concerto in E-flat major, the Hinton concerto in D minor, the Brahms concerto in D minor and the Saint-Saens concerto in G minor.

rom ____ PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ddress ____

ate ____ SEP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to give its usual series of five concerts in the Academy of Music during the coming winter. The dates of these are Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18. Mr. Fiedler, who has been spending the last five months abroad, returns to America this week for his final tour in this country for his engagement of four years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to an end next spring. The Boston Symphony announces its soloists as Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Mme. Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program. The sale of season tickets will open on Monday, October 16.

G BULLETIN,

ess ____ Philadelphia, Pa.

Boston Symphony Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Max Fiedler, is scheduled to give its usual series of five concerts in the Academy of Music during the coming winter, the dates being Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18. The soloists engaged are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program.

RECORD,

—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to give its usual series of five concerts in the Academy of Music during the coming winter. The dates of these are Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18. Max Fiedler, who has been spending the last five months abroad, returns to America this week for his final tour in this country, for his engagement of four years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to an end next spring. The soloists here will be Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program. The sale of season tickets will open at No. 1117 Chestnut street on Monday, October 16.

SUN,

rom ____

ddress ____ Baltimore, Md.

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S DATES

Orchestra To Give Five Baltimore Concerts Wednesday Evenings.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced the following dates for the Baltimore concerts for the coming season:

November 8. February 21.
December 6. March 20.
January 10.

The performances will be at the Lyric, as usual, on Wednesday evenings.

The soloists announced for Baltimore are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer.

It will be the final season for Mr. Max Fiedler with the orchestra. Mr. Fiedler is expected to arrive in New York from Europe next Tuesday.

EVENING SUN,

rom ____

ddress ____ Baltimore, Md.

BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Five Wednesday Evening Concerts Will Be Given At Lyric.

The preliminary announcement made by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra shows that the usual series of five concerts will be given in the Lyric Theatre on Wednesday evenings, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 21 and March 20. The sale of season tickets for the coming year to new subscribers does not open until Monday, October 16.

The soloists announced for Baltimore are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program.

AMERICAN,

ress ____ Baltimore, Md.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The preliminary announcement made by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra shows that the usual series of five concerts will be given in the Lyric Theater on Wednesday evenings, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 21 and March 20. The sale of season tickets for the coming year to new subscribers does not open until Monday, October 16. The soloists announced for Baltimore are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Mr. Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. Mr. Max Fiedler, whose last year it will be with the orchestra, is due to arrive in New York next Tuesday.

[19]

om EVENING NEWS,

dress Baltimore, Md.

te ____

Boston Symphony Will Give Its Five Concerts

The preliminary announcement made by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is that the usual series of five concerts will be given in the Lyric Theater on Wednesday evenings, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 21 and March 20.

The sale of season tickets for the coming year to new subscribers does not open until Moonday, October 16.

The soloists announced for Baltimore are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program.

Max Fiedler, whose last year it will be with the orchestra, is due to arrive in New York Tuesday.

EVENING STAR,

rom ____

Address Baltimore, Md.

ate ____

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The usual series of five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric Theater on Wednesday evenings, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 21 and March 20. The sale of season tickets for the coming year to new subscribers does not open until Monday, October 16. The soloists announced for Baltimore are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Mr. Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. Mr. Max Fiedler, whose last year it will be with the orchestra, is due to arrive in New York next Tuesday.

TRIBUNE

ress ____

e ____

Katharine Goodson, the pianist, is to return to this country in January, 1912, to begin her fourth tour of America. Miss Goodson comes this time under management of Antonia Sawyer. The pianist, who has been hailed abroad as a "Paderewski in petticoats," has played in nearly every European country and her brilliant tour of Australia is recalled by those who read closely the happenings in the musical world. Mrs. Sawyer announces that Miss Goodson will make a tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will play with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic and the New York Symphony Orchestra. Negotiations with other orchestras are in progress and within a few weeks the result of the bookings will be published.

From the home of the pianist in England word comes that she will make the Tschaikowsky concerto in B-flat minor a feature of her orchestral appearances in America this coming season. Miss Goodson played this concerto but once on her previous tours of the United States and that was in New Haven with the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Horatio W. Parker. In addition to the Tschaikowsky concerto, Miss Goodson will play the Grieg concerto, the Liszt concerto in E-flat major, the Hinton concerto in D-minor, the Brahms concerto in D-minor and the Saint-Saen concerto in G-minor.

On her previous tours of America Miss Goodson played the Brahms and Grieg concertos in Chicago, the Liszt and Hinton concertos in Philadelphia, the Grieg concerto in Boston and in New York with the Philharmonic Society.

Announcement of the season's programme for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose first public rehearsal will be on Friday, Oct. 6, with the opening concert the following night, shows that it will have for its Boston series 17 soloists.

They include four singers, all women; seven pianists, five violinists and one 'cellist. It is a list of high artistic merit. As is customary, three of these will be drawn from the ranks of the orchestra itself—the concert master, Mr. Witek, his assistant, Mr. Noack, and the first 'cello, Mr. Schroeder. The visiting performers all promise to be worthy of the organization and the concerts under whose auspices they are to appear.

The list of singers includes Mmes. Schumann-Heink, Berta Morena, Alma Gluck and Miss Elena Gerhardt. It will have been four years since last Mme. Schumann-Heink has appeared here with the Symphony Orchestra and the opportunity to hear her again under such conditions will be welcomed by her host of admirers in Boston. Mme. Schumann-Heink still holds the first rank of contraltos of her day, and it is a question whether there is any artist now before the public who enjoys such general popularity as does she.

The 30th anniversary of the orchestra will be observed Oct. 13 and 14 and the Liszt anniversray Oct. 20 and 21. On the fourth programme, Oct. 27 and 28, Mr. Zimbalist will play the Glazounoff concerto, which this summer he brought to its first hearing in England. Bantock's tone-poem, "Dante and Beatrice," will be played for the first time in America. Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and the "Istar" symphonic variations of d'Indy stand on the fifth programmes of Nov. 3 and 4.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

JOURNAL

MUSIC NOTES

MANY of the plans for the musical season in Providence have been somewhat slow in maturing, but the season itself will open slightly earlier than usual, with the coming of Mary Garden and a concert company to Infantry Hall on Friday evening, Oct. 20. This will be the week preceding the first Boston Symphony concert, which usually has introduced the season. It will be the famous singer's first appearance in the city, and will constitute one of the important events of the entire winter.

So far as they can be announced, the plans for the season indicate rather more musical activity than in recent years, though the main features will be much the same. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give five concerts, retaining the increased number fixed for last winter, the students' course will include well-known names, and the other fixtures will remain with few changes of consequence.

Many Providence music lovers will include the Boston Opera House in their musical calendars, and it is possible that one or two performances may be arranged for the company in this city, though no definite arrangements have been made for this. As last year, the Opera House will have a week of "The Bohemian Girl" early in the season, and the engagement of Morokin and the Russian Imperial ballet for next month is an announcement that will please those who witnessed the Russian ballet last season.

Among the independent concerts, which are chiefly relied on for variety, there will be some of unusual brilliance, though not all the dates are fixed as yet. In addition to the appearance of Mary Garden, Tetrazzini, the Italian soprano, will come with her concert company Jan. 16, and John McCormack is scheduled for April 16. The New York Philharmonic Orchestra will give a concert Nov. 8, with Mme. Johanna Gadski as the soloist, in an all-Wagner programme.

Negotiations are in progress for a number of other attractions, among those which are probable being Harold Bauer, Ernest Hutcheson, Joseph Lhevinne, and the Rusisan Balaika Orchestra, playing the curious instrument which has only recently come to be known outside its native country.

The Boston Symphony concerts will be on Tuesday evenings, Oct. 24, Nov. 21, Jan. 2, Feb. 13 and April 2. The soloists will be Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Lilla Ormond, Katherine Goodson and Josef Hofman, though the order in which they will appear is not announced. This is to be Mr. Fiedler's last year as conductor of the orchestra, and he has arranged a number of unusually interesting programmes, as referred to in the general plans of the orchestra described below.

The students' course will open Dec. 1 with De Pachmann, the pianist. The other three concerts will be by Ludwig Hess, the German tenor for whom this is the first American season; the Flonzaley Quartet, and Maud Powell, who is listed among the Boston Symphony soloists in Boston, but not here.

The Providence Musical Association has not as yet formulated definite plans for the season, but will in all probability continue the series of analytical lectures on the Boston Symphony and other concert programmes which were much appreciated by students of music last year. The association will also, in all probability, take some definite phases of educational work.

The Arion Club's general programme, which was announced in this column last Sunday, promises much of interest to choral singers in the three and possibly four concerts which will be given. Its rehearsals will begin next week.

The listeners will have their usual six concerts, beginning Oct. 28, when MacDowell music will be given in connection with an address by Mrs. Edward MacDowell on the "Peterboro Idea" which the late composer was working out until his final illness interrupted. Arrangements for the other concerts have not been completed as yet.

There will, of course, be many smaller concerts, and from the present outlook the promise is that Providence will fare somewhat better than usual in musical matters.

* * *

The 54th music festival at Worcester will be held this week, the five concerts taking place on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings, and the afternoons of Thursday and Friday. Arthur Mees will again fill the role of conductor, with Gustav Strube as associate, and the chorus of 400 voices will be assisted by an orchestra of 60 Boston Symphony players. The list of soloists engaged includes several artists of high reputation, some of whom appear for the first time at the festival this year. The complete roster is as follows:

Sopranos—Miss Alice Nielsen, Miss Florence Hinkle, Mrs. Luella Chilson-Ohrman; contraltos—Miss Christine Miller, Mrs. Susan Hawley Davis; tenors—H. Evans Williams, Berrick Von Norden, Lambert Murphy; baritones—Pasquale Amato, Horatio Connell; bass—Clifford Cairns; pianist—Ernest Hutcheson; violinist—Albert Spalding.

The schedule of the concerts presents an unusual number of novelties. At the opening concert on Wednesday night Granville Bantock's setting of the quatrains of Omar Khayyam (first part) will be sung. This was the feature of last year's festival, and is repeated in response to a general request. It will be preceded on the programme by "The Nuns," a short new work for chorus and orchestra by Max Reges (first performance in this country). In the "Omar Khayyam" Miss Christine Miller and Messrs. Von Norden and Connell will appear in the respective roles of "The Beloved," "The Poet" and "The Philosopher."

For the Thursday evening concert Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis in D" will be given, with Miss Hinkle, Mrs. Davis, Messrs. Murphy and Cairns as the soloists. This great work, which only the best-equipped choral societies feel competent to deal with, has never been sung before in Worcester. The Friday evening concert will offer the usual miscellaneous programme and introduce a number of the festival "stars," including Miss Alice Nielsen, Mr. Evan Williams, [illegible] of the Metropolitan [illegible] the young American [illegible]dding.

[illegible] of years past, the [illegible]s will be chiefly o[illegible]fer, with incident[illegible] artists; Mrs. Chilson[illegible]d Horatio Connell, [illegible]on Thursday after-

Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

ess

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA HERE.

To Give Five Providence Concerts, Beginning Oct. 24.

The first announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra shows that five concerts will be given in Infantry Hall in the course of the season on Tuesday evenings, the dates being Oct. 24, Nov. 21, Jan. 2, Feb. 13 and April 2. Once more Providence is to have a most thrilling array of soloists. These will be Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Miss Lilla Ormond, Miss Katharine Goodson and Josef Hofmann.

The season promises to be even more prosperous than that of a year ago, which was a record one. Mr. Fiedler, whose last year it is as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returns to Boston this week.

The sale of season tickets will open at Steiuert's on Monday, Oct. 16. Full details regarding the season will be forthcoming later.

Mr. Fiedler sailed from Bremen on Tuesday, Sept. 19, which will bring him to Boston a week later. On the same ship with him will come Anton Witek and several other members of the orchestra, who have been on the other side this summer. Mr. Fiedler spent the greater part of the summer in Garmisch, in Bavaria, a small town near Munich, which has become a favorite resort for musicians, Richard Strauss having his summer home there.

TCS., THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 5, 1911

SYMPHONY SEASON OPENS TOMORROW

The first public rehearsal of the season of the Symphony Orchestra will be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 2:30. The soloist will be Miss Alma Gluck, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House. She will sing "Amabile e sincero" from "Il Seraglio," and a melody from Charpentier's "Louise." The orchestral numbers will be Weber's "Jubilee" overture, Schumann's Symphony in B flat major and Reger's Comedy Overture, Opus 120. This will be the first performance anywhere of the Reger overture, Mr. Fiedler having brought the score and parts from Germany with him, where it had just been printed.

ADVERTISER
OCTOBER 5, 1911

FIRST PUBLIC SYMPHONY REHEARSAL TOMORROW

The first public rehearsal of the season of the Symphony orchestra will be given in Symphony hall tomorrow at 2.30 p.m. The soloist will be Miss Alma Gluck, the distinguished soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House. She will sing twice, her first aria being the "Amabile e snicero" from "Il Seraglio" and her second the big tune from Charpentier's "Louise." The orchestral numbers will be Weber's "Jubilee" overture, Schumann's symphony in B-flat major and Reger's comedy overture opus 120. This will be the first performance anywhere of the Reger overture, Mr. Fiedler having brought the score and parts from Germany with him, where they had just been printed.

HERALD, THURSDAY,
OCTOBER 5, 1911.

FIRST SYMPHONY REHEARSAL

The first public rehearsal of the season of the Symphony orchestra will be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at half-past 2. The soloist will be Miss Alma Gluck, the distinguished soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House. She will sing twice, Blondch'e first aria She will sing twice, Blondchen's first aria known air from Charpentier's "Louise." The orchestral pieces will be Weber's "Jubilee" overture, Schumann's symphony in B-flat major, movements from Bossi's "Goldonian Intermezzo" and Reger's comedy overture, Opus 120. This will be the first performance anywhere of the Reger overture.

JOURNAL—TH URSDAY,
OCTOBER 5, 1911.

The first public rehearsal of the season of the Symphony Orchestra will be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 2.30. The soloist will be Alma Gluck, the distinguished soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House. She will sing the aria "Amabile e sincero" from "Il Seraglio," and the big tune from Charpentier's "Louise." The orchestral numbers will be Weber's "Jubilee" overture, Schumann's Symphony in B flat major, and Reger's Comedy Overture, Opus 120, this last being a novelty.

REGER'S NEW OVERTURE

A FIRST PERFORMANCE ANYWHERE TOMORROW

Mr. Fiedler's First "Novelty" at the Symphony Concerts — Reger and a Classic Renaissance—The Form and Substance of the Overture—The Peculiarities and "Points" in It—Reger and His Scales

IF music is, as many believe, a series of swings of the pedulum between the classic and the romantic, then certainly we are due for a classic reaction very soon. The romantic tendency has been dominant for nearly a hundred years now. Theoretically there should have been at least two reactions in that time, since music is in its materials fluid and evolves much faster than the other arts. Indeed at least two men, Mendelssohn and Brahms, have been hailed as classic reactions in themselves. And yet music, fired with the humanistic fervor of the past century, has gone on, not from romantic to classic and back again, into bursts of new glory, one after another, until it seemed that the cosmos of musical art had no new worlds to conquer. And the romanticists are at it yet, in France and Germany, and wilder than ever.

It is time, then, for the classic reaction to be, not a rumor, but a fact. And if it is a fact, then certainly Max Reger is the central part of it. Here is a man, not yet forty, whom the German savants and purists do not hesitate to compare with Bach for counterpoint and Beethoven for form. Already he has the ear of Europe, and America is beginning to know him. He has a vitality in his themes that alone would almost suffice to make an undisciplined romanticist famous. He has a counterpoint thoroughly his own, a distinctive harmonic system that is perfectly homogeneous, and a completely matured and individual power over form. In a word, he is equipped to take the modern current at its flood and subject it tor the rigid selective process that is the chief asset of the classical tendency. Reger is not, to speak justly, a classical reaction; he may be a classical renaissance.

It is not fruitless to apply these words, classic and romantic, to modern music. In spite of the much literary blood spilled over them, they contain still some essence of meaning. The romanticist, of course, is not a mere breaker of rules, any more than the classicist is a mere keeper of them. The true romanticist acts under a new dispensation, recognizing the claim of certain influences (such as a poetic mood or a dramatic programme) which the rigid scholastic excludes. The romanticist is guilty of a confusion of the arts. The composer with classical leanings tends to exclude from his music all sources of effect that are not purely musical. A purely classical composition can be adequately described solely in musical terms. It is self-contained and self-sufficient. It evolves its form from the inner necessity of its isolation.

These are the premises to an understanding of Reger's true value as a classical force in modern music. The "Lustspielouverture," opus 120, to be played for the first time anywhere at the Symphony Concerts of tomorrow and Saturday, fairly indicates the qualities that make Reger the champion of classicism. In kind, not in degree. For the overture shows Reger's sort, but not his greatness. It is not music that is likely to be repeated "by general request." Its themes have not that "whistleable" quality that makes Mendelssohn's overtures almost parlor necessities. It seems in no way as fine a piece of work as Reger's string quartet played by "the Kneisels" here last winter. Yet it is a compact, vivacious piece, full of delicacies and richnesses of instrumentation and shading, and as a matter of course thoroughly musicianly and finished.

The orchestra employed is almost Mozartean. It includes the usual strings, four horns and two trumpets, and flutes, oboes, clarinets and bassoons in pairs. The form of the overture is that of the sonata (without any introductory slow movement), following the orthodox modulations, and ending with a vigorous little coda. The opening theme in two-four time, vivace forte, is little more than a whirr of excitement. This is shortly followed by a smooth melody in the clarinets and bassoons. The second section is an elf-like tune played molto grazioso by the violins and 'celli. The second main theme contrasts admirably with the material preceding it; it is breathed pianissimo poco tranquillo by the solo clarinet, while the strings and remaining wood-winds trick out an accompaniment pizzicato. The coda of this section returns to all the fire and high spirits of the first theme, growing energetically from piano to fortissimo. A few uncertain chords prepare the way for the "development section." This starts out in thrilling fashion with a short and snappy fugue—a true Reger jeu d'esprit—on a melody derived from the first theme. Then follows a mingling of themes, most of them recognizable, and a series of steady climaxes leading up to the return. One always knows where one is in this fantasia; the measure rhythm is kept definite, and the crescendi are arranged as it were in ascending series so that one expects the return precisely when it comes, a phenomenon rare in modern music. The coda is the tranquil contrasting theme of the first part blared out fortissimo, and the overture presently comes to a joyful end.

In scoring and musical procedure the overture is decidedly conservative. For instance the fagotti and 'celli double each other almost continuously; similarly the pairs of wood-winds. In spite of an advanced harmonic system the dissonances are few. The elements of the grotesque in the overture are never strained for, but apparently are gained precisely as Mendelssohn would have got them—by wide skips in the bass, by judicious contrasts of tone color, by sequences of augmented triads, and such. If the appearances of a conservative looking score may be trusted the instrumentation will prove to be sonorous, yet lucid, with every voice heard and yet not heard merely for its own sake—a real multum in parvo.

Reger's music, this overture with the rest, has one technical tendency extremely interesting to the philosophic concert goer. That is his use of scales. Although accepting completely the classical procedure as to counterpoint and consonance, Reger has not that rigid diatonic feeling of all the older classicists. His scales seem to be fluid; you find yourself having passed through three or four tonalities without having felt a twist of any kind. The modern Frenchmen, for instance, seem to older audiences always to be stretching their gullets to swallow new monstrosities; they break away from the diatonic, but it is with continual effort. And their tendency, as it happens, has been towards the "equal toned scale," which omits the half steps that give variety and relief to our diatonic. Hence that vagueness in all modern French music which seems mere eccentricity. Strauss, on the other hand, standing squarely as he does upon Beethoven and Wagner, accepts the diatonic scale with all its noble beauty, recognizing every moment some tonic centre of gravity, and producing his "radical" effects frankly by means of discord. Reger takes another course. He "radicalizes" too, yet it is not by doing violence to scales and chords so much as by playing up subtle distinctions and suave similarities. With him you feel diatonic, but never irrevocably so. His centre of gravity shifts to accommodate the scales. And this procedure may be equally important with the equal toned scale in the history of music. Our old diatonic scale is bound to be superseded; that is evident. But this may come by the adoption of another scale, as with the French, or by the smashing of all scales, as sometimes with Strauss, or by the refining and developing of the materials already in our hands, as apparently with Reger.

The "Lustspielouverture," while not important in itself, is well worth hearing in a country which knows but little of Reger. It shows some of the possibilities of old wine in new bottles. And it may be pointing to ways yet untrod.

H. K. M.

EVENING NEWS,

ess Baltimore, Md.

ORCHESTRA TO OPEN SEASON IN THE HUB

Extremely Interesting List Of Novelties To Be Given During Winter.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the winter, some of which are sure to be heard in Baltimore.

Among the most interesting items is Max Roger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise"; Elgar's new symphony; Josef Holbrooke's tone poem "Ulalume"; a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra"; Mahler's second and ninth symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem "Vilon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year.

Altogether, Mr. Fiedler announces 38 works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra wil celebrate its thirtieth anniversary with a program consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven, "The Unfinished" of Schubert and the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. On October 20 and 21 will come the Liszt centennial celebration, the chief item of which will be the Dante Symphony.

Last year's subscribers to the Baltimore concerts who are renewing their subscriptions for the coming year will find their tickets ready for them at Albaugh's ticket office, Charles and Fayette streets. These subscribers have until October 12 in which to renew their subscriptions and retain their old seats. The general sale of season tickets to new subscribers will open at Albaugh's on Monday morning, October 16.

[20]

NEW OVERTURE BY SYMPHONY

Max Reger's Production, Given for First Time, of Rough and Lusty Nature.

MME. GLUCK AS SOLOIST

Charming and Accomplished Singer Is Given Warm Welcome.

By PHILIP HALE.

The first public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra, 31st season, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Fiedler was loudly applauded when he took his place on the conductor's stand. The program was as follows:

Jubilee overture.....Weber
Symphony, B flat major, No. 1.....Schumann
Blonda's first air from "Il Seraglio"....Mozart
Four movements from "Goldonian Intermezzi".....Bossi
"Depuis le jour," from "Louise"...Charpentier
A Comedy Overture, op. 120.....Reger

Mr. Fiedler brought with him from Europe the score of Reger's new overture which has just been published, and the performances yesterday was the very first. The overture is scored lightly as far as the number of instruments is concerned. The trombones are not employed, and there are two of each wood wind instrument, two trumpets and four horns; nor does Reger find it necessary to call in the aid of a large battery, for kettledrums and a triangle are the only pulsatile instruments. Notwithstanding this modesty in resources, the instrumentation is for the most part heavy, clumsy, and at times it is raw. The themes are without marked significance, nor do they gain in the elaborate contrapuntal treatment that characterizes Reger's music. There are animated pages; liveliness of tempo, and the frequent hurly-burly may persuade a hearer who is thus easily affected that the composer has really something to say and is fortunate in expression.

It would be folly to deny Reger's technical skill, but in this overture, as in the great majority of the pages of his orchestral works he shows a lack of fine taste, hardly any appreciation of color or nuances, an inability to provide contrasts, and above all an absence of poetic spirit. This man is now nearly 40 years old, and it is high time for him to disclose an imaginative gift if he wishes to be accepted by a generation to come. Meanwhile the Regerites compare their idol to Bach and Beethoven and Reger Festivals are held solemnly to the deep and abiding joy of the initiated.

Mme. Alma Gluck has been heard here in opera and in Verdi's "Requiem." Yesterday she sang here at a Symphony concert for the first time. She was happy in her selections. The aria from "Il Sevaglio" is the first one sung by Blonda in the opera, and the long established Italian text begins "Con vezzi, con Lusinghe," but Mme. Gluck used another version. The music is truly Mozartian in its flowing grace, its tenderness, its fresh beauty tinged with the melancholy that is peculiar to Mozart; as there is a melancholy that distinguishes Schubert, and another, that of Tschaikowsky, often akin to the darkness of pessimism.

Mme. Gluck's other selection was the sensuous song of Louise in Charpentier's romance of Montmartre; of Louise recalling the memorable moment when she first gave herself to Julien. The two airs would test the art and soul of any singer.

Mme. Gluck has a singularly beautiful voice, clear, warm, expressive. She sang as one admirably trained, who, not hampered by the thought of technical requirements, is free to give full expression to emotion. She sang Mozart's music—and this music is quick to reveal any vocal deficiency—in a charming manner, with the appropriate simplicity that is so hard to acquire, and without the too pronounced expressiveness that is ill suited to the song of Mozart's period. It was a pleasure also to hear Mme. Gluck in Charpentier's air, music that might have been written by Massenet, if he were now young, unsophisticated, not nervously trimming sails to catch the breeze of popularity. Yet there is a voluptuousness in this air of Louise that is far removed from the eroticism of the older composer.

The audience, large and brilliant, was unusually warm in approval. In its good nature it forgot the inherent vulgarity, the evident perfunctoriness of Weber's overture, and applauded the performance of the Symphony. It appreciated Mr. Ferir's exquisite viola playing in Bossi's pretty Serenatina. And Mme. Gluck may well be pleased at her reception.

ALMA GLUCK HAS POSITIVE VIEWS

Arrives in Boston to Appear as Soloist with the Symphony Orchestra.

BEAUTY SURPASSES REPORT

Tells How She Became Member of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Mme. Alma Gluck, youthful prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra for the first time this afternoon, arrived in town after a 17-hour journey from Toronto, travel-stained and a little weary from the strain imposed upon her in the concert tour she is making before the opening of the operatic season in New York.

Many reports have been circulated as to her beauty, and her looks do not belie them. She is tall, slight, handsome, with dark hair, flashing brown eyes, a strikingly beautiful complexion and the added charm of pretty teeth becomingly disclosed when she smiles, which is often and radiantly. She is full of animation, enthusiasm, temperament. Although a Roumanian by birth and born in Bucharest, she came to America at the age of 6 years, and as she has been educated entirely in the United States considers herself wholly American.

"I enjoyed very much reading an account of myself in one of the papers," she said, "which calmly announced that I had worked as a stenographer in a New York business firm before my marriage. This is not true. I did nothing of the sort, and, in fact, before I married I never did much of anything, except that, of course, I always sang and loved music. After a while I married. The first year was very wonderful, then the second year there was my little baby to look after; then the third year there did not seem to be much to do, so I thought I would like very much to study singing, but without any idea of a professional career.

"My only teacher has been Buzzi-Peccia in New York. One afternoon two years ago when I went for my lesson I found a note from my teacher asking me to come back instead in the evening. I did so, and when I got to the studio found a dinner party going on. Toscanini, Amato and a lot of people from the Metropolitan Opera House were there. Then Buzzi-Peccia asked me to sing, and, of course, I was frightened almost to death. But they were all very nice to me and said that I should be at the Metropolitan. I was soon asked to sing for Mr. Gatti, and that's how my engagement at the Metropolitan came about."

The singer enjoys out-of-door sports, and her summer holiday is usually spent at Lake George, where she rows and swims, raises chickens and otherwise disports herself amid rural and artistic pursuits.

Catholic in her tastes, Mme. Gluck is found of singing both classical and modern music. On the whole, she prefers opera to concert work, but thinks operatic arias for the most part out of place on a concert program, for while singing the latter there is always the strong temptation for the opera singer to give way to the accustomed gestures that accompany the vocal expression of emotion in the theatre.

Mme. Gluck is troubled by the necessity of wearing a hat at afternoon concerts, but fears she is too young to set the fashion of breaking away from the time-worn custom.

"I think," she said, "that an audience has a right to see the singer's face, and when one comes out on the stage with waving plumes and a wide-brimmed hat on one's head to see the face is utterly out of the question. However, I have come as close as possible to being hatless and my hat is really only an apology."

The singer confesses to being extremely nervous before every appearance. To calm her fears and for good luck she invariably wears on the stage a golden charm representing a diminutive hunchback.

MME. GLUCK SAYS HATS HIDE SINGER'S EXPRESSION

[Photograph Copyright by Mishkim Studio.]
Mme. Alma Gluck.

AAATSZEITUNG,

New York City.

Als ein weiterer Künstler, der der größten Aufmerksamkeit werth ist, kann der 21 Jahre alte Violinvirtuose Herr Efrem Zimbalist, ein Schüler Prof. Auer's, bezeichnet werden. Er tritt zuerst in Boston im Rahmen des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters auf und spielt in New York zum erstenmal mit den Philharmonikern in Carnegie Hall am 2. und 3. November. Sein erstes Rezital wird er am 10. No-

GLOBE—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1911

THE SYMPHONY SEASON OPENS

Max Reger's Overture Played First Time.

Mme Alma Gluck Makes First Appearance at Concerts.

Higginson's Bust Placed in Symphony Foyer.

The musical season of Boston and of America opened yesterday afternoon with the first public rehearsal of the 31st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The reassembling of this audience from year to year does not materially change. After the Summer months at the mountains or beach there are greetings of friends, the passing of pleasantries and the various bits of ceremony incident to settling down for the Winter in the same seats the family always buys, or perhaps in a new vicinity whose acoustics and neighbors are both tested.

The size of the audience indicated that the demand for seats at these concerts had suffered no diminution in this 31st year of the orchestra. There was scarcely a vacancy to be seen on the floor or in the first balcony. Every chair in the second had long been preempted, for the day, although cool, was fair, and the waiting line even at 12:30, was well on its way to the Children's Hospital. There was to be a new soloist and a new work.

While next week will be taken as a formal anniversary of the completion of 30 years of history by the orchestra, it was fitting that the new bust in bronze of Maj Higginson, which adorns the lower front foyer, should be in place at the beginning of the new season. Before and after the concert and during the promenade it was observed by many of the audience and impressed all as an eloquent and appropriate tribute to the man to whom Boston and America owe this noble institution.

The bust has been on exhibition for some months at the Art Museum. The author is Bela L. Pratt. The pedestal is the work of A. W. Longfellow, and is situated in a niche of Siena marble. The bust, its pedestal and encircling frame form an imposing art work and monument.

Reger, the Composer.

The program of the first rehearsal was as follows: Weber, "Jubilee" overture; Schumann, symphony in B flat, No. 1; Mozart, aria, "Con vezzie, con lusinghe," from "Il Seraglio"; Bossi, Goldonian Intermezzi (movements 1, 2, 5, 6); Charpentier, air, "Depuis le jour," from "Louise"; Reger, "A Comedy Overture," op 120. Mme Alma Gluck was the soloist.

Max Reger's new work has just been published and was performed for the first time anywhere. For a man only 38 years and 6 months old, the composer's output is amazing.

He is a performer of feats of velocity and of endurance. He will write and score orchestral works at a sitting. Did he not rise at daybreak one Sabbath morning, gird up his loins and sit him down and write past the going down of the sun until the 11th hour, and was not the fruits of the labor of that May 19, 1907, his orchestral fugue on a theme of Hiller's?

Too often his has been the handiwork of a man who must run amuck for so many pages, must emit a certain volcanic and brutal turbulence irrespective of his theme, although Reger is not of the school of Strauss and the romanticists, who would translate emotional thought into tones.

Too often he has seemed incapable of self-discernment, of discretion, unable or unwilling to have avoided mere sound and fury when to have spoken with reticence or repose would have been more commanding.

The "Comedy Overture."

The new work possesses a greater sanity in this regard, a clearer sense of proportion, a restraint which does not show the composer perturbed lest there be not constant evidence of his monstrous contrapuntal dexterity. The spirit is one of avowed comic play, and Reger has shown at times that he can actually caper lightly, almost gracefully, as in certain delicate and lightly etched passages.

The orchestration is also more lucid, more free from turgid mixtures. There were moments not without beauty in the use and contrast of color.

The rhythmic profile of the themes has character and individuality. The subject of the inevitable fugue, a succession of whirling triplets following an octave skip, is sent scurrying through the strings with the composer's usual energy and skill.

Mr Fiedler read the work and the men played it with brilliant technic and with appreciation.

Mme Gluck the Soloist.

Mme Gluck has sung in Boston as a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company and last Winter in a performance of Verdi's "Requiem." She then established herself as one of the most accomplished and intelligent of our younger singers.

Her voice is a soprano, of an unusually pure and sympathetic quality. It is an even and obedient instrument, and the singer shows an artistic sense in all that she does. She made the Mozart air enjoyable for its lightness and pretty fancy and avoided too weighty or troubled a seriousness in the second stanza. In it all shone the spirit of play. Mozart's lines of melody were kept unbroken by excellent phrasing. A more varied use of the soft voice might have added to their charm.

Mme Gluck was particularly happy in the air from Louise. Her voice was of a haunting beauty, colored to suit the ecstasy, by turn quiet and rhapsodical. Here was exultation and transport in the conscious knowledge of love and in its remembrance.

Charpentier's exquisite music was given its just values both in the semi-declamation and in the sustained song. The orchestral pages glow with a ravishing beauty, with the color of celesta and harp. The singer, a vision of loviness, was repeatedly recalled.

Schumann's symphony is a pledge to eternal Springtime and the song of youth. It was written in days of elation of heart and it sings of an imperishable joy. It was heard with gladness yesterday, for it was played in the spirit.

The movements from Bossi's intermezzi are of true grace, elegance and poetic beauty. The playing of them brought repeated exclamations of delight from the audience.

Excepting Mr Longy, the familiar members of the orchestra were present and in their accustomed places. Mr Fiedler was given a cordial greeting when he came on to conduct the first

SYMPHONY OPENING MEMORABLE EVENT

Marked Enthusiasm Greets Reappearance of Conductor Fiedler—Monument to Maj. Henry L. Higginson Unveiled Without Ceremony.

Max Fiedler of Hamburg and Boston, Max Reger of Leipsic and Mme. Alma Gluck of New York combined to make the first Symphony matinee, and the traditional opening of the musical season in this city, a memorable event yesterday.

Mr. Fiedler made his first bow for his third and last season as conductor amid an outburst of hearty enthusiasm. None of the conductors of the Symphony Orchestra came with less heralding, and none has achieved wider and firmer popularity. A conductor with so pleasing a personality is a rarity, and is certain to command popular appreciation wherever there are music lovers eager to get in touch with the new composers, while still keeping in touch with the old.

Reger, though not present in person, was represented by his new "Comedy Overture," which has just been published, and which was heard yesterday for the first time in public. Reger is a big man in Germany. He has enjoyed the extraordinary distinction of having festivals given over exclusively to his works held in several German cities in the last two years. Still under forty, he shares with Richard Strauss such honors as fall only to national heroes; and, like Strauss, he is an artist with a strong individuality. His language, as one of his teachers says, is the language of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, but he employs it in a way quite his own. Such a writer attracts ardent admirers, who challenge the world, and the Regerites have found sympathetic contemporaries in Boston, which in the last four years has heard fully a score of the young German's works.

The "Comedy Overture," played at this week's Symphony concerts, is a characteristic composition, blithe in spirit and complex in form. It is sparkling, but whether it is sweet depends upon the taste. It made as favorable impression yesterday as any of the Reger works previously performed at these concerts.

Mme. Gluck, one of the youngest and comeliest sopranos on the operatic stage, who sang here last year in "Boheme" and last February in the Handel and Haydn Society's splendid performance of Verdi's "Manzoni Requiem," had two numbers, an air from Mozart's "Il Seraglio," which commonly is known as "Con Vezzie, Con Lusinghe," but which she gave in a newly-worded version, which her admirable diction made it comparatively easy to follow, and the passionate song from Charpentier's "Louise," which might be called "The First Day of Love," and which Louise sings in the first scene of the third act. Mary Garden sang it at the Boston Theater two years ago when the opera was first heard here.

Mme. Gluck, whose variegated near-hobble gown was fairly breath-bereaving, as George Bernard Shaw would put it, won something like unto an ovation. After the song from "Louise' she was recalled several times, even though the hour was rather late and the orchestra was ready to attack the [illegible] novelty. Her lovely voice, rich and round, freely emitted as a lark's, and her graceful, artistic style captivated the audience. It was the acme of art to achieve so genuine a triumph in a Debussy tone poem costume.

Weber's "Jubilee Overture," four of Bossi's "Goldonian Intermezzi" and the first of the Schumann symphonies were the more familiar numbers on the program, which, of course, will be repeated at tonight's concert.

Bust of Maj. Higginson Is Gift of Friends

Next to the concert itself yesterday afternoon, the great attraction at Symphony Hall was the Higginson monument, unveiled without ceremony, in the main lobby.

It consists of a bronze bust of Maj. Higginson set upon a richly tinted pedestal of Sienna marble and surrounded by a placement or panel of the same beautiful stone. The background against which the bust stands is of Alps green marble.

The pedestal contains the following inscription: "Henry Lee Higginson, Founder and Sustainer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

The monument came as a surprise to most of the Symphony patrons. It is the gift of some friends and admirers of Maj. Higginson. Holker Abbott was chairman of the committee which worked on the project and J. T. Coolidge, Jr., was the treasurer.

The bust is the work of Bela L. Pratt and the placement is after a design by A. W. Longfellow.

EVENING SUN,

ss New York City.

SEP 30 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON TO START NEXT WEEK.

New York Symphony Rehearsals Called Three Days After—Two of Mahler's Works in Fiedler's List—Stransky Brings One of Weingartner's.

Max Fiedler's new music for the Boston Symphony season opening on the Back Bay Fens next Friday afternoon includes some orchestra pieces which are sure to be heard in New York. Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy" overture, op. 120, which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are Granville Bantock's new tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois's "Symphonie Française," Liadoff's legend of "Kikomorra," Elgar's new Symphony No. 2, and Josef Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume."

The late Gustav Mahler's second and ninth symphonies have never been heard in Boston, and there is also Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year. Altogether Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America.

Boston's famous orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary on Oct. 13 and 14 with a programme consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica" of Beethoven, the "Unfinished" symphony of Schubert, and the "Academic" overture of Brahms.

The Liszt centennial, the chief item of which will be the "Dante" symphony, occurs seven days later at the Hub.

AMERICAN,

ss Baltimore, Md.

OCT 1

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the winter, some of which are sure to be heard in Baltimore.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new Comedy Overture, op. 120, which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled Dante and Beatrice; Thedore Dubois' Symphonie Francaise, Elgar's new symphony, Josef Holbrook's tone poem Ulalume, a legend by Liadoff called Kikimorra, Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem Villon, which was heard in New York for the first time last year.

SUN,

m CITIZEN,

dress Baltimore, Md. Brooklyn, N. Y.

SEP 30 1911

SEP 24

Boston Symphony

MAX FIEDLER, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties, some of which will be heard in Baltimore.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture" (op. 120), which will be played for the first time in America this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise," Elgar's new symphony, Josef Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume," a legend by Diadoff called "Kikimorra," Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thir-

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived here last Tuesday, full of health and enthusiasm, and went immediately to Boston, where the first rehearsal of the season will be held Monday morning. His first programme comprises Schumann's "Spring" symphony, Weber's "Jubilee" overture, and the first performance in America of Reger's new comedy overture, op. 120. The annual auction sales of the orchestra in Boston were successful, as usual, that city still being very loyal to its great musical institution.

Professor Hooper reports that renewals of subscriptions are being rapidly made by the Brooklyn patrons of the orchestra, and another great season may be expected in this city.

[a1]

BOSTON POST, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, ADVERTISER, SATURDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 7, 1

Honor Higginson at Symphony Opening

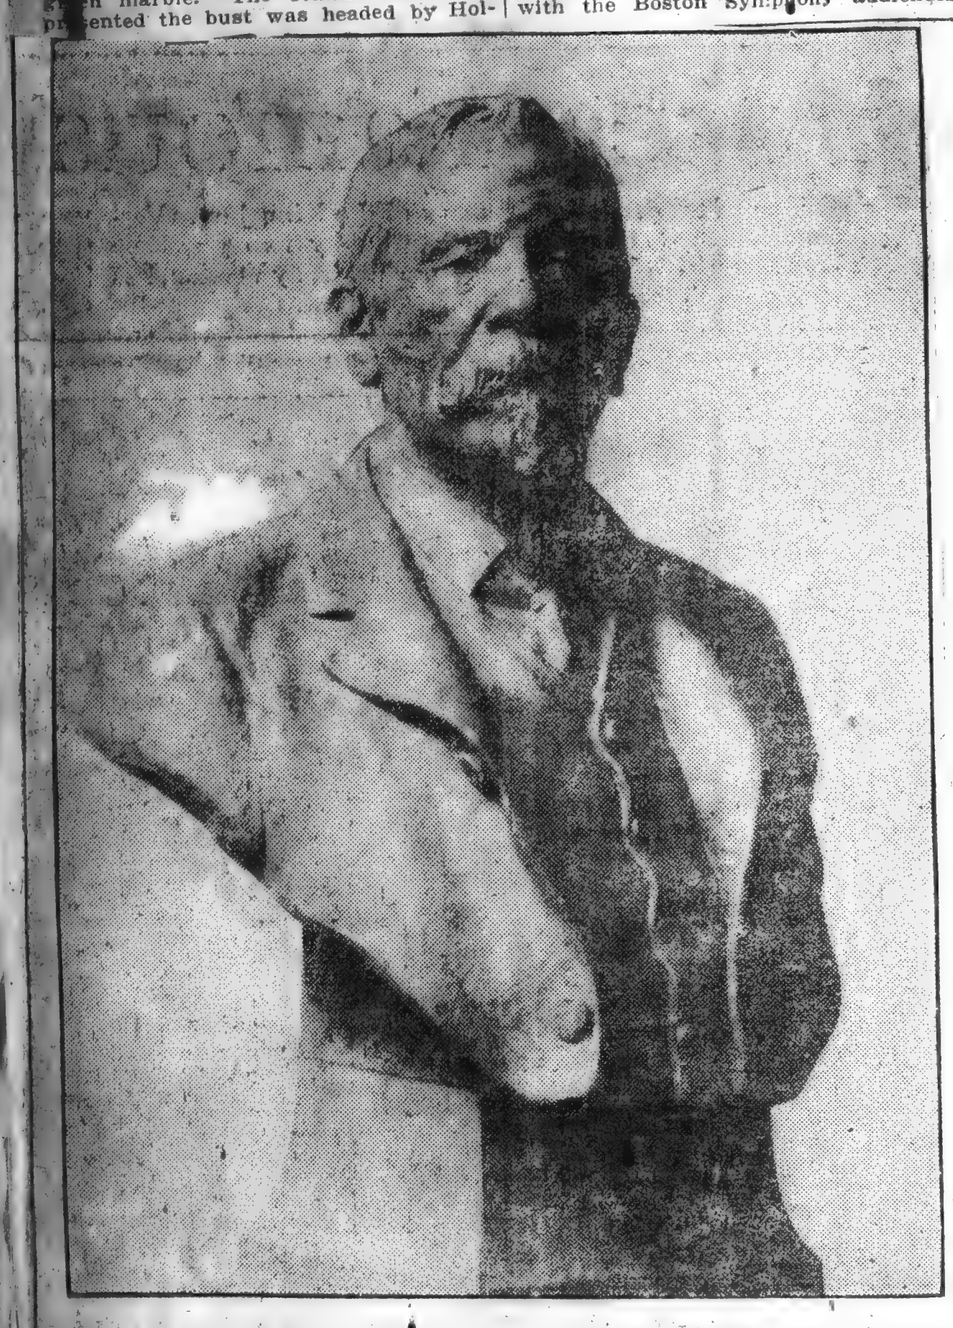
BY OLIN DOWNES

Those who entered Symphony Hall by the Huntington avenue lobby yesterday afternoon, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra held the first public rehearsal of its 31st season, were confronted by Bela Pratt's admirable bust of Mr. Henry L. Higginson, the gift of a number of Colonel Higginson's friends, the latest adornment of Symphony Hall, and a further observance of the 30th anniversary of the Sympnony Orchestra.

The bust is of bronze. It stands on a pedestal of richly-tinted Siena marble, and there is a background of Alps green marble. The committee which presented the bust was headed by Holker Abbot, chairman, and J. T. Coolidge, Jr., treasurer. The bust is inscribed as follows:

HENRY LEE HIGGINSON
FOUNDER
AND SUSTAINER
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Mr. Higginson did not appear to make any acknowledgment of the tribute to that excellent initiative which has made Boston the foremost musical capital of this country and the world. The programmes of next week will be in direct commemoration of the anniversary year of the orchestra, and Mr. Fiedler has chosen for the occasion three compositions which have long been favorites with the Boston Symphony audiences—



BELA PRATT'S BUST OF HENRY L. HIGGINSON, WHICH WAS EXHIBITED FOR THE FIRST TIME YESTERDAY AFTERNOON IN SYMPHONY HALL.

Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Shubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Brahms' "Academic" Overture.

Yesterday, Mr. Fiedler was warmly greeted when he entered to inaugurate the last season of the present Boston engagement, and this was the only ceremony of the afternoon.

The programme of the concert was as follows: "Jubilee" overture, Weber; Symphony in B-flat ("Spring"), Shumann; aria from Mozart's "Flight from the Harem"; Bossi's "Goldonian Intermezzi"; air from Charpentier's "Louise," "Depuis le Jour"; Comedy Overture, Max Reger (first performance).

Miss Gluck Charms

The programme was agreeable, and not more so than the costume of Miss Gluck, who on this occasion, put Geraldine Farrar herself. Of what was this gown composed? It was oriental, serpentine, Parisienne, and other adjectives. It was green and orange. It fitted pleasantly a delectable figure, and then, Miss Gluck sang. She sang the air of Louise, the young girl who is enamoured of Paris as she is of her lover, in an unforgetable manner. It is rare to discover so young and fresh a voice, so excellently developed, and so artistically employed. Miss Gluck interpreted Charpentier's sensuous music with instinctive warmth and abandon, but her phrasing and her diction and her manner of coloring her tones were the achievements of a thoughtful and a finished artist. Her voice has a Pagan pureness and richness of quality, and is especially adapted to dramatic requirements. Charpentier's air was adequately sung for the first time in the writer's experience, and it gave the greatest pleasure. Perhaps the paler—and purer—beauty of Mozart music falls on ears that have been somewhat dulled by modern sonorities, and probably Miss Gluck herself did not find Mozart's style so much to her purpose. For she displayed neither so much individuality nor lost herself so completely in her task as she did when she sang Charpentier's music. The singer was young, and so was her voice, and so were her emotions. She sang the air of Louise with a voluptuousness that was naive and divine.

Mr. Fiedler gave a very heartfelt performance of Schumann's Spring symphony, which is also the spirit of youth. Professional musicians have picked at this symphony, at the shortness of its melodies, and the comparative lack of color in its instrumentation, but the symphony is performed year in and year out, and every time that it is played it sounds more fresh and more lovely. If Schumann had written nothing else, he would have placed himself on a pinnacle by this work alone. For composers may treat of things profound or profane, but after hearing this symphony it seems that no one but Schumann has sung of the spring. The orchestral tone was rough in some passages of the first movement, and Mr. Fiedler's beat in the slow movement was a trifle too deliberate. The playing of the scherzo, however, was exceptionally delightful, and in this movement and the last Mr. Fiedler made new precedent for himself.

Bossi's music has been heard once before at the Symphony concerts, and it should be heard oftener, for the score is a masterpiece. It is a true outpouring of the Italian spirit, and it is so finely composed, and written with such exuberant fancy and sparkle, that the astonishing things that the composer does with his string choir pass unobserved. Reger's new overture, in much the same spirit, but with added Teutonic weight and virility, must rank as one of the best of his compositions which have been played in Boston. There is true humor and hilarity in it. The second theme comes as near the piquant as Reger will ever go, and for Reger the orchestration is light and translucent. Even the fugue which the composer must needs write, is inoffensive and unpreponderating! And even Weber's jingly overture was good to hear, on account of its vacuous amiability and the sureness that a composer of the 19th century displays in handling the orchestra of his period.

MORNING TELEGRAPH,

New York City.

OCT 1 1911

The usual series of five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Lyric on Wednesday evenings, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 21 and March 20. The soloists announced for Baltimore are Madame Schumann-Heink, Mr. Josef Hofmann, Miss Kathleen Parlow and Mme. Louise Homer.

OPENING CONCERT OF SYMPHONY SEASON

MME. GLUCK, SOLOIST, WAS WARMLY GREETED

Notable Event Was the First Presentation Anywhere of Entirely New Work by Max Reger.

By Louis C. Elson.

PROGRAMME.

Weber—"Jubilee" Overture.
Schumann—Symphony in B flat.
Mozart—Aria, "Il Seraglio."
Mme. Alma Gluck, soloist.
Bossi—Goldonian Intermezzi.
Charpentier—Air from "Louise."
Mme. Gluck.
Reger—Overture to a Comedy. (First performance.)

Sumer is igoing o t,
Lihudely sing Cuccu.
Ended hoppes
And openne shoppes,
And Musick ginnes anew.
Sing Cuccu.
Fiedler seizeth at his sticke
And counteth one and two.
All things humanne
Turn to Schumanne
And to Reger too.
Welle singest thou Cuccu
The symphonies are due.

It was an earnest of what is coming that Mr. Fiedler gave an important novelty at the very first concert. As with a wasp, the important part of this concert was in its end. Yet the other numbers were most welcome, too, after musicless summer. Weber's "Jubilee" overture made a festival and sparkling introduction to the season. It fitted quite as well to inaugurate the pleasure of a symphony season as to celebrate the jubilee of a second rate monarch. Some may have been astonished at the "God Save the King" at the end, but we can remind these that the United States is by no means the only country which has stolen the English national anthem. If there was a certain roughness in the performance of the chief theme this was not a fault, for Weber wanted some of the hurly burly of a holiday in these measures.

Does a critic alter as he grows older? In our green-salad days we always held Schumann's B-flat symphony to be the best orchestral work, except the "Manfred" overture, that he ever wrote. But now we are inclined to place the fourth and the third before it. Of course there is spring, and love, and triumph, in this symphony, the last quality particularly in the finale, but there is a nobler exultation in the finale of the third symphony. Nevertheless Schumann comes grandly up to Hugo Wolf's excellent test of a genius in music—"Can he exult?"

It is a crucial test, this exultation in music. Beethoven achieved it with Dionysiac fury in "Fidelio," the "Leonora Overtures" Nos. 2, and 3, and the end of the ninth symphony. Bach exulted in "My Heart Ever Faithful," Schubert in his C major symphony, and one could go through a very long list of musical exulters. Only Brahms was a genius in spite of a lack of intense exaltation. And, to come back to our muttons, and our symphony, Schumann's triumphant notes in the finale here was well caught-up by Mr. Fiedler and his men, for Mr. Fiedler too, is one of those conductors who revels in a climax of triumph. It is sad to contrast the triumphant breadth of Schumann with his melancholy end.

Weingartner says that Schumann's symphonies sound better as four-hand piano pieces than in the concert room. One must confess that not even Mr. Fiedler's enthusiasm and the skill of our noble orchestra can make the scoring of this work glow in these tone-coloring days.

It is perhaps this defect, and a proneness to sequence effects, which blinded the English bat-critics to the glory of Schumann's thoughts. The crudity of scoring went hand in hand with a certain simplicity, which made the symphony as easy as Haydn or Mozart to our orchestra. The kettle-drummer showed that his strength of arm had not deserted him, but as he used his force in the right place, no one may find fault with this. The salient beauties of the performance were the return of the chief theme in the first movement, which Mr. Fiedler made nobly powerful; the trombone transition after the larghetto, and the whole of the scherzo, with its double trio, which was taken at just the right speed. In the finale Mr. Fiedler whipped up the allegro of the chief theme into a presto, but he made the great crescendo effects excellently, and a word must also be put in for the excellence of the flute cadenza. Mr. Fiedler was enthusiastically recalled at the end of the work.

Mme. Alma Gluck pleases both ear and eye. She is a good singer and has a fine stage presence. Her two numbers were in most contrasted vein, the suave ornamentation of Mozart against the intense modern "verismo" of Charpentier. It was perhaps too much to expect equal success in both. The prima donna made her triumph in the aria from "Louise," which she sang with pure intonation, sweet voice, and much expression. Her shading was commendable, and her pianissimo phrases excellent, but something of breadth was lacking in the Mozart work. The enthusiasm was very marked after the second number, and the Charpentier music and its interpretation won a decided success.

Let no one suppose that Bossi is at all vealy because of his name! He is a most modern Italian, a tropical Wagner. He has composed a "Paradise Lost" which seemed to show that not only Paradise but the art of Harmony was lost. In the light movements which form this suite he naturally does not pull at the bit quite so strenuously. Goldoni is the Italian Moliere and his comedies range from dainty persiflage to rather vulgar farce effects in dialect. Bossi has reflected both the elegant and the fantastical elements of the author.

The suite is for strings alone, although nothing was said of this in the programme. Only four movements were given. These were all strikingly original. It means a good deal to pump anything new into a minuet. Mozart and Haydn have squeezed that musical lemon quite dry. Yet Bossi manages to bring forth the antique and elegant swing of the old dance without copying any of his predecessors.

The serenatina calls for a solo Viol d'Amore. But that instrument, in spite of Loeffler's "Mort de Tintagiles," is becoming quite obsolete. Its seven strings above the finger-board and seven wires below it, require an endless amount of tuning, and the slightest tilt of the bow at too sharp an angle gives a false note on a neighboring string. Wherefore Mr. Ferir played the dainty solo upon the viola. The movement was much applauded.

The burlesca, which ended the set, was becomingly brusque and might have pictured a Goldoni street quarrel in Naples. The charming daintiness of the violins in the Galliard reminded one of the effects that Mendelssohn loved to draw from the instruments. Our string orchestra is probably the finest in the world, and even after a summer vacation the brilliancy and ensemble were remarkable.

It is a notable event in the season of 1911-12 that the very first concert should present an entirely new work by Max Reger, a composition heard for the first time in the world, in Boston. What with this, and the premiere of the opera "Foret Bleu," Boston is really beginning to become a world centre in music. Reger is a most unequal composer. He has written an orchestral fugue that makes the entire contrapuntal world sit up and take notice, and he has also composed works that are a penance and mortification of the flesh.

This overture has a rather conservative score according to modern ideals. It does not go beyond the classical orchestra save in the matter of a triangle. It begins at once with syncopated energy that suggests "rag-time." It intimates a conviviality that has even been moistened, a bacchanalian revelry. Against this there are placed moments of anxious hush or subdued mystery. This device is used rather frequently. There is much figure treatment and a great deal of sequence work. We advise the auditor to watch the bass part for much of this. The work is difficult to follow at a single hearing. The chief theme, however, recurs more than once, and its first figure and phrase bubbles up often enough, like the splinters of a drinking song.

The overture is very fragmentary, but it is an important work by a great composer, and it may become popular with more familiarity. At any rate we are indebted to Mr. Fiedler for causing it to be heard for the first time, in our city. It was an important novelty to begin the season with. Mr. Fiedler was welcomed most cordially by the audience and is evidently as popular as ever in Boston.

HIGGINSON BUST NOW IN SYMPHONY HALL

The bronze bust of Henry Lee Higginson, which had been removed from the Art Museum, where it had been on exhibition for some months, was placed yesterday in the Huntington ave. lobby of Symphony hall. It is the work of Bela L. Pratt, and is considered as very characteristic of the subject.

The bust stands on a pedestal, the work of A. W. Longfellow, and is located in a niche of yellowish Siena marble against a dark background. The inscription of the bust, which was made at the order of Mr. Higginson's friends, reads: "Henry Lee Higginson, Founder and Sustainer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

STAATSZEITUNG,

New York City.

Dirigent Herr Max Fiedler vom Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester verlautbart, daß er in Boston in der kommenden Saison eine ganze Reihe von Novitäten — es sind ihrer nicht weniger als 38 — zur Aufführung bringen werde, von denen auch zahlreiche in den New Yorker Konzerten der Gesellschaft gehört werden werden. Wir entnehmen der langen Liste Reger's neue „Lustspiel-Ouverture", op. 120, ferner ein Tonpoem von Granville Bantock, „Dante und Beatrice", Theodore Dubois' „Symphonie Française"; „Kikimorra", eine Legende von Liadoff; Elgar's neue, zweite Symphonie; Josef Holbrooke's Tongemälde „Ulalume"; Mahler's zweite und neunte Symphonie und Wallace's symphonisches Poem „Villon". In den Konzerten vom 13. und 14. Oktober wir der 30. Gründungstag der Gesellschaft gefeiert werden. Bei dieser Gelegenheit gedenkt Herr Fiedler die drei in Boston am häufigsten aufgeführten symphonischen Werke des klassischen Repertoires aufzuführen, nämlich Beethoven's „Eroica", Schubert's „Unvollendete Symphonie" und Brahms' „Akademische Ouverture". Am 20. und 21. Oktober findet eine große Lisztfeier statt, deren Hauptstück dieses Meisters „Dante"-Symphonie bilden wird.

Die bisherigen Abonnenten können ihre Sitze bis zum 7. Oktober an der Kasse von Carnegie Hall abholen; die bis dahin nicht abgeholten Billette, deren es nur eine kleine Zahl geben wird, sollen vom 9. Oktober an in Carnegie Hall zum öffentlichen Verkauf gebracht werden.

STANDARD UNION,

Brooklyn, N. Y.

SEP 30 1911

MUSICAL NOTES.

The subscription list for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts is open at the Academy of Music.

[22]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

MORNING TELEGRAPH,
New York City.
OCT 5 1911

MASKS AND FACES

By ALGERNON ST. JOHN-BRENON.

WHEN the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its season, as it will during the next few days, it will be entering upon the thirtieth year of its celebrated activities.

The interesting feature about the Boston Orchestra, the fame of which is world-wide, is that it is the creation of one man. Other institutions of the kind have been held together by the sullen and reluctant assistance of a number of ever-changing guarantors. Some of them have eventually succumbed when the guarantors have grown tired of posing as art patrons and wearing the garb of the Medici. Nothing, however, daunted Major Henry Lee Higginson. He felt with remarkable public spirit that a symphony orchestra would be a good influence in a city of good intellectual influences. He would add to the attractiveness of his Boston. He would do something that would make her name go forth among the nations and cause her to be envied among men.

This we take to be true civic pride. It is accomplishment in fact, and not empty vaunt in word. Mr. Higginson, knowing well that money is as much the sinews of art as it is of war, determined to devote a large part of his fortune to the financing of the scheme he had in view—namely, the establishment of a permanent orchestra in Boston. He would not accept the assistance of any one else.

He had seen that divided authority had ruined many a similar project. He would not divide his authority. He would be master in the fair house that he was about to construct. So he shouldered the burden himself.

The idea had been simmering in Mr. Higginson's mind long before he was able to put it into effect. Thirty years ago he had perfected the details of his plan save in one important particular. He had no conductor. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded on the crumbled ruins of the old Harvard Musical Association.

Now, at the very last concert of that society there, which took place in March, 1881, Miss Lillian Bailey made her appearance. One of the members of her company was a baritone of the name of Georg Henschel. His voice was not a good one, though it possessed a sardonic quality particularly valuable when it was used to interpret the music assigned to certain musical demons. There were only three purely orchestral numbers on the elegiac programme, and one of these was an overture by Mr. Henschel of the association. The composer had been permitted to conduct it himself.

The result, according to W. F. Apthorp, was an overwhelming success. It may even be said that the quality of the composition itself was well-nigh lost sight of in the general enthusiasm for the vigor, power and effectiveness of the performance. Here seemed to be a man who held an orchestra in the very hollow of his hand and could make it do what he wished. Mr. Higginson, who was in the audience, may be fancied as breathing a soft but heartfelt "Eureka!"

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was very soon formed, with Mr. Georg Henschel as conductor and Bernhard Listemann as concert master. The opening concert was given in the following Fall, in the Music Hall, on Saturday evening, October 22, 1881, the programme being:

Beethoven: Overture, "Consecration of the House."
Gluck: Aria, "Orpheus."
Haydn: Symphony in B-flat major (B. & H., No. 12).
Schubert: Ballet Music, "Rosamunde."
Max Bruch: Scena, "Odysseus."
Weber: Festival Overture.
Soloist, Miss Annie Louise Cary.

A study of this programme will show that the Boston Symphony Orchestra began as it intended to go on. It would render that which was old and that which was new provided both the old and the new had claims upon the attention of serious amateurs of good music. The Boston Symphony concerts were crowded from the first. Mr. Henschel was conductor for a term of three years. He helped at the birth and weaning of the muse-blessed babe.

Its training towards complete, efficient and disciplined manhood was accomplished by Mr. Gericke, whom Mr. Higginson had found occupying the somewhat obscure position of fourth conductor at the Vienna Opera House at the time when Mr. Henschel's contract expired. He was a precisian, a drill master, a martinet, a sort of Vinnese Toscanini. In addition to this his musicianship was neatness and soundness itself. He was also an authoritarian. It is to these qualities that the Boston Symphony owes its euphony and musicality of tone, its splendid rhythm, its logic and its unity. His imperious methods caused 'Wouldn't you like to have the first oboe of the Opera-Comique in Paris?' 'Yes, I should,' replied Mr. Higginson, 'and I shouldn't mind having the first flute, too!' 'Do you know I think they could be had, both of them,' went on Mr. Loeffler. 'Then go and get them!' was Mr. Higginson's laconic answer. And sure enough, Messrs. Mole and Sautet were first flute and first oboe in the Symphony Orchestra next season." This is but one instance out of many.

Mr. Gericke remained with the orchestra for five precious years. Other conductors in the shape of Nikisch, Emil Paur, Dr. Muck and Herr Fiedler have succeeded him. Each of them was a man of mark and character. None of them did more for Major Higginson's foundation than did Mr. Gericke. He created an instrument upon which they played with varying results, nearly always satisfactory.

Four years after its creation the Boston Symphony Orchestra came to New York. It has made regular visits here ever since. That an orchestra, originating in Boston, should be paying us road visits might have created, under conditions prevalent a quarter of a century ago, some vexation among the irritable race of burg reviewers. But the attitude of the irritable race was just from the beginning. "My old colleagues from Boston," says one who has the memory of Phoinit in Homer, as well as his gift of narrative.

"It was kind from the beginning. My old colleagues in Boston will realize what this means when they recall the amusing jealousy which existed at that time between the musical people (or their mouthpieces) of the two cities. Too often the success of an artist in one city meant his sure failure in another—that is, so far as success and failure could be influenced by newspaper criticism. In his humble way one of the New York writers labored to break down these foolish barriers, which were not all imaginary. A case in point: An artist from Europe made her first American appearance in New York. She was treated, not harshly, not unjustly, but somewhat severely by the New York critics. To one of them she went, utterly discouraged, and said she was inclined to return to her home at once. 'Why?' asked the critic. 'Because I made a failure on my first attempt yesterday.' 'Do you admit that?' 'Certainly; I felt it in the hall and I read it in this morning's papers.' 'Then,' said the critic, benevolently, 'don't go home; go to Boston.' 'Why Boston?' 'Because if you have failed here, as you say, you will succeed in Boston.'"

EVENING MAIL,
New York City.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Boston Symphony orchestra announces 118 concerts in its forthcoming season. Max Fiedler will open the season in Boston, Friday afternnon, and the New York series will begin Thursday evening, November 9. The soloists announced are Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Homer, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Josef Hofmann, Alwyn Schroeder and Katheen Parlow for New York, while in Boston will be heard Elena Gerhard, Alma Gluck, Berta Morena, Maud Powell, Zimbalist, Katherine Goodson, Olga Samaroff, Wilhelm Bachaus, Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, George Proctor and others. Some of these will also appear in New York. Mr. Fiedler plans to present an extraordinary number of novelties, among which will be Max Reger's new Comedy Overture, opus 120, which will be played at the opening Boston concert. Other works promised are a new tone poem, by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice"; "Symphonie Francaise," by Theodore Dubois; "Kikimorra," by Liadow; Elgar's second and ninth symphonies; Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon"; the prelude to Bruneau's "Messidor"; Enesco's Symphony and Roumanian Suite; the introduction to the third act of Victor Herbert's "Natoma"; Gustav Mahler's second and ninth symphonies; Sibelius's fourth symphony; a suite for wind instruments and two military marches by Richard Strauss; Strasser's Symphony in G; the overture to Ethel Smyth's opera, "The Wreckers," and a long list of smaller works by modern composers.

STANDARD UNION,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in New York last Tuesday full of health and enthusiasm, and went immediately to Boston where the first rehearsal of the season will be held to-morrow morning. His first programme comprises Schumann's "Spring" symphony, Weber's "Jubilee Overture," and the first performance in America of Reger's new "Comedy Overture," op. 120. The annual auction sales of the orchestra in Boston were successful, as usual, that city still being very loyal to its great musical institution. Prof. Hooper, of the Brooklyn Institute, reports that renewals of subscriptions are being rapidly made by the Brooklyn patrons of the orchestra, and another great season may be expected in this city.

NO MUTTON CHOP OR WELSH RABBIT COMPLETE WITHOUT IT.

rom EAGLE,
ddress Brooklyn, N. Y.
ate SEP 30 1911

MUSICIANS GATHERING FOR A BUSY SEASON

Instrumentalists Are Tuning Up for Rehearsals by the Noted Organizations.

CHANCES FOR THE NOT-RICH

In Brooklyn Music School Settlement and Luyster Sight-Singing Society.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to hold the first rehearsal of the season in Boston on Monday next, the programme including Schumann's "Spring" symphony, Weber's Jubilee Overture and the first performance in America of Reger's new comedy overture, op. 120.

Auction sales of seats for the season in Boston were successful, as usual, that city still being loyal to its great musical institution. Professor Hooper reports that renewals of subscriptions are being rapidly made by the Brooklyn patrons of the orchestra for its concerts at the Acedemy of Music. Hence another enjoyable season may be expected in this borough.

WORLD
ss New York City.

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its sesion in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the winter, some of which are sure to be heard in New York. Among the compositions is Max Rogers's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise"; Elgar's new "Symphony"; Josef Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume"; a Legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra"; Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem "Villon," which was heard in New oYrk for the first time lats year.

Altogether Mr. Fielder announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America. On October 18 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary with a programme consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven, "The Unfinished" of Schubert, and the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. On October 20th and 21st will come the Litzt centennial celebration, the chief item of which will be the "Dante" Symphony.

...pping Bureau in the World
om 127 WORLD
ddress
ate

Boston Symphony.

Among the novelties placed this season by the Boston Symphony Society, under the leadership of Max Fielder, will be Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be heard for the first time in America at the opening concert in Boston next week. Other works will be a new tone-poem by Granville Bantock, called "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois's "Symphonie Francaise"; Liadoff's Legend, called "Kikomorra"; Elgar's new symphony, and Josef Holbrooke's tone-poem, "Ulalume." Altogether, Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston, and many of them are yet to be heard in America. The society will celebrate its thirtieth annisersary on October 13 and 14, and the Liszt centennial celebration will come on October 20 and 21.

Harold Bauer will be the soloist at the Liszt centenary concerts under Walter Damrosch, on October 27 and 29. The programme will include the "Faust" symphony. Among the soloists engaged for later concerts are Katharine Parlow (her first appearance in New York this season).

[23]

EVENING SUN,
ress New York City.

According to this season's plans of the Quinlan agency the foremost among its artists, Schumann-Heink, who is just now finishing her operatic and concert engagements with Frank Van Der Stucken in the cities of Germany and Paris and London as well, will return to this country early in November. She will give a series of twelve concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, two of these in New York on Nov. 9 and 11. She will also give her first New York recital in several seasons on Nov. 28 in Carnegie Hall. Her tour will extend across the continent.

Pachmann, the pianist, is here for his farewell American visit after thirty years of public life. He opened his tour in Toronto. His first New York recital will be on Friday, Oct. 20, and his last on April 18. He also goes to the Pacific coast.

A newcomer, Elena Gerhardt, is a soprano known in Germany these five years, who will make her American début on Jan. 9, and remain until May. Still another newcomer will be Zimbalist, a Russian violinist, who has been sharing honors abroad with Mischa Elman and Fritz Kreisler.

Zimbalist is 21 years old and has been before the public about seven years. He is a pupil of Leopold Auer. He will make his début in Boston with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Oct. 27, and will be heard in New York with the Philharmonic on Nov. 2 and 3.

TIMES
om
ldress New York
te

THE répertoire of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the coming season has just been announced, and reveals a list of novelties of startling length. Many of these novelties, however, have already been heard in New York. They include Elgar's new symphony, which Walter Damrosch will perform here; Arensky's variations for string orchestra; Bantock's "Dante and Beatrice"; the prelude to Bruneau's "Messidor"; Enesco's Symphony and Roumanian Suite; the introduction to the third act of Victor Herbert's "Natoma"; Wallace's "Villon"; Debussy's "Gigue Triste"; the third of the "Images," which include "Iberia" and "Rondes de Printemps"; Gustav Mahler's second and ninth symphonies; Sibelius's fourth symphony; Richard Strauss's suite for wind instruments and two military marches; Strasser's symphony in G; the overture to Ethel Smyth's opera, "The Wreckers," and Dubois's "Symphonie Française." Modern composers are still further represented by a long list of works which have been performed before, and, of course, there will be numerous performances of classic works.

...Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World
om LEDGER
ddress
te

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the winter, some of which are sure to be heard in Philadelphia.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice," Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise," Elgar's new "Symphony," Josef Holbrooke's tone poem "Ulalume," a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra," Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year. Altogeth Mr. Fiedler announces 38 works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary with a programme consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven, "The Unfinished" of Schubert and the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. On October 20 and 21 will come the Liszt contennial celebration, the chief item of which will be the "Dante" Symphony.

Last year's subscribers to the Philadelphia ... may renew their subscriptions for the five concerts by making applicati... H. Harris, Heppe's Piano Rooms, before Wednesday, October 11. The public sale of season tickets will open at the piano rooms on Monday morn... 16.

PRESS,
New York City.
OCT 1 191

Zambalist, a young Russian violinist, will make his debut in Boston in October with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MORNING TELEGRAPH,

New York City.

OCT 1 1911

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced the list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the Winter, some of which will be heard in New York.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock entitled "Dante and Beatrice," Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise," a legend by Lindoff called "Kikimorra," Elgar's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year. Altogether Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America.

HERALD

New York City

OCT 1 - 1911

SOON the curtain will be rung up on the musical season, with its flood of concerts. Already the big orchestras are out with their prospectuses, and from the announcements the evenings and matinees when there will not be a concert in New York are going to be scarcer than hens' teeth.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a series of five evening concerts and five matinees this season at Carnegie Hall, beginning November 9. The list of soloists includes Mmes. Schumann-Heink, Louise Homer, Misses Geraldine Farrar and Kathleen Parlow, and Messrs. Josef Hofmann and Alwin Schroeder.

Mr. Max Fiddler, who arrived from Europe last week, will be the conductor again. This is announced as his final season in the present capacity. He will present in New York, Boston and other cities visited by the orchestra a number of compositions that are new to America, among which are a tone poem by Mr. Granville Bantock, called "Dante and Beatrice;" a tone poem by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke entitled, "Ulalume;" two symphonies by the late Gustav Mahler, Sir Edward Elgar's new symphony and Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise."

SUN

New York City.

OCT 1 - 1911

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the winter, some of which are sure to be heard in New York. Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois's "Symphonie Française"; Elgar's new "Symphony," Joseph Holbrooke's tone poem "Ulalume"; a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra"; Mahler's Second and Ninth symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year. Altogether Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary with a programme consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven, "The Unfinished" of Schubert and the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. On October 20 and 21 will come the Liszt centennial celebration, the chief item of which will be the "Dante" symphony.

EVENING POST,

New York City.

SEP 30 1911

Among the novelties played this season by the Boston Symphony Society, under the leadership of Max Fiedler, will be Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be heard for the first time in America at the opening concert in Boston next week. Other works will be a new tone-poem by Granville Bantock, called "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois's "Symphonie Française"; Liadoff's Legend, called "Kikomorra"; Elgar's new symphony, and Josef Holbrooke's tone-poem, "Ulalume." Altogether, Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston, and many of them are yet to be heard in America. The society will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary on October 13 and 14, and the Liszt centennial celebration will come on October 20 and 21.

VARIETY

NEW YORK CITY

SEP 30

ORCHESTRA'S DATES.

Philadelphia, Sept. 27.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a series of five concerts in the Academy of Music this winter. The dates are Nov. 6, Dec. 4, Jan. 8, Feb. 19 and March 18. Max Fiedler, who has been spending the last five months abroad, returns for his final engagement, his four years' contract with the Boston Symphony coming to an end.

The list of soloists are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann, Mme. Louis Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program.

AMERICAN,

Philadelphia, Pa.

OCT 1 - 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is to offer many novelties during its forthcoming American season, in the course of which it will give five concerts in the Academy of Music. Max Fiedler, the conductor, is to bring forward thirty-eight works that will be new to Boston, and many of these will be novelties in other parts of the country.

Among the interesting new acquisitions to be presented are Max Reger's "Comedy" overture, to be played in Boston this week; a new tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice," by the late Branville Bantock, once the musical director of the London Gayety Theater; Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise," Elgar's new symphony, Holbrook's tone poem, "Ulalume"; Liadoff's legend, "Kikimorra"; Mahler's second and ninth symphonies and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon." Some of these will undoubtedly be heard in Philadelphia in the course of the winter.

For the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the orchestra, which occurs in Boston on October 13, Mr. Fiedler will offer those works which have hitherto had the most performances in the New England metropolis. They are the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, the "Unfinished" of Schubert and the "Academic" overture of Brahms. The "Dante" symphony of Liszt will be given in commemoration of the centenary of that composer's birth at the concerts of October 20 and 21 in Boston.

RECORD,

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

OCT -1

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston next Friday afternoon, has announced for Boston a list of novelties, some of which are to be heard in Philadelphia. Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise;" Elgar's new "Symphony;" Josef Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume;" a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra;" Mahler's Second and Ninth symphonies, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon." Altogether Fiedler announces 38 works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary with a program consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven; "The Unfinished" of Schubert, and the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. On October 20 and 21 will come the Liszt centennial celebration, the chief item of which will be the "Dante" symphony.

Last year's subscribers to the Philadelphia concerts may renew their subscriptions for the five concerts by making application to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's piano rooms, before Wednesday, October 11. The public sale of season tickets will open at the piano rooms on Monday morning, October 16.

TELEGRAPH

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SEP 30 1911

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced an interesting list of novelties, some of which are to be heard in Philadelphia. Among the items are Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert next week; a new "tone poem," by Granville Bantock, "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise"; Elgar's new "Symphony"; Josef Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume," a legend by Liadoff, called "Kikimorra"; Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year. Altogether Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works new to the orchestra, a large portion of them new in America. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary. Last year's subscribers to the Philadelphia concerts may renew their subscriptions for the five concerts by making application to Miss H. Harris, before October 11. The public sale of season tickets will open on October 16.

PRESS,

Philadelphia, Pa.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the Winter, some of which are sure to be heard in Philadelphia.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise;" Elgar's new "Symphony;" Josef Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume;" a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra;" Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year.

Last year's subscribers to the Philadelphia concerts may renew their subscriptions for the five concerts by making application to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's Piano Rooms, before Wednesday, October 11. The public sale of season tickets will open at the piano rooms on Monday morning, October 16.

EVENING BULLETIN,

Philadelphia, Pa.

SEP 30 1911

Musical Notes

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts this season will be given at the Academy of Music on Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 18 and March 18, the soloists for the season being Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program. Among the interesting works that Mr. Fiedler will present is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture," Op. 120, which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert next week.

TIMES,

Brooklyn, N. Y.

SEP 30 1911

The Boston Symphony Society, Max Fiedler, conductor, will give five Friday evening concerts at the Academy of Music this year. The first will be on Friday, November 10. The soloists announced for the season are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Josef Hofman and Alwin Schroeder.

TIMES

SEP 28 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

During the coming season the Boston Symphony orchestra will give a course of concerts of an educational nature at the Academy of Music, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences. Before these concerts a lecture of an hour's duration will be given, in which each number on the program will be thoroughly analyzed and the principal themes of each symphony played—the whole in the form of a pianoforte recital, with explanatory remarks. The lecturers engaged include Louis C. Elson of Boston, Howard Brockway and Alvah Glover Salmon of New York and Carl Figue of Brooklyn. Mr. Salmon is well known in Hartford, having had a pianoforte class here one day each week for the past nine years. He is also one of the artists engaged in the Hartford teachers' course of concerts and lectures to be given during the witter.

TIMES

HARTFORD, CONN.

SEP 30 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

John M. Gallup will present the Boston Symphony orchestra, Max Feidler, conductor, in three concerts at Parsons's theater, as follows:

First Concert, Monday evening, November 13; with Alwyn Schroeder, the favorite violoncellist, as soloist.

Second concert, Monday evening, January 15, with Harold Bauer, one of the greatest pianists now before the public.

Third concert, Monday evening, February 26, with Kathleen Parlow violiniste, who created a marvellous sensation last season in her appearance with the great orchestras of the world.

Circulars will be mailed to-day to the regular subscribers giving further particulars regarding seats for the series.

COURANT

HARTFORD, CONN.

SEP 30 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

John M. Gallup presents the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Max Feidler conductor, in three concerts at the Parsons Theater as follows: Monday evening, November 13, with Alwyn Schroeder, the favorite violoncellist, as soloist; Monday evening, January 15, with Harold Bauer, one of the greatest pianists now before the public; Monday evening, February 26, with Kathleen Parlow, violiniste, who created a sensation last season in her appearance with the great orchestras of the world.

Circulars will be mailed today to the regular subscribers giving further particulars regarding seats for the series.

NEWS

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

SEP 30 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which opens its season in Boston Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the winter, some of which are sure to be heard in Providence.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy" overture, which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise;" Elgar's new "Symphony;" Josef Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume;" a legend by Liadoff, called "Kikimorra;" Mahler's second and ninth symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year.

Providence season ticket holders of last year may renew their subscriptions for this series by making mail application to C. A. Ellis at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, on or before Saturday, Oct. 14. The general sale of season tickets will open on Monday morning, Oct. 16, at Steinert's music store.

JOURNAL

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

OCT 1 - 1911

Providence season ticket holders of last year for the Boston Symphony series may renew their subscriptions for this season by making mail application to C. A. Ellis at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, on or before Saturday, Oct. 14. The general sale of season tickets will open on Monday morning, Oct. 16, at Steinert's Music Store.

POST

Washington, D. C.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five concerts in the National Theater on Tuesday afternoons, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, and March 19. Mrs. Wilson Greene, who represents the management in this city, reports that practically all of last year's subscriptions have been renewed. The remaining seats may be subscribed for by applying to Mrs. Greene, 2647 Connecticut avenue.

The management announces as its soloists Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann, and Mme. Louise Homer. At one concert without a soloist, Mr. Fiedler will give a program entirely devoted to Richard Wagner. Mr. Fiedler, whose last year it is as conductor of the orchestra, returns to America this week.

EVENING STAR,

Washington, D. C.

OCT 1 - 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five concerts in the New National Theater on Tuesday afternoons, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20 and March 19.

The soloists announced are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. At one concert without a soloist Mr. Fiedler will give a program devoted entirely to Richard Wagner.

Mr. Fiedler, whose last year it is as conductor of the orchestra, returns to America this week.

[24]

MORNING TELEGRAPH,

New York City.

OCT 1 191

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced the list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the Winter, some of which will be heard in New York.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock entitled "Dante and Beatrice," Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise," a legend by Lindoff called "Kikimorra," Elgar's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year. Altogether Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America.

SOON the curtain will be rung up on the musical season, with its flood of concerts. Already the big orchestras are out with their prospectuses, and from the announcements the evenings and matinees when there will not be a concert in New York are going to be scarcer than hens' teeth.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a series of five evening concerts and five matinees this season at Carnegie Hall, beginning November 9. The list of soloists includes Mmes. Schumann-Heink, Louise Homer, Misses Geraldine Farrar and Kathleen Parlow, and Messrs. Josef Hofmann and Alwin Schroeder.

Mr. Max Fiedler, who arrived from Europe last week, will be the conductor again. This is announced as his final season in the present capacity. He will present in New York, Boston and other cities visited by the orchestra a number of compositions that are new to America, among which are a tone poem by Mr. Granville Bantock, called "Dante and Beatrice;" a tone poem by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke entitled, "Ulalume;" two symphonies by the late Gustav Mahler, Sir Edward Elgar's new symphony and Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Française."

m

ress

e

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the winter, some of which are sure to be heard in New York. Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois's "Symphonie Francaise"; Elgar's new "Symphony," Joseph Holbrooke's tone poem "Ulalume"; a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra"; Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year. Altogether Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary with a programme consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven, "The Unfinished" of Schubert and the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. On October 20 and 21 will come the Liszt centennial celebration, the chief item of which will be the "Dante" symphony.

EVENING POST,

New York City.

SEP 30 19

Among the novelties played this season by the Boston Symphony Society, under the leadership of Max Fiedler, will be Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be heard for the first time in America at the opening concert in Boston next week. Other works will be a new tone-poem by Granville Bantock, called "Dante and Beatrice"; Theodore Dubois's "Symphonie Française"; Liadoff's Legend, called "Kikomorra"; Elgar's new symphony, and Josef Holbrooke's tone-poem, "Ulalume." Altogether, Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston, and many of them are yet to be heard in America. The society will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary on October 13 and 14, and the Liszt centennial celebration will come on October 20 and 21.

VARIETY

dress

te

ORCHESTRA'S DATES.

Philadelphia, Sept. 27.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a series of five concerts in the Academy of Music this winter. The dates are Nov. 6, Dec. 4, Jan. 8, Feb. 19 and March 18. Max Fiedler, who has been spending the last five months abroad, returns for his final engagement, his four years' contract with the Boston Symphony coming to an end.

The list of soloists are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann; Mme. Louis Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program.

AMERICAN,

Philadelphia, Pa.

OCT 1 - 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is to offer many novelties during its forthcoming American season, in the course of which it will give five concerts in the Academy of Music. Max Fiedler, the conductor, is to bring forward thirty-eight works that will be new to Boston, and many of these will be novelties in other parts of the country.

Among the interesting new acquisitions to be presented are Max Reger's "Comedy" overture, to be played in Boston this week; a new tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice," by the late Branville Bantock, once the musical director of the London Gayety Theater; Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise," Elgar's new symphony, Holbrook's tone poem, "Ulalume"; Bladoff's legend, "Kikimorra"; Mahler's second and ninth symphonies and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon." Some of these will undoubtedly be heard in Philadelphia in the course of the winter.

For the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the orchestra, which occurs in Boston on October 13, Mr. Fiedler will offer those works which have hitherto had the most performances in the New England metropolis. They are the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, the "Unfinished" of Schubert and the "Academic" overture of Brahms. The "Dante" symphony of Liszt will be given in commemoration of the centenary of that composer's birth at the concerts of October 20 and 21 in Boston.

RECORD,

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ss

OCT -1 191

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston next Friday afternoon, has announced for Boston a list of novelties, some of which are to be heard in Philadelphia. Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise;" Elgar's new "Symphony;" Josef Holbrooke's tone poem "Ulalume;" a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra;" Mahler's Second and Ninth symphonies, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon." Altogether Fiedler announces 38 works that are new to Boston, and a large portion of them are yet to be heard in America. On October 13 and 14 the orchestra will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary with a program consisting of three works which have had the most performances of their kind in Boston, the "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven; "The Unfinished" of Schubert, and the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. On October 20 and 21 will come the Liszt centennial celebration, the chief item of which will be the "Dante" symphony.

Last year's subscribers to the Philadelphia concerts may renew their subscriptions for the five concerts by making application to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's piano rooms, before Wednesday, October 11. The public sale of season tickets will open at the piano rooms on Monday morning, October 16.

PRESS,

Philadelphia, Pa.

ress

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season in Boston on next Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the Winter, some of which are sure to be heard in Philadelphia.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise;" Elgar's new "Symphony;" Josef Holbrooke's tone poem "Ulalume;" a legend by Liadoff called "Kikimorra;" Mahler's Second and Ninth Symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic Poem "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year.

Last year's subscribers to the Philadelphia concerts may renew their subscriptions for the five concerts by making application to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's Piano Rooms, before Wednesday, October 11. The public sale of season tickets will open at the piano rooms on Monday morning, October 16.

EVENING BULLETIN,

ss Philadelphia, Pa.

SEP 30 191

Musical Notes

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts this season will be given at the Academy of Music on Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 18 and March 18, the soloists for the season being Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Louise Homer. One concert will be devoted to a special program. Among the interesting works that Mr. Fiedler will present is Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture," Op. 120, which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert next week.

TIMES,

From

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Boston Symphony Society, Max Fiedler, conductor, will give five Friday evening concerts at the Academy of Music this year. The first will be on Friday, November 10. The soloists announced for the season are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, violinist; Josef Hofman and Alwin Schroeder.

ress

e

SEP 28 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

During the coming season the Boston Symphony orchestra will give a course of concerts of an educational nature at the Academy of Music, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences. Before these concerts a lecture of an hour's duration will be given, in which each number on the program will be thoroughly analyzed and the principal themes of each symphony played—the whole in the form of a pianoforte recital, with explanatory remarks. The lecturers engaged include Louis C. Elson of Boston, Howard Brockway and Alvah Glover Salmon of New York and Carl Figue of Brooklyn. Mr. Salmon is well known in Hartford, having had a pianoforte class here one day each week for the past nine years. He is also one of the artists engaged in the Hartford teachers' course of concerts and lectures to be given during the winter.

rom

ddress

ate SEP 30 1

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

John M. Gallup will present the Boston Symphony orchestra, Max Feidler, conductor, in three concerts at Parsons's theater, as follows:

First Concert, Monday evening, November 13, with Alwyn Schroeder, the favorite violoncellist, as soloist.

Second concert, Monday evening, January 15, with Harold Bauer, one of the greatest pianists now before the public.

Third concert, Monday evening, February 26, with Kathleen Parlow, violiniste, who created a marvellous sensation last season in her appearance with the great orchestras of the world.

Circulars will be mailed to-day to the regular subscribers giving further particulars regarding seats for the series.

COURANT HARTFORD, CONN.

ess

SEP 30 191

olis.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

John M. Gallup presents the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Max Feidler conductor, in three concerts at the Parsons Theater as follows: Monday evening, November 13, with Alwyn

THE GOLDEN RULE, LTD."

Schroeder, the favorite violoncellist, as soloist; Monday evening, January 15, with Harold Bauer, one of the greatest pianists now before the public; Monday evening, February 26, with Kathleen Parlow, violiniste, who created a sensation last season in her appearance with the great orchestras of the world.

Circulars will be mailed today to the regular subscribers giving further particulars regarding seats for the series.

Newspaper Clipping Bureau of the World

News

om

dress

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which opens its season in Boston Friday afternoon, has announced an extremely interesting list of novelties which he expects to perform in Boston during the winter, some of which are sure to be heard in Providence.

Among the most interesting items is Max Reger's new "Comedy" overture, which will be played for the first time in America at the first Boston concert this week. Other works that will draw the attention of music lovers are a new tone poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise;" Elgar's new "Symphony;" Josef Holbrooke's tone poem, "Ulalume;" a legend by Liadoff, called "Kikimorra;" Mahler's second and ninth symphonies, which have never been heard in Boston, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon," which was heard in New York for the first time last year.

Providence season ticket holders of last year may renew their subscriptions for the coming series of concerts in this city by making mail application to C. A. Ellis at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, on or before Saturday, Oct. 14. The general sale of season tickets will open on Monday morning, Oct. 16, at Steinert's music store.

From JOURNAL

Address

ate OCT 1 191

Providence season ticket holders of last year for the Boston Symphony series may renew their subscriptions for this season by making mail application to C. A. Ellis at Steinert's, 327 Westminster street, on or before Saturday, Oct. 14. The general sale of season tickets will open on Monday morning, Oct. 16, at Steinert's Music Store.

POST

Washington, D. C.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five concerts in the National Theater on Tuesday afternoons, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, and March 19. Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who represents the management in this city, reports that practically all of last year's subscriptions have been renewed. The remaining seats may be subscribed for by applying to Mrs. Greene, 2647 Connecticut avenue.

The management announces as its soloists Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann, and Mme. Louise Homer. At one concert without a soloist, Mr. Fiedler will give a program entirely devoted to Richard Wagner. Mr. Fiedler, whose last year it is as conductor of the orchestra, returns to America this week.

EVENING STAR,

ess Washington, D. C.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its usual series of five concerts in the New National Theater on Tuesday afternoons, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20 and March 19.

The soloists announced are Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Mme. Louise Homer. At one concert without a soloist Mr. Fiedler will give a program devoted entirely to Richard Wagner.

Mr. Fiedler, whose last year it is as conductor of the orchestra, returns to America this week.

[24]

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS. "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From EVENING POST.

Address New York City.

Date OCT 6 - 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With its first pair of concerts on the 9th and 11th of November, respectively, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its twenty-sixth consecutive season in New York, its first concert having been given here in the season of 1886-1887.

The two series of five concerts will fall, as usual, on Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons, coming once a month. The evening concerts will fall on November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22, and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24, and March 23. The programmes for the evening and afternoon concerts are always entirely different.

At three pairs of the concerts the same soloist will appear at both the evening and afternoon concerts. In November the soloist at both the concerts will be Madame Schumann-Heink. Kathleen Parlow, the violinist, will be the soloist at both the December concerts, while for January Josef Hofmann has been engaged for both concerts, and these will be his only appearances with orchestra in New York this season. Hofmann had no idea of returning to America in the season of 1911-1912, but Mr. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, prevailed upon him to make a special trip to this country, in order to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a series of its concerts in Boston and various other cities.

In February, Alwin Schroeder, the distinguished 'cellist of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the Thursday evening concert, while on Saturday afternoon the soloist will be Miss Geraldine Farrar of the Metropolitan Opera Company, this being her only concert appearance in New York during the winter. The soloist at the evening concert in March will be Madame Louise Homer of the Metropolitan Opera Company, while on Saturday afternoon, the last concert of the season, a special programme has been arranged to mark the farewell appearance of Max Fiedler in this city.

Among the novelties will be a new comedy Overture by Reger, a new symphony by Sibelius, and Debussy's "Gigue," which is a companion piece to the "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia."

It was Mr. Fiedler's hope when he left America last spring that he would be able to bring back with him the symphony of Richard Strauss, but there is absolutely no possibility of its performance this year, as the first movement is still only in pencil sketch, and not a mark has been set on paper of the second movement. Strauss is very busy on a number of different compositions, and there is no chance of this being finished in time for performance this year.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Orchestra

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS. "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From CALL

Address New York City

Date OCT 7 - 1911

MUSIC

MAX FIEDLER TRIES IN VAIN TO INTRODUCE NEW STRAUSS WORK IN BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SEASON OPENING IN NEW YORK NOVEMBER 9.

By Harry Chapin Plummer.

That there is absolutely no possibility of the performance in America this year of Richard Strauss' new symphony is announced from Boston. It was the hope of Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he left America last spring that he would be able to bring back with him the Strauss symphony, but the first movement is still only in pencil sketch and not a mark has been set on paper of the second movement. Strauss is very busy on a number of different compositions, and there is not a chance of this being finished in time for performance this year.

Maestro Fiedler, who is keen on all new works, will try out in Boston this season a number of compositions new to this country, and undoubtedly the best of them he will bring to New York. Among these may be promised a new "comedy overture" by Reger, which was played in Boston yesterday at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time anywhere in the world; a new symphony by Sibelius, whose tone poem, "Finlandia," has rendered his name immortal; and Debussy's "Gigue," which is a companion piece to the "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia."

With its first pair of concerts, November 9 and 11, respectively, the orchestra from the Hub will open its twenty-sixth consecutive season in New York, its first concert having been given here in the season of 1886-1887. Maestro Fiedler, who is now in his last year as conductor of the orchestra, has arranged his usual interesting set of programs, and the orchestra itself has never been in better condition as to moral and discipline. No significant changes have been made in the membership. Two distinguished viola players have been brought over from Europe to fill vacancies in that section, and an additional first trombone has been engaged. This is the sum total of the changes. All the principal members of the orchestra will be the same as last year.

A very distinguished list of artists has been prepared. In November the soloist at both concerts will be Madame Schumann-Heink, who appears with the orchestra here for the first time in several years. For the last concert of the season, in March, a special program has been arranged to mark the farewell appearance of Maestro Fiedler in this city.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Symphony

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS. "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From EVENING SUN,

Address Baltimore, Md.

Date OCT 4 1911

Musical Notes

The new concerto for piano by George F. Boyle, of the Peabody faculty, was recently played with immediate success by Ernest Hutcheson and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (under the direction of Gustave Strube in the absence of Mr. Fiedler) at the Music Festival at Worcester, Mass. Henry Hadley's new symphony, "North, East, South, West," a number by Debussy and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" were the other compositions on the program, so the concerto can be considered to have had a most auspicious first hearing, being in the company of important works by the foremost writers. It is said that Mr. Hutcheson entered into the spirit of the new concerto with enthusiasm and that the gentlemen of the orchestra lent their keenest support. Mr. Hutcheson will repeat the concerto with the Washington Symphony Orchestra in the capital city in November. A number of Mr. Boyle's confreres and others who are interested in the work will go over to Washington to hear the concerto on this occasion.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS. "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From

Address

Date OCT 7 - 1911

Boston Orchestra Opens

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—With Mme. Alma Gluck as soloist and Mr. Max Fiedler again wielding the baton, the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its thirty-first season this afternoon in Symphony Hall. The personnel of the orchestra is practically the same as last year, one or two minor changes only being made.

The programme included Weber's Jubilee overture, Schumann's symphony in B flat major No. 1, opus 38, and Reger's "A Comedy Overture," opus 120.

1884

[25]

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS
"ROMEIKE" NEW YORK
NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From EVENING POST,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 6 - 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With its first pair of concerts on the 9th and 11th of November, respectively, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its twenty-sixth consecutive season in New York, its first concert having been given here in the season of 1886-1887.

The two series of five concerts will fall, as usual, on Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons, coming once a month. The evening concerts will fall on November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22, and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on November 11, December 9, January 12, February 24, and March 23. The programmes for the evening and afternoon concerts are always entirely different.

At three pairs of the concerts the same soloist will appear at both the evening and afternoon concerts. In November the soloist at both the concerts will be Madame Schumann-Heink. Kathleen Parlow, the violinist, will be the soloist at both the December concerts, while for January Josef Hofmann has been engaged for both concerts, and these will be his only appearances with orchestra in New York this season. Hofmann had no idea of returning to America in the season of 1911-1912, but Mr. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, prevailed upon him to make a special trip to this country, in order to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a series of its concerts in Boston and various other cities.

In February, Alwin Schroeder, the distinguished 'cellist of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the Thursday evening concert, while on Saturday afternoon the soloist will be Miss Geraldine Farrar of the Metropolitan Opera Company, this being her only concert appearance in New York during the winter. The soloist at the evening concert in March will be Madame Louise Homer of the Metropolitan Opera Company, while on Saturday afternoon, the last concert of the season, a special programme has been arranged to mark the farewell appearance of Max Fiedler in this city.

Among the novelties will be a new comedy Overture by Reger, a new symphony by Sibelius, and Debussy's "Gigue," which is a companion piece to the "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia."

It was Mr. Fiedler's hope when he left America last spring that he would be able to bring back with him the symphony of Richard Strauss, but there is absolutely no possibility of its performance this year, as the first movement is still only in pencil sketch, and not a mark has been set on paper of the second movement. Strauss is very busy on a number of different compositions, and there is no chance of this being finished in time for performance this year.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Symphony Orchestra

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS,
"ROMEIKE" NEW YORK
NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From

Address

Date OCT 7 - 1911

MUSIC

MAX FIEDLER TRIES IN VAIN TO INTRODUCE NEW STRAUSS WORK IN BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SEASON OPENING IN NEW YORK NOVEMBER 9.

By Harry Chapin Plummer.

That there is absolutely no possibility of the performance in America this year of Richard Strauss' new symphony is announced from Boston. It was the hope of Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he left America last spring that he would be able to bring back with him the Strauss symphony, but the first movement is still only in pencil sketch and not a mark has been set on paper of the second movement. Strauss is very busy on a number of different compositions, and there is not a chance of this being finished in time for performance this year.

Maestro Fiedler, who is keen on all new works, will try out in Boston this season a number of compositions new to this country, and undoubtedly the best of them he will bring to New York. Among these may be promised a new "comedy overture" by Reger, which was played in Boston yesterday at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time anywhere in the world; a new symphony by Sibelius, whose tone poem, "Finlandia," has rendered his name immortal; and Debussy's "Gigue," which is a companion piece to the "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia."

With its first pair of concerts, November 9 and 11, respectively, the orchestra from the Hub will open its twenty-sixth consecutive season in New York, its first concert having been given here in the season of 1886-1887. Maestro Fiedler, who is now in his last year as conductor of the orchestra, has arranged his usual interesting set of programs, and the orchestra itself has never been in better condition as to moral and discipline. No significant changes have been made in the membership. Two distinguished viola players have been brought over from Europe to fill vacancies in that section, and an additional first trombone has been engaged. This is the sum total of the changes. All the principal members of the orchestra will be the same as last year.

A very distinguished list of artists has been prepared. In November the soloist at both concerts will be Madame Schumann-Heink, who appears with the orchestra here for the first time in several years. For the last concert of the season, in March, a special program has been arranged to mark the farewell appearance of Maestro Fiedler in this city.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Symphony
17
"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS,
"ROMEIKE" NEW YORK
NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From EVENING SUN,

Address Baltimore, Md.

Date OCT 4

Musical Notes

The new concerto for piano by George F. Boyle, of the Peabody faculty, was recently played with immediate success by Ernest Hutcheson and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (under the direction of Gustave Strube in the absence of Mr. Fiedler) at the Music Festival at Worcester, Mass. Henry Hadley's new symphony, "North, East, South, West," a number by Debussy and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" were the other compositions on the program, so the concerto can be considered to have had a most auspicious first hearing, being in the company of important works by the foremost writers. It is said that Mr. Hutcheson entered into the spirit of the new concerto with enthusiasm and that the gentlemen of the orchestra lent their keenest support. Mr. Hutcheson will repeat the concerto with the Washington Symphony Orchestra in the capital city in November. A number of Mr. Boyle's confreres and others who are interested in the work will go over to Washington to hear the concerto on this occasion.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Symphony

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS,
"ROMEIKE" NEW YORK
NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From

Address

Date

Boston Orchestra Opens

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—With Mme. Alma Gluck as soloist and Mr. Max Fiedler again wielding the baton, the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its thirty-first season this afternoon in Symphony Hall. The personnel of the orchestra is practically the same as last year, one or two minor changes only being made.

The programme included Weber's Jubilee overture, Schumann's symphony in B flat major No. 1, opus 83, and Reger's "A Comedy Overture," opus 120.

AMERICAN

OCTOBER, 7, 1911.

GLUCK SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

The thirty-first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra commenced yesterday afternoon. There are no official ceremonies attending the opening of the Symphony season. The audience assembles a few minutes earlier and applauds the most popular members of the orchestra as they file into their seats.

Alwin Schroeder, Anton Witek, A. Maquarre and George Longy were clapped approvingly and there was quite a salvo when Director Max Fiedler mounted the conductors' stand.

Herr Fiedler bowed from the waist again and again until the audience ceased to discommode the poor man. Then the concert started.

The first number was Weber's Jubilee Overture which, as every one knows, winds up with the melody we call "America," the English "God Save the King," and the Saxons, for whom it was composed almost a hundred years ago, "Heil dir im Siegerkranz."

Alma Gluck, Soloist.

Yesterday's soloist was Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera company, who had never sang before at these concerts. She is very tall and slender and she wore a clinging robe of dark green with some kind of a dark fuzzy hat.

Little did she know that from the middle of the hall she looked like a nice stalk of asparagus. Miss Gluck is Roumanian by birth but has lived most of her life in New York. She has been given excellent roles at the Metropolitan and filled them acceptably.

Yesterday she sang the aria "Con vezzie con lusinghe" from "Il Seraglio" by Mozart and the air "Depuis le jour" from "Louise" by Charpentier.

Mme. Gluck has a very rich soprano voice with big round liquid tones until she gets above G when she becomes a very ordinary singer. Her high voice is neither brilliant nor lustrous, but on the other hand it is sweet and never shrill.

She sang the Mozart number very daintily and delightfully and the Louise aria as if she did not appreciate its abandon and voluptuousness.

A "Comedy" Overture.

There was a novelty on the program in the shape of a Comedy Overture by Max Reger, whom some intelligent people consider the greatest composer in the world.

To my mind Reger is about as far from composing original, inspired, immortal music as the fellow who wrote, "When You Know You're Not Forgotten by the Girl You Can't Forget." Yet Reger is a wizard at orchestration and can use every instrument in the band in ways that nobody but Richard Strauss ever dreamed of, while the song composer probably thumped it out with one finger on a battered piano.

The comedy overture is supposed to be comical, but I didn't see anybody smile. It is about as solemn as his "Variations on a Merry Theme," which were played by the Boston orchestra last season.

In glorious contrast to the noisy meanderings of Reger, was the First Symphony of Schumann, that beautiful work composed when the master was in love and in springtime. The difference between Schumann and Reger is the difference between an orator who talks sense and an orator who just talks.

The orchestra is the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its personnel is practically unchanged. It plays with unimpaired excellence and, considering that it has just reassembled after a five-months' rest, with great smoothness and elasticity. Mr Fiedler is firm and fiery as ever. It was a thoroughly enjoyable afternoon.

TRANSCRIPT.

SATURDAY, OCT. 7, 1911

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

THE NEW YEAR BEGINS WITH FEW CHANGES

An Audience, an Orchestra and a Conductor That Are As of Old—The Founder's Bust—Mr. Fiedler's Robustious and Rhetorical Schumann—Bossi's Scholarly Exercises—A Brand New Overture by Reger That Left Hearers Wondering How It Should Actually Sound—Mme. Gluck of the Metropolitan Sings and Notably in an Air from "Louise"

Five months make the recess in the Symphony Concerts, but when they were resumed yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall a single week might have separated the final concert of the thirtieth season from the opening concert of the thirty-first. The audience, the elect audience, of these Friday afternoons is becoming a fixed quantity. It fills the house to the last seat and it likes to sit in the same seats from year to year. The auditorium is gradually dividing itself into neighborhoods, where daughters join their mothers when they become of concert-going age and where an occasional newcomer adds the proper zest of change. Yesterday, the audience for these afternoon concerts seemed a shade more feminine than ever; it was as willingly hatless as though the battle over the discarding of them had not been fought and won only last December; while strongest impression of all to the masculine—and doubtless one that is very erroneous—the modes, as the dressmakers say, seemed hardly to have changed at all. Yet if the audience yielded no new sensations on that score, Mme. Gluck, the singer of the day, did. Heretofore Miss Farrar has surpassed all her sisters in the strange wonder of the dresses she has worn at the Symphony Concerts. Until she tries again. Mme. Gluck has left her far behind. Not for nothing, in clothes, as "Arms and the Man" long ago proved, is one born in the Balkans.

The aspect of the stage was as little novel as that of the auditorium. Mr. Fiedler remained Mr. Fiedler in gesture and in all that he did. The audience received him warmly, liked his version of Schumann's "Spring" symphony and liked still more the half-archaic, half-modern flavor of the intermezzi to Goldoni's plays that he revived from the programme of Dr. Muck that first discovered the Teutonized Italian, Bossi, who wrote them. There were more departures before Reger's new overture, at the end of the programme, than there usually are when the final piece is better known. Otherwise Mr. Fiedler held his audience as of old. Changes in the personnel of the orchestra have been few, and there were barely two new faces to catch the eyes of those wont to scrutinize and remember the men. Mr. Fiedler had evidently had ample time to rehearse them for when he willed, they played as fast as he wished—which is not always easy—and as loud. In fact, the one really new thing of the day was the bust of Mr. Higginson that had been placed an hour before the beginning of the concert in a niche midway of the corridor, along Huntington avenue. It is the bronze bust of his head and shoulders, highly characteristic in expression and pose that has stood for a year past in the Museum of Fine Arts. Bela Pratt, the sculptor, made it and A. W. Longfellow, the architect, prepared the place for it. In an arched and recessed frame of yellowish Sienna marble, it stands on a similar pedestal against a background of dark greenish marble. "Henry Lee Higginson. Founder and Sustainer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" is the inscription that it bears, and admiring friends placed the bust in Symphony Hall in spite of Mr. Higginson's mild resistance to their will. It is the only public testimony to his share in the life and the glories of the orchestra.

Mr. Fiedler's programme was characteristically diversified. It began with the thunderous and somewhat hollow pomp of Weber's "Jubilee" overture, which sounds, after all these years, more than ever as though it were written to hail some happy sovereign of Pumpernickel moving to his place among his loyal burghers. Weber was happy with romantic subjects; they stimulated him to such deathless overtures, if not to such deathless operas, as those to "Freischütz," "Oberon" and "Euryanthe." His Majesty, Friedrich August I. of Saxony, for the fiftieth anniversary of whose coronation, Weber wrote the overture, was not a romantic personage, and he kindled the composer to no more than a succession of pompous orchestral flourishes. They sounded in 1818; they still sound; and Mr. Fiedler made the orchestra play them with an exceeding muscularity and sonority. If the Symphony Orchestra had a chorus, the piece to follow would have been Händel's coronation anthem, "Zadock, the Priest." Wagner's "March of Homage" might have ensued and we should have run the gamut of empty but reverberant ceremonial music then.

As it was, Mr. Fiedler plunged forthwith into Schumann's symphony in B-flat, the symphony of the awakening spring, according to the poem by the obscure Böttger that the musical scholiasts have now attached to it. Those who dislike the ways of Mr. Fiedler could readily quarrel with the pace at which he took the symphony and the quality of tone that he gave it. He played all of it, they will say, and not altogether unjustly, very loud; he played the first movement and the Finale very fast and the Romanza of the Larghetto very slowly; while the familiar details of the music—the horn calls, the cadenza for the flute and the like—stood sharply against the tonal mass. All this is Mr. Fiedler's way with the classics, and it is a pity to begin to quarrel with it anew at the very outset of his final year. Certainly the symphony sounded elate enough to be the rejoicing of all Germany in the spring and its moods, and not merely the delight therein of the rather sensitive and secluded Robert Schumann, while his romantic voice, which can be delicate and introspective, was robustious indeed. Never have the strings of the orchestra sounded more muscular; the wood-winds were of their richest tones in the slow movement, and the brass was duly big and flaring. Moreover, since the men were fresh to their work, even Mr. Fiedler's pace did not much blur detail. Perhaps all this is the way to make amends for Schumann's thick orchestration, and it seemed sonorous enough yesterday. Perhaps this is the way to make the symphony sound like a magnificent and eloquent improvisation for the concert-room. The books say that Schumann wrote it almost at a heat, in four days even, because the impulse and the moods of the music possessed him. They were so spontaneous, indeed, that Schumann does not labor with his form or his scoring. He made the music run in long flights of elate or musing fancy that flower into detail of themselves. No more than his pianoforte pieces is it rhetorical music. It sounded too much so yesterday.

Perhaps, after all, the concert was predestined to musical rhetoric. Four of Bossi's intermezzi to Goldoni's comedies were the next orchestral pieces. and Bossi is an Italian who would fain write German-wise. More Germans than Italians, the cynics of Milan say, have heard his music and much more heartily applauded it. Any how, he is altogether a superior person, who does not write for the theatre, who looks skew-eyed upon Puccini and all his brood, and who will have none of fat and easy Italian melody. He thumbs his Goldoni, perhaps for a centenary; he bethinks himself of suites of the eighteenth century in which Goldoni wrote and sets to the making of these intermezzi Goldoniani according to the archaic forms and the rhythm of old dance tunes. They are duly scholarly and the pedants of Leipsic itself could not pick a flaw in them. They are mildly interesting at the start and more interesting toward the end when the amorous viola sighs out a serenade to a tinkling, twiddling accompaniment of the other strings or when they chatter through a "burleska," imitating and outdoing each other quite like Goldoni's personages when they are all talking breathlessly at once. Bossi has not made himself wholly German yet.

Presumably, the pace at which Mr. Fiedler took Reger's new "Comedy Overture" was the composer's own since he had charged the conductor with the first performance of it. Presumably Reger wished the muscularity of tone with which the conductor bade his men clothe it. Reger's ear is delicate enough in his string quartets; but outside his Serenade, it has not been thus far very sensitive orchestrally. The band named in the score is Mozartian; the music in itself suggests that it might be played most fittingly by a small orchestra. It was played yesterday to the full strength of the required instruments, very sonorously and at a rushing pace. Now unmistakably Reger's themes in the overture are lightly invented for light handling. They are intended to be gay, and with his usual fecundity of invention he has embroidered them with all sorts of ornaments even to a little fugue. The music seems to be always running away into these brief excursions, stopping to chatter hilariously for a moment, and then springing back into its normal and formal course, or hushing itself into mysterious whispers. It needs a very light hand for this patter; it needs a discriminating hand that will lighten Reger's tendency to unduly heavy and sharp orchestration; his humors, his fancies need to be opened. He is brilliant with an effort which needs to be hidden. In the scherzi of his chamber music and in the orchestral Serenade, he does not sound heavy and coarse. Rather he seems to have an aptitude for music that can extract gayety from counterpoint and humors from elaboration. Now the "Comedy Overture" did seem heavy and coarse, but it had read better than it sounded. The listener, who had glanced at it, wondered whether it could not have been played another way.

Between whiles, Mme. Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan Opera House sang an air out of Mozart's "Il Seraglio" and the only possible excerpt from Charpentier's "Louise," as young opera singers usually sing at the Symphony Concerts. They have been much elated at the invitation, and they become much frightened at the fulfilment of it. Wherefore, whatever their first number, they take their nervousness, as it were, out of the true pitch, which is not the way to disclose the graces of Blonda's suave tune from "Il Seraglio." Moreover, Mme. Gluck's voice is not altogether the voice for it. Her tones are rich and expressive as soprano tones go, but they lack the fineness and the transparency that this light music of Mozart demands. Once Mme. Gluck began to feel secure, she sang Blonda's piece intelligently and correctly, but with no particularly persuading elegance, with few touches of the finer vocal instinct and distinction that it is possible to bring to it. Mozart is not the fashion of the day in opera houses. Charpentier is, and in this speech from "Louise" wherein the girl muses upon her happiness with her lover, he has written music of intense sensuous ecstasy. It has little tricks of manner; it is a little too obviously cadenced and paragraphed; it is meant—and why should it not?—to be effective in the theatre. None the less it remains the voice of a passion that for the moment is caressing itself. The music is exacting; it holds to the upper tones of the singer's voice and it bears them over relentless intervals. Once, at the Boston Theatre, Miss Garden declaimed what she could of it. Mme. Gluck sang it without omission or slur, without a hint of its exactions, with a dark beauty of tone that kindled and sustained its deep and ecstatic fires.

H. T. P.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY,

OCTOBER 8, 1911.

30TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SYMPHONY

Notable Event Will Be Celebrated This Week By Special Program.

The Symphony Orchestra this week will celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of its birth. On Friday afternoon, Oct. 21, 1881, in old Music Hall, the first public rehearsal was given and on the following evening the first concert. The orchestra consisted of sixty-five local musicians with George Henschel as conductor. The program comprised Beethoven's overture "Dedication of the House," Haydn's Symphony in B flat, the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamonde" and Weber's "Festival Jubilee" overture. The soloist was Annie Louise Carey, who sung as her first number the "Che Faro" aria from Gluck's "Orfeo" and the big aria from Bruch's "Odysseus."

Twenty pairs of concerts and rehearsals were given that season and the public rehearsals were rehearsals in fact as well as in name as Mr. Henschel did not hesitate to stop the orchestra and go over parts of the music on which they were at work.

Since that time the orchestra has given a total of twenty-nine hundred and fourteen concerts. Henschel was the conductor for three years. Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Mr. Gericke who came from Vienna to hold the post of conductor for five years. Then came Nikisch for four years, Paur for five years, Gericke again for eight years, Muck for two years and Mr. Fiedler has now been with the orchestra three years.

The first number of this week's anniversary program will be the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, the second the "Unfinished" symphony of Schubert and the last number will be the "Academic" overture of Brahms.

[26]

HERALD,

OCTOBER 8, 1911.

2914 CONCERTS IN 30 YEARS

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Celebrate Notable Anniversary the Coming Week.

FIRST SOLOIST MISS CARY

Greatest Successes to Be Repeated—Dates for Other Brilliant Events.

The Boston Symphony orchestra at its next public rehearsal and concert, on Oct. 13 and 14, will celebrate the 30th anniversary of its birth. On Friday afternoon, Oct. 21, 1881, in old Music Hall, the first public rehearsal was given, and on the following evening the first concert. The orchestra consisted of 65 local musicians, with Georg Henschel as conductor. The program included Beethoven's overture, "Dedication of the House"; Haydn's symphony in B flat (No. 12 B and H), the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamonde" and Weber's "Jubilee" overture. The soloists were Miss Annie Louise Cary, who sang "Che faro," from Gluck's "Orfeo," and an aria from Bruch's "Odysseus." The general admission to the rehearsal was 25 cents, and the prices for the concert on the following evening were 50 and 75 cents.

Twenty pairs of concerts and rehearsals were given that season, and the public rehearsals were rehearsals in fact as well as in name, for Mr. Henschel did not hesitate to stop the orchestra and go over parts of the music on which they were at work.

Orchestra Has Given 2914 Concerts.

Since that time the orchestra has given 2914 concerts. Mr. Henschel was the conductor for three years, and Bernard Listemann concert master for the first four years. Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Mr. Gericke, who came from Vienna to hold the post of conductor for five years. Then came Mr. Nikisch for four years, Mr. Paur for five years, Mr. Gericke again for eight years, Dr. Muck for two years and Mr. Fiedler has now been with the orchestra three years.

Bernard Listemann, as concert master, was succeeded by Franz Kneisel, who held the post from the season of 1885-86 until the end of the season of 1902-03. He was succeeded for one year by Mr. Arbos, and then came Mr. Hess, who held the position for five years. One year he was away on a leave of absence and his place was taken by Carl Wendling of Stuttgart. The present concert master, Anton Witek, is now beginning his second year in this place.

While it would have been possible to have reproduced at this concert the first program, with the exception of the soloist, for Mrs. Raymond (who was Miss Cary) has long since retired from public singing, Mr. Fiedler deemed it better not to do so, and he has taken three works that, generally speaking, have been the most popular with the patrons of the orchestra since it began.

The first number will be the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, the second the "Unfinished" symphony of Schubert and the last number will be the "Academic" overture of Brahms. There will be no soloist.

CAMBRIDGE CONCERTS

The usual series of eight symphony concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Sanders Theatre during the course of the coming winter. The concerts will be on Thursday evenings and begin at 8 o'clock. The dates are Oct. 19, Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 18, Feb. 8 and 29, March 28 and April 25.

The soloists already engaged are Katharine Goodson, pianist; Lilla Ormond, mezzo-soprano; Kathleen Parlow, violinist, who made her first appearance in Boston last spring; Rudolph Ganz, pianist; Josef Hofmann, pianist, and Heinrich Warnke, the distinguished 'cellist of the orchestra.

Subscribers of last season may secure their old seats by applying to George H. Kent, University Book Store, on or before next Wednesday, Oct. 11. On receipt of checks tickets will be mailed. All unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at the George H. Kent University Book Store, Harvard square, Cambridge, on next Saturday, Oct. 14, at 8 o'clock in the morning.

SUNDAY POST,

OCTOBER 8, 1911

Symphony Orchestra's 30 Years

Conductors Who Have Made Themselves Famous in Boston --- Evolution of the Orchestra --- The Programmes and Audiences --- Anniversary Programmes This Week.

The 31st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened with the concerts of last night and Friday afternoon, and the 30th anniversary of the orchestra will be observed at the concerts of this week, the programme of which will offer three orchestral pieces which have been popular, in the best sense of that word, with the Symphony audiences since first the orchestra was able to play them.

To speak in such a manner of such well-worn classics as Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony; Shubert's unfinished symphony and Brahms' "Academic Overture"—the Symphony programmes of this week—sounds strange at this time. But it must be remembered that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not today the organization that it was 30 years ago. Then the public rehearsals, on Friday afternoon, were real rehearsals instead of official concerts, as they are now. Then Mr. Georg Henschel, the first conductor of the orchestra, used to stop his men during the performance as often as they are now stopped at the private rehearsals in Symphony Hall.

In the old days the soloists came mainly from the ranks of local musicians. Today, one must not only be famous, but very famous, to be invited to appear with Boston's organization, and for a composer of orchestral music a place on its programmes means the highest honor that exists for him in this country.

This enviable state of affairs is not, perhaps, over deeply appreciated by those who attend the Symphony concerts, week in and out, season after season, and applaud with more or less warmth the playing which even at the poorest affords a superb exhibition of the capacities of the modern orchestra.

Major Henry L. Higginson organized the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881, and the first concerts were held Oct. 21 and 22 of that year. The orchestra consisted of 65 musicians from local musical circles and the programme comprised Beethoven's overture, "Dedication of the House," Haydn's Symphony in B-flat (No. 12 B & H), the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde," and Weber's Festival Jubilee overture, which opened the concerts of last week. The soloist, Annie Louise Cary, who then sung the "Che Faro" from Gluck's "Orfeo" and the big aria from Bruch's "Odysseus," has long since retired from her public career. The prices for the first concerts were 25 cents general admission, and 50 and 75 cents for the Saturday evening concerts. Twenty pairs of concerts were given that season.

Since that time the orchestra has given a total of 2914 concerts. Henschel conducted for three years and Bernard Listemann, now in Chicago, was concertmeister. Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, who was at the time fourth assistant conductor at the Opera House at Vienna. Even then the American way of doing things was commencing to create surprise, for when Mr. Gericke arrived in Boston and read the programme of the concerts that Mr. Henschel, and before him the orchestra of the Harvard Musical Association had given, he was amazed to find that here, in its musical infancy, Boston had heard as much or more of the music of the day than he had heard in Vienna! Since that time other European conductors have had similar experiences in visiting Boston—Messrs. Saint-Saens, D'Indy, Richard Strauss, have all learned lessons when they came from over the seas to educate us to the latest European music in that field.

Gericke held his position as conductor of the Boston orchestra for five years, and at the end of his first Boston engagement went back to Europe, a more experienced and more famous musician by far than when he arrived here. Nikisch came for four years, Paur for five years, and then Gericke again for eight years, when he retired from his activities as a conductor. Gericke was succeeded by Dr. Muck, a very popular conductor, who stayed in Boston for two years, and who is expected to return to this city next season. Dr. Muck turned over his baton to Max Fiedler, the present conductor of the orchestra.

Of these conductors, Georg Henschel was an able programme maker and a good musician, if not a brilliant interpreter, who appreciated the musical conditions that existed in Boston. He led the band through its earliest struggles with some resulting glory to himself. Mr. Henschel was not a very experienced or especially competent conductor, but he did hold the orchestra together during the years when it was struggling to its feet, and he did much to prepare audiences as well as players for the advent of Gericke, whose name must be forever associated with the world-famous organization, which he, and no other, built up here in Boston. This fact is realized more fully with the passing of every year, even by those who were once prejudiced against Mr. Gericke on account of the stiffness of his bearing and the classic calm of his methods in conducting. It is true, Gericke was not as "emotional" or as "romantic" as some of the conductors who followed him, but he was a man of the highest ideals, and of untiring energy in bringing about their realization. He was a rigid disciplinarian, he knew the technic of everyone of the instruments of the orchestra, as no man has succeeded him, has known it, and his feeling for sheer purity and beauty of tone, as well as his sense of artistic values, has not been equalled by any other conductor who has appeared in Boston.

Mr. Gericke, when he came here, made himself particularly unpopular for a period by the steps that he took to reorganize the Symphony Orchestra, in a manner which made it a far more solid and harmonious and efficient body of players than it had ever been before. Many a local light was removed from his position and a better man put in. This naturally offended a number of the resident players and their following, but it was not long before the results of the conductor's policy commenced to become gratifyingly evident, and Boston had been saved from that provincialism which is sure death to any serious artistic effort. When Mr. Gericke left Boston, not to return in any public capacity, he left behind him an orchestra of probably unrivalled efficiency. His followers, so far as the technic of the thing goes, have simply stood upon his shoulders.

Dr. Muck came to Boston with a flourish of trumpets and drums, the sanction of the Kaiser back of him, and immediately became a favorite in social and as well as musical circles of the city. He found a practically perfect instrument awaiting his hand, and he was free to handle this instrument as he listed. An admirable musician, and a man of uncommon personality, he put himself high in the favor of the majority of his audiences.

Mr. Fiedler's accomplishments since he came to Boston are known to all. He has not only constructed excellent programmes, but he has introduced in this city an unusual number of novelties by composers of Boston and elsewhere. He has interpreted the music of the composers most congenial to him, as Strauss, Sibelius, etc., in an unforgettable manner, and better than anything has made the Symphony Orchestra and the visits of the Symphony Orchestra to other cities more appealing to the general public than they have ever been before. The management have reason to congratulate themselves upon Mr. Fiedler's extended engagement and the concerts of this final season promise to be of exceptional interest and value to the music-lover.

AMERICAN— Oct 8, 1911

HENRY L. HIGGINSON BUST JUST PLACED IN SYMPHONY HALL

Major Higginson was the founder of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

BUST OF HIGGINSON IN SYMPHONY HALL

Founder of Famous Organization Is Honored on 30th Anniversary of Its Founding.

The thirtieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is marked by the installation in the Huntington avenue lobby of Symphony Hall of a bronze bust of Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of this famous musical organization.

Subscribers to the regular Symphony season saw the bust at last night's concert, the opening of the thirty-first season It is the work of Bela Pratt and is the gift of a number of Major Higginson's friends. It stands on a pedestal of Sienna marble, with a background of Alps green marble.

The following inscription indicates Major Higginson's relation to the orchestra:

HENRY LEE HIGGINSON
FOUNDER
AND SUSTAINER
OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

In further honor of the anniversary time Conductor Fiedler has chosen for this week's concert program three compositions which are particular favorites with Symphony audiences. They are Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Shubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and Brahm's "Academic" Overture.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded by Major Higginson thirty years ago, succeeding the Harvard Musical Association. The first conductor was Georg Henschel. Bernard Listemann was concert master. The opening concert was given on Saturday evening, October 22, 1881, in what was then Music Hall, now the Orpheum Theatre. The program was:

Beethoven: Overture, "Consecration of the House."
Gluck: Aria, "Orpheus."
Haydn: Symphony in B-flat major (B. & H. No. 12).
Schubert: Ballet Music, "Rosamunde."
Max Bruch: Scena, "Odysseus."
Weber: Festival Overture.
Soloist: Miss Annie Louise Cary.

[27]

TRANSCRIPT.
SEPTEMBER 30, 1911

THIRTY YEARS OF THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

From Small and Troubled Beginnings to a Position Among the Foremost Orchestras of the World—The Record of the Early Years—Its Conductors and Their Work—Steadily Broadening Activities—The Gradual Conquest of New York—The Band and Its Public

INCIDENTALLY anniversaries look forward, since out of pasts and presents, with symphony orchestras as with all other human things, futures are born. Primarily, however, they look backward. Accordingly, now, when the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the foundation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is at hand, Mr. Apthorp has told in another column the intimate tale of its beginnings that only he, of Bostonian writers about music, could tell so intimately. Since, moreover, the orchestra now has a double public and a double fame, since New York, by just title of support and appreciation, shares it for ten concerts yearly with Boston, Mr. Krehbiel has recalled in still another column his memories of its beginnings and its progress there. Of the reviewers of concerts in New York none has more steadily followed or known more closely its rising course there. It is for the younger generation of writers about music to set down their appreciation of the orchestra as it is today, of the orchestra as Dr. Muck broadened and intensified its standards of performance, as Mr. Fiedler now maintains its new course, as an ambitious and astute management has more and more widened its activities. Between the primitive orchestra, so to say, that Mr. Apthorp and in a measure Mr. Krehbiel recall, and the highly contemporary orchestra that the younger reviewers know today stood a middle orchestra—the band that Mr. Nikisch, Mr. Paur and Mr. Gericke in his second term lead.

Now historians when they write more or less contemporary history have been known to pass lightly over middle periods. Origins, as they call them, are beyond the recollection of their hearers. Human nature being human nature, beginnings have a lively interest for those that know at first hand present upspringings and fruitions from them. By like stirring of human nature, they may be interested in such account or judgment of immediate actualities as the historian may give. But, if he is too expansive over the middle period between, they will merely glance along his pages or turn them over altogether. They have heard his tale of the beginnings; they are eager to hear his judgments of the present end. From his allusions along the way, they will gather his middle part. Moreover, do they not know those middle years that he records so diligently, out of their own recollections? He is wisest when he is content to set spark to them.

Mr. Nikisch, for example, still lives in Bostonian recollection as the first conductor whom the Symphony Orchestra bred toward subsequent fame and as the only conductor of it who made play upon his audiences and his men with what our mothers would have called a "romantic" personality. Mr. Gericke when he had finished his second term with the Symphony Orchestra sought the retirement that his long years of meticulous and exhausting work had made him covet. Mr. Paur's prestige waned through the Philharmonic Society in New York, the Metropolitan Opera House and the Pittsburg Orchestra until now he lives and works in relative German obscurity. Dr. Muck returned to his European reputation as a conductor of unique deserts, with a like American reputation added thereto. Mr. Fiedler, in all probability, will go forth to new European labors as a conductor established on both sides of the Atlantic. Mr. Nikisch was merely a rising man when he became the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra. He returned to Europe to advance steadily along the road of his present eminence. Mr. Gericke in his first term as a conductor stamped his methods and his standards upon the orchestra. Of them were borne and still endure its technical perfections, its regard for quality of tone, its sense of euphony. Upon these he insisted; upon these he labored; through them he expressed himself. His audiences counted all this no display of personality, because it lacked all flare, all flamboyance. Mr. Nikisch gave them a personality of another sort that they were pleased to call romantic and that for the moment they could hear in the performances of the orchestra and in the interpretation, as the musical dialect calls it nowadays, of the music played. They thought of Mr. Nikisch's orchestra, though they still called it the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Paur, in turn, flavored the concerts with a personality that was different indeed, but that was still vivid, a personality that equally made its immediate effect upon the music, the orchestra, and its hearers. Mr. Nikisch had the diversity, the unexpectedness of the romantic temperament. Mr. Paur had the concentration of an unswerving intensity. Like Mr. [illegible] ght the utmost in all things. The orchestra had been primitive under Mr. Henschel, it had become expert under Mr. Gericke; it had turned romantic under Mr. Nikisch and Mr. Paur.

Mr. Gericke, returning for a second term, restored the balance again. He abated not a whit his zeal for technical perfections, his exquisite sense of quality and euphony of tone. He was soon able to begin again with these proficiencies where he had ended and to advance upon the refining and the perfecting of them. He had only to make ready anew a familiar and sensitive instrument. When, however, he came to play upon it, the player had also changed. Perhaps, trusting his instrument more, he dared to attempt more. Quite as probably, he had felt the new musical winds, as we like rightly or wrongly to call them, that set toward new intensities of expression. Be the impulse what it may, in the long course of his second term, he laid a second foundation of the Symphony Orchestra today. To him it already owed its technical and tonal qualities. From him in his final years it received the impulses toward the accenting, the dramatizing, the variously imparting eloquence that now distinguishes it. Like a singing teacher who had first prepared a voice, he animated and colored it. To none of its conductors has the Symphony Orchestra owed more. He left it firmly set upon the foundations of its present virtue.

To Mr. Gericke succeeded Dr. Muck to lift the orchestra to new heights of accomplishment. A perfected instrument awaited him; he appreciated, respected, preserved its perfections. He could hardly refine upon the technique in which Mr. Gericke had schooled the band or upon the tonal quality to which his ear was almost as sensitive as had been Mr. Gericke's own. He could, however, begin where Mr. Gericke ended in the broadening of the eloquence and in the heightening of the accent of his orchestral voices. The technical and tonal perfections were, so to say, fixed qualities, and in them and through them Dr. Muck sought and attained a diversity of characterizing eloquence. In him was and is the discriminating, the responsive, the penetrating faculty that enabled him to divine and to disclose the individuality of each composer, of each composition that he played. He made his orchestra as discerning and as characterizing, as responsively eloquent. There was no mistaking the power of Dr. Muck over his men and over his audiences; but his was a multiform personality that took shape and substance from the music in hand. The personality of Dr. Muck, the man, was clear enough; but its distinctive trait was the quality that in the concert-room made it seem the single voice of the composer in the particular piece. The imperial fate that took him from the orchestra has nearly run its course. A kinder fate may yet restore him to it. Now, for three years—and for a fourth to come—Mr. Fiedler reigns in his stead. There is debate of the signal virtues and of the shortcomings that are the complement of them in a conductor of his ambition and zeal, of his intensities, of his sense of direct and effective eloquence. Anniversaries are not occasions for debate of the present. Suffice it that Mr. Fiedler has done his individual, considerable and probably abiding service to the orchestra. He has established the concerts as they were never established before, in the cities that it regularly or occasionally visits. Until he came, it had been an orchestra that played to the connoisseur, the amateur, the instructed. Hearing it under him, that paradoxical, evasive, but undoubtedly existent person, the average concert-goer has been interested and pleased.

That Mr. Fiedler should have done the orchestra this particular service bears witness to the gradual change that has transformed it from a local orchestra that only Boston and Cambridge and here and there a New England city knew to a band that ranges now from Washington on the south to Chicago on the west; that might traverse the whole country, did will and obligation, time and opportunity permit it so to do; that is cited in Europe among the orchestras of the world almost as familiarly as the Philharmonic Society of Vienna or the Gewandhaus band of Leipsic. The evolution has been gradual and natural rather than willed or forced. Even in Mr. Henschel's time, it paid visits to New England cities. As its prestige began to wax, it experimented with New York. Out of a few scattered concerts in those earliest years, it now goes regularly or occasionally to the more considerable and musically minded cities of New England. The occasional journeys to New York have expanded into monthly concerts in a chain of cities beyond it. The Middle West sought it when it had risen high. A week of concerts at first sufficed there. Now a second has been added to them. In every city and under much changing circumstance the orchestra has gathered and held its public. In thirty years and especially within the last decade, it has reached what must be nearly the sum and summit of such possibilities. With due regard for the physical and nervous energy of its conductor and its men, with due regard to its standards of performance, it can hardly undertake many more concerts. To increase them might threaten the very qualities that have made other publics, and its own, too, eager to hear it. Ambitious as those who control its fortunes are, they must respect the qualities upon which those fortunes depend. The conductors, the virtuosi, the connoisseurs, have spread the fame of the orchestra in Europe, which in its heart believes nothing of musical achievement in America that Europeans do not confirm. They will be quick to note any decline in its virtues; they will even say they have never quite believed in them. The golden mean of neither too much for its artistic criteria or too little for a widening public and a necessary income, must be the determining, the sedulously cherished standard of the immediate years to come.

Week by week the audience at the Symphony Concerts sits at the end, for the immediate hour, of a long evolution—and takes the process for granted. It hears, for example, Mr. Longy with his oboe, Mr. Wendling with his horn or Mr. Kloepfel with his trumpet achieve some little marvel of imagination, intuition and virtuosity. Or it hears the string choir when it is most shimmering or most fervid; or the wood winds, when they seem like opalescent sound; or the brasses, when they speak in mellow depth and richness. It hears and forgets how little by little the orchestra has become a band of individual virtuosi and then of virtuosi coöperating to a single end. The conductor but hears and orders the quality of tone that the music and his ear exacts; the men produce it. The conductor wills his euphonies or sonorities. They achieve them. The composer has made the play in dramatic music; the conductor "produces" it; but each man in the orchestra must be an actor in it. These same audiences expect to hear the newest m[illegible] pique their curiosity or kindle high their expectations. Yet, hearing, they forget that the catholicity, the open-mindedness, the tireless eagerness that have made the programmes of the orchestra as comprehensive and informing as they are, have been a gradual evolution to an established standard. They hear a classic, and it is of the repertory, they say. True, but the upbuilding and the maintaining of that repertory has not ceased since Mr. Gericke began to form it in the eighties. They listen to the singers, the pianists, the violinists who are now the "soloists" of the Symphony Concerts. There are few among them whom a rising or an established reputation has not sealed among the internationally and more or less exaltedly elect. Seeing and hearing these, they run an amused, may be a patronizing, eye over the "soloists" of the earlier concerts. The long, slow evolution upward to these heights of accomplishment and reputation in the "soloists," they neither know nor heed. As little, perhaps, do they perceive that they have advanced also in this evolutionary process. At bottom it is a part of the evolution of a whole community, of an elder Boston into a new.

In all these years, moreover, the audiences of the old Music Hall and of the new Symphony Hall have gone forward, consciously or unconsciously, with the concerts themselves. It is the custom to say that Mr. Higginson bestowed the concerts upon Boston and upon the other cities to which they now minister. He would not have founded them, he would not have extended them, had he not believed that a public awaited them. He could not in reason have maintained them and set them above all financial exigency had not that public in its turn and kind responded generously and loyally to them. From the beginnings by far the largest part of the audiences at the Symphony Concerts has been content with them, perhaps too content. It has left the ambitious or the grumbling minority to be the propulsive force of change and progress. It has barely been aware of the processes that have gradually altered its standards and whetted its desires. It enjoys the reputation of an exacting public; it is its conductors, its managers, its own eager minority and, maybe, a little, the reviewers whom it likes to chide, have made it and held it such. It has been, it often is, passive, in spite of much stimulation. It is a little prone now to take the Symphony Concerts as an institution to which it discharges its duty and is content. Such a public, so minded, with the propulsive minority to trouble it on due occasion, safeguards the present; but a wider public, perhaps, must care for the future. Newcomers to Symphony Concerts say the audiences look middle-aged, lacking the youth upon which they must depend in another musical generation. The wise in the scrutiny of publics say that another must be speedily added to that which now maintains the concerts—the public that is slowly developing a tentative curiosity about music in its higher estates. There are enough Bostonians of the younger generation to accept the Symphony Concerts as an inheritance, and becoming experienced, to come gradually to like them as their fathers or oftener their mothers did before them. If Mr. Fiedler has repelled certain connoisseurs, he also begun the winning of a public that hitherto was fearsome of them or that barely knew they existed. A foreseeing management is beginning in turn to seek out this public, upon which, quite as much as upon that of the parquet on Friday afternoons, depends the future audiences of Symphony Hall. The public that inherits and the public that is groping may yet in a fourth and a fifth decade make the widest, the worthiest public that the orchestra has yet known.

H. T. P.

The Earlier Years

The Troubled Beginnings Under Mr. Henschel — The Reorganization and the New Policy Under Mr. Gericke—The Public and the Orchestra

THURSDAY, March 3, 1881, is a memorable date in Boston musical annals, although it may be doubted whether more than one person suspected it at the time. On the afternoon of that day came the eighth, and last, of the sixteenth season of Symphony Concerts given in the Music Hall by the Harvard Musical Association, an affair which surely no one in those days —with the possible exception of John Sullivan Dwight—regarded as an "event." It was nevertheless eventful. The fifth number on the programme was:

Henschel: Concert Overture (MS. 1870), first time.

This was conducted by the composer in person; and hereby hangs the tale.

The Harvard Musical Association's Symphony Concerts, begun in December, 1865, and immensely successful at first, had been for some years dragging out a rather neglected and financially feeble existence; and there seemed little chance of anything turning up to check their decline. Most people who cared to think about the matter at all thought our local musical conditions in a discouragingly bad way; for very few knew that, for several years, there had been a man in Boston with a whole new scheme of symphony concerts fully matured in his head, and ready to subsidize them out of his own pocket; and, of these few, only one or two had any inkling of who the man was. But he was there, waiting patiently for but one thing to enable him to make his scheme a fact. This man, as all Boston soon found out, was Mr. Henry L. Higginson. The whole plan was his conception, and, like Colonel Sellers, he was only waiting for a "missing ingredient," for an orchestral conductor in whom he should have sufficient confidence to warrant his taking the first practical step. And it was the H. M. A. Symphony Concert of March 3, 1881, that at last brought this "missing ingredient" to his appreciative notice.

Miss Lilian Bailey, the admirable young soprano, had recently returned from Europe for a concert tour in this country, bringing in her train her London teacher, Mr. Georg Henschel, the baritone, who soon afterwards married her. Both sang at the concert in question, which billed a quite unusual array of solo performers; for, besids the two artists already named singing solos and a duet, Dr. Louis Maas played a pianoforte concerto of his own. There were only three purely orchestral numbers on the programme, one of which was Mr. Henschel's overture; and the H. M. A. concert committee had willingly granted his request to be allowed to conduct it himself. The result was an overwhelming "Veni, vidi, vici" success. It may even be said that the quality of the composition itself was well-nigh lost sight of in the general enthusiasm for the vigor, power, and effectiveness of the performance. Here seemed to be a man who held an orchestra in the very hollow of his hand, and could make it do what he list! Mr. Higginson, who was in the audience, may be fancied as breathing a soft, but heartfelt, "Eureka!"

The First Concert

Whether his mind was made up on the spot, or he first consulted some of the professional friends whose opinion he was accustomed to value, the present writer knoweth not. Certainly he was quick in [illegible]ng to action. The [illegible]ston Sy[illegible]hestra was very [illegible] with Mr. Arthur Henschel as c[illegible] and Bernhard Listemann as co[illegible]aster. The opening concert was giv[illegible] the following fall, in the Music Hall, on Saturday evening, Oct. 22, 1881, the programme being:

Beethoven: Overture, "Consecration of the House."
Gluck: Aria, "Orpheus."
Haydn: Symphony in B-flat major (B. & H., No. 12).
Schubert: Ballet Music, "Rosamunde."
Max Bruch: Scena, "Odysseus."
Weber: Festival Overture.
Soloist: Miss Annie Louise Cary

Be it said, en passant, that I believe this was Miss Cary's last appearance in public. Though she hardly appeared to advantage in the Gluck air (sung in English), her singing of Penelope's great scene in Max Bruch's "Odysseus" was by all odds the most completely superb I ever heard her do. She retired from public life at her greatest.

And Mr. Henschel? Well, the Sunday and Monday papers were of various opinions about his conducting; there was certainly no unanimous praise. A good deal of fault was found, in some quarters, with his manner, which was undeniably and even somewhat robustiously dramatic. Still his conducting did, in some way, seem to warrant Mr. Higginson's high expectations of him. His command of the orchestra seemed as sure, and, as the phrase goes, "magnetic" as at the H. M. A. concert of the preceding spring; the performance was throughout vigorous, fiery, and exciting; in the Haydn Symphony even rather excessively strenuous. It was, however, a disappointment to find Mr. Henschel's command over the orchestra decidedly more secure than his command over himself; he hurried rapid tempi inordinately, and the playing of the symphony smacked more of Berlioz, or Verdi, than of good Papa Haydn. But this might well have been the effect of the natural nervousness attending a first official appearance. There seemed to be no cause for discouragement, for the "magnetic" quality was still clearly there.

HOLE IN PAGE

Mr. Henschel

But the second concert made us stare! What had happened in the interval? I, for one, have never been able to answer this question fully to my own satisfaction. If what was adverse in the criticisms of his conducting at the first concert had affected Mr. Henschel, one could not but wonder at a man of so pronounced, not to say overbearing, a personality being so thin-skinned and flinching. But somehow he did seem cowed; not only had he quite put off his robustious manner, but, with it, all his mastery. What the real reason was is, as I have said, problematical; the fact remains that, after the opening concert, Mr. Henschel lost his grip—and never regained it! Of course a man of his talent, genius, and musicianship could not go on conducting an orchestra for three years (this was the term of his engagement) without learning something of his trade; but the old magic of his conducting, which he had twice so brilliantly displayed, was irrevocably gone.

The truth is—and at this distance of time we can, as the Germans say, pour pure wine over it—that the choice of Mr. Henschel as conductor was made without due circumspection. For not only is a composer's conducting of his own composition, in general, a ticklish criterion of his ability in that line, but it was perfectly well known that Mr. Henschel was very nearly a complete tyro in the art. He may have conducted a thing or two in his life before coming to America, but he had never held a position as orchestral conductor anywhere. Betting on his technical skill was, to say the least, risky. And Mr. Higginson could not have been long in realizing that, instead of putting his finger upon the conductor whose coming he had so long awaited, he was (in plain English) paying Mr. Henschel a high salary, for those days, for learning his trade in public. No doubt, on the other hand, Mr Henschel had no easy time of it, with the critical hornet's nest he raised about his ears; but then, what could he expect?

The Orchestra

Twenty concerts and twenty public rehearsals made up the first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (1881-82). The younger generation of today should know that the organization, in its first few years, was by no means what it grew to be afterwards. Its material, derived largely from the old orchestra of the Harvard Musical Association, was not entirely of the best; for the quality of that older band had been pretty accurately indicated by a talented visiting French violinist, Ovide Musin, when he spoke of it as "une agrégation fortuite d'elements hétérogènes"—a fortuitous aggregation of heterogeneous elements. That H. M. A. Orchestra was, in the full sense of the term, a "scratch team"; and most of its material was taken up into the new organization. Still it should not be forgotten that the new orchestra was considerably larger than its predecessor, and the added material was, for the most part, of better quality, in some cases extremely good. There is no denying, however, that the new orchestra contained some unfortunate elements.

Bernhard Listemann, the concert-master—or, as we then said, the "leader"—was a really remarkable artist, though a violinist of a school that has now virtually passed away: an excellent musician, with a streak of something very like genius, one who played with the authority of a master, he had a highly developed left-hand technique, but, in the slang of his guild, "hardly any bow arm at all." His tone was harsh, unmusical and lacking in resonance; he had little sense for elegance or finish of style. He did some truly great things in solo playing (the Beethoven and Joachim concertos, for instance), but was the last man in the world for the position of concert-master. He was a nervous, high-strung man, with little self-command, and constitutionally unable to follow a conductor; not that he consciously and wantonly took charge of the orchestra, like Ferdinand David, of the old Leipzig Gewandhaus, but that he simply had to play things his own way; he could not help it! He had, moreover, a fatal bent for hurrying the tempo in exciting passages. And it may well be doubted how much of such hurrying at the opening Symphony Concert was due to Mr. Henschel's nervousness, and how much to Listemann. For conductors of far more experience and authority than Mr. Henschel could do nothing with him; his practical influence upon the orchestra was essentially a demoralizing one.

Thus the Boston Symphony Orchestra had, from the first, some elements of superiority over its predecessor of the Harvard Musical Association. First and foremost of these was its being really a fixed and definite organization, the players having (or being supposed to have) nothing to do but rehearse and play under one conductor, without frittering away their energies, or losing their esprit de corps, by filling haphazard engagements outside. Other good items were the greater time it could spend on rehearsals, its superior numerical force, and at least a sprinkling of better material. That its playing still left a good deal to be desired, judged by a high standard, need hardly be said. Yet it may be doubted how much acrimonious criticism its shortcomings would have called forth, from press and public, had the playing of the old H. M. A. Orchestra been all we had to compare it with; but, fortunately or unfortunately, this was not the case. For some years previous, the flying visits of Theodore Thomas's New York Orchestra, unquestionably one of the finest in the world at the time, had given us striking practical examples of absolutely superb orchestral performance; and, considering the expectations raised by the founding of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was not unnatural that people should compare it with Thomas's, instead of with its older resident forerunner. The trouble was that the [illegible] throughout Mr. Henschel's conductorship. Neither was it unnatural, though not entirely just, that most of this adverse criticism should fall to the lot of Mr. Henschel himself. His conductorship was no bed of roses.

The Public

The material success of the Symphony Concerts, in the way of drawing large audiences, was, however, indisputable from the first and it has never waned since. In the second season (1882-83) the number of concerts and public rehearsals was raised to twenty-six each; it was not till the third season that the number was permanently fixed at twenty-four. And, looking back upon the matter from a distance of thirty years, I think one can say quite distinctly that this material success of the enterprise was, in the beginning and for some time after, the most noteworthy item in the whole business. One very striking new element, directly connected therewith, was not long in making itself felt: the enormous swath the Symphony Concerts cut, the unprecedentedly large place they filled in the musical life of our city. This was to be recognized as the beginning of essentially new conditions. Indeed, the founding of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has often been accepted as the transition from the old to the new musical Boston; and this is, to a certain extent, correct. Barring occasional visits from Theodore Thomas, we had thitherto relied wholly upon our own resources, in the matters of conductor and orchestra; but now an era of importation began. Mr. Henschel was the first of a long line of imported conductors. And the importing system, once begun, flourished wondrously!

I have spoken of the swath the Symphony Concerts cut. Good earnest of this is the fact that, with the exception of the choral clubs—the Apollo, Cecilia and Boylston Club, which could hardly be called concert-giving organizations for the general public, as their audiences were made up exclusively of subscribing members, and no tickets to their concerts were publicly sold—everything else of the musical sort in the city suffered. The Harvard Musical Association gave only one more season of concerts (in the Boston Museum, ending on March 9, 1882); but this was natural enough. Resident artists who had for years been giving successful recitals or chamber-concerts suddenly found their audiences dwindling away; neither did distinguished visiting singers or players have a very good time of it. Probably the most notable instance of all was the Händel and Haydn Society. This organization, in addition to its regular performances of oratorios, had, for some time past, been giving triennial festivals, of a week's duration; it had been in the habit of applying to rich music-lovers in the city to subscribe to a "guaranty fund" for each festival, but had been so successful financially as never to have had to draw upon it; the triennial festivals had paid their own way and even made money. But, for the one given shortly after the establishment of the Symphony Orchestra, the Händel and Haydn found itself forced to draw upon nearly the whole of its guaranty fund. It never gave another triennial!

New Ways and Old

Of course this aspect of the Symphony Orchestra's success called forth no little grumbling; people were not wanting who called the new organization "our musical dog in the manger." Proverbial expressions, like "Live and let live," were worked pretty hard. But this all-absorbing quality was really part and parcel of those new conditions at which I have already hinted. Some well-qualified judges thought these conditions intrinsically regrettable; for they certainly put an end to the musical autonomy of Boston, to our relying upon our own resources alone. I think, however, that it is quite idle to discuss this point, for I cannot but hold these conditions, whether good or bad, to have been practically inevitable, and their growth fully in accordance with the nature of things.

A prominent feature in modern life is its tendency to bring about an ever-increasing solidarity all over the civilized world. The telegraph, telephone, improved facilities for rapid and comfortable travel, the enormous growth of the press, have, as it were, bound all cities and countries more and more closely together, and tended to efface local idiosyncrasies; different countries have insensibly drifted into adopting common standards of life, comfort and luxury. What one has, the rest want also. In the so-called "march of progress" none wishes to lag behind. This has become a great, inexorable condition of modern life; there is no fighting against it, it is inexpugnable. As Carlyle said of Democracy: it is here, and we must make the best of it. The very Spirit of the Times forces us to accept it.

This is quite enough to indicate my line of argument. To cut short a long and tedious discussion, let me ask two simple questions: Where would Boston now be in the general musical race if she had continued to rely on her own resources ever since 1881? And how many of us would be satisfied with her position? Moreover, if some of us be still inclined to lament our loss of musical autonomy, let us reflect that Boston does not by any means stand alone in this respect, but that her situation is that of every other prominent musical city in the world—New York at the head of them! Boston has grown to be a great and recognized musical centre; and no musical centre nowadays relies exclusively upon its own resources, not even Paris—though Paris comes nearest to doing it. What a city cannot do for and by itself, it has to pay others to do for it. My friends, we must swim with the current; stemming it is out of the question. Furthermore, an old-fashioned naphtha launch cannot race with a modern motor boat.

Mr. Henschel's Programmes

But to return: with and in spite of all that has been said of Mr. Henschel, it should not be forgotten that he was an exceedingly cultivated musician and a man of genius. Such a man must needs, in one way or another, exert a good influence. As a programme-maker, Boston has seldom seen his equal; he had quite peculiar tact and insight in this matter. The programmes for the three years of his conductorship may not look very enticing now; but ah! if there is anything that makes an old stager feel[illegible] aware of the flight of Time, it is [illegible] from 1881 to 1884 could hardly have come within a very brilliant period of musical production; for, of the twenty novelties of the important sort brought out ("first time") by Mr. Henschel, barely two or three remain on the active list today. Cowen's "Scandinavian" Symphony (given on Jan. 27, 1883) may still be played occasionally in England, but hardly elsewhere. What do we now know of Volkmann's second Symphony, in B-flat major (Dec. 22, 1883), or Raff's "Winter" Symphony, No. 11, in A (Jan. 19, 1884)? Joachim Raff was a much-discussed man then, and a new work of his was looked forward to with interest. Eheu, fugaces! If I mention Brahms's "Tragic" Overture, George W. Chadwick's "Thalia," Bizet's "Roma," and the Prelude to Wagner's "Parsifal," I think I give all of Mr. Henschel's "novelties" that have held their own down to our time. Yet I have still to speak of the most thrilling of all (most thrilling then!): Dvorák's first Symphony, in D major (Oct. 27, 1883). The work is dead as a door nail now, but made our hearts beat when we first heard it! The opening phrase may still be acknowledged as one of the most superb in all orchestral writing; but, as one got to know the symphony better, one began to see that that lordly phrase was about all there was in it. And one phrase cannot keep a whole symphony alive.

One element in Mr. Henschel's programmes was very welcome to audiences at the time, though it has lapsed almost completely from the "serious" concert repertory since: light French and German overtures—to Hérold's "Zampa," Nicolai's "Lustigen Weiber von Windsor," Auber's "Lac des Fées," and several others. Such things have quite naturally fallen out of line, for I doubt if anybody but a few of us older ones would enjoy them today; they have even stopped getting more than perfunctory applause at the "Pops." Tempus edax rerum has swallowed few of his children more thoroughly than the old French Opéra-Comique and German Singspiel repertories!

What Mr. Henschel did toward improving the personnel of his orchestra, after its first establishment, did not amount to much—compared with what came later. His first step was even singularly unlucky: removing Wulf Fries from his position of leading 'cellist, a position he had held honorably for many years in the orchestras of the Harvard Musical Association and the older Philharmonic and Germania. Fries was universally beloved and respected, as man and artist, and his deposal was very generally resented: true, he was beginning to grow old, but not so old as all that. His removal came just before the seventh concert of the first season, and he resigned his membership in the orchestra before the fifteenth concert. Worst of all, his successor, young Mr. Carl Bayrhoffer, proved a flat failure. He, in turn, was replaced, at the beginning of the second season, by Wilhelm Müller (brother of Müller-Berghaus, of orchestral transcription fame), a superb orchestral 'cellist, with a well-earned world-wide reputation as a quartet player, but rather heavy and uninteresting in solo work. But the real effective remodelling of the orchestra came after Mr. Henschel's retirement, with the accession of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke.

Mr. Gericke

Mr. Gericke, when Mr. Higginson first found him out, was fourth conductor at the Vienna Court Opera, besides conducting some other things in the Austrian capital. Mr. Higginson could not have made a luckier choice. And just here let me tell a little anecdote, sharply characteristic of one of the persons concerned. Leaving the United States, Mr. Henschel went out on the same steamer as Amalia Materna, the great Wagnerian soprano, who was a warm intimate friend of Mr. Gericke. Chatting with her on deck one day, Mr. Henschel said, suddenly changing the conversation: "By the way, I hear you know Mr. Gericke very well, who is to succeed me at the Symphony Concerts in Boston." On her assenting, he went on, in his emphatic way: "And now will you please tell me one thing? Can he conduct?" Materna's answer is not reported; but one can fancy her assuming the expression of face with which she used to cry out: "Armsel'ge, schweig'!" to poor Gutrune, in the last scene in "Götterdämmerung." Conduct? Ay, that he could!

Mr. Gericke was not only a fully equipped and experienced conductor and musical drill-master, with a strong touch of the martinet, but also a man of rare organizing faculty and inflexible backbone; he was not in the least timid about assuming responsibility. His general musicianship, too, was conspicuously sound. If he had a shortcoming at that time, it was that the scope of his musical reading and sympathy was rather restrictedly Viennese, and he shared with most of his fellow-townsmen the notion that what the Kaiserstadt did not know was not worth knowing. His standards and traditions were all of Vienna, which, in those days, was not the most go-ahead musical centre in the world. The following story (which I know to be true) is significant:

Shortly after Mr. Gericke's arrival in Boston, B. J. Lang asked him if he would not be interested to see the programmes of past symphony concerts in our city; to which he replied that he had already seen them all, and even studied them carefully. "All" sounded rather startling; so Lang asked him how many seasons of programmes he had seen. "Oh, there have been only three," answered Mr. Gericke. "Ah, I see," said Lang, "you mean the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; but would n't you like to see the programmes for the seventeen years of concerts given here by the Harvard Musical Association, before the Symphony Orchestra existed?" Mr. Gericke's eyes opened wide at this, and he eagerly accepted the offer. So Lang gave him the two bound volumes of programmes, which he returned in a few days, saying: "I am completely dumbfounded! I do not see what is left for me to do here. You seem to have had everything already; more, much more, than we ever had in Vienna!"

The programme for the opening concert of the fourth season, Mr. Gericke's first, given on Oct. 18, 1884, was:

Beethoven: Overture (Leonore, No. 3).
Vieuxtemps: Concerto for violin, in A minor.
Joh. Seb. Bach: Prelude, Andante and Gavotte. Arranged for Strings by Bachrich. (First time)
Volkmann: Symphony in D minor. (First time)
Raiolet: [illegible] Leopold Lichtenberg

[illegible] unlike Mr. Henschel's as can well be imagined. Quiet and self-contained in manner, with no thought of the dramatic or the picturesque, he still gave a certain impression of strictness, even of severity; his air was not untinctured with a suggestion of military command. His beat was precise and incisive, but wholly unostentatious; yet one felt somehow that, as Thomas Hughes said of "old Brooke" at foot-ball, "his eye was everywhere." His whole demeanor may be described as half way between the modern "romantic" conductor's histrionic high pressure and the studied business-like unruffledness of Theodore Thomas. I have sometimes wondered whether Thomas did not wish, now and then, that Nature had made him less physically graceful; for his whole mental attitude was self-effacing, and his manner always seemed to say: "Don't look at me, but listen to the orchestra"! Mr. Gericke, after his first bow, seemed quite to ignore the audience; but his authoritative appeal to the orchestra's attention was so evident, his consciousness of being at the head of things and of ruling everyone under him, so unmistakable, that he had nothing of Thomas's apparent insouciance. And he really did rule the orchestra: with a rod, too, that had something of iron in it. This was immediately recognized by both press and public. The [illegible] brilliant; his conducting bred confidence, rather than enthusiasm.

New Methods

For a while Mr. Gericke seemed to sail prosperously on smooth waters: after the critical tempest amid which Mr. Henschel had lived, moved, and had his being, it was as if sweet Peace smiled once more. Except for such differences of opinion on matters of "interpretation" as must inevitably come up everywhere, he had practically the whole press with him, and the public was cordially appreciative. But, if peace reigned in his relations with press and public, his relations with the orchestra were not quite so serene. There were heart-burnings galore. Indeed the situation was quite new to a large percentage of our Boston orchestral players, and to the liking of few of them. Here was a body of men, most of whom had for years been used to (both actually and necessarily) slip-shod methods and lax rule; and these men found themselves brought suddenly face to face with a most strict, accurate, and meticulous drill-master, who took for granted that his word should be law. It soon became evident enough that Mr. Gericke was not only a strict and careful, but an excessively fatiguing rehearser. Listemann, who, as I have said, was a nervously impetuous player, with little sense for finish of style, found him particularly hard to stand. "Ach, Sie wollen ja Alles so spitz-fein haben!" (Oh, you want everything so polished up to the nines!) was his continual complaint. The truth is that Mr. Gericke belonged to a school of conductors who wish to do everything themselves, who are willing to recognize no initiative but their own, and insist upon every item in a composition being played exactly their way. Many conductors, on the other hand—and great ones, too—are not only willing but eager to leave a great deal to the taste and initiative of the so-called "first" players under them: to the first flute, first oboe, first horn, etc., especially in incidental solo passages. And this difference of attitude is well worth considering, for it springs from a corresponding difference of musical point of view.

The whole question resolves itself into the following: Is orchestral performance, like solo performance, to be a realization of one man's conception of a composition, or is it to be a piece of "concerted" playing, in which several individuals coöperate, each in his own way, toward a common end? In other words, are the various voices in the orchestra to be sharply individualized, like the different characters in a drama, or is the whole performance to be the expression of a single individuality? Of course every artist has to answer these questions for himself. I surely shall hint at neither "Yes" nor "No" for either of them; if I venture upon a suggestion, it is that much must depend upon the character of the composition itself. But there could be no doubt about Mr. Gericke's answer: he was distinctly and emphatically of the "single individuality" school. And, being so, he chose the thorny path!

The squabbles that arose from this situation were for some time of the sort historians call "intestine;" they were kept well within the walls of the Music Hall. If some stray items of news of the tempest in that big tea-pot leaked out now and then, they were looked upon as mere bits of gossip, interesting chiefly to those whom they might concern. I forget now how long it was before Mr. Gericke set his veto upon admitting outsiders to private rehearsals (some few lucky music-lovers had theretofore enjoyed this privilege); but the time did come, and the veto was significant of a good deal. But with Mr. Gericke's second season (1885-86) another thundercloud burst, and the tempest became general. Mr. Gericke found himself to be as much of a storm-centre as Mr. Henschel had been before him.

The fact is, Mr. Gericke had come to Boston with a perfectly definite purpose: to assert and realize his own standard of orchestral performance. And his mind was fully made up from the first. He was not going to conduct performances that did not satisfy him! He thus took the first year of his conductorship here as a significant example of the old adage: "You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear;" and saw clearly that the next thing to do was to be rid of the sow's ear. In a word, he saw that the orchestral forces at his disposal were irremediably inadequate, and set about curing their inadequacy with a will. He accordingly entered upon a course of weeding out and supplying new-made vacancies as he saw fit, that brought a fine hornet's nest about his ears.

After the close of his first season he deposed Listemann from his concert-mastership; and of course Listemann forthwith resigned his membership in the orchestra, as Wulf Fries had done before him, under Mr. Henschel. Nor was Listemann's the only head that fell.

HOLE IN PAGE

A Reorganized Orchestra

For the season of 1885-86 Mr. Gericke brought Mr. Franz Kneisel with him from Vienna, as his new concert-master; a position to which the then young violinist soon proved himself, as it were, predestined by Heaven. A more admirable concert-master never drew bow. Fritz Giese, too, brought over some years before by the Mendelssohn Quintette Club, succeeded Wilhelm Müller as leading 'cellist. Neither did these make up all the new blood that was infused into the orchestra; press-notices of the opening concert made quite a point of "the many new faces on the platform." If Mr. Higginson, in 1881, had inaugurated the "system of importation" with Mr. Henschel, Mr. Gericke, in 1885, began applying that system unstintingly. Of course, the decapitated ones growled, and their friends with them. That was natural enough. Yet, looking back upon the business from a distance of twenty-six years, one cannot but wonder at the hullabalioo it raised! People seemed to lose all sense of proportion. Some of the expressions of resentment had even a smack of trades union irritability. One would have thought Mr. Gericke was trying to revive the "effete monarchies" in this country; indignant patriots asked: "Is an orchestral conductorship an irresponsible dictatorship?" or, "Are free-born American citizens to be subjected to the indignity of autocratic rule?" For a while, there was quite an epidemic of writing to the newspapers; nor were some regular critics on the press less virulent than wrathful correspondents. But it was really only our new musical conditions in Boston showing more and more influence; we were but in the birth-throes of the Modern Idea.

Luckily Mr. Higginson fully grasped the idea, and backed up Mr. Gericke manfully. It took some courage; more than can well be appreciated nowadays. But Mr. Higginson never lacked courage—physical or moral. For one thing, the good results of Mr. Gericke's application of the "system" were soon apparent and unmistakable; no one could long be blind to the fact that the Boston Symphony Orchestra was not only a real orchestra, in the fullest sense of the word, but was fast growing into a remarkably fine one. As an instance of Mr. Higginson's readiness to do his share in the work of improving its personnel, let me relate a little incident that happened at the close of Mr. Gericke's third season here (1886-87).

At an informal supper, given at the house of a Boston music-lover, after the last concert, I was chatting with Mr. Higginson about the orchestra, when Mr. Loeffler, overhearing the word "oboe" as he was passing by, joined us and said: "Would n't you like to have the first oboe of the Opéra-Comique in Paris?" "Yes, I should," replied Mr. Higginson, "and I should n't mind having the first flute, too!" "Do you know I think they could be had, both of them," went on Mr. Loeffler. "Then go and get them!" was Mr. Higginson's laconic answer. And sure enough, Messrs. Molé and Sautet were first flute and first oboe in the Symphony Orchestra next season. This is but one instance out of many.

One of Mr. Gericke's ambitions, however, came to nothing. I will only allude to it here, as it is rather an esoteric matter; but it shows into what minute details he was willing, and anxious, to go in improving the orchestra. He was at one time eager to have "French" trombones—instruments of smaller calibre and shallower mouthpiece than the "German" model; but to do this would have been extravagantly expensive, and Mr. Higginson had enough opportunities for spending money already.

But, with the exception of this unrealized "dream of French trombones," Mr. Gericke made steady and admirable headway. By the end of his five years' engagement he had quite succeeded in bringing the orchestra up to the standard which we have now known for over twenty years. Too much stress can hardly be laid upon his labors in this cause; for be it said distinctly and emphatically that he—with Mr. Higginson's backing and Mr. Kneisel's aid—made the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra, as we know it, was his work, his creation.

The "novelties" brought out by Mr. Gericke in the course of his first engagement are not to be accurately estimated by referring to back files of the Boston Symphony Orchestra programmes; for he was rather careless in his use of the phrase "First time." Several things so marked by him had really been given here before by the Harvard Musical Association, the Philharmonic Society or Theodore Thomas. We were in the pre-Russian period then, and the prominent modern composers were Wagner and Brahms; Richard Strauss was just beginning to show his head above the horizon. Comparatively few of Mr. Gericke's "novelties" have held their own in the concert repertory to this day, the following are the best worth noting: Volkmann's Symphony in D minor (Oct. 18, 1884); Brahms's third Symphony, in F major (Nov. 6, 1884); Volkmann's Overture to "Richard III." (Mar. 14, 1885); Dvorák's second Symphony, in D minor (Oct. 23, 1885); Brahms's fourth Symphony, in E minor (Nov. 27, 1886); Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," for violin and orchestra, with Mr. C. M. Loeffler in the solo part (Nov. 12, 1887); Smetana's Overture to "Die verkaufte Braut" (Dec. 31, 1887); Peter Cornelius's Overture to "Der Barbier von Bagdad" (Oct. 27, 1888); Richard Strauss's "Aus Italien" (Dec. 22, 1888).

Of new works by American composers (some of which have lived, and some not) the list is: Arthur Whiting's Concert Overture (Feb. 6, 1886); George W. Chadwick's second Symphony, in B-flat major (Dec. 11, 1886); Arthur Foote's Overture "In the Mountains" (Feb. 5, 1887); Chadwick's "Melpomene" Overture (Dec. 24, 1888); Otto Singer's "Symphonic Fantasie" (March 24, 1888); Arthur Whiting's Pianoforte Concerto, in D minor, played by himself (Nov. 17, 1888); Max Vogrich's Pianoforte Concerto, played by Adele aus der Ohe (Feb. 9, 1889); MacDowell's second Pianoforte Concerto, in D minor, played by Teresa Carreño (April 13, 1889); John K. Paine's "An Island Ode" (April 20, 1889).

Of course there were many more "novelties" than I have here mentioned; but they are pretty well buried now, in library records.

Such is the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first eight years of its existence; from the beginning through its period of struggles and growth, down to the time when it was left by Mr. Gericke a complete and splendid organization. The idea and its first realization were solely Mr. Higginson's; its complete perfection we owe, as I have said, to Mr. Wilhelm Gericke. Since then it has had other conductors, some of whom kept it well up to his high standard, some allowed it to lapse slightly therefrom; but, save in the way of occasional exceptional luck in finding some extraordinarily superb first wind-players, it may be said without invidiousness that no one has really raised it above that standing. I am here speaking of the quality of the playing; what may be called the general efficiency of the orchestra has indubitably been gradually increased since. Its augmented numerical force, the doubling of the wood-wind, the only recently-acquired eighth horn, are all of real value. But the standard of playing was set by Mr. Gericke. From the time when he first left it, in the spring of 1889, it has steadily stood well in the front rank of the recognizedly great orchestras of the world.

W. F. A.

The Records of the Beginnings

Mr. Higginson's Announcing Letter—The Players in the First Season and the Players in the Thirty-First—A Grist of Early Programmes

BEING thirty years old, the Symphony Orchestra has its sufficient archives. In them, though nominally of its library, lie, for example, the yellowing scores and parts of novel music that has not survived the performance that introduced it here, or of classics, as once they seemed, that have long vanished into the limbo of the neglected or the hades of the overlooked. On leisure occasion, its conductors have rummaged among them and once, at least, Dr. Muck, in a neglected overture of Grieg, made a rewarding discovery. On shelves, and growing thicker and thicker with each season, stand the bound volumes of the programme books. Among them beginning in the eighties, waxing in the nineties and waxing yet more in the last decade are the volumes labelled "Trips," that witness the more frequent journeyings of the orchestra to other cities and the increasing publics that have rewarded them. Other archives still, in the very modern form of a card catalogue, list alphabetically by the composers, every piece that the orchestra has played, once or many times, with the date of the performance. Yet others number the members of the orchestra from year to year and perhaps preserve the contracts that sealed them of it. From the beginning, with all its artistic standards and ambitions—or perhaps because of them—the Symphony Orchestra, on its business side, has been very methodical. These financial records—and there is a vault of them—concern only him who has long freed the orchestra from pecuniary limitation or anxiety. Very few of the other records concern Mr. Higginson in his relations to the public of the Symphony Concerts, because even from the beginnings of the orchestra that he founded he has let it speak for him. One, however, deserves to be extracted and reprinted now, partly because it is nearly forgotten, partly because it was the first intimation that Boston at large received of the establishment of the orchestra. The letter which, with its caption, follows was handed to the Boston newspapers simultaneously in April of 1881:

IN THE INTEREST OF GOOD MUSIC

Notwithstanding the development of musical taste in Boston, we have never yet possessed a full and permanent orchestra, offering the best music at low prices such as may be found in all the large European cities, or even in the smaller musical centres of Germany. The essential condition of such orchestras is their stability, whereas ours are necessarily shifting and uncertain, because we are dependent upon musicians whose work and time are largely pledged elsewhere.

To obviate this difficulty the following plan is offered. It is an effort made simply in the interest of good music, and though individual inasmuch as it is independent of societies or clubs, it is in no way antagonistic to any previously existing musical organization. Indeed, the first step as well as the natural impulse in announcing a new musical project, is to thank those who have brought us where we now stand. Whatever may be done in the future, to the Händel and Haydn Society and to the Harvard Musical Association we all owe the greater part of our home education in music of a high character. Can we forget either how admirably their work has been supplemented by the taste and critical judgment of Mr. John S. Dwight and by the artists who have identified themselves with the same cause in Boston? These have been our teachers. We build on foundations they have laid. Such details of this scheme as concern the public are stated below.

The orchestra is to number sixty selected musicians; their time, so far as required for careful training and for a given number of concerts, to be engaged in advance.

Mr. Georg Henschel will be the conductor for the coming season.

The concerts will be twenty in number, given in Music Hall on Saturday evenings from the middle of October to the middle of March.

The price of season tickets with reserved seats for the whole series of evening concerts will be either $10 or $5, according to position.

Single tickets, with reserved seats, will be seventy-five cents or twenty-five cents, according to position.

Besides the concerts, there will be a public rehearsal on one afternoon of every week, with single tickets at twenty-five cents, and no reserved seats.

The intention is that this orchestra shall be made permanent here, and shall be called "The Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Both as to the condition and result of success the sympathy of the public is asked.

H. L. Higginson.

[30]

original orchestra, the recruiting of which W. F. A. has described in another of these articles. Four of the men who played in the first concert of the first season, on Saturday evening, Oct. 22, 1881, will play, also, in the first concert of the thirty-first season next Saturday evening, Oct. 7, 1911. They are Mr. Akeroyd and Mr. Kuntz of the first violins; Mr. Fox of the flutes and Mr. Schumann of the horns. Of the rest many have died; some are living in retirement; and a few still practise their profession here or elsewhere. In the succeeding list, the dead are marked with a (D.) and the four players of continuous service are distinguished with stars:

Conductor: Henschel, Georg.

FIRST VIOLINS

Listemann, Bernhard, Concertmaster.
(D) Allen, Charles N.
Suck, D. Henry.
Listemann, Fritz.
(D) Dannreuther, Gustav.
(D) Meisel, Carl.
* Akeroyd, Julius.
Strauss, H.
* Kuntz, Daniel.
Van Raalte, Albert (also played second violin).
Eichler, Carl (also played second violin).
Akeroyd, Vincent (also played second violin).

SECOND VIOLINS

(D) Eichler, Julius.
Higgins, Charles F. (Special player.)
(D) Trautmann, Carl.
Dorn, W.
Mullaly, Henry G.
Schuchmann, Frank E.
Oliver, F. A. (Special player.)
Proctor, J. B. (Special player.)
Hartmann, Hermann. (Special player.)
(D) Haldemann, Harry.
Behr, John.

VIOLAS

Post, Louis.
Heindl, Henry.
(D) Weintz, Charles J.
Beyer, Edward.
(D) Schlimper, F. W.
(D) Von Ette, Edward.
Eltz, Richard.
Tower, R. E.
(D) Cutter, Benjamin.
Patz, G. A.

VIOLONCELLOS

(D) Fries, Wulf.
Suck, August.
Bayrhoffer, Carl.
Heindl, Alex.
Behr, Carl.
(D) Stockbridge, A. B.
(D) Korth, Max.
(D) Rietzel, W.

DOUBLE BASSES

(D) Stein, August.
(D) Greene, Henry A.
(D) Steinmann, H.
(D) Jennewein, Leonhard.
Butler, Herbert J.
Bletterman, John.
Flockton, John M.
(D) Messerschmidt, August.

FLUTES

(D) Heindl, Edward M.
* Fox, Paul.

OBOES

(D) De Ribas, A. L.
Fischer, Paul.

CLARINETS

Strasser, Eustach.
Whitmore, O. A.

HORNS

Schormann, Edward.
(D) Lippoldt, Louis.
(D) Gumpricht, A.
* Schumann, C.

BASSOONS

(D) Eltz, Paul.
Regestein, Ernst.

CONTRA BASSOON

Hausknecht, Jean.

TRUMPETS

(D) Bagley, E. M.
Bowron, Benjamin.

TROMBONES

(D) Rigg, Albert.
Moore, David H.
Stewart, George W.

TUBA

(D) Nichols, W. C. (Also librarian.)

TYMPANI

(D) Simpson, H. D.

HARP

(D) Freygang, Alex.

THE PRESENT PLAYERS

In contrast, in twenty respects, here follows a list of the players in the orchestra as it is constituted today. The advance of the band in numbers and in quality speaks for itself. At the beginning it was an assembly of resident players, gathered more or less at haphazard. Now it is almost wholly a body of picked European virtuosi who have settled here, since the orchestra gives them highly-paid employment, or who have joined it for a term of years. Originally it numbered seventy; now it numbers 101.

Conductor: Fiedler, Max.

Violins, Witek, A., concertmaster; Noack, S.; Strube, G.; Eichheim, H.; Barleben, K.; Fiumara, P.; Tischer-Zeitz, H.; Goldstein, S.; Roth, O.; Kuntz, D.; Rissland, K.; Bak, A.; Akeroyd, J.; Currier, F.; Werner, H.; Kurth, R.; Hoffmann, J.; Krafft, F. W.; Ribarsch, A.; Mullaly, J.; Fiedler, B.; Marble, E.; Fabrizio, C.; Grünberg, M.; Theodorowicz, J.; Mahn, F.; Traupe, W.; Goldstein, H.; Berger, H.; Eichler, J.

Violas—Ferir, E.; Gietzen, A.; Kluge, M.; Hoyer, H.; Spoor, S.; Hartmann-Pauer, O.; Kolster, A.; Forster, E.; Van Wynbergen, C.; Kautzenbach, W.

Violoncellos—Schroeder, A.; Warnke, H.; Keller, J.; Nagel, R.; Barth, C.; Nast, L.; Belinski, M.; Hadley, A.; Warnke, J.; Smalley, R.

Basses—Kunze, M.; Gerhardt, G.; Agnesy, K.; Jaeger, A.; Seydel, T.; Huber, E.; Ludwig, O.; Schurig, R.

Flutes—Maquarre, A.; Brooke, A.; Battles, A.; Fox, P.

Oboes—Longy, G.; Lenom, C.; Sautet, A.

Clarinets—Grisez, G.; Mimart, P.; Vannani, A.

Bassoons—Sadony, P.; Mueller, E.; Regestein, E.

English Horn—Mueller, F.

Bass Clarinet—Stumpf, K.

Contra-Bassoon—Mosbach, J.

Horns—Hess, M.; Lorbeer, H.; Hain, F.; Phair, J.; Wendler, G.; Gebhardt, W.; Hackebarth, A.; Schumann, C.

Trumpets—Kloepfel, L.; Mann, J.; Heim, G.; Merill, C.

Trombones—Hampe, C.; Alloo, M.; Mäusebach, A.; Kenfield, L.

Tuba—Lorenz, O.

Harp—Schuecker, H.

Tympani—Neumann, S.; Kandler, F.

Percussion—Rettberg, A.; Zahn, F.; Senia, T.; Burkhardt, H.

Organ—Marshall, J. P.

Librarian—Sauerquell, J.

THE EARLY PROGRAMMES

In the first years of the orchestra there were no programme books, filled with the learned or amusing notes and the swarming advertisements that now beguile the intermissions and the waste-places of the Symphony Concerts. The small white sheet with its reticent black lettering that is still the "official programme" of the concerts was the only programme then. Bound, the twenty sheets of the first season make a strangely thin volume beside their bulkier neighbors. Scrutinized, these programmes do not differ so much in substance and arrangement from those that the conductors of the orchestra have made in recent years, are of unique mark and accomplishment, has passed; a few "novelties" of this first season have become classics or semi-classics of the thirty-first; a little music that would now be justly or unjustly counted below the standards of the concerts appears on Mr. Henschel's lists. Once and again, he repeated a new piece, like Brahms's Tragic Overture, at successive concerts; on one occasion he was both conductor and "soloist"; and he gave leave to the pianists and the violinists to play solo pieces as well as the preordained concerto. Elsewhere W. F. A.'s article contains the programme of the first concert. Sundry others of the first season follow herewith:

II. Concert (Oct. 29, 1881):
Tragic Overture, Op. 81 (New).....Brahms
Concerto for pianoforte in A minor.....Grieg
Symphony in C. No 1.....Beethoven
Piano soli.....Schumann
Warum? (Why?).....
Scherzo in C-sharp minor.....Chopin
March in B-flat (from the Suite, Op. 113).....Lachner
Soloist: Mr. William H. Sherwood.

V. Concert (Nov. 19, 1881):
Overture; Recitative and air, "Joseph and His Brethren").....Méhul
Symphony in E-flat (Eroica).....Beethoven
Songs with Piano—.....Rubinstein
a. The Dream.....Henschel
b. Gypsy Serenade.....
(Violin obbligato, Mr. Listemann.)
Overture (Faniska).....Cherubini
Soloist: Mr. Theodore J. Toedt.

VI. Concert (Nov. 26, 1881):
Overture, scherzo and finale.....Schumann
Concerto in D, for violin.....Jos. Joachim
Minuetto in A.....Boccherini
Sinfonia in D (1760).....C. Ph. Emanuel Bach
Soloist: Mr. Bernhard Listemann.

VII. Concert (Dec. 3, 1881):
Overture, "Magic Flute."....Mozart
Air. "Mitrane," 1686.....Rossi
Symphony in B-flat. No. 4.....Beethoven
Ballet music. (No. 1 of Gevaert's Suites de Danses Célèbres.....Gluck
Air. "Abu Hassan."....Weber
Overture, "La dame blanche."....Boieldieu
Soloist: Miss Emily Winant.

IX. Concert (Dec. 17, 1881).
BEETHOVEN BORN DEC. 17, 1770.
Overture to Goethe's Egmont.
Concerto for pianoforte. In G, No. 4.
Two songs with pianoforte: (Goethe's "Wonne der Wehmut," "Mignon").
Mrs. Henschel.
Symphony in C minor, No. 5.
Soloist: Mr. George W. Sumner.

XI. Concert (Jan. 7, 1882):
Introduction "Melusine," romantic opera, op. 24.....Grammann
Concerto for pianoforte in C minor (MS.)...Maas
Symphony in F (Pastorale), No. 6....Beethoven
Piano soli.
a. Etude (Waldesrauschen); b. Midsummernight's Dream-Fantasy.....Liszt
Overture. "Zampa".....Hérold
Soloist: Dr. Louis Maas.

XIV. Concert (Jan. 28, 1882):
Masonic Funeral Music.....Mozart
(Born Jan. 27, 1756)
Concerto for Pianoforte in E-flat, No. 5.....Beethoven
Notturno-Serenade in D for four small orchestras. (First time).....Mozart
Piano Solo—.....Mozart
a. Fantasy in C minor.....Rheinberger
b. Ballad.....Liszt
c. "Venezia e Napoli".....Mozart
Symphony in D. (Koechel No. 504).....
Soloist: Professor Carl Baermann.

XVII. Concert (Feb. 18, 1882):
Overture, "Leonore," No. 1, op. 138...Beethoven
Rhapsody for Contralto, Male Chorus and Orchestra. (New).....Brahms
Symphony in F. No. 8.....Beethoven
Concerto for Violin in E minor.....Mendelssohn
Overture, "Phèdre." (First time).....Massenet
Soloists: Miss Mary H. How, Mr. Alfred de Sève.

XX. and final Concert (March 11, 1882):
Prelude from the music to ("Edipus Tyrannus".....Paine
(Conducted by the Composer.)
Trio for soprano, tenor and bass, from Psalm cxxx., op. 31.....Henschel
Wedding March, from the music to Shakspeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," op. 61.....Mendelssohn
The Ninth (Choral) Symphony in D minor.....Beethoven
Soloists: Mrs. Humphrey-Allen, soprano; Miss Mary H. How, contralto; Mr. Charles R. Adams, tenor; Mr. V. Cirillo, bass.

The Orchestra in New York

The Conditions Which It Found There—Its Progress Through Them—The Rewards of Appreciation and Support That It Has Received

WHEN the invitation from the Evening Transcript to contribute to this page something about the early history of the Boston Orchestra in New York reached me I was several hundred times as far from my records as the summer rusticator is generally from the proverbial lemon, and I was little cheered by the subsequent suggestion that I make the article "out of my head, as the young housewife did her first pudding." A newspaper reviewer who has done little else for thirty-five years than write about concerts and operas must needs have use for his data to stir up his memory of a set of incidents which occurred a quarter of a century ago, which are of a class with the thousand and one incidents so like them which he has been called upon to record more or less perfunctorily since. But the Transcript was persistent and so the effort is made with considerable distrust as to the value of the product, out of admiration for the organization and, I hope, what will be recognized as an honest appreciation of achievements which the conditions prevailing in New York place in a very different light from the achievements in the orchestra's home city.

OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S 30 YEARS.

ORCHESTRA MADE BY GERICKE.

First Concert on October 22, 1881—How the Band Developed Under its "Autocratic" Leader—The Splendid Results.

The first concert of the Boston symphony orchestra was given on October 22, 1881, with Georg Henschel as conductor. The present autumn, therefore, brings the famous organization to its 30th anniversary—an occasion which is to be recognized in the program of the concerts on the 20th and 21st. The orchestra has had numerous phases in its development, coincident, in the main, with the different conductorships. The Boston Transcript, in its issue of September 30, published several articles in which the course of the orchestra's development is indicated. The principal article of the group by William Foster Apthorp tells, among other things, how the orchestra was really created during the first term of Mr Gericke, the orchestra's second conductor, who never was an easy taskmaster:—

The real effective remodeling of the orchestra came after Mr Henschel's retirement, with the accession of Wilhelm Gericke. Mr Gericke, when Mr Higginson first found him out, was fourth conductor at the Vienna court opera, besides conducting some other things in the Austrian capital. Mr Higginson could not have made a luckier choice.

Mr Gericke was not only a fully equipped and experienced conductor and musical drill-master, with a strong touch of the martinet, but also a man of rare organizing faculty and inflexible backbone; he was not in the least timid about assuming responsibility. His general musicianship, too, was conspicuously sound. If he had a shortcoming at that time, it was that the scope of his musical reading and sympathy was rather restrictedly Viennese, and he shared with most of his fellow-townsmen the notion that what the Kaiserstadt did not known was not worth knowing. His standards and traditions were all of Vienna, which, in those days, was not the most go-ahead musical center in the world.

For a while Mr Gericke seemed to sail prosperously on smooth waters; after the critical tempest amid which Mr Henschel had lived, moved, and had his being, it was as if sweet Peace smiled once more. Except for such difference of opinion on matters of "interpretation" as must inevitably come up everywhere, he had practically the whole press with him, and the public was cordially appreciative.

But, if peace reigned in his relations with press and public, his relations, with the orchestra were not quite so serene. There were heart-burnings galore. Indeed the situation was quite new to a large percentage of our Boston orchestra players, and to the liking of few of them. Here was a body of men, most of whom had for years been used to (both actually and necessarily) slipshod methods and lax rule; and these men found themselves brought suddenly face to face with a most strict, accurate and meticulous drill-master, who took for granted that his word should be law.

It soon became evident enough that Mr Gericke was not only a strict and careful, but an excessively fatiguing rehearser. Emmann, who, as I have said, was a nervy impetuous player, with little sense for of style, found him particularly hard nd. "Ach, Sie wollen ja Alles so ein haben!" (Oh, you want everything ished up to the nines!) was his con- complaint. The truth is that Mr ke belonged to a school of conductors wish to do everything themselves, who willing to recognize no initiative but ir own, and insist upon every item in a omposition being played exactly their way.

Many conductors, on the other hand—and great ones, too—are not only willing but eager to leave a great deal to the taste and initiative of the so-called "first" players under them; to the first flute, first oboe, first horn, etc., especially in incidental solo passages. And this difference of attitude is well worth considering, for it springs from a corresponding difference of musical point of view.

With Mr Gericke's second season (1883-86) another thundercloud burst, and the tempest became general. Mr Gericke found himself to be as much of a storm-center as Mr Henschel had been before him. The fact is, Mr Gericke had come to Boston with a perfectly definite purpose to assert and realize his own standard of orchestral performance. And his mind was fully made up from the first. He was not going to conduct performances that did not satisfy him! He thus took the first year of his conductorship here as a significant example of the old adage: "You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear;" and saw clearly that the next thing to do was to be rid of the sow's ear. In a word, he saw that the orchestral forces at his disposal were irremediably inadequate and set about curing their inadequacy with a will. He accordingly entered upon a course of weeding out and supplying new-made vacancies as he saw fit, that brought a fine hornet's nest about his ears.

After the close of his first season he deposed Listemann from his concert-mastership; and, of course, Listemann forthwith resigned his membership in the orchestra, as Wulf Fries had done before him, under Mr Henschel. Nor was Listemann's the only head that fell.

For the season of 1885-86 Mr Gericke brought Franz Kneisel with him from Vienna, as his new concert master; a position to which the then young violinist soon proved himself, as it were, predestined by heaven. A more admirable concert master never drew bow. Fritz Giese, too, brought over some years before by the Mendelssohn quintet club, succeeded Wilhelm Muller as leading 'cellist. Neither did these make up all the new blood that was infused into the orchestra; press notices of the opening concert made quite a point of "the many new faces on the platform."

If Mr Higginson, in 1881, had inaugurated the "system of importation" with Mr Henschel, Mr Gericke, in 1885, began applying that system unstintingly. Of course, the decapitated ones growled, and their friends with them. That was actual enough. Yet, looking back upon the business from a distance of 26 years, one cannot but wonder at the hullaballoo it raised! People seemed to lose all sense of proportion. Some of the expressions of resentment had even a smack of trades union irritability.

One would have thought Mr Gericke was trying to revive the "effete monarchies" in this country; indignant patriots asked: "Is an orchestral conductorship an irresponsible dictatorship?" or, "Are free-born American citizens to be subjected to the indignity of autocratic rule?" For a while, there was quite an epidemic of writing to the newspapers; nor were some regular critics on the press less virulent than wrathful correspondents. But it was really only our new musical condition in Boston showing more and more influence; we were but in the birth-throes of the Modern Idea.

Luckily Mr Higginson fully grasped the idea, and backed up Mr Gericke manfully. It took some courage; more than can well be appreciated nowadays. But Mr Higginson never lacked courage—physical or moral. For one thing, the good results of Mr Gericke's application of the "system" were soon apparent and unmistakable; no one could long be blind to the fact that the Boston symphony orchestra was not only a real orchestra, in the fullest sense of the word, but was fast growing into a remarkably fine one.

The idea and its first realization were solely Mr Higginson's; its complete perfection we owe, as I have said, to Wilhelm Gericke. Since then it has had other conductors, some of whom kept it well up to his high standard, some allowed it to lapse slightly therefrom; but, save in the way of occasional exceptional luck in finding some extraordinarily superb first wind players, it may be said without invidiousness that no one has really raised it above that standing. I am here speaking of the quality of the playing; what may be called the general efficiency of the orchestra has indubitably been gradually increased since. Its augmented numerical force, the doubling of the wood-wind, the only recently-acquired eighth horn, are all of real value. But the standard of playing was set by Mr Gericke. From the time when he first left it in the spring of 1889, it has steadily stood well in the front rank of the recognizedly great orchestras of the world.

Mr Gericke was succeeded by Mr Nikisch and Mr Paur, and then he returned to Boston for his second term as conductor of the symphony orchestra. Mr Nikisch and Mr Paur, in the article by H. T. Parker, are described as "romantic." Of Mr Gericke in his second term and of Dr Muck and Mr Fiedler, Mr Parker's views, considerably abridged, are as follows:—

Mr Gericke, returning for a second term, restored the balance again. He abated not a whit his zeal for technical perfections, his exquisite sense of quality and euphony of tone. Be the impulse what it may, in the long course of his second term, he laid a second foundation of the symphony orchestra to-day. To him it already owed its technical and tonal qualities. From him in his final years it received the impulses toward the accenting, the dramatizing, the variously imparting eloquence that now distinguishes it. Like a singing teacher who had first prepared a voice, he animated and colored it.

To Mr Gericke succeeded Dr Muck to lift the orchestra to new hights of accomplishment. A perfected instrument awaited him; he appreciated, respected, preserved its perfections. He could hardly refine upon the technic in which Mr Gericke had schooled the band or upon the tonal quality to which his ear was almost as sensitive as had been Mr Gericke's own. He could, however, begin where Mr Gericke ended in the broadening of the eloquence and in the hightning of the accent of his orchestral voices. In him was and is the discriminating, the responsive, the penetrating faculty that enabled him to divine and to disclose the individuality of each composer, of each composition that he played.

Now, for three years—and for a fourth to come—Mr Fiedler reigns in his stead. There is debate of the signal virtues and of the shortcomings that are, the complement of them in a conductor of his ambition and zeal, of his intensities, of his sense of direct and effective eloquence. Anniversaries are not occasions for debate of the present. Suffice it that Mr Fiedler has done his individual, considerable and probably abiding service to the orchestra. He has established the concerts as they were never established before, in the cities that it regularly or occasionally visits. Until he came, it had been an orchestra that played to the connoisseur, the amateur, the instructed. Hearing it under him, that paradoxical, evasive, but undoubtedly existent person, the average concert-goer has been interested and pleased.

Symphony Season Opens in Boston.

The first rehearsal and concert of the present season of the Boston symphony orchestra were held in Boston on Friday and Saturday. A new overture by Reger, which Mr Fielder brought with him from Europe, was performed for the first time. It is styled a "comedy overture." The work did not make a strong impression. Mme Gluck, the opera singer was the soloist.

The Metropolitan's Season.

The season of the Metropolitan opera house in New York, according to [illegible] proud announcement, "[illegible] represents a higher degree [illegible] variety and eclectism than is [illegible] found in any other great [illegible] institution. Adhering to the traditions and policies which have made the Metropolitan opera house what it is, the management will continue to present all operas in their original languages—French, Italian, German and English. The repertory will be increased by a number of novelties and revivals." The Metropolitan opera company announces the production during the forthcoming season of the opera "Mona," the work of two Americans, the composer being Prof Horatio Parker of Yale university, and the librettist Bryan Hooker. "Mona" was awarded the prize in the national opera contest, organized by the Metropolitan opera company three years ago. Among the other new operas which will be performed the management makes special mention of "Boris Godounoff," by the Russian composer Moussorgsky, and "Lobetanz," by Thuille. The American premiere of "Le Donne Curiose," by Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari, is also announced. The season at the Metropolitan opera house will begin on Monday evening, November 13, and will last 22 weeks. The season will include some performances of "Parsifal" and a complete cycle of "The Ring." By an agreement between the Metropolitan opera company and the Chicago opera company, the latter will give six performances on Tuesday nights beginning February 13. The conductors will be Arturo Toscanini, Alfred Hertz, Giuseppe Sturani, Josef Pasternack and others. The Russian dancers have been re-engaged. The singers engaged are the following:—

The Field

When Major Higginson was persuaded (I think that statement fits the case) to include New York in the orchestra's itinerary, the metropolis, unlike the other cities to which he ministered, was no more suffering from a paucity of symphonic music than it is now. On the contrary, it was, as it still is, suffering from a plethora; it had too much of the good thing for assimilation and proper digestion. Mr. Theodore Thomas was still with us, conducting his own Symphony Concerts, his Young People's Concerts and the concerts of the Philharmonic Society. Mr. Walter Damrosch was continuing the concerts of the Symphony Society, founded by his lamented father, whose services in behalf of good music in concert-room and opera house can scarcely be over-estimated. Mr. Van der Stucken, young, ambitious and tremendously energetic, was giving us "Novelty Concerts," and Mr. Seidl, having won a great popularity at the opera, was eager to extend it into the concert field and saw his opening not so much in changing the kind of concert programmes as in introducing that modern reading of the classics which has wrought much good but more evil in the taste of the public. The new works introduced by Mr. Van der Stucken were not urgently needed, for the rivalry between Mr. Thomas and Dr. Damrosch had for some years kept that pool in rather violent agitation. Neither of these gentlemen was content to wait for the new compositions brought forth by German composers to be published. They produced them from manuscript on which the ink was scarcely dry. As an illustration let one circumstance serve: Both conductors received scores of a Brahms symphony at the same time. Dr. Damrosch went straightway to Schirmer's music shop for the parts, but found that only one set of them had been imported and it was already in the hands of his rival, who promptly announced it for his next concert, which was to take place two or three days later. Dr. Damrosch hired a band of copyists, tore his score into sections, the copyists worked all night, and the next day the symphony was played. When Mr. Van der Stucken tried to habilitate himself by means of novelties, he could find only one way to irritate popular curiosity and adopted it; he gave most of his attention to the works of American composers—was it for good or ill? I am still unable to say because of a strong conviction that it is quite as harmful to coddle a class in art as it is to neglect it. I merely mention this fact to convey an idea of the conditions of orchestral affairs in New York when the Boston Orchestra first came to the metropolis.

The Coming

It was in February (the 14th), 1887; the place Steinway Hall; the conductor, Mr. Gericke; the solo-performer, the youthful Kneisel, who had already served one term as concert-master in Boston, and who played Beethoven's concerto with that smoothness, delicacy and loveliness of tone which, under the direction of Mr. Gericke and Kneisel's leadership, became the distinguishing characteristic of the orchestra's playing, as it remained (having become a tradition which I hope will never depart from the organization), as the quality of its wind-choir did later.

Thinking back now to those days a quarter of a century ago, I am inclined to think that it was this euphony of the string-band which more than anything else won the hearts of New Yorkers. We were even then proud of the "muscularity" of the Philharmonic's strings and the magnificent substratum of fundamental tone which came from that band's fourteen double-basses. Mr. Thomas, himself a violinist, had inculcated in us admiration for technical precision, but his was, after all, a heavy method compared with the crisp, sharply incisive and rhythmical accentuation of Mr. Gericke and the Viennese method introduced by Mr. Gericke and Mr. Kneisel. The Boston conductor's keen sense of euphony which led him (somewhat unduly, as some of the musical quidnuncs in New York thought) to keep down the volume of brass tone, led to a kind of criticism which some wag (I can't recall who it was) summed up in the phrase "Fraulein Gericke und seine Damen Kapelle," but even they were startled into admiring notice when on the second visit, Mr. Gericke brought forward the Richter concert arrangement of scenes from "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung." Here we heard such virility without rudeness as I wish might have become characteristic of all our Wagnerian performances in opera-house as well as concert-room. But how wofully have our ears been assaulted since, especially in the most recent concerts of the Philharmonic Society!

The Progress

For four seasons the orchestra gave its concerts in Steinway Hall, and then that most perfect music-room that New York ever possessed, so far as I know, was put to baser uses and the orchestra moved to Chickering Hall in Fifth avenue, not as good as Steinway Hall acoustically and smaller, yet it was large enough. Always in those days the audiences were small, neither of the rooms being filled until near the close of Mr. Nikisch's régime from 1890 to 1893, and there being a very, very large percentage of deadheads. With growth of appreciation of the quality of the orchestra's playing and decrease in the number of concerts given by local organizations there, the paid attendance also grew. And to end this feature of my sketch, it has kept on growing ever since until its audiences are larger than that of the Philharmonic or the Symphony Society's concerts. Also there has been a change in the personnel of the audiences. In the old Steinway and Chickering Hall days a distinct New England physiognomy characterized the audiences and (I hope I may say it without giving offence) the element which stamped this physiognomy upon it was not greatly in evidence at the concerts of the Philharmonic Society, which twenty years ago still represented the fine flower of the city's musical culture as it had done for half a century. But the audiences which now gather in Carnegie Hall, though still largely pervaded by the original element, embraces all classes of New York's music lovers.

For the season of 1893-94 the orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall, whence they were seduced to the Metropolitan Opera House by a tempting offer made by Mr. Grau, the Philharmonic Society and, until the erecting of Carnegie Hall, the Symphony Society having transferred their concerts to the big house in upper Broadway in consequence of the Academy of Music's loss in prestige and caste. The occupancy of the Metropolitan Opera House endured from the season of 1894-95 to 1897-98, Mr. Paur being conductor there, and since then Carnegie Hall has been the theatre of its concerts. The programmes of the concerts have from the beginning been made up of numbers chosen from the schemes given in Boston—generally from those made up in the course of the four weeks immediately preceding. Until the coming of Mr. Paur novelties were conspicuous by their absence. I have racked my memory in vain to recall any considerable number of works introduced to New York by Mr. Gericke and Mr. Nikisch in the early years. I think of a symphony by Sgambati, but am not sure of any fellows for it until the consulship of Paur—under whom Richard Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and some other works which have since made a deal of noise in the world literally as well as figuratively, were first heard by New Yorkers. Since then the programmes have not been so conservative as they were under Gericke and Nikisch, but the people who have patronized one or more of the local organizations as well as the Boston Orchestra have frequently had occasion to complain of the disregard of local activities shown by the Boston conductors. When a symphony was played by the Boston band after it had already been heard once or oftener in New York, some persons were uncharitable enough to think that the Boston conductor was deliberately trying to provoke comparison. There were occasions when such a comparison could have been ill-endured by the visitors, and then it was a pleasure for those who had kept themselves informed of the band's doings at home to realize that it was only because the compositions were fresher in the minds and fingers of the "gentlemen from Boston," as one of my colleagues is fond of calling them, than others that they were put upon the programme, and that it was not New York alone which had to be considered by Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and in a smaller degree Brooklyn. I make an exception in the case of the borough across the East River because there the concerts being given under the auspices of the organization called the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, particular consideration, though slight, had to be paid to the wishes and tastes of the old audiences to which Mr. Theodore Thomas had catered—tastes which for a reason, the psychology of which deserves to be investigated, were not so severe as those of the audiences that took their musical entertainment in the borough of Manhattan. Then Brooklyn concerts began in the winter of 1887-88, when one concert was given; another followed in the next season, both being independent ventures. Since 1891-92 the concerts have been given in conjunction with the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, as stated, at the Academy of Music until its destruction by fire, then at the Baptist Temple until the advent of the new Academy, which has been their home since.

What the orchestra was in its first lustrum New York was not permitted to learn, and the activities of Mr. Henschel do not come legitimately itno this desultory review. But perhaps I may contribute a mite to the history of that early period. In the early summer of 1884 or 1885 I spent an afternoon with Mr. Henschel at the home of one of his friends in a beautiful old house overlooking the Hudson. We talkod music, of course, and I asked questions concerning Major Higginson's undertaking. Mr. Henschel was enthusiastic in praise, but laid stress not on what he had done for the orchestra, but what the orchestra had done for him. "I had little or no experience in conducting when I took the appointment," he said, "and shall never forget what it did for me. I learned more in six months in Boston than I would have learned in as many years in Germany."

The Reviewers

A word touching the attitude of the newspaper reviewers of New York toward the Boston Orchestra. It was kind from the beginning. My old colleagues in Boston will realize what this means when they recall the amusing jealousy which existed at that time between the musical people (or their mouthpieces) of the two cities. Too often the success of an artist in one city meant his sure failure in another—that is, so far as success and failure could be influenced by newspaper criticism. In his humble way one of the New York writers labored to break down these foolish barriers, which were not at all imaginary. A case in point: An artist from Europe made her first American appearance in New York. She was treated, not harshly, not unjustly, but somewhat severely by the New York critics. To one of them she went, utterly discouraged, and said she was inclined to return to her home at once. "Why?" asked the critic. "Because I made a failure on my first attempt yesterday." "Do you admit that?" Certainly; I felt it in the hall and I read it in this morning's papers." "Then," said the critic, benevolently, "don't go home; go to Boston." "Why Boston?" "Because if you have failed here, as you say, you will succeed in Boston." Persuaded that the advice was honestly meant, she acted on it. In a fortnight after her first appearance she was the toast of musical Boston. And she deserved her success.

The Public

It is only natural that foreign wares should make a stronger appeal than local. I have sat with Bostonians in Carnegie Hall at a Philharmonic and heard their rapturous exclamations and their comparisons which were derogatory to their own home organization, and I was compelled to admit that to some extent my own enthusiasm for the Boston orchestra was greater in the latitude and longtitude of New York than in Boston—a fact which I explained on the ground that the players were keener of edge in the metropolis than at home, because they knew they were competing with excellent organizations and playing for experienced audiences who were all the more alert and appreciative because the band had its home elsewhere. This, too, has been conceded by the conductors [illegible] themselves. By this I am not criticising the organization or apologizing for my confrères who are frequently inclined to think that more good comes out of Nazareth than abides in Jerusalem; I am simply emphasising the fact that by long and patient steps the Boston orchestra has won as warm a place in the hearts of New Yorkers as it occupies in Boston.

H. E. K.

[31]

...Miss Bella... Anna Case, ... Rita For... Fremstad, Jo...ua Gadski, Alma ... Carmen Mells, Bertt Morena, Alice ... Inga Orner, Bernice de Pasquali, Maria Rappold, Lenora Sparkes, Luisa Tetrazzini and Rosina Van Dyck.

Mezzo-sopranos and contraltos: Mmes Marie Aldrich, Emma Borniggia, Maria Jacobsens, Louise Homer, Helen Mapleson, Jeanne Maubourg, Marie Mattfield, Margarete Matzenauer, Theodora Orridge, Lillia Snelling, Henrietta Wakefield and Florence Wickham.

Tenors: Messrs Pietro Audisio, Angelo Bada, Amadeo Bassi, Julius Bayer, Carl Burrian, Enrico Caruso, Charles Dalmores, Heinrich Hensel, Hermann Jadlowker, Carl Jorn, John McCormack, Riccardo Martin, Lambert Murphy, Luigi Ramella, Albert Reiss, Leo Slezak, Dimitri Smirnoff and Giovanni Zenatello.

Baritones: Messrs Pasquale Amato, Bernard Begue, Giuseppe Campanari, Dinh Gilly, Otto Goritz, William Hinshaw, Edoardo Missiano, Antonio Scotti, Maurice Renaud, Vincenzo Reschiglian, Clarence Whitehill and Herman Weil.

Bassos: Messrs Paolo Ananian, Georges Bourgeois, Adamo Didur, Putnam Griswold, Edward Lankow, Antonio Pini-Corsi, Marcel Reiner, Giulio Rossi, Leon Rothier, Basil Ruysdael, Andrea de Segurola and Herbert Witherspoon.

Other Note and Comment.

For those who have grown accustomed to a comfortable feeling of security in regard to the artistic future of the Boston symphony orchestra, there was a disturbing item of news in August Spanuth's Berlin letter to the New York Staats-Zeitung a few days since, says Musical America. It has been generally understood that Dr Karl Muck was to return to the post now filled—at his instigation—by Max Fiedler, in the autumn of 1912, to remain at the head of the Boston band for a more or less indefinite period; it has been believed that the agreement was ratified contractually some time ago. This would seem to have been somewhat premature complacence, for, according to Mr Spanuth, there is now a possibility of the negotiations coming to naught because of a disagreement on the question of salary. Certainly Germans in general, and Berliners in particular, would not deplore a turn or twist that would save Dr Muck to them and the kaiser's opera.

Giovanni Zenatello, a tenor of the Boston opera company, has been drafted for the Italian army, according to the Boston Advertiser, and in consequence may not come to Boston as long as war with Turkey lasts. Zenatello, who has spent the whole summer in Paris studying new parts for the coming season, went to Italy to recuperate just before hostilities between his native country and Turkey broke out. In the call to arms reserves were included and Zenatello, as one of the latter, had to respond. Zenatello is billed to sing Samson in "Samson and Delilah" at the opening performance of the season at the Boston opera house.

Miss Geraldine Farrar whets the public's taste for her art by again denying that she is married to Antonio Scotti. The resuscitation of the rumor that the two singers were married is traced to the circumstance that the two returned to America on the same steamer, the Kronprinz Wilhelm. Miss Farrar had intended to return earlier, but was detained in Paris by the illness of her mother.

Emma Albani, the English opera singer, who made her debut in 1872, is to retire from the stage. Although a highly-paid singer for many seasons, she has recently sung in a London music hall. She played Elsa in the first performance of "Lohengrin" in London.

Jan Kubelik, married to a Hungarian countess, and the father of twins, arrived at New York on the Kronprinz Wilhelm for his first American tour since 1907. His first concert will be given on the 15th at the Hippodrome in New York.

Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari has made a concert version of "Il Segreto di Susanna," which is to be used by Mme Sembrich, to whom the version is dedicated.

The new opera of Massenet, "Roma," will be produced at Monte Carlo, and soon after will be given in Paris.

Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" will be revived this fall at the Opera Comique, Paris.

...ed admirably by the string ... which they were written, and Mr. ... seemed to make much more of them than did Dr. Muck at the first performance of the music here. He made the sturdy unisons and the dark undervoices of the Prelude tell and he kept the Minuet without haste or sluggishness to its graceful flow. The quips and quirks of the Galliard came and went in lively rhythmical play, and if Mr. Férir answered justly the applause of the audience for the Serenatina, Mr. Witek deserved a share of it, too; for he had played the violin part as exquisitely. From the Fugue that ends Verdi's "Falstaff," through Sinigaglia's overture, "Le Baruffe Chiozotti" to another of Goldoni's comedies, to this "Burlesca" of Bossi and Wolf-Ferrari's forthcoming opera, "Le Donne Curiose," these young Italians—for Verdi was young in his comedy—have the knack of music that is gay and bustling, yet never quite boisterous. Bossi's "Intermezzi" do improve upon acquaintance and in Mr. Fiedler's version of them. H. T. P.

Exceptionally at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York next winter, three of the "soloists" will each appear at two succeeding concerts: Mme. Schumann-Heink in November, Miss Parlow in December and Mr. Hofmann in January.

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

SATURDAY RITES AT SYMPHONY HALL

The Regular Beginning of the Evening Concerts—Mr. Fiedler, Mme. Gluck and Bossi Warmly Received—Fact, Rumor and Remarks from the Opera House—A New Singer and the Impending Maeterlincks—Miss de Swirsky's Dances—Mr. Kubelik Discovers a Composer—Orchestral Plans for Chicago and New York—Mr. Dippel Beset Again—Items as They Pass.

THE Symphony Concert of Saturday evening completed the rites for the beginning of a new season. As usual, flowers and greenery decorated the conductor's music stand, while by exception a wreath of laurel stood against a corner of his little platform. Mr. Fiedler, when he first came to his place, was long but not very loudly applauded, and the more exacting audience of Saturday clapped the "good old 'Jubilee' overture" and the conductor's version of Schumann's "Spring" less than did the more easily pleased public of Friday. The house on Saturday kept its warmest applause for Bossi's "Intermezzi Goldoniani," which pleased it much, and for Mme. Gluck's impassioned, but nowhere exaggerated, singing of her air from Charpentier's "Louise." It was proof, once more, of her ability to produce tones that were flawless musically and so the better means to the imparting of the emotion with which she enriched them. And Charpentier's music, in spite of its momentary tricks, has the voice of passion in it. There were signs of a public ... to the concerts in parts of the two ... Yet it seemed to catch instinct... standards and discrimination of ...

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Sym...
"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us To see ourse'l's as ithers see us."
HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.
110-112 West 26th St. N. Y. City.
CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK
NEW YORK
The First Established and most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From TIMES
Address New York City.
Date OCT 8 - 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its twenty-sixth season in New York next month, with the largest subscription in its history, and one which will have comparatively few seats for single concerts. Practically the entire subscription of last year has been renewed, and to-morrow morning the public sale of the remaining seats for the season will open at the box office, Carnegie Hall.

The plans for the season call for the usual two series of five concerts each, the first on Thursday evenings, the second on Saturday afternoons. The dates for the evening concerts are Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, and March 21, and the dates for the afternoon concerts are Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 24, and March 23. As is always the custom, the programmes for the evening and afternoon concerts will be entirely different, but in each of three of the pairs the same soloist will appear.

The soloist at both November concerts will be Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink, who appears with the orchestra here in New York for the first time in a number of years. In December, at both concerts, the soloist will be Kathleen Parlow, the young violinist. Miss Parlow will be soloist this year with the orchestra no less than fourteen times.

Josef Hofmann will make his only appearance with the orchestra during the season at both the January concerts. Mr. Hofmann had no intention of returning to America this Winter, but Mr. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony, made arrangements with him whereby he returns to play a series of concerts with the Boston Symphony exclusively.

In February Alwin Schroeder, the 'cellist of the orchestra, will be the soloist on Thursday evening, while on Saturday afternoon Geraldine Farrar of the Metropolitan Opera House will make her only appearance of the season here in concert.

The soloist for Thursday evening in March will be Mme. Louise Homer of the Metropolitan Opera House, while on Saturday afternoon a special programme will be arranged to mark the farewell appearance here of Max Fiedler, who concludes his engagement with the Boston Symphony at the end of the present season.

Concerning the works that will be performed, it is rather difficult to speak now. Under all its conductors the Boston Symphony tries out a large number of novelties during the Winter at its Boston concerts, where it has ample opportunity to do so in the twenty-four different programmes which must be arranged. Mr. Fiedler for his Boston series has given the titles of thirty-eight novelties, most of which will come to performance sooner or later. The best of these will be heard in New York, although it is not the policy of the orchestra ever to neglect the old works. The first novelty of the season in Boston, played at the first concert yesterday was Reger's new Comedy Overture, Op. 120, which had its first performance anywhere. Doubtless this will be heard here during the Winter. Mr. Fiedler is planning to give a new symphony by Sibelius, a new symphony by Elgar, and the long-expected "Gigue," by Debussy, the companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," is promised him by the composer.

[32]

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Sym...
"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us To see ourse'l's as ithers see us."
HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.
110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.
CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK
NEW YORK
The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World
From EVENING SUN,
Address New York City.
Date OCT 7 - 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Max Fiedler as conductor will give five Thursday evening and five Saturday matinée performances at Carnegie Hall beginning in November and closing in March. The subscription sale of seats begins on Monday.

Est ...1884

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.
Intended for Boston Sym...
"O wad some power the giftie gie us To see ourse'l's as ithers see us."
HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.
110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.
CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK
NEW YORK
The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World
From PRESS,
Address New York City.
Date OCT 8 - 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Max Fiedler, will give two series of five concerts each this season.

Est...k, 1884

KATHLEEN PARLOW.

The first series will be on Thursday evenings in Carnegie Hall on November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21. The second series will be on Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 23. The orchestra consists of 101 musicians. The assisting artists are Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Homer, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Alwin Schroeder.

From CITIZEN,
Address Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date OCT 7 - 1911

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with an interesting budget of news about his plans for the coming season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, almost next door neighbor to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements, and now the first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called "The Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive and the second meditative. Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fiedler, who was much impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of its being performed this year.

Mr. Fiedler gives in Boston to-day the first performance anywhere of Roger's new comedy overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Brooklyn at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps," and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year. The soloists will be Mme. Homer, Mme. Schumann Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Miss Bessie Belle Collier.

The five Brooklyn concerts this season will fall, as usual, on Friday evenings in the Academy of Music, the dates being Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23 and March 22.

...York, 1884

...Mmes Bell... Alten, Anna Case, ... Destinn, Geraldine Farrar, Rita Fornia, Olive Fremstad, Johanna Gadski, Alma Gluck, Carmen Melis, Berta Morena, Alice Nielson, Inga Orner, Bernice de Pasquali, Marie Rappold, Lenora Sparkes, Luisa Tetrazzini and Rosina Van Dyck.

Mezzo-sopranos and contraltos: Mmes Mariska Aldrich, Emma Borniggia, Maria Glaessens, Louise Homer, Helen Mapleson, Jeanne Maubourg, Marie Mattfield, Margarete Matzenauer, Theodora Orridge, Lillia Snelling, Henrietta Wakefield and Florence Wickham.

Tenors: Messrs Pietro Audisio, Angelo Bada, Amadeo Bassi, Julius Bayer, Carl Burrian, Enrico Caruso, Charles Dalmores, Henrich Hensel, Hermann Jadlowker, Carl Jorn, John McCormack, Riccardo Martin, Lambert Murphy, Luigi Ramella, Albert Reiss, Leo Slezak, Dimitri Smirnoff and Giovanni Zenatello.

Baritones: Messrs Pasquale Amato, Bernard Begue, Giuseppe Campanari, Dinh Gilly, Otto Goritz, William Hinshaw, Edoardo Missiano, Antonio Scotti, Maurice Renaud, Vincenzo Reschiglian, Clarence Whitehill and Herman Weil.

Bassos: Messrs Paolo Ananian, Georges Bourgeois, Adamo Didur, Putnam Griswold, Edward Lankow, Antonio Pini-Corsi, Marcel Reiner, Giulio Rossi, Leon Rothier, Basil Ruysdael, Andrea de Segurola and Herbert Witherspoon.

Other Note and Comment.

For those who have grown accustomed to a comfortable feeling of security in regard to the artistic future of the Boston symphony orchestra, there was a disturbing item of news in August Spanuth's Berlin letter to the New York Staats-Zeitung a few days since, says Musical America. It has been generally understood that Dr Karl Muck was to return to the post now filled—at his instigation—by Max Fiedler, in the autumn of 1912, to remain at the head of the Boston band for a more or less indefinite period; it has been believed that the agreement was ratified contractually some time ago. This would seem to have been somewhat premature complacence, for, according to Mr Spanuth, there is now a possibility of the negotiations coming to naught because of a disagreement on the question of salary. Certainly Germans in general, and Berliners in particular, would not deplore a turn or twist that would save Dr Muck to them and the kaiser's opera.

Giovanni Zenatello, a tenor of the Boston opera company, has been drafted for the Italian army, according to the Boston Advertiser, and in consequence may not come to Boston as long as war with Turkey lasts. Zenatello, who has spent the whole summer in Paris studying new parts for the coming season, went to Italy to recuperate just before hostilities between his native country and Turkey broke out. In the call to arms reserves were included and Zenatello, as one of the latter, had to respond. Zenatello is billed to sing Samson in "Samson and Delilah" at the opening performance of the season at the Boston opera house.

Miss Geraldine Farrar whets the public's taste for her art by again denying that she is married to Antonio Scotti. The resuscitation of the rumor that the two singers were married is traced to the circumstance that the two returned to America on the same steamer, the Kronprinz Wilhelm. Miss Farrar had intended to return earlier, but was detained in Paris by the illness of her mother.

Emma Albani, the English opera singer, who made her debut in 1872, is to retire from the stage. Although a highly-paid singer for many seasons, she has recently sung in a London music hall. She played Elsa in the first performance of "Lohengrin" in London.

Jan Kubelik, married to a Hungarian countess, and the father of twins, arrived at New York on the Kronprinz Wilhelm for his first American tour since 1907. His first concert will be given on the 15th at the Hippodrome in New York.

Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari has made a concert version of "Il Segreto di Susanna," which is to be used by Mme Sembrich, to whom the version is dedicated.

The new opera of Massenet, "Roma," will be produced at Monte Carlo, and soon after will be given in Paris.

Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" will be revived this fall at the Opera Comique, Paris.

...Bossi's "Intermezzi" were played altogether admirably by the string choir, for which they were written, and Mr. Fiedler seemed to make much more of them than did Dr. Muck at the first performance of the music here. He made the sturdy unisons and the dark undervoices of the Prelude tell and he kept the Minuet without haste or sluggishness to its graceful flow. The quips and quirks of the Galliard came and went in lively rhythmical play, and if Mr. Fiedler answered justly the applause of the audience for the Serenatina, Mr. Witek deserved a share of it, too; for he had played the violin part as exquisitely. From the Fugue that ends Verdi's "Falstaff," through Sinigaglia's overture, "Le Baruffe Chiozotti" to another of Goldoni's comedies, to this "Burlesca" of Bossi and Wolf-Ferrari's forthcoming opera, "Le Donne Curiose," these young Italians—for Verdi was young in his comedy—have the knack of music that is gay and bustling, yet never quite boisterous. Bossi's "Intermezzi" do improve upon acquaintance and in Mr. Fiedler's version of them. H. T. P.

Exceptionally at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York next winter, three of the "soloists" will each appear at two succeeding concerts: Mme. Schumann-Heink in November, Miss Parlow in December and Mr. Hofmann in January.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St. N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From TIMES

Address New York City.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its twenty-sixth season in New York next month, with the largest subscription in its history, and one which will have comparatively few seats for single concerts. Practically the entire subscription of last year has been renewed, and to-morrow morning the public sale of the remaining seats for the season will open at the box office, Carnegie Hall.

The plans for the season call for the usual two series of five concerts each, the first on Thursday evenings, the second on Saturday afternoons. The dates for the evening concerts are Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22, and March 21, and the dates for the afternoon concerts are Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 24, and March 23. As is always the custom, the programmes for the evening and afternoon concerts will be entirely different, but in each of three of the pairs the same soloist will appear.

The soloist at both November concerts will be Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink, who appears with the orchestra here in New York for the first time in a number of years. In December, at both concerts, the soloist will be Kathleen Parlow, the young violinist. Miss Parlow will be soloist this year with the orchestra no less than fourteen times.

Josef Hofmann will make his only appearance with the orchestra during the season at both the January concerts. Mr. Hofmann had no intention of returning to America this Winter, but Mr. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony, made arrangements with him whereby he returns to play a series of concerts with the Boston Symphony exclusively.

In February Alwin Schroeder, the 'cellist of the orchestra, will be the soloist on Thursday evening, while on Saturday afternoon Geraldine Farrar of the Metropolitan Opera House will make her only appearance of the season here in concert.

The soloist for Thursday evening in March will be Mme. Louise Homer of the Metropolitan Opera House, while on Saturday afternoon a special programme will be arranged to mark the farewell appearance here of Max Fiedler, who concludes his engagement with the Boston Symphony at the end of the present season.

Concerning the works that will be performed, it is rather difficult to speak now. Under all its conductors the Boston Symphony tries out a large number of novelties during the Winter at its Boston concerts, where it has ample opportunity to do so in the twenty-four different programmes which must be arranged. Mr. Fiedler for his Boston series has given the titles of thirty-eight novelties, most of which will come to performance sooner or later. The best of these will be heard in New York, although it is not the policy of the orchestra ever to neglect the old works. The first novelty of the season in Boston, played at the first concert yesterday was Reger's new Comedy Overture, Op. 120, which had its first performance anywhere. Doubtless this will be heard here during the Winter. Mr. Fiedler is planning to give a new symphony by Sibelius, a new symphony by Elgar, and the long-expected "Gigue," by Debussy, the companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps," and "Iberia," is promised him by the composer.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From PRESS,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Max Fiedler, will give two series of five concerts each this season.

KATHLEEN PARLOW.

The first series will be on Thursday evenings in Carnegie Hall on November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21. The second series will be on Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 23. The orchestra consists of 101 musicians. The assisting artists are Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Homer, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Alwin Schroeder.

TELEPHONE 3923 MADISON SQ.

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

110-112 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE" NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From CITIZEN,

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date OCT 7 - 1911

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with an interesting budget of news about his plans for the coming season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, almost next door neighbor to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements, and now the first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called "The Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive and the second meditative. Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fiedler, who was much impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of its being performed this year.

Mr. Fiedler gives in Boston to-day the first performance anywhere of Roger's new comedy overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Brooklyn at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps," and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year. The soloists will be Mme. Homer, Mme. Schumann Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Miss Bessie Belle Collier.

The five Brooklyn concerts this season will fall, as usual, on Friday evenings in the Academy of Music, the dates being Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23 and March 22.

Established in New York, 1884

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

SATURDAY RITES AT SYMPHON HALL

The Regular Beginning of the Evening Concerts—Mr. Fiedler, Mme. Gluck and Bossi Warmly Received—Fact, Rumor and Remarks from the Opera House—A New Singer and the Impending Maeterlincks—Miss de Swirsky's Dances—Mr. Kubelik Discovers a Composer—Orchestral Plans for Chicago and New York—Mr. Dippel Beset Again—Items as They Pass.

THE Symphony Concert of Saturday evening completed the rites for the beginning of a new season. As usual, flowers and greenery decorated the conductor's music stand, while by exception a wreath of laurel stood against a corner of his little platform. Mr. Fiedler, when he first came to his place, was long but not very loudly applauded, and the more exacting audience of Saturday clapped the "good old 'Jubilee' overture" and the conductor's version of Schumann's "Spring" less than did the more easily pleased public of Friday. The house on Saturday kept its warmest applause for Bossi's "Intermezzi Goldoniani," which pleased it much, and for Mme. Gluck's impassioned, but nowhere exaggerated, singing of her air from Charpentier's "Louise." It was proof, once more, of her ability to produce tones that were flawless musically and so the better means to the imparting of the emotion with which she enriched them. And Charpentier's music, in spite of its momentary tricks, has the voice of passion in it. There were signs of a public new to the concerts in parts of the two balconies. Yet it seemed to catch instinct... standards and discrimination of ... evenings.

[32]

From WORLD

Address New York City.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

With its first pair of concerts on Nov. 8 and Nov. 11 respectively, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its twenty-sixth consecutive season in New York, its first concert having been given here in the season of 1886-1887.

Max Fiedler, who is now in his last year as conductor of the orchestra, has arranged his usual interesting set of programmes and the orchestra itself has never been in better condition as to morale and discipline. No significant changes have been made in the membership. Two distinguished viola players have been brought over from Europe to fill vacancies in that section and an additional first trombone has been engaged. This is the sum total of the changes. All the principal members of the orchestra will be the same as last year.

The two series of five concerts will fall as usual on Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons, coming once a month. The evening concerts will fall on Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 22 and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 12, Feb. 24 and Mar. 23. The programmes for the evening and afternoon concerts are always entirely different.

In November the soloist at both the concerts will be Madame Schumann-Heink, who appears with the orchestra here for the first time in several years. Kathleen Parlow, the violinist who had such a remarkable success here a year ago, will be the soloist at both of the December concerts, while for January Josef Hofmann has been engaged for both concerts and these will be his only appearances with the orchestra in New York this season.

Among the novelties which may be promised are a new comedy overture by Reger, which was played in Boston at the first concert yesterday for the first time anywhere in the world; a new symphony by Sibelius and Debussy's "Gigue," which is a companion piece to the "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia."

It was Mr. Fiedler's hope when he left America last spring that he would be able to bring back with him the symphony of Richard Strauss, but there is absolutely no possibility of its performance this year, as the first movement is still only in pencil sketch and not a mark has been set on paper of the second movement. Strauss is very busy on a number of different compositions and there is no chance of this being finished in time for performance this year. . . .

From TIMES,

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date OCT 7 1911

Max Fiedler gives in Boston to-day the first performance anywhere of Reger's new Comedy Overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Brooklyn at one of the early concerts. The soloists will be Madame Homer, Madame Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Miss Bessie Belle Collier.

The five concerts this season will fall as usual on Friday evenings in the Academy of Music, the dates being November 10, December 8, January 12, February 23, and March 22.

From EVENING MAIL.

Address New York City.

Date

Boston Symphony.

With its first pair of concerts on November 9 and 11 the Boston Symphony orchestra will open its twenty-sixth consecutive season in New York. Practically the entire subscription of last year has been renewed and only a limited number of tickets will be available for new subscribers.

The two series of five concerts each will be given as usual on Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons. The evening concerts will fall on November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 22. The programmes for the evening and afternoon concerts are, as always, entirely different.

From EVENING POST,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 7 1911

At an informal supper, given at the house of a Boston music-lover, after the last concert of the Symphony Orchestra, some years ago, Mr. W. F. Apthorp was chatting with Mr. Higginson about the orchestra, when Mr. Loeffler, overhearing the word "oboe" as he was passing by, joined them and said: "Wouldn't you like to have the first oboe of the Opéra-Comique in Paris?" "Yes, I should," replied Mr. Higginson, "and I shouldn't mind having the first flute, too!" "Do you know I think they could be had, both of them," went on Mr. Loeffler. "Then go and get them!" was Mr. Higginson's laconic answer. And sure enough, Messrs. Molé and Sautet were first flute and first oboe in the Symphony Orchestra next season.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

NOTES OF THE MUSIC WORLD

With its first pair of concerts on the 9th and 11th of November, respectively, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its twenty-sixth consecutive season in New York, its first concert having been given here in the season of 1886-1887. At the box-office, Carnegie Hall, Monday morning the general sale of season tickets for both concerts will begin.

Mr. Max Fiedler now reaches his last year as conductor of the orchestra. No significant changes have been made in the membership. Two viola players have been brought over from Europe to fill vacancies and an additional first trombone has been engaged. All the principal members of the orchestra will be the same as last year.

The two series of five concerts will fall as usual on Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons, coming once a month. The evening concerts will fall on November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21, and the afternoon concerts on November 11, December 9, January 12, February 24 and March 23. The programmes for the evening and afternoon concerts are always entirely different.

At three pairs of the concerts the same soloist will appear at both the evening and afternoon concerts. In November the soloist at both the concerts will be Madame Schumann-Heink, who appears with the orchestra here for the first time in several years. Kathleen Parlow, the violinist here a year ago, will be the soloist at both of the December concerts, while for January Josef Hofman has been engaged for both concerts. These will be his only appearances with an orchestra in New York this season. Hofman had no idea of returning to America in the season of 1911-1912, but Mr. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, prevailed upon him to make a special trip to this country in order to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at some of its concerts in Boston and various other cities.

In February Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the 'cellist of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the Thursday evening concert. On Saturday afternoon the soloist will be Miss Geraldine Farrar, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, this being her only concert appearance in New York during the Winter.

The soloist at the evening concert in March will be Mme. Louise Homer, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, while on Saturday afternoon, the last concert of the season, a special programme has been arranged to mark the farewell appearance of Max Fiedler in this city.

As for novelties, Mr. Fiedler will try out in Boston a number of compositions new to this country. The best of them he will bring to New York. Among those may be promised a new comedy overture by Reger, which was played in Boston at the first concert yesterday for the first time anywhere in the world; a new symphony by Sibelius and Debussy's "Gigue," which is a companion piece to the "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia."

It was Mr. Fiedler's hope when he left America last Spring that he would be able to bring back with him the new symphony of Richard Strauss, but there is absolutely no possibility of its performance this year, as the first movement is still only in pencil sketch and not a mark has been set on paper of the second movement. Strauss is very busy on a number of different compositions and there is no chance of this being finished in time for performance this year.

From STAATSZEITUNG,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

Mit dem ersten Paar seiner Konzerte, welche am 9., bezw. 11. November stattfinden, eröffnet das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester seine 26. New Yorker Saison. Mit dem morgigen Tag beginnt der allgemeine Verkauf der Saisontickets. Wie wir erfahren, ist fast die gesammte Subskription der vorangegangenen Jahre auch für die kommende Saison erneuert worden, so daß nur ganz wenige Neuabonnements ausgegeben werden konnten.

Die berühmte Orchestervereinigung wird sich mit Ausnahme von zwei neuen Bratschisten und einem in Europa gewonnenen Trombone-Spieler mit dem unübertrefflichen Personalstand des verflossenen Jahres vorstellen. Die Solisten sind durchweg Künstler von Weltruf; wir nennen nur die Namen Schumann-Heink, Kathleen Parlow, Louise Homer, Josef Hofmann, Alwin Schroeder und — last but not least — Geraldine Farrar. Das Schlußkonzert der Saison wird als Abschieds-Konzert des verdienten Dirigenten Herrn Max Fiedler besonders anziehend gestaltet werden.

Herr Fiedler wird eine ganze Reihe von Novitäten in Boston herausbringen, um die besten davon in New York zu wiederholen. Wir nennen: Max Reger's neue „Lustspiel-Ouvertüre", eine neue Symphonie von Sibelius und Debussy's „Gigue". Die Hoffnung Fiedler's, Richard Strauß' letztangekündigte Symphonie, die „Alpen-Symphonie", hier zur Darstellung zu bringen, kann dagegen nicht in Erfüllung gehen, da deren erster Satz nur als Bleistiftskizze existirt, während von dem zweiten auch noch kein Notenköpflein feststeht. Da heißt es sich denn in Geduld fassen.

From EAGLE,

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date OCT 7 1911

INSTITUTE CONCERTS START WITH RECITAL

By Corinne Rider-Kelsey, Soprano, and Claude Cunningham, Barytone.

PROGRAMMES FOR THE SEASON

Completed by Several Organizations. Mr. Fiedler's Talk With Richard Strauss.

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now in Boston,, sojourned, last summer, at Garmisch, Bavaria, almost next door to Richard Strauss, whom he often met. It is a great disappointment to Mr. Fiedler that he cannot play, as he had expected, a new symphony on which Strauss is at work. It will be in two movements; the first is in pencil-sketch, while the second remains in the composer's mind. It will probably be played in the season of 1912-13, and will be called "The Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive and the second, meditative. Strauss played the first movement for Mr. Fielder, who was much impressed by it.

He gives in Boston today the first performance anywhere of Reger's new "Comedy Overture," the score and parts of which he brought with him fresh from the printers; it will probably be heard in Brooklyn at an early concert. Debussy has promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps," and "Iberia," which is expected to come from the jress by the first of the year.

The soloists will be Madame Homer, Madame Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Barlow, Josef Hofman and Miss Bessie Belle Collier.

The five concerts this season will fall as usual on Friday evenings in the Academy of Music, the dates being November 10, December 8, January 12, February 23 and March 22.

From AMERICAN, BROOKLYN EDI

Address New York City.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

Brooklyn Won't Hear New Strauss Symphony

First Movement Still a Pencil Sketch, While Second Is in Composer's Mind.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with an interesting budget of news about his plans for the coming season. He spent the Summer at Carmisch, Bavaria, almost the next door neighbor to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal.

His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements, and now the first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called "The Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive, the second meditative.

Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fiedler, who was much impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of its being performed this year.

He gave in Boston yesterday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new Comedy Overature, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Brooklyn at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps," and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year.

The soloists will be Madame Homer, Madame Schumann-Heink Miss Kathleen Parlow, Mr. Joseph Hofmann and Miss Bessie Belle Collier.

The five concerts this season will fall as usual on Friday evenings in the Academy of Music, the dates being November 10, December 8, January 12, February 23 and March 22.

[33]

From TRIBUNE,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its twenty-sixth season in New York next month with brighter prospects than it has ever had, despite the remarkable patronage that has been given to it in the last two or three years. The public sale of season tickets will open at the box office, Carnegie Hall, to-morrow morning. Only a limited number of seats is left, because practically the entire list of subscribers of last year has been renewed for the coming season. As early as last February subscribers began to send in their applications for renewals, and by June 17, when the renewal books were closed, less than 10 per cent had failed to come in. This means that, with the usual normal sale of season tickets, there will be very few tickets indeed for single concerts available to the general public.

The usual two series of evening and afternoon concerts will be given. The evening concerts fall on Thursday evenings, the dates being November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21, at 8:15. The afternoon concerts, at 2:30 o'clock, fall on Saturdays, the dates being November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 23.

As in the past, C. A. Ellis, the manager of the orchestra, has used his utmost efforts to secure as distinguished a list of soloists as can be had, and this year, as last, he has succeeded in his aim. The soloists will be Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Geraldine Farrar, Mrs. Louise Homer, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Alwin Schroeder. Experience has shown that where the soloist is of sufficient distinction to appear in New York with the Boston Symphony Orchestra it is a good plan to have him at both concerts of a given pair, although the programmes of the evening and afternoon concerts are always entirely different. This usage is followed to a large extent this year. Mme. Schumann-Heink will be the soloist at both of the November concerts. Miss Kathleen Parlow, who will appear here for the first time with the Boston Symphony, will be the soloist at both of the December concerts. As for January, Josef Hofmann will make his only appearances with the orchestra in New York, at the two concerts of that month. Arrangements have been made with Mr. Hofmann whereby he returns to America next winter simply and solely to make a number of appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to give one recital in New York and one in Boston.

In February Miss Geraldine Farrar will be the soloist at the afternoon concert, thus making her only concert appearance of the season in New York, and on Thursday evening, in the same month, Alwin Schroeder will appear. Mr. Schroeder was announced for last year, but was prevented from appearing by a serious illness.

In the final concerts, in March, Mrs. Louise Homer will be the soloist at the Thursday night concert, while a programme of special interest will be arranged for the Saturday afternoon to mark Mr. Fiedler's farewell appearance here. This will be Mr. Fiedler's last year with the orchestra.

It is difficult at this time to say what novelties Mr. Fiedler will perform at the New York concerts. For his Boston concerts he has arranged a long and interesting list, and the best of these will be heard here. At his first concert in Boston, yesterday, he gave the first performance anywhere of Reger's new Comedy Overture, Op. 120. It was his hope to be able to perform this year the new symphony of Richard Strauss, but there is absolutely no possibility of this, inasmuch as the work will not be completed inside of a year. Mr. Fiedler, however, has the promise of Debussy's long-expected "Gigue," the companion piece for "Iberia" and "Rondes de Printemps."

Estab 1884

From

Address

Date OCT 7 -

Last year's subscribers to the Boston Symphony's local concerts will have until next Wednesday to renew subscriptions and retain their old seats. All applications should be made to Miss H. Harris. The public sale for new subscribers will open October 16. Mr. Fiedler reached Boston a week ago with an interesting batch of news about his plans for the coming season. He has been spending the summer in Bavaria, almost next door neighbor to Richard Strauss. He is disappointed in that he will not be able to play the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called the "Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive, the second meditative. Mr. Fiedler gave in Boston Friday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new comedy overture. This is likely to be heard in Philadelphia at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia." He is planning to give in Philadelphia a Wagnerian program at the fourth concert on February 19.

Estab 84

From SUN

Address

Date

Estab 84

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Outline of Its Plans for the Season Beginning November 9.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its public sale of season tickets to-morrow morning at the box office of Carnegie Hall with the brightest prospects the orchestra has had in this city since it first began to come here, twenty-five years ago. Before the end of last season the subscribers to the series of concerts that the orchestra gives in New York had begun to renew for this year, and when the books for renewals were closed on June 17 it was discovered that less than 10 per cent. of last year's subscribers had failed to renew. The result is that the orchestra at the end of the coming public sale will have the largest subscription it has had in its history and this year, as last, Carnegie Hall will be crowded at every performance.

The usual two series of five concerts will fall as usual on Thursday evenings, the dates being November 9, December 7, January 11, February 22 and March 21, at 8:15 o'clock. The Saturday afternoon concerts at 2:30 will fall on November 11, December 9, January 13, February 24 and March 23. Following the custom which has been the rule the last few years, some of the soloists have been engaged for both evening and afternoon concerts of a pair, while, as has always been the case, the programmes for the afternoon and evening concerts will be entirely different. Thus at the November concerts the soloist will be Mme. Schumann-Heink. It is a number of years since she last appeared here with the Boston Symphony, and this year she has been engaged for a long series of concerts during the fall.

Kathleen Parlow played first with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston last spring and made the same success there that had distinguished her in New York during the winter. She has been engaged to play at both of the concerts in December.

Of the pianists of to-day none has risen to a higher point in the favor of New York audiences than Josef Hofmann. Last year Mr. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made arrangements with Hofmann whereby the latter agreed to change his plans for the coming season and come to America simply to play at a series of concerts with the Symphony Orchestra and give one recital in New York and one in Boston. Altogether Mr. Hofmann will play a dozen times with the orchestra and he is down for both New York concerts in January. These will be his only appearances with orchestra in New York this year.

At the February concerts Miss Geraldine Farrar will be the soloist on Saturday afternoon and Alwin Schroeder, who was prevented from appearing as announced last year on account of illness, will play at the Thursday evening concert.

At the Thursday night concert in March the soloist will be Mme. Louise Homer, while the Saturday afternoon concert will be devoted to a special programme marking Mr. Fiedler's farewell.

As for plans of the season, Mr. Fiedler has made many. This is to be his last year with the Boston orchestra, and he is preparing for Boston a most elaborate list of new works, the best of which undoubtedly will have a hearing in New York. For example, at the first concert in Boston, last Saturday night, he played for the first time not only in America but in the world Reger's new comedy overture No. 120.

He had hoped to be able to put on Strauss's new symphony this year, but there is no prospect of this being finished in time, for when Mr. Fiedler left Strauss last month the first movement was only in the form of a pencil sketch, and the second movement was as yet in the composer's brain. He has the promise, however, of Debussy's Gigue and several other works of equal interest, including a new symphony by Sibelius, Eljar's new symphony and two scherzos by Nicode.

From EVENING BULLETIN,

Address Philadelphia, Pa.

Date OCT 7 -

Music Notes

THE concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music this season will as usual be five in number, occurring on Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 10, and March 18. One of the novelties likely to be heard here is Reger's new "Comedy Overture," which Mr. Fiedler played for the first time anywhere in Boston this week. Dubussy also has promised to send Mr. Fiedler the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," which is expected to be on the press by the first of the year. A Wagnerian program will be presented at the fourth concert.

Es k, 1884

From

Address

Date OCT 9 -

Max Fiedler of the Boston Symphony orchestra has about thirty-eight musical novelties which he will bring out in concerts this season. Among them are Mahler's second and his ninth symphony; then a new comic overture by Reger; a tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice," by Bantock; a "French Symphony," by Dubois; a legend, "Kikimorra," by Liadoff, and Holbrook's "Ulalume." The orchestra celebrates this season its thirtieth anniversary.

E k, 1884

[34]

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

INQUIRER

From

Address PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

along the Media-West Chester line.

Last year's subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts will have until next Wednesday, October 11, to renew their subscriptions and retain their old seats. All applications should be made to Miss H. Harris in Heppe's piano rooms, 1119 Chestnut street. The public sale for new subscribers will open Monday morning, October 16.

w York, 1884

From RECORD.

Address PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Date OCT 8 1911

* * *

Last year's subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts will have until next Wednesday to renew subscriptions and retain old seats. All applications should be made to Miss H. Harris, in Heppe's piano rooms, No. 1119 Chestnut street. The public sale for new subscribers will open Monday morning, October 16. Conductor Max Fiedler reached Boston a week ago with interesting news as to his plans for the season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, almost next door to Richard Strauss. Fiedler's one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Strauss played over the first movement for Fiedler, who was much impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of the work's being performed this year.

Fiedler gave in Boston yesterday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new comedy overture. This is likely to be heard in Philadelphia at one of the early concerts. Debussy has promised to send the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year. Fiedler is planning to give in Philadelphia a Wagnerian program at the fourth concert, on Monday, February 19.

1884

Est

HERALD, THURSDAY,

OCTOBER 12, 1911.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Particular interest is attached to the Symphony concerts of this week, for the program has been arranged by Mr. Fiedler to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the orchestra. There will be no soloist. The program will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony and Brahms's "Academic" overture. The "Eroica," in whole and in parts, and the "Unfinished" hold the record for the number of performances by the orchestra. The "Eroica" has been played in the last 30 years in Boston and elsewhere 91 times, and the "Unfinished" 101 times. These numbers include several commemorative performances of the funeral music of the "Eroica" and the andante of the "Unfinished."

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE

The subscription books for the Cambridge concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are now open for renewals at Kent's University bookstore in Harvard square. The unclaimed seats will be placed on sale for the season at that place on Saturday morning. The concerts, as usual, will be eight in number, on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, Oct. 19, Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 18, Feb. 8, Feb. 29, March 28 and April 25. The soloists will be Rudolph Ganz, Lilla Ormond, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann, Katharine Goodson and Heinrich Warnke.

From

Address PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Date OCT 8 191

Among the novelties played this season by the Boston Symphony Society will be Max Reger's new "Comedy Overture, Op. 120," which will be heard for the first time in America at the opening concert in Boston next week. Other works will be a new tone-poem by Granville Bantock, called "Dante and Beatrice;" Theodore Dubois' "Symphonie Francaise," Liadoff's Legend, called "Kikomorra;" Elgar's new symphony, and Josef Holbrooke's tone-poem, "Ulalume." Altogether, Mr. Fiedler announces thirty-eight works that are new to Boston, and many of them are yet to be heard in America. The society will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary on October 13 and 14, and the Liszt centennial celebration will come on October 20 and 21.

Es rk, 1884

From AMERICAN,

Address Baltimore, Md.

Date

Estabi 84

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with an interesting bunch of news about his plans for the coming season. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements and now the first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called The Alps Symphony, the first movement being descriptive, the second meditative.

He gave in Boston yesterday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new Comedy Overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Baltimore at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his Gigue, a companion piece to Rondes de Printemps and Iberia, which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year.

The soloists will be Madame Homer, Madame Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow and Mr. Josef Hofmann.

From

Address PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Date OCT 8 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Max Fiedler conductor, will give five concerts in Philadelphia this season, at the Academy of Music, on the following dates. Mondays, November 6, December 4, 1911; January 8, February 1, and March 18, 1912.

Estabi 884

The orchestra comprises 101 members, and the following artists will appear during their season here: Mme. Homer, contralto, of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Mme. Schumann-Heink, contralto; Miss Kathleen Parlow, the world-renowned Canadian violinist, and Josef Hofmann, the popular pianist.

The Boston Symphony is always warmly welcomed in Philadelphia.

From EVENING SUN,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 10 1911

Esti 884

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Max Fiedler as conductor will give five Thursday evening and five Saturday matinée performances at Carnegie Hall beginning in November and closing in March. The subscription sale of seats opened yesterday.

From PRESS,

Address Philadelphia, Pa.

Date OCT 8 1911

Last year's subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts will have until next Wednesday, October 11, to renew their subscriptions and retain their old seats. All applications should be made to Miss H. Harris, in Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1119 Chestnut Street. The public sale for new subscribers will open Monday morning, October 16.

Estabi 84

Mr. Fiedler reached Boston a week ago with an interesting bunch of news about his plans for the coming season. He has been spending the Summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, almost next door to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements and now the first movement is only in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called the "Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive, the second meditative.

Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fiedler, who was much impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of its being performed this year.

He gave in Boston yesterday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new Comedy Overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Philadelphia at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year.

From EVENING NEWS.

Address Baltimore, Md.

Date

Es rk, 1884

MUSIC LOVERS LOOK FOR RARE SEASON

Performances Will Open October 20 With Hutcheson's Recital.

Baltimore's schedule of notable musical performances for the current season, which will be opened by Ernest Hutcheson's recital at the Peabody on October 20, promises an unusual volume of rare pleasure and edification for music-lovers. The list of attractions prepared by our purveyors includes a gratifying number of the world's fruits of highest accomplishment in art development. The provision is so ample that there is more danger that we shall experience satiety than there is that we shall suffer from unappraised appetites.

The opera season is fairly assured, which means that we may expect 10 evenings of well selected works, admirably presented. The Chicago managers propose to give us a taste of Wagner with Gadski or Fremstad, which will greatly enrich their scheme. Mary Garden is to appear as Carmen, which role should afford her unusually fruitful material. Many of last year's singers will be employed in this season's presentation, which is not regrettable, for most of them were so successful as to merit a warm welcome on their reappearance. The management would do well to consider bringing a somewhat smaller orchestra to the Lyric. With a more compact body of players, in place of the long lines necessitated by the architectural conditions where 80 men are involved, the orchestra would be under more complete control, which would result in truer unity and less veiling of the singers' voices. Naturally, this curtailment would have to be confined to the strings, which is a pity, for they are the noblest element in the orchestra, and they are not themselves the principal transgressors, but their presence in such large numbers pushes the wind players back across the line of intimate influence.

Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual five performances in Baltimore with distinguished soloists, and the reorganized New York Philharmonic Orchestra, under its new conductor, Stransky, will visit us three times. Ernest Hutcheson will play George Boyle's new piano concerto at one of the Philharmonic concerts. The success of this work at the recent Worcester Festival was phenomenal. The severest critics were extremely laudatory of both the composition and its presentation. Baltimore musicians will look forward to its home production with keen interest.

There will be the usual performances by the Oratorio Society, the Musical Art, Mr. Randolph's opera class and the concerts (invitation functions) given by the German singing societies.

Peabody Recitals.

The Peabody recital series will be more interesting than ever before. Many established favorites, viz.: Hutcheson, Wirtz, Van Hulsteyn, Harold Bauer, Joseph Lhevinne and Emmanuel Wad would be sadly missed by the Baltimore public if they failed to do the wheel-horse work of the scheme. Of the, to us, less familiar artists are Alma Gluck, who as a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, two years ago, charmed with her personality and musical art; Theodor Hemberger, an accomplished musician and violinist, who has this year joined the Peabody faculty; Austin Conradi, talented pianist and composer, who was graduated from the Peabody last spring; Mabel G. Siemonn, a delicious soprano singer, who has been engaged by Savage for opera; Elsom Zimbalist, whose success as a violinist has been most brilliant; George F. Boyle, the composer-pianist, whose two art activities (writing and performing music) seem to cooperate to the advantage of each; Adelin Fermin, whose vibrant barytone voice and musical temperament won for him a warm place in Baltimore's regard last season; Elena Gerhardt (soprano), who comes with the enthusiastic indorsement of high authorities; Kathleen Parlow (violinist), who has won rare laurels in the musical centers of Europe; Yolanda Sassoli, who was introduced to the Baltimore public by Madame Melba, and who is quite unique in her manifestation of the harp; Harold D. Phillips (organist), a member of the Peabody staff, who is an erudite musician and a brilliant performer; Alexander Heinemann, who is without doubt unrivaled as a male singer of classical songs, and Katharine Goodson, the English pianiste, who is said to rank very high in her art.

The Kneisel Quartet.

Mr. Randolph has, as usual, engaged the Kneisel Quartet for three chamber music concerts, and he has also secured the Flanzaley Quartet and the Barrere wind-instrument players for one appearance each. The Flonzaley Quartet has in the few years of its public playing won such a measure of enthusiastic approval as is almost unique. Press notices from Berlin, Dresden, Weimar, Leipzig, Stuttgart and London are unanimous in according it the highest possible praise.

The Barrere Ensemble is composed of two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets, two French horns and two bassoons. Barrere's artists not only present a novel combination of instruments, but they are said to secure wonderful effects.

In addition to the above cited musical functions we shall doubtless have some visits of touring artists. Altogether our promised volume of performances and

From EVENING SUN,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 11 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

SOME STORIES OF MATERNA AND ANNIE CARY.

As Well as Gericke, the Henschels and the Boston Symphony a Generation Ago—The Hub Is About Celebrating a Thirtieth Anniversary—Some Hullaballoo About It, Too

There's a rare budget of yarns out of Boston these days. The Symphony Orchestra is about celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of its foundation, by an unknown citizen, who had a scheme of concerts fully matured in his head and was ready to subsidize them out of his own pocket. This man, as all Boston soon found out, was Mr. Henry L. Higginson. The Transcript, in a two-page-long look backward, declares that, like Col. Sellers, he was only waiting for a "missing ingredient." At the Harvard Musical Association's last concert one year, he found it. Miss Lillian Bailey sang in old Music Hall and her London teacher, George Henschel, in his own "Concert Overture," appeared as a conductor.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was soon formed, with Mr. Henschel as conductor and Bernhard Listemann as concert master. The opening concert—they did not say "inaugural programme" then—was given in the Music Hall, on Saturday evening, Oct. 22, 1881, as follows: Beethoven, overture, "Consecration of the House"; Gluck, aria, "Orpheus"; Haydn, symphony in B-flat major (B. & H., No. 12); Schubert, ballet music, "Rosamunde"; Max Bruch, scena, "Odysseus"; Weber, "Festival Overture"; soloist, Miss Annie Louise Cary.

Mr. W. F. Apthorp, Boston's programme annotator of the pre-Philip Hale years, remarks on this American occasion: "Be it said, en passant, that I believe this was Miss Cary's last appearance in public. Though she hardly appeared to advantage in the Gluck air (sung in English!), her singing of Penelope's great scene in Max Bruch's 'Odysseus' was by all odds the most completely superb I ever heard her do. She retired from public life at her greatest."

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the second to command when Mr. Higginson found changes necessary, was fourth conductor at the Vienna Court Opera, besides conducting some other things in the Austrian capital. Apthorp to-day believes Mr. Higginson could not have made a luckier choice. "And just here let me tell a little anecdote, sharply characteristic of one of the persons concerned." He goes on to narrate that, leaving the United States, Mr. Henschel went out on the same steamer as Amalia Materna, the great Wagnerian soprano, who was a warm intimate friend of Mr. Gericke. Chatting with her on deck one day, Mr. Henschel suddenly changed the course of their conversation.

"By the way, I hear you know Mr. Gericke very well, who is to succeed me at the Symphony concerts in Boston." On her assenting, he went on in his emphatic way: "And now will you please tell me one thing? Can he conduct?" Materna's answer is not reported, but, says Apthorp, one can fancy her assuming the expression of face with which she used to cry out: "Armsel'ge, schweig'!" to poor Gutrune in the last scene in "Götterdämmerung." Conduct? Aye, that he could, the veteran critic concludes.

Mr. H. E. Krehbiel, in an added word on the twenty-six years of the Boston Orchestra's visits outside its own town, recalled another famous story of old days. "When Major Higginson was persuaded (I think that statement fits the case) to include New York in the orchestra's itinerary, the metropolis, unlike the other cities to which he ministered, was no more suffering from a paucity of symphonic music than it is now. Mr. Theodore Thomas was still with us, conducting his own Symphony Concerts, his Young People's Concerts and the concerts of the Philharmonic Society. Mr. Walter Damrosch was continuing the concerts of the Symphony Society, founded by his lamented father, whose services in behalf of good music in concert room and opera house can scarcely be overestimated. Mr. Van der Stucken, young, ambitious and tremendously energetic, was giving us "Novelty Concerts," and Mr. Seidl, having won a great popularity at the opera, was eager to extend it into the concert field, introducing that modern reading of the classics which has wrought much good but more evil in the public taste."

The new works introduced were not urgently needed, for the rivalry between Mr. Thomas and Dr. Damrosch had for some years kept this pool in rather violent agitation.

Neither of these New York leaders was content to wait for the new compositions brought forth by German composers to be published. "They produced them from manuscript on which the ink was scarcely dry. As an illustration let one circumstance serve: Both conductors received scores of a Brahms symphony at the same time. Dr. Damrosch went straightway to Schirmer's music shop for the parts but found that only one set of them had been imported and it was already in the hands of his rival, who promptly announced it for his next concert, which was to take place two or three days later. Dr. Damrosch hired a band of copyists, tore his score into sections, the copyists worked all night, and the next day the symphony was played."

In a final word touching the attitude of the newspaper reviewers of New York toward the Boston Orchestra, the local dean declares: "It was kind from the beginning. My old colleagues in Boston will realize what this means when they recall the amusing jealousy which existed at that time between the musical people (or their mouthpieces) of the two cities. Too often the success of an artist in one city meant his sure failure in another. In his humble way, one of the New York writers labored to break down these foolish barriers, which were not at all imaginary." He tells how an artist from Europe made her first American appearance in New York, where she was treated, "not harshly, not unjustly, but somewhat severely" by the New York critics.

To one of them she went, utterly discouraged, and said she was inclined to return to her home at once. "Why?" asked the critic. "Because I made a failure on my first attempt yesterday." "Do you admit that?" "Certainly; I felt it in the hall and I read it in this morning's papers." "Then," said the critic, benevolently, "don't go home; go to Boston." "Why Boston?" "Because if you have failed here, as you say, you will succeed in Boston." Persuaded that the advice was honestly meant, she acted on it. In a fortnight after her first appearance she was the toast of musical Boston. And she deserved her success, the story ends.

SUN,

Baltimore, Md.

Boston Symphony

MAX FIEDLER, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with interesting news about his plans for the season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch, Lavaria, almost next door to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements, and now the first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called "The Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive, the second meditative.

Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fiedler, but there is no chance of its being performed this year.

He gave in Boston yesterday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new "Comedy Overture," the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Baltimore at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps," and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year.

The soloists will be Mme. Homer, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow and Josef Hofmann.

[35]

From EVENING NEWS,

Address Baltimore, Md.

Date

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S PLANS FOR SEASON

Reger's New Comedy Overture Will Probably Be Given Here.

Season ticket holders of last year's series of Boston Symphony Concerts have until October 12 in which to renew their subscriptions and retain their old seats, after which time the books will be closed, to be opened for new subscribers on the following Monday. All applications should be made to W. A. Albaugh, at his office, Charles and Fayette streets.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with news about his plans for the season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, almost next-door neighbor to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work.

He gave in Boston the first performance anywhere of Roger's new comedy overture, the score and parts of which he brought over, with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Baltimore at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year.

The soloists will be Mme. Homer, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow and Josef Hofmann.

From

Address PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Date OCT 8 1911

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season in Boston on Friday, under the leadership of Max Fiedler. The novelty of the programme was a new comedy overture by Reger, for which this was the first performance anywhere. Mr. Fiedler brought the score and parts with him from Europe on his return two weeks ago, the work being fresh from the press. It will probably be given in this city at one of the early concerts.

Mr. Fiedler, in commenting on the opening season, said that 38 of the works included in his list for the year are new to Boston, though he may not perform quite all of them.

"I only wish," said Mr. Fiedler, "that I were going to be able to perform this winter the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. Unfortunately there is no possible chance of it. The work will be one of large dimensions, in two movements. The first is sketched in pencil and not yet scored, while the second is still in the mind of the composer, and there is no possibility of its being finished in the next six or eight months.

"He has played for me, so far as he could, the first movement of his symphony, and I have heard enough of it to make me anxious for the day when I will see it on the rack before me in an orchestral rehearsal. He will probably call it the 'Alps Symphony.' In the first movement he goes up a lofty peak and comes down again. He passes Alpine farms and pastures, huntsmen, peasants singing in the fields, and finally he reaches the lofty snow-capped peak. Then, like the true Strauss that he is, he uses the same music to descend with, but with everything diminished, to make the descent faster than the ascent. Altogether I think it is going to be a most notable work."

From REPUBLICAN,

Address Springfield, Mass.

Date OCT 8 - 1911

Other Notes and Comment.

For those who have grown accustomed to a comfortable feeling of security in regard to the artistic future of the Boston symphony orchestra, there was a disturbing item of news in August Spanuth's Berlin letter to the New York Staats-Zeitung a few days since, says Musical America. It has been generally understood that Dr Karl Muck was to return to the post now filled—at his instigation—by Max Fiedler, in the autumn of 1912, to remain at the head of the Boston band for a more or less indefinite period; it has been believed that the agreement was ratified contractually some time ago. This would seem to have been somewhat premature complacence, for, according to Mr Spanuth, there is now a possibility of the negotiations coming to naught because of a disagreement on the question of salary. Certainly Germans in general, and Berliners in particular, would not deplore a turn or twist that would save Dr Muck to them and the kaiser's opera.

From PUBLIC LEDGER, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Address

Date OCT 8

Mr. Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with interesting news of his plans for the coming season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, almost next door to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements, and now the first movement is only in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called the "Alpa Symphony," the first movement being descriptive, the second meditative. Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fiedler, who was impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of its being performed this year. Fiedler recently gave in Boston the first performance anywhere of Reger's new comedy overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Philadelphia at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps," and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year. He is planning to give in Philadelphia a Wagnerian programme at the fourth concert on Monday, February 19.

H. Evan Williams, the Welsh-American

From EVENING GLOBE,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 10 1911

A new "Comedy Overture" by the industrious Max Reeger had its first performance anywhere at the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last week. Philip Hale wrote in the Boston Herald of the event as follows:

"Mr. Fiedler brought with him from Europe the score of Reger's new overture which has just been published, and the performances yesterday was the very first. The overture is scored lightly as far as the number of instruments is concerned. The trombones are not employed, and there are two of each wood wind instruments, two trumpets and four horns; nor does Reger find it necessary to call in the aid of a large battery, for kettledrums and a triangle are the only pulsatile instruments. Notwithstanding this modesty in resources, the instrumentation is for the most part heavy, clumsy, and at times it is raw. The themes are without marked significance, nor do they gain in the elaborate contrapuntal treatment that characterizes Reger's music. There are animated pages; liveliness of tempo, and the frequent hurlyburly may persuade a hearer who is thus easily affected that the composer has really something to say and is fortunate in expression.

"It would be folly to deny Reger's technical skill, but in this overture, as in the great majority of the pages of his orchestral works he shows a lack of fine taste, hardly any appreciation of color or nuances, an inability to provide contrasts, and above all an absence of poetic spirit. This man is now nearly forty years old, and it is high time for him to disclose an imaginative gift if he wishes to be accepted by a generation to come. Meanwhile the Regerites compare their idol to Bach and Beethoven and Reger festivals are held solemnly to the deep and abiding joy of the initiated.

The soloist of the concert was Mrs. Alma Gluck, who was warmly praised for her singing of airs from Mozart's "Seragnio" and Charpentier's "Louise."

This week the Boston orchestra celebrates its thirtieth anniversary by offering as a programme the three works oftenest performed at its concerts—Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, and Brahms5s "Academic Festival Overture."

POST, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1911

SYMPHONY HAS 30TH BIRTHDAY

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall was designed in honor of the 30th anniversary of that organization, and it offered three works which have long been favorites with the symphony audiences. This programme was: Eroica Symphony, Beethoven; Unfinished Symphony, Schubert; Academic Overture, Brahms. There was no soloist.

There was an eloquent performance of Beethoven's epic, a work which is assuredly a token of one of the most extraordinary steps ever taken by a composer. It seems that in his third symphony, almost without warning, Beethoven suddenly emerged from the Mozart and Haydn mould, and becomes himself, in one startling explosion. One other man did an equally amazing thing, although he did not build such a mighty cathedral as Beethoven. This was Berlioz when he wrote the Fantastic Symphony. The distance between the second and third symphonies represents perhaps the greatest step that Beetnoven, the arch-enemy of custom, took in the whole course of his artistic development. It is a much greater step from the first two symphonies to the Eroica, for instance, than between the Eroica and the Fifth, or even the Fifth and the Ninth. The Eroica Symphony is truly a heroic and colossal masterpiece, that grips one the harder with every hearing.

Schubert's Symphony was well placed on the programme. It offers a striking example of how romantic a composer may be, while adhering very closely to an established classical form, and it unquestionably contains some of the most beautiful music in existence. Schubert has filled his symphonic mould with very rich and emotional substance. It is futile to speculate upon what the other two movements would have been. They are not, so far as we know, and art has seldom suffered a greater loss. Brahms' "Academic" overture brought a brilliant and exhilarating conclusion to the concert. At the concerts of next week the centenary of Franz Liszt will be observed with a special programme: Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes"; Symphony after Dante's "Divina Commedia"; piano concerto in E-flat; Symphonic poem, "Tasso; lament and triumph"; soloist, Rudolph Ganz.

ADVERTISER, SATURDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 14

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S 30TH ANNIVERSARY

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAMME IS COMMEMORATIVE

Beethoven's Heroic Symphony Gave Conductor Fiedler Opportunity to Shine Brilliantly.

By Louis C. Elson.

PROGRAMME.

Beethoven. Heroic Symphony.
Schubert. Unfinished Symphony.
Brahms. Academic overture.

There was no soloist. The programme was supposed to be commemorative of the fact that the Boston symphony orchestra began just 30 years ago, but it might be difficult to discover just how these numbers celebrated the event. The symphony had a funeral march, which might typify that all adverse criticism had long since been buried. The "unfinished" symphony might intimate that the great work of these concerts is still going on, but we are puzzled to account for the academic overture. The three works cannot be regarded as especial favorites in a greater degree than the "Tannhauser" overture, Beethoven's fifth symphony, Tschaikowsky's sixth, Schubert's C major, or a dozen other works that could be named.

But who need quarrel with the logic that led to three solid and poetic works exquisitely and grandly played. Nevertheless, since memories are in order, let us also begin to reminisce upon this auspicious occasion.

The orchestra was born of strife and battle. The conservatism of the Harvard Musical Association and its orchestra, over 30 years ago, led to the formation of a much more radical organization, the Philharmonic orchestra, which played at Liszt, and Berlioz, and Wagner, with more enthusiasm than technique. The two rival orchestras managed to cause many empty benches for each other. Then came the great musical benefactor of our city, Henry L. Higginson, and presented what each of the warring factions were striving for. He took Saturday night for his concerts, so that he might interfere with no other enterprise, for at that time Saturday night was almost barren of any entertainments, a remnant of the Puritan custom which held Saturday night as part of the Sabbath.

Henschel was the first conductor and gave programmes that were brimful of novelties. He always used to begin the season with Beethoven's "Dedication of the House," a sort of musical grace before meat that might have been revived for this occasion.

It would be an old story to tell of the different conductors who followed, Gericke, the elegant, Paur, the enthusiastic, Nikisch, the freely poetic, Muck, the thrilling, for their work is known to every Bostonian. But it seems fitting, at this 30th anniversary, to state emphatically, that had it not been for Mr. Gericke the Boston Symphony orchestra might have been the equal of the Chicago orchestra, or of the New York Philharmonic, a great organization, but not the foremost band of America and perhaps of the world.

It was Mr. Gericke's courage in replacing the veteran concert-meister, Listemann, with the young Franz Kneisel, in weeding out some of the older musicians who had come to look upon the orchestra as a species of old men's home, and bringing in a number of young men of the highest talent who were to grow up with the orchestra, it was this that made the wonderful organization that we enjoy today. Several of the men whom Gericke brought over in the first years of the orchestra are with the band today, in full vigor of musicianship.

Having gathered the material that was to hold together with something like permanency, Gericke drilled it with a rod of iron. We are quite aware of the limitations of that eminent conductor. The abandon of Muck, the fury of Paur, the freedom of Nikisch, were foreign to his Chesterfieldian style, but he did what none of these could have done; he became an unrelenting drillmaster until the orchestra was technically beyond all of its competitors. When the later conductors stepped in they found a noble instrument ready for them to play upon. Therefore in the commemorative service let the names of Higginson and Gericke be remembered together.

Meanwhile the Beethoven symphony is waiting. There is a vein of the grandiose in Mr. Fiedler that causes him to shine with especial brightness in the first movement of this work. The intense gusts of passion which mark the end of the closing theme, the dins and alarums of battle which are in the development, the power of the coda, all these were portrayed with warlike vigor. This movement was not over-driven, but was read with commendable restraint. The repeat of the exposition was cut out, a wise proceeding in so long a programme. The figure treatment was kept very clear in all of its manifold phases, and that return of the chief figure upon the horn, in the tonic, directly against the strings in the dominant was softened down so that its audacious harmonies shocked no one.

The scherzo was taken at a great speed, but it has plenty of warrant for this, and the trio displayed the horns prominently. Even today, when every possible resource of every instrument is exploited, there is nothing in the repertoire that excels this as an exposition of the true spirit of the horn. The three horns might have blended a trifle better. The glory of the funeral march was chiefly in the fine playing of the oboe, but the movement was perfect in its reading, not too slow, as we are apt to have it sometimes. The symphony made a great success, and Mr. Fiedler was enthusiastically recalled twice, and finally the orchestra arose in response to the continued applause.

To listen to the "Unfinished Symphony" was like taking a cool and refreshing bath and washing away all the worrying thoughts and puzzling dissonances that the modern musical problem-makers have poured over us.

At the best one could say with Longfellow:—

"Their mighty thoughts suggest,
Life's endless toil and endeavor;
And tonight I long for Rest."

And rest it was; delightful, cool rest, in unforced harmonies and beautiful melodies. And Mr. Fiedler gave it all with becoming simplicity. He did not endeavor to read more into the score than was evident in it. Only in the second movement the pianissimo effects were pushed almost to inaudibility. The mystery of the opening phrase of the first movement, and the ineffable beauty of the subordinate theme, were done full justice to. Every contrast was well defined, and the work was as successful as any performance of it could be. There is a trifle too much of repetition in the measures of this work to make it the ideal of the 20th century.

Brahms' "Academic" overture gained by coming after the Schubert instead of the Beethoven work. Its treatment was as always interesting, and its funny bassoon passages were well played. It also evoked great enthusiasm and again Mr. Fiedler was recalled by the popular applause.

Therefore the "commemoration" was especially successful, and after all, even though, as above stated, the numbers commemorated nothing in particular, it was eminently fitting to mark the 30th milestone with a programme that was purely orchestral, and with works that were purely classical.

SYMPHONY'S 30TH ANNIVERSARY

Commemorated by Program of the Classics.

Fiedler and Orchestra Receive Pronounced Applause.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is observing in its concerts this week the 30th anniversary of its first public rehearsal and concert, which were held Oct 21 and 22, 1881. The program performed yesterday afternoon, and to be repeated tonight, consists of two symphonies, the "Eroica" of Beethoven and Schubert's "Unfinished," and the "Academic" overture of Brahms.

Yesterday there was no attempt made at festal display, or at any obvious or unusual means of denoting a public celebration, such as the decoration of the platform by garlands, inscriptions, or even of some symbol or sign of the span of years. The conductor's desk was devoid of embellishment, even of a score, for Mr Fiedler conducted from memory. A note of a few lines in the program told simply the historical association which made these concerts commemorative of the orchestra's founding, since those of next week, following more nearly upon the original dates, are to be made commemorative of Liszt.

Needs No Panegyric.

The occasion was the more appropriate for its want of ceremony and pompous display; more appropriate to the history of the orchestra and to the dignity of its present eminence. There is no need at this time for a panegyric upon the distinguished career and attainments of the organization. The loyalty and commendation of a great public expressed from week to week is to be preferred as more spontaneous and sincere and as springing deeper from the heart than any contrived and formal eulogium.

Mr Fiedler's selection of the two symphonies showed a like sense of the fitness of things. There could be no more lofty purpose of a symphony orchestra nor a more significant and vital test of its art than to publish abroad to the people year after year the symphonies of Beethoven. With him the supreme instrumental form came to its finest flower. He crystallized it into an enduring speech whose epic proportions time has only revealed the more clearly.

He is the keystone of the symphonic arch. Weighing the formulas of Haydn and Mozart, he sifted, condensed and knit them more closely; then as the vicissitudes of life deepened and purified the riches of his spirit he broadened and expanded these formulas until they could contain the serenity and the conflict of his soul.

Schubert and His Work.

The way was then prepared for Schubert, the master singer, the first great lyricist of romanticism. A true poet, gifted in the creation of spontaneous, upspringing song, he wrote for the orchestra in this fragment of two movements, as though the tones of his exquisite melodies were wedded to words, which each listener might hear to match the fancy of his own mood.

Two such symphonies are a fit program for a great orchestra dedicated to the true service of symphonic music. The addition of the Brahms supplied for closing the gayety of garnished college songs which were irrelevant, and one might say irreverent, after what had preceded. They added no new thought to the symposium of the symphony which had already been heard, but many were doubtless sent home in a cheerful mood, revived by the spirit of college days, inasfar as Brahams caught it, and not being a college man he escaped such things.

The playing of the first two numbers was what the orchestra has taught this audience to expect. There was the firm and well-knit ensemble and the familiar euphony of tone. To this there was an understanding and appreciation of the spirit of Beethoven and of the Schubert.

It matters little whether the "Eroica" was written for Napoleon or for some imaginary hero. It is an epic which a legendary character rather than an ambitious human might inspire. The funeral march is among the finest pages of classic literature. Its length seemed excessive yesterday for Mr Fiedler's tempo was more deliberate than denoted by the score. Beethoven sounded a warning against the length of this symphony and said it should be placed at the beginning of a program.

The "Unfinished" Symphony.

The "Unfinished" symphony was memorable for its clarity and beauty of tone. There were haunting passages, as those for oboe and clarinet in the second theme of the slow movement which were sung with exquisite vocal art.

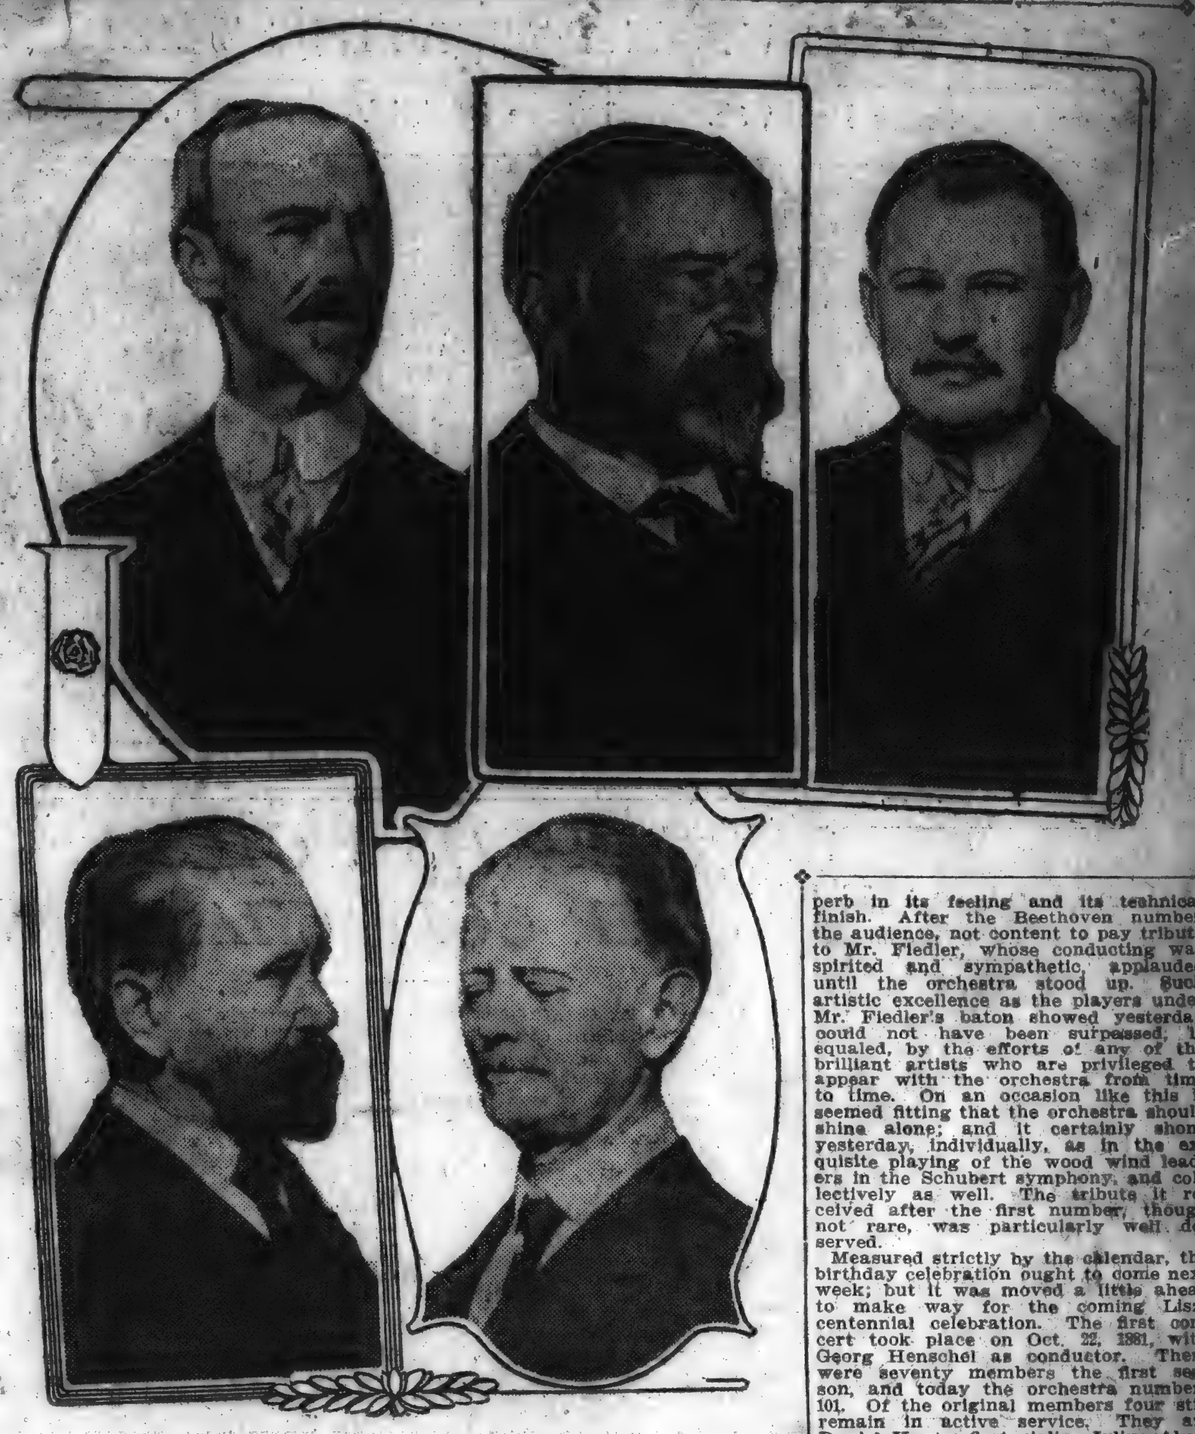
Mr Fiedler conducted with authority, and for the greater part with musical feeling. There was prolonged and insistent applause after the Beethoven which Mr Fiedler shared with the members of the orchestra standing.

Congressman Gardner Receives.

GLOUCESTER, Oct 13—Congressman Gardner held a reception this afternoon at the rooms of the Master Mariners' Association, several hundred citizens being present. There were no speech-making but informal talks between the guest and the citizens. An orchestra furnished music and a buffet lunch was served.

JOURNAL—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1911

Symphony Founder; Four Original Members Still With It



Above, at left—Paul Fox. At right—Daniel Kurtz. In center—Maj. Henry L. Higginson. Below, at left—C. Schumann. At right—Julius Akeroyd.

SYMPHONY OBSERVES 30TH ANNIVERSARY

With yesterday's matinee performance the Boston Symphony Orchestra began the observance of its thirtieth birthday. Nothing came to light yesterday beyond the special program, without soloist, designed to show the orchestra's perhaps unparalleled virtuosity. Something more may show itself tonight, but if anything be on foot it is being kept in the dark.

The anniversary program is as follows

Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven
Unfinished Symphony in B minor.... Schubert
Academic Festival Overture..... Brahms

The performance yesterday was superb in its feeling and its technical finish. After the Beethoven number the audience, not content to pay tribute to Mr. Fiedler, whose conducting was spirited and sympathetic, applauded until the orchestra stood up. Such artistic excellence as the players under Mr. Fiedler's baton showed yesterday could not have been surpassed, if equaled, by the efforts of any of the brilliant artists who are privileged to appear with the orchestra from time to time. On an occasion like this it seemed fitting that the orchestra should shine alone; and it certainly shone yesterday, individually, as in the exquisite playing of the wood wind leaders in the Schubert symphony, and collectively as well. The tribute it received after the first number, though not rare, was particularly well deserved.

Measured strictly by the calendar, the birthday celebration ought to come next week; but it was moved a little ahead to make way for the coming Liszt centennial celebration. The first concert took place on Oct. 22, 1881, with Georg Henschel as conductor. There were seventy members the first season, and today the orchestra numbers 101. Of the original members four still remain in active service. They are Daniel Kuntz, first violin; Julius Akeroyd, second violin; Paul Fox, flute, and C. Schumann, horn. Mr. Akeroyd originally sat among the first violins. These pioneers, who are not all veterans in appearance, were present yesterday, and they celebrated the occasion by posing for a picture for The Journal.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder of the orchestra and its chief patron ever since, remained in the background yesterday, but there is a possibility that he may be persuaded to come to the front tonight. The beautiful bronze bust of him put in place a week ago in the main lobby of the hall is naturally attracting a great deal of attention at this time.

It has already been stated in The Journal that the appeal for support or "sympathy" which Maj. Higginson made to the public in April, 1881, was handsomely responded to from the first. Yesterday there was another striking demonstration of this unfailing substantial interest in the splendid work of the orchestra. The line of people waiting for seats in the second balcony extended from Symphony Hall up Huntington avenue as far as the Boston Opera House, and the seats on sale were disposed of long before the demand for them could be satisfied.

In the early days the Friday afternoon performance was properly termed a rehearsal. The conductor did not hesitate to stop and start over again. But though the matinees still go under the name of "rehearsals," they are full-fledged concerts in every sense of the term. Indeed, now and then the afternoon performance goes even better than the evening performance that comes on Saturday.

Yesterday, at any rate, the orchestra played in a fashion that challenged comparison with its finest work in the past, and that means with the best playing ever heard here or anywhere else.

JOURNAL—SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1911.

LISZT PROGRAM FOR SYMPHONY

Conductor Fiedler Plans to Commemorate Birthday of Composer.

The entire musical world has been celebrating the centenary and the birth of Franz Liszt, and it is but natural that Mr. Fiedler, who is an enthusiastic admirer of the great Hungarian, should have the Symphony Orchestra take its share in the commemoration. It so fortunately happens that the third concert of the current season falls within a day of Liszt's birthday, for he was born at Oedenburg, Hungary, Oct. 22, 1811. Mr. Fiedler has arranged a program devoted entirely to his works, and Rudolph Ganz, the distinguished pianist, has been engaged as the soloist.

The chief item on the program is the Dante Symphony. This work, curiously enough, has been performed but twice in our Symphony concerts, both times under Gericke. Its first performance was on Feb. 26 and 27, 1886, and its last on May 1 and 2, 1903. For a large part of the patrons of the Symphony concerts the symphony will be a novelty. In the second part, the "Paradiso," voices are used, as in the finale of the Faust Symphony; but in this only women's voices are employed. The orchestra will have the association of sixty voices from the Musical Art Club of Boston, of which Berta Schoff is president.

The Dante Symphony will be preceded by the famous symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," and these two will make the first part of the program. The second part will comprise the concerto for piano in E flat major, No. 1, and the symphonic poem, "Tasso's Lamento e Trionfo."

TRAVELER, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1911.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The entire musical world unites the coming week in celebrating the centenary of Franz Liszt. Conductor Fiedler of the Symphony Orchestra, who is an enthusiastic admirer of the great Hungarian, is to unite in this world celebration of Liszt and give a programme devoted entirely to his work. The date of the Saturday concert falls on Oct. 21, only one day earlier than the date of the Liszt centenary. Rudolph Ganz, the distinguished pianist, is to be the soloist on this occasion. The chief number on the programme is the Dante Symphony, which has been performed by the orchestra but twice previously. This symphony is in two parts: part one, the "Inferno," part second contains the "Purgatorio" and the "Paradise." The symphony will be preceded by the symphonic poem "Les Preludes." The concerto for piano in E flat major, No. 1, and the symphonic poem "Tasso's Lamente e trionfo" constitute the second part of the programme.

Cambridge Symphony Concert.

The first symphony concert in Cambridge will be given on next Thursday evening in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be Rudolph Ganz. The programme comprises the "Egmont" overture, Tschaikowsy's "pathetic symphony," Liszt's concerto for pianoforte in A major and Liszt's symphonic poem "Tasso."

[37]

SYMPHONY'S 30TH ANNIVERSARY

Commemorated by Program of the Classics.

Fiedler and Orchestra Receive Pronounced Applause.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is observing in its concerts this week the 30th anniversary of its first public rehearsal and concert, which were held Oct 21 and 22, 1881. The program performed yesterday afternoon, and to be repeated tonight, consists of two symphonies, the "Eroica" of Beethoven and Schubert's "Unfinished," and the "Academic" overture of Brahms.

Yesterday there was no attempt made at festal display, or at any obvious or unusual means of denoting a public celebration, such as the decoration of the platform by garlands, inscriptions, or even of some symbol or sign of the span of years. The conductor's desk was devoid of embellishment, even of a score, for Mr Fiedler conducted from memory. A note of a few lines in the program told simply the historical association which made these concerts commemorative of the orchestra's founding, since those of next week, following more nearly upon the original dates, are to be made commemorative of Liszt.

Needs No Panegyric.

The occasion was the more appropriate for its want of ceremony and pompous display; more appropriate to the history of the orchestra and to the dignity of its present eminence. There is no need at this time for a panegyric upon the distinguished career and attainments of the organization. The loyalty and commendation of a great public expressed from week to week is to be preferred as more spontaneous and sincere and as springing deeper from the heart than any contrived and formal eulogium.

Mr Fiedler's selection of the two symphonies showed a like sense of the fitness of things. There could be no more lofty purpose of a symphony orchestra nor a more significant and vital test of its art than to publish abroad to the people year after year the symphonies of Beethoven. With him the supreme instrumental form came to its finest flower. He crystallized it into an enduring speech whose epic proportions time has only revealed the more clearly.

He is the keystone of the symphonic arch. Weighing the formulas of Haydn and Mozart, he sifted, condensed and knit them more closely; then as the vicissitudes of life deepened and purified the riches of his spirit he broadened and expanded these formulas until they could contain the serenity and the conflict of his soul.

Schubert and His Work.

The way was then prepared for Schubert, the master singer, the first great lyricist of romanticism. A true poet, gifted in the creation of spontaneous, upspringing song, he wrote for the orchestra in this fragment of two movements, as though the tones of his exquisite melodies were wedded to words, which each listener might hear to match the fancy of his own mood.

Two such symphonies are a fit program for a great orchestra dedicated to the true service of symphonic music. The addition of the Brahms supplied for closing the gayety of garnished college songs which were irrelevant, and one might say irreverent, after what had preceded. They added no new thought to the symposium of the symphony which had already been heard, but many were doubtless sent home in a cheerful mood, revived by the spirit of college days, inscfar as Brahams caught it, and not being a college man he escaped such things.

The playing of the first two numbers was what the orchestra has taught this audience to expect. There was the firm and well-knit ensemble and the familiar euphony of tone. To this there was an understanding and appreciation of the spirit of Beethoven and of the Schubert.

It matters little whether the "Eroica" was written for Napoleon or for some imaginary hero. It is an epic which a legendary character rather than an ambitious human might inspire. The funeral march is among the finest pages of classic literature. Its length seemed excessive yesterday for Mr Fiedler's tempo was more deliberate than denoted by the score. Beethoven sounded a warning against the length of this symphony and said it should be placed at the beginning of a program.

The "Unfinished" Symphony.

The "Unfinished" symphony was memorable for its clarity and beauty of tone. There were haunting passages, as those for oboe and clarinet in the second theme of the slow movement which were sung with exquisite vocal art.

Mr Fiedler conducted with authority, and for the greater part with musical feeling. There was prolonged and insistent applause after the Beethoven which Mr Fiedler shared with the members of the orchestra standing.

Congressman Gardner Receives.

GLOUCESTER, Oct 13—Congressman Gardner held a reception this afternoon at the rooms of the Master Mariners' Association, several hundred citizens being present. There were no speech-making but informal talks between the guest and the citizens. An orchestra furnished music and a buffet lunch was served.

LISZT PROGRAM FOR SYMPHONY

Conductor Fiedler Plans to Commemorate Birthday of Composer.

The entire musical world has been celebrating the centenary and the birth of Franz Liszt, and it is but natural that Mr. Fiedler, who is an enthusiastic admirer of the great Hungarian, should have the Symphony Orchestra take its share in the commemoration. It so fortunately happens that the third concert of the current season falls within a day of Liszt's birthday, for he was born at Oedenburg, Hungary, Oct. 22, 1811. Mr. Fiedler has arranged a program devoted entirely to his works, and Rudolph Ganz, the distinguished pianist, has been engaged as the soloist.

The chief item on the program is the Dante Symphony. This work, curiously enough, has been performed but twice in our Symphony concerts, both times under Gericke. Its first performance was on Feb. 26 and 27, 1886, and its last on May 1 and 2, 1903. For a large part of the patrons of the Symphony concerts the symphony will be a novelty. In the second part, the "Paradiso," voices are used, as in the finale of the Faust Symphony; but in this only women's voices are employed. The orchestra will have the association of sixty voices from the Musical Art Club of Boston, of which Berta Schoff is president.

The Dante Symphony will be preceded by the famous symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," and these two will make the first part of the program. The second part will comprise the concerto for piano in E flat major, No. 1, and the symphonic poem, "Tasso's Lamento e Trionfo."

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The entire musical world unites the coming week in celebrating the centenary of Franz Liszt. Conductor Fiedler of the Symphony Orchestra, who is an enthusiastic admirer of the great Hungarian, is to unite in this world celebration of Liszt and give a programme devoted entirely to his work. The date of the Saturday concert falls on Oct. 21, only one day earlier than the date of the Liszt centenary. Rudolph Ganz, the distinguished pianist, is to be the soloist on this occasion. The chief number on the programme is the Dante Symphony, which has been performed by the orchestra but twice previously. This symphony is in two parts: part one, the "Inferno," part second contains the "Purgatorio" and the "Paradise." The symphony will be preceded by the symphonic poem "Les Preludes." The concerto for piano in E flat major, No. 1, and the symphonic poem "Tasso's Lamente e trionfo" constitute the second part of the programme.

Cambridge Symphony Concert.

The first symphony concert in Cambridge will be given on next Thursday evening in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be Rudolph Ganz. The programme comprises the "Egmont" overture, Tschaikowsy's "pathetic symphony," Liszt's concerto for pianoforte in A major and Liszt's symphonic poem "Tasso."

Symphony Founder; Four Original Members Still With It

Above, at left—Paul Fox. At right—Daniel Kurtz. In center—Maj. Henry L. Higginson. Below, at left—C. Schumann. At right—Julius Akeroyd.

SYMPHONY OBSERVES 30TH ANNIVERSARY

With yesterday's matinee performance the Boston Symphony Orchestra began the observance of its thirtieth birthday. Nothing came to light yesterday beyond the special program, without soloist, designed to show the orchestra's perhaps unparalleled virtuosity. Something more may show itself tonight, but if anything be on foot it is being kept in the dark.

The anniversary program is as follows

Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven
Unfinished Symphony in B minor.... Schubert
Academic Festival Overture..... Brahms

The performance yesterday was superb in its feeling and its technical finish. After the Beethoven number the audience, not content to pay tribute to Mr. Fiedler, whose conducting was spirited and sympathetic, applauded until the orchestra stood up. Such artistic excellence as the players under Mr. Fiedler's baton showed yesterday could not have been surpassed, if equaled, by the efforts of any of the brilliant artists who are privileged to appear with the orchestra from time to time. On an occasion like this it seemed fitting that the orchestra should shine alone; and it certainly shone yesterday, individually, as in the exquisite playing of the wood wind leaders in the Schubert symphony, and collectively as well. The tribute it received after the first number, though not rare, was particularly well deserved.

Measured strictly by the calendar, the birthday celebration ought to come next week; but it was moved a little ahead to make way for the coming Liszt centennial celebration. The first concert took place on Oct. 22, 1881, with Georg Henschel as conductor. There were seventy members the first season, and today the orchestra numbers 101. Of the original members four still remain in active service. They are Daniel Kuntz, first violin; Julius Akeroyd, second violin; Paul Fox, flute, and C. Schumann, horn. Mr. Akeroyd originally sat among the first violins. These pioneers, who are not all veterans in appearance, were present yesterday, and they celebrated the occasion by posing for a picture for The Journal.

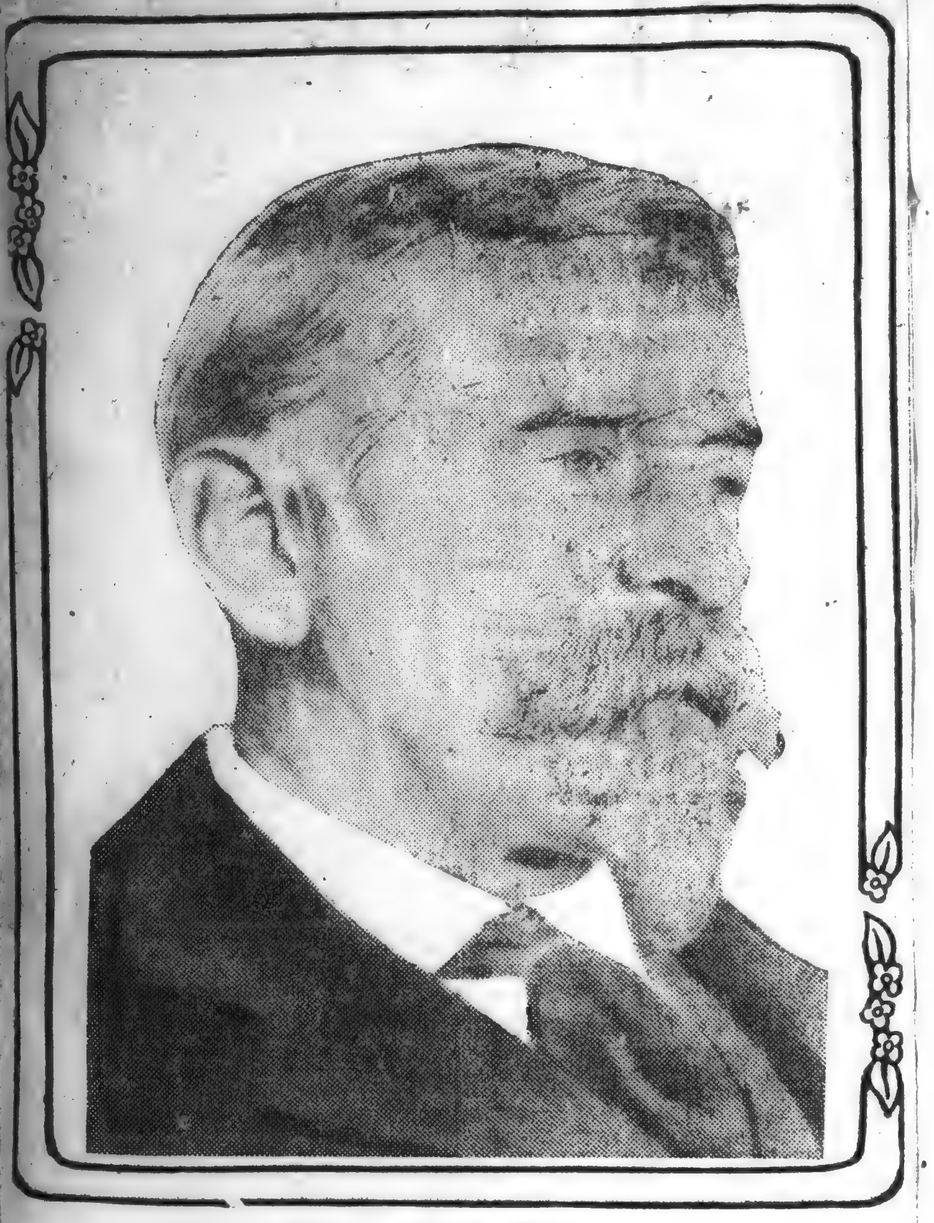
Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder of the orchestra and its chief patron ever since, remained in the background yesterday, but there is a possibility that he may be persuaded to come to the front tonight. The beautiful bronze bust of him put in place a week ago in the main lobby of the hall is naturally attracting a great deal of attention at this time.

It has already been stated in The Journal that the appeal for support or "sympathy" which Maj. Higginson made to the public in April, 1881, was handsomely responded to from the first. Yesterday there was another striking demonstration of this unfailing substantial interest in the splendid work of the orchestra. The line of people waiting for seats in the second balcony extended from Symphony Hall up Huntington avenue as far as the Boston Opera House, and the seats on sale were disposed of long before the demand for them could be satisfied.

In the early days the Friday afternoon performance was properly termed a rehearsal. The conductor did not hesitate to stop and start over again. But though the matinees still go under the name of "rehearsals," they are full-fledged concerts in every sense of the term. Indeed, now and then the afternoon performance goes even better than the evening performance that comes on Saturday.

Yesterday, at any rate, the orchestra played in a fashion that challenged comparison with its finest work in the past, and that means with the best playing ever heard here or anywhere else.

Symphony Orchestra Gives Its 30th Anniversary Concert



Maj. Henry L. Higginson.

Dignified Program of Favorite Works Chosen to Mark the Occasion.

INFLUENCE OF ORGANIZATION

By PHILIP HALE.

The second public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Fiedler conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Symphony No. 3, "Eroica".....Beethoven
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"..
Schubert
Academic Festival overture.....Brahms

This program was in commemoration of the 30th anniversary of the first public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Oct. 21, 1881.

It was in April, 1881, that Maj. Henry L. Higginson made a public announcement "in the interest of good music." Acknowledging the work done in the past by the Harvard Musical Association and the Handel and Haydn Society, gratefully admitting that he was about to build on the foundations they had laid, he modestly stated his purpose of establishing a full and permanent orchestra, which should offer "the best music at low prices." Referring to such orchestras in European cities, he said that their essential condition was their stability, "whereas ours are necessarily shifting and uncertain, because we are dependent upon musicians whose work and time are largely pledged elsewhere."

This permanent orchestra in Boston was to number 60 selected musicians. The concerts were to be 20 in number. "Besides the concerts there will be a public rehearsal on one afternoon of every week, with single tickets at 25 cents, and no reserved seats."

The orchestra of 1911-12 numbers 98 men, not including the organist and the librarian. At the end of last season the orchestra had given 2914 concerts. Its reputation is not confined to the United States, for it is ranked as among the few great orchestras of the world, an orchestra surpassed by none.

Desiring to benefit his fellow-townsmen by giving them the opportunity of hearing the best music at a reasonable price, cheerfully maintaining the orchestra as well as founding it, Maj. Higginson built for himself an abiding monument without thought of his own glory. Kings, princes, dukes have supported orchestras for their own idle pleasure. The city of Boston boasts of the orchestra which it owes to the more than princely generosity of a citizen.

Mr. Henschel was the first conductor and his three years of service stirred up strife. An admirable program maker, he had not then the experience and the authority to shape the orchestra into a perfect organization. The newspapers of 1881-84 published articles, critical and controversial, that now seem unnecessarily severe, when they were not flippant, childishly ungrateful and futile. Maj. Higginson was neither discouraged nor disgusted. He engaged Mr. Gericke, a strict disciplinarian, a musician of the highest ideals, who had an unusually fine sense of proportion and euphony. Mr. Gericke, bringing players from Europe, created the virtuoso orchestra, that ever since he left Boston in 1889 has excited the admiration of the general public and the most fastidious judges. His first term was for five years.

Mr. Nikisch followed. His experience had been almost wholly in the opera house and at times in the concert hall his operatic training and his flaming temperament led him into extravagant readings of the classics. When he first heard the orchestra he wondered at its technical proficiency and exclaimed: "All I have to do now is to poetize." Nor was this said arrogantly; for Mr. Nikisch was born, not only a leader of men, but with a highly poetic, warmly imaginative nature. He returned to Europe in the spring of 1893.

Emil Paur was his successor, an earnest conductor, enthusiastic, desirous of broad and o'erpowering effects, too often impatient in matters of detail. He was especially successful as an interpreter of work by Strauss and Tschaikowsky. After Mr. Paur's term of five years Mr. Gericke came back. While he was still a rigid disciplinarian, his taste had broadened during his absence; welcomed compositions of the modern romantic school, nor did he shrink from acquainting the audiences with music of the latter day Frenchmen. While the orchestra under him reached the highest standard of technical proficiency, it was allowed a greater elasticity of expression, a warmer eloquence than when he ruled here for the first time.

Dr. Muck succeeded Mr. Gericke, who, serving eight years, had conducted in all for 13 seasons. Mr. Fiedler came to Boston in the fall of 1908. What the two have accomplished is fresh in the minds of all.

These conductors all contributed in one way or another to the reputation of the orchestra and aided Maj. Higginson in the maintenance of his purpose. The musicians who played under them should not be forgotten. Not only the concert masters, but many virtuosos, now dead or no longer connected with the organization, influenced their associates, capable and emulous. There have been very few orchestras in the world that contained so many virtuoso musicians, not craving individual display, but united in the desire for a perfect ensemble. And this is true of the Boston Symphony orchestra as it stands today.

The history of this organization, when it comes to be written in full, will be largely a history of the development of music in this country since 1881. The catalogue of the works produced; the list of illustrious singers, pianists, violinists, who have assisted at these concerts; the record of judicious encouragement given to local composers, native born or adopted; these, too, are a part of the glorious work.

It was meet and proper to celebrate this anniversary with quiet dignity, without thought of ceremony or parade. This anniversary should lead us all to reflection and a lively sense of gratitude. May the day never come when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be taken as a matter of course by the people of this city!

MARY GARDEN IN CONCERT HERE

Operatic Soprano Will Be Heard in Symphony Hall Next Sunday.

Miss Mary Garden, the famous operatic soprano, who is making a short concert tour of this country prior to the opening of the opera season in Philadelphia, will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Oct. 22, at 8 o'clock, assisted by Paul Morenzo, tenor, Herbert Sachs-Hirsch, pianist, Andre Benoit, accompanist.

Miss Garden is known on two continents as a woman and operatic singer of pronounced individuality. She has created many parts and has stamped some of them as her own. Thus it is difficult to imagine another Melisande in Debussy's opera. There will naturally be curiosity to hear her in concert. Paul Morenzo, a Spaniard, has been successful in Italy, France and Germany. He is said to have a tenor voice of excellent quality. Mr. Sachs-Hirsch is only 17 years old. His parents wisely refused to allow him to appear as a child prodigy.

MISS MARY GARDEN

GERALDINE FARRAR COMING

The only opportunity that the many admirers of Geraldine Farrar in Boston will have to hear her in this city during the current season will be at a concert to be given in Symphony Hall, under the management of Charlss A. Ellis, on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 4. Miss Farrar is now in the West on a concert tour, under the direction of Mr. Ellis, and she will appear in Boston just before she begins her winter's work at the Metropolitan Opera House. She is not announced as a soloist with the Symphony orchestra at all this year. With Miss Farrar is associated Edmond Clement, the French tenor, who last year made so many warm friends and admirers in this city. They will have the assistance of 50 musicians from the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Gustav Strube as conductor. With Miss Farrar and Mr. Clement, as accompanist, is Frank La Forge.

The program will be announced in due time. Mail orders for seats in the mean time may be sent to Symphony Hall.

LISZT CENTENARY

The entire musical world has been celebrating the centenary of Franz Liszt. It is only natural that Mr. Fiedler, an enthusiastic admirer of the Hungarian, should have the Symphony orchestra share in the commemoration. The third concert falls within a day of Liszt's birthday, Oct. 22. Mr. Fiedler has arranged a program devoted entirely to his works, and Rudolph Ganz will be pianist.

The chief piece on the program is the "Dante" Symphony, which has been performed only twice at the Symphony concerts, both times under Mr. Gericke. The first performance was on Feb. 26 and 27, 1886, and the last on May 1 and 2, 1903. For many of the patrons the Symphony will be absolutely a novelty, and for all it will have the savor of novelty. The full title of the work is Symphony After Dante's "Divina Commedia." The Symphony is in two parts: the first is the "Inferno"; the second is "Purgatorio," with the "Magnificat" for female voices. The orchestra will have the aid of 60 voices from the Musical Art Club.

The "Dante" Symphony will be preceded by the symphonic poem "Les Preludes." The second part will include the piano concerto in E-flat major No. 1, and the symphonic poem "Tasso's Lament and Triumph."

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN

Mr. de Pachmann will give his first recital in Boston this season in Jordan Hall Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21, at 3 o'clock. Famous the world over, incomparable, unique as an interpreter of Chopin, he is not, as some might think, only a specialist. The program of the recital should be of great interest. It includes [illegible] Sonata, op. 39, flat major, Rondo; Liszt, Second Polonaise, Waldesrauschen, Etude de Concert No. 2, Mazurka Brilliante, A major, Hungarian Rhapsody No. 9 (Carnival at Pest) and Tarantella, "Venezia e Napoli." Tickets are now to be had at Symphony Hall.

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE

The first Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given next Thursday evening in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be that excellent pianist, Rudolph Ganz, who will then make his first appearance in this part of the country in several years. The program will include Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony,

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IS LEADER OF ALL

Only American Institution to Which Artistic Europe Is Willing to Bow.

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra completed its thirtieth year with the concerts of Friday and Saturday. To the present generation it is so much a part of the city that it is hard to believe our fathers knew it not.

It is the only artistic institution of America to which Europe bows. It is the glory of Boston and the envy of the other American cities who hear it infrequently.

The great European orchestras have been building their reputations for long periods. The Boston Orchestra became great at a leap. Inside of five years after its organization by George Henschel in 1881, it had become one of the finest orchestras in the world.

Boston's indebtedness to Major Henry F. Higginson is greater than she can repay. His audacity in founding an orchestra of such proportions in a city which was known only as the most musical of an unmusical nation was sufficiently astonishing, but it was outstripped by his dashing raid upon the great orchestras of Europe and the carrying off of their best men.

Gave a Wholesale Order.

His methods were typically American. He was impatient of waiting during the years necessary to develop the musicians at hand. He said:

"Go to Europe and bring back the best players who can be found, no matter how much you have to pay for them."

Musical Europe is grateful to Major Higginson. He caused the pay of performers in its best orchestras to be raised so that a musical career was not so altruistic as of yore.

When Gericke came in 1884 he found a band which contained some of the best players of Europe. He continued to strengthen the orchestra, and each season returned with several new men who had won fame in the older countries.

With such a membership it didn't take long to get magnificent results. By the time the Symphony Orchestra was five years old it was giving performances worthy of the best German traditions.

Much is written about conductors and we hear grave discussions as to whether Henschel, Gericke, Nikisch, Paur, Muck or Fiedler have benefited the orchestra most.

Major Higginson's liberality was more beneficial than any of these. He provided men whose skill was so great that no music ever written was too difficult for them to perform. With such men no conductor could fail.

New York orchestras have at times imported conductors whose brilliancy and reputation outshone the incumbent of the Boston desk, but these conductors never approached the results achieved from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Paur Was Popular.

Emil Paur was successful in Boston. For several seasons in the early nineties he pleased concert-goers. Yet when he left Boston he proved unequal to the task of building good orchestras in Pittsburg and elsewhere.

There is no orchestra in the United States which contains scores of proven virtuosi in its ranks, but they are to be found in the Boston Symphony. That is why it plays better than any other American orchestra.

For more than a quarter of a century it has been undisputed as the premier orchestra of America. During most of this time it has been considered among the two or three great orchestras in the world.

Here in Boston we think it superior to the Berlin Philharmonic, the Leipsic orchestra or the Conservatory orchestra of Paris. It would be too much to expect Europe to acknowledge this, but we have a right to feel proud that our orchestra is considered the equal of these wonderful bands.

Such men as Witek, Noack, Strube, Ferir, Schroeder, Warnke, Maquarre, Longy, Lenox, Sautet, Sadony, Mueller, Kloepfel and many others are known not only in the United States but in Europe as great musicians, composers and performers, but they play in the band of the Boston Symphony with many others equally skillful.

Credit to Gericke.

To Gericke belongs the honor of selecting this wonderful orchestra of virtuosi and welding them into one grand instrument.

The conductors who have followed him have found a perfect organization to which nothing was impossible.

Arthur Nikisch is perhaps the greatest name in European conductorship to-day but his reputation was given him by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which he did marvelous things.

Dr. Muck came from Berlin on leave of absence from the Kaiser. He left Boston with deep regret, and has strained every nerve to be released from Berlin so that he can return here and wield the finest instrument he has ever found.

Max Fiedler, whose four years of service end this season, will go back to Europe a great man because he has come from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In Hamburg, recently, when the city officials were entertaining a delegation of Boston business men and the Germans and Americans were sitting together at the banquet table, the burgomaster of Hamburg said: "Hamburg has reason to be proud, for has she not given a conductor to the Boston Symphony Orchestra?"

Major Higginson Is Happy.

During many years a hideous deficit gaped at the end of each Symphony season. And the orchestra manager went sadly to Major Higginson. The founder of the orchestra made no complaint, asked no questions. He drew his checkbook and made up the deficit.

The present prosperity of the orchestra, both home and abroad, for it now gives half a hundred concerts in other cities, has relieved Major Higginson of the drain of the deficit, to the delight of everybody connected with the orchestra. But he is most pleased because his belief in the musical possibilities of the American people is finally justified.

MISS FARRAR IN SYMPHONY.

Singer's Only Appearance Here This Season on November 4.

The only opportunity that the many friends and admirers of Geraldine Farrar in Boston will have to hear her in this city during the current season will be at a concert to be given in Symphony Hall under the management of C. A. Ellis, on Saturday afternoon, November 4. Miss Farrar is now in the West on a concert tour, and she appears in Boston just before she begins her Winter's work at the Metropolitan Opera House. With Miss Farrar is associated Edmond Clement, the French tenor. They will have the asistance of fifty musicians from the Symphony Orchestra, with Gustav Strube as conductor.

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY.

First Concert Thursday Evening at Sanders Theatre.

The first symphony concert in Cambridge will be given on next Thursday evening in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be that admirable pianist, Rudolph Ganz, who makes his first appearance in this part of the country in several years. The program comprises the overture "Egmont" of Beethoven, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony, Liszt's concerto for pianoforte in A-Major and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso."

MONITOR

OCTOBER 14, 1911

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY CONCERT

The first Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given on Thursday evening in Sanders theater, Harvard University. The soloist will be Rudolph Ganz, the pianist, who makes his first appearance in this part of the country in several years. The program comprises the favorite "Egmont" overture, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony. Liszt's concerto for pianoforte in A-major and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso."

The subscription books for the Cambridge concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra are open now for renewals at Kent's University book store in Harvard square. The unclaimed seats will be placed on sale for the season at this place this morning. The concerts, as usual, will be eight in number on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, the dates being Oct. 19, Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 18, Feb. 8, Feb. 29, March 28 and April 25. The solo artists are Rudolph Ganz, Lilla Ormond, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann, Katherine Goodson and Heinrich Warnke.

COMING TO STEINERT HALL

Mr. and Mrs. David Mannes of New York for their fourth season in Boston announce two sonata recitals for violin and piano in Steinert hall, the first one on the evening of Dec. 14, and the second will be an innovation for chamber concerts in Boston, as it will be on the afternoon of Jan. 23.

Mme. Antoinette Cantareuil, a graduate of the Paris Conservatoire, will give a song recital in Steinert hall on Oct. 25.

Leo Ornstein, a young Russian pianist, will make his first appearance before a Boston public in Steinert hall on Oct. 31. He played for the first time in America in New York toward the end of last season, his playing of the Rubinstein concerto with the Volpe Symphony orchestra attracting much attention. His teacher, Mrs. Tapper, is well known to Bostonians.

Parker J. Phinn, a baritone, native of Scotland but American by rearing, will give his first public song recital on Nov. 3. Mr. Phinn is a pupil of the late Bimboni, of Max Heinrich and of White of Boston. The program will consist of German lieder, a few Italian songs, the prologue from "Pagliacci," and other songs. Mrs. Charles A. White will play the accompaniments.

Frank E. Morse announces a vocal concert for Nov. 16.

Charles Anthony, a pianist of Boston, will give a recital in Steinert hall on the afternoon of Oct. 24 at 3 o'clock, when he will render the following program: Prelude, Courtlandt Palmer; sonata, op. 90, first movement, Beethoven; intermezzo, rhapsody, op. 119, Brahms; "Vogel als Prophet," symphonic studies, Schumann; prelude, No. 25, Chopin; "Reflets dans l'eau," from the "Children's Corner," Debussy; "Bourree Fantastique," Chabrier.

* * *

LISZT CENTENARY PROGRAM

Mr. Fiedler, who is an admirer of Franz Liszt has arranged for the Symphony orchestra to share in the commemoration of the centenary of the great Hungarian. As the third concert of the current season falls within a day of Liszt's birthday, Oct. 22, 1811, Mr. Fiedler has arranged a program devoted entirely to his works and Rudolph Ganz, the pianist has been engaged as the soloist. The chief item on the program is the Dante symphony.

This work has been performed but twice in Symphony concerts, both times under Gericke. Its first performance was on Feb. 26 and 27, 1886, and its last on May 1 and 2, 1903. For a large part of the patrons of the Symphony concerts the symphony will be a novelty. The full title of the work is "Symphony After Dante's 'Divina Commedia.'" It is in two parts; the first is the "Inferno"; the second part is divided into the "Purgatorio" and the "Paradiso."

In the finale of the second part, the "Paradiso," the human voice is used as in the finale of the Faust Symphony; but in this women's voices are employed instead of men's for the "Benedictus." In this the orchestra will have the association of 60 voices from the Musical Art Club of Boston, of which Miss Berta Schoff is president.

The Dante symphony will be preceded by the symphonic poem "Les Preludes," and these two will make the first part of the program. The second part of the program will comprise the concerto for piano in E-flat, major No. 1, and the symphonic poem "Tasso's Lamento e trionfo."

Liszt Centenary to Be Observed—People's Choral Union Plans—Recitals to Come

At the Symphony concerts of this week the Liszt centenary (Liszt was born Oct. 22, 1811, and died July 31, 1886) will be observed in a significant fashion by the first performance in some years in this city of the great "Faust" symphony, with female chorus in the last part; of the symphonic poem, "Tasso's Lament and Triumph," of which certain pages strikingly foreshadow Cesar Franck; of the tone-poem, "Les Preludes," perhaps the most commonplace of all the tone-poems and of objectionable popularity; and the E-flat piano concerto, to be played by Rudolph Ganz.

This programme ought to revive thought of Liszt, his puissant personality and his picturesque career, his heroic achievements in the cause of art and his real position in musical history.

The last matter is all too debatable ground. It is hardly nearer solution today than it was in 1886, and it certainly offers one of the most interesting problems in the evolution of the musical art. And in the meantime, all opposition to the contrary, Liszt is performed more frequently every year, and seems to have been gaining the popular ear more generally with the passing of each season. Nor is it given to many men to be discussed so actively for a quarter of a century after death. If this discussion were coming to an end there would be nothing; but it seems to be only at the beginning. Every decade brings to our notice some new and surprisingly modern quality in Liszt's music which unfolds into singularly significant relation to the most advanced tendencies of the day.

Liszt as a youth landed in Paris when that city was a raging hotbed of ideas. Hugo was there, as well as Berlioz, Chopin, Lamartine, George Sand, Delacroix, Rossini, de Musset and dozens of other men of talent or genius who were adding to the flame. Liszt had appreciation and capacity for every one of them. There was no man so abreast and so at one with the spirit of his times and perhaps no man who advanced so eagerly along the paths opened by the Romanticists.

There were great composers in those days—Chopin, Berlioz, Schumann, Wagner, to name four of the biggest luminaries, and Liszt learned from them all. Think of a man who practised exercises in finger dexterity with Czerny and 9 years later commenced to write Hungarian Rhapsodies! Liszt heard Paganini play and then became the greatest pianist, according to report, that the world has ever seen. He listened to Chopin and incorporated many of Chopin's most original and characteristic effects in his transcendental piano studies, where they became only a part of the great tonal frescoes that he projected with an instrument that had been thought wholly impossible for such purposes. But Liszt had wisdom enough to know that for him the distinguished poetry of Chopin and the delicate aroma that clings about Chopin's smallest thing was not.

The Hungarian Rhapsodies, the B-minor piano sonata and the other later piano pieces have their origin of style far more in the principles imparted by the academic Czerny than in the works of the proudest of all musical poets. But how transformed! Think of Czerny's figures and then read for a single instance the second page of the piano concerto in A-major and wonder at the incredible magic of it. Liszt, after all, had a good deal that was entirely his own to say.

He encountered Berlioz, color-mad, and Wagner, the dramatic symphonist, and he created a form which embodied all the giddy dreams of Berlioz, and offered the means for an artistic unity in musical composition that was never attained by Wagner in his lifetime. The charge of plagiarism has been brought against Liszt, and, latterly, against Wagner, in harmonic matters. But who was the plagiarist? They say that Wagner helped himself with both hands to the ideas of Liszt. We know that Liszt was one of the first of Europe's great musicians to render the scores of Wagner. And who was it, please, who first got the idea of the leading motive of a theme which should represent some definite idea and serve to bind together a musical composition? Wagner has secured the credit for this, but how about Berlioz, with the Fantastic Symphony, in 1828? For that matter, how about Beethoven and the Fifth Symphony? It seems better to assume that the whole triumvirate, Liszt, Wagner and Berlioz, upon whose shoulders rest the firmament of modern music, were so affected by the Zeitgeist that they commenced simultaneously to express in tones the new potency that was at work, and that is only now unfolding itself in its fulness, in the scores of such men as Strauss and the late Mahler. Mahler, indeed, could never have existed without Berlioz, and Strauss tumbles from the laps of Wagner and Liszt.

And yet of all these men, it is questionable whether Liszt, possibly the least endowed with the musically creative talent of any of them, did not see the farthest. We must, also, in considering Liszt's development as a composer, remember the tremendous odds against which his spirit had to strive to achieve worthy expression. Liszt was born a virtuoso. From the earliest possible age he was adored by all the world. He had only to go on as a public hero, and forget all that he ever dreamed about the straight and narrow path of eternal truth. And it is easier for a camel to crawl through the eye of a needle than for such a temperament, under such circumstances, to put the leash on himself and his ideas and work great statues for posterity. One of these statues is, unquestionably, the Dante symphony. We are accustomed to think of Liszt

Liszt passed through his [illegible] oats period and kept sight of [illegible] shining very far away. With [illegible] of a true artist, and in spite of [illegible] vanity and his weakness for the [illegible] of the flesh, he followed this goal, [illegible] proaching constantly nearer to it, to [illegible] day of his death. In the last days at Weimar he was playing the music of Franck and others considered madmen at the time. Yet he could also find room in himself to encourage such a composer as Edward Grieg, and, in spite of Brahms' falling asleep to the tune of the B minor sonata, accelerate that retarded classic along his absolute musical path. Which is of the most value, the capacity for concrete achievement or the mystic vision? We think the latter. Liszt achieved much, as a composer as well as a virtuoso, but he wrote very little that can bear cold analysis and come out unscathed, with the title, "Masterpiece." The quality that holds us, one is prone to believe, is the dream of Tomorrow that shines out, here or there, and often amid pages of musical waste, in the majority of the compositions of his second and third "periods."

The "Dante" symphony was first performed in Boston under Wilhelm Gericke, Feb. 26 and 27, 1886, and again under Gericke May 1 and 2, 1903. Mr. Gericke, who shied at much modern music—and what is more modern than this symphony?—had for the work a wholesome respect. For a large part of the Symphony audiences next week it will be an absolute novelty. Its two parts consist of the "Inferno," wherein Liszt is as picturesque as ever was Berlioz in his allusion to the curse over the door of hell, and his motto for the trombones, and the last part, where he strives to reproduce the spirit of the "Purgatorio" and the "Paradiso." It is in this movement that the women's voices are employed instead of the male voices for the Benedictus. The Symphony Orchestra will have the assistance of 60 members of the Musical Art Club of Boston, Miss Bertha Schoff, president.

From STANDARD UNION,

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date OCT 13 1911

Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with an interesting bunch of news about his plans for the coming season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, almost next door neighbor to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements, and now the first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called "The Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive and the second meditative. Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fiedler, who was much impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of its being performed this year. He gave in Boston yesterday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new comedy overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Brooklyn ot one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score, of his "Cigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year. The soloists will be Mme. Homer, Mme. Schuman-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Miss Bessie Collier. The five concerts this season will fall as usual on Friday evenings in the Academy of Music, the dates being Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23 and March 22.

Estal 1884

From EVENING POST,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 18

Alma Gluck.

Few singers have so rapidly and so deservedly risen to fame as Alma Gluck. Her career is briefly sketched in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's programme book as follows:

Mme. Alma Gluck—her maiden name was Reba Fierson—was born at Bucharest, Rumania, May 11, 1886. She came to New York in her sixth year, and has since dwelt there. She studied with Buzzi-Peccia. Her first appearance on the stage was as Sophie in "Werther" at the New Theatre, New York, November 16, 1909. Her first appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House was as the Blessed Spirit in "Orfeo," December 23, 1909. She has also taken these parts at the Metropolitan: Leonora in "Stradella," Nedda in "Pagliacci," Freia in "Rheingold," Mimi in "La Bohème" (first appearance in this part at the Metropolitan March 20, 1911), Marguerite in "Faust," Lucinde in "Armide," Jane in "Germania," Esmeralda in "Verkaufte Braut," Gertrude in "Maestro di Cappella." Mme. Gluck sang for the first time in Boston as Mimi in Puccini's "La Bohème," performed by the Metropolitan Company at the Boston Opera House, March 30, 1910. She sang the solo soprano music in Verdi's "Requiem," performed by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall, February 12, 1911.

How much Mme. Gluck is in demand now is made obvious by the following dates: She sang with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra October 3, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston October 6 and 7, and at the Newark (N. J.) Auditorium October 9. This week Miss Gluck is in Maine to sing at the music festivals in Bangor and Portland. She appears as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra October 20 and 21. Then she goes to Milwaukee for a concert, October 24, and sings at the Peabody Institute, in Baltimore, October 27.

Est 1884

[39]

AMERICAN—SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1911.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IS LEADER OF ALL

Only American Institution to Which Artistic Europe Is Willing to Bow.

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra completed its thirtieth year with the concerts of Friday and Saturday. To the present generation it is so much a part of the city that it is hard to believe our fathers knew it not.

It is the only artistic institution of America to which Europe bows. It is the glory of Boston and the envy of the other American cities who hear it infrequently.

The great European orchestras have been building their reputations for long periods. The Boston Orchestra became great at a leap. Inside of five years after its organization by George Henschel in 1881, it had become one of the finest orchestras in the world.

Boston's indebtedness to Major Henry F. Higginson is greater than she can repay. His audacity in founding an orchestra of such proportions in a city which was known only as the most musical of an unmusical nation was sufficiently astonishing, but it was outstripped by his dashing raid upon the great orchestras of Europe and the carrying off of their best men.

Gave a Wholesale Order.

His methods were typically American. He was impatient of waiting during the years necessary to develop the musicians at hand. He said:

"Go to Europe and bring back the best players who can be found, no matter how much you have to pay for them."

Musical Europe is grateful to Major Higginson. He caused the pay of performers in its best orchestras to be raised so that a musical career was not so altruistic as of yore.

When Gericke came in 1884 he found a band which contained some of the best players of Europe. He continued to strengthen the orchestra, and each season returned with several new men who had won fame in the older countries.

With such a membership it didn't take long to get magnificent results. By the time the Symphony Orchestra was five years old it was giving performances worthy of the best German traditions.

Much is written about conductors and we hear grave discussions as to whether Henschel, Gericke, Nikisch, Paur, Muck or Fiedler have benefited the orchestra most.

Major Higginson's liberality was more beneficial than any of these. He provided men whose skill was so great that no music ever written was too difficult for them to perform. With such men no conductor could fail.

New York orchestras have at times imported conductors whose brilliancy and reputation outshone the incumbent of the Boston desk, but these conductors never approached the results achieved from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Paur Was Popular.

Emil Paur was successful in Boston. For several seasons in the early nineties he pleased concert-goers. Yet when he left Boston he proved unequal to the task of building good orchestras in Pittsburg and elsewhere.

There is no orchestra in the United States which contains scores of proven virtuosi in its ranks, but they are to be found in the Boston Symphony. That is why it plays better than any other American orchestra.

For more than a quarter of a century it has been undisputed as the premier orchestra of America. During most of this time it has been considered among the two or three great orchestras in the world.

Here in Boston we think it superior to the Berlin Philharmonic, the Leipsic orchestra or the Conservatory orchestra of Paris. It would be too much to expect Europe to acknowledge this, but we have a right to feel proud that our orchestra is considered the equal of these wonderful bands.

Such men as Witek, Noack, Strube, Ferir, Schroeder, Warnke, Maquarre, Longy, Lenox, Sautet, Sadony, Mueller, Kloepfel and many others are known not only in the United States but in Europe as great musicians, composers and performers, but they play in the band of the Boston Symphony with many others equally skillful.

Credit to Gericke.

To Gericke belongs the honor of selecting this wonderful orchestra of virtuosi and welding them into one grand instrument.

The conductors who have followed him have found a perfect organization to which nothing was impossible.

Arthur Nikisch is perhaps the greatest name in European conductorship to-day but his reputation was given him by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which he did marvelous things.

Dr. Muck came from Berlin on leave of absence from the Kaiser. He left Boston with deep regret, and has strained every nerve to be released from Berlin so that he can return here and wield the finest instrument he has ever found.

Max Fiedler, whose four years of service end this season, will go back to Europe a great man because he has come from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In Hamburg, recently, when the city officials were entertaining a delegation of Boston business men and the Germans and Americans were sitting together at the banquet table, the burgomaster of Hamburg said: "Hamburg has reason to be proud, for has she not given a conductor to the Boston Symphony Orchestra?"

Major Higginson Is Happy.

During many years a hideous deficit gaped at the end of each Symphony season. And the orchestra manager went sadly to Major Higginson. The founder of the orchestra made no complaint, asked no questions. He drew his checkbook and made up the deficit.

The present prosperity of the orchestra, both home and abroad, for it now gives half a hundred concerts in other cities, has relieved Major Higginson of the drain of the deficit, to the delight of everybody connected with the orchestra. But he is most pleased because his belief in the musical possibilities of the American people is finally justified.

MISS FARRAR IN SYMPHONY

Singer's Only Appearance Here This Season on November 4.

The only opportunity that the many friends and admirers of Geraldine Farrar in Boston will have to hear her in this city during the current season will be at a concert to be given in Symphony Hall under the management of C. A. Ellis, on Saturday afternoon, November 4. Miss Farrar is now in the West on a concert tour, and she appears in Boston just before she begins her Winter's work at the Metropolitan Opera House. With Miss Farrar is associated Edmond Clement, the French tenor. They will have the assistance of fifty musicians from the Symphony Orchestra, with Gustav Strube as conductor.

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY.

First Concert Thursday Evening at Sanders Theatre.

The first symphony concert in Cambridge will be given on next Thursday evening in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be that admirable pianist, Rudolph Ganz, who makes his first appearance in this part of the country in several years. The program comprises the overture "Egmont" of Beethoven, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony, Liszt's concerto for pianoforte in A-Major and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso."

MONITOR

OCTOBER 14, 1911

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY CONCERT

The first Symphony concert in Cambridge will be given on Thursday evening in Sanders theater, Harvard University. The soloist will be Rudolph Ganz, the pianist, who makes his first appearance in this part of the country in several years. The program comprises the favorite "Egmont" overture, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony. Liszt's concerto for pianoforte in A-major and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso."

The subscription books for the Cambridge concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra are open now for renewals at Kent's University book store in Harvard square. The unclaimed seats will be placed on sale for the season at this place this morning. The concerts, as usual, will be eight in number on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, the dates being Oct. 19, Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 18, Feb. 8, Feb. 29, March 28 and April 25. The solo artists are Rudolph Ganz, Lilla Ormond, Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann, Katherine Goodson and Heinrich Warnke.

COMING TO STEINERT HALL

Mr. and Mrs. David Mannes of New York for their fourth season in Boston announce two sonata recitals for violin and piano in Steinert hall, the first one on the evening of Dec. 14, and the second will be an innovation for chamber concerts in Boston, as it will be on the afternoon of Jan. 23.

Mme. Antoinette Cantareuil, a graduate of the Paris Conservatoire, will give a song recital in Steinert hall on Oct. 25.

Leo Ornstein, a young Russian pianist, will make his first appearance before a Boston public in Steinert hall on Oct. 31. He played for the first time in America in New York toward the end of last season, his playing of the Rubinstein concerto with the Volpe Symphony orchestra attracting much attention. His teacher, Mrs. Tapper, is well known to Bostonians.

Parker J. Phinn, a baritone, native of Scotland but American by rearing, will give his first public song recital on Nov. 3. Mr. Phinn is a pupil of the late Bimboni, of Max Heinrich and of White of Boston. The program will consist of German lieder, a few Italian songs, the prologue from "Pagliacci," and other songs. Mrs. Charles A. White will play the accompaniments.

Frank E. Morse announces a vocal concert for Nov. 16.

Charles Anthony, a pianist of Boston, will give a recital in Steinert hall on the afternoon of Oct. 24 at 3 o'clock, when he will render the following program: Prelude, Courtlandt Palmer; sonata, op. 90, first movement, Beethoven; intermezzo, rhapsody, op. 119, Brahms; "Vogel als Prophet," symphonic studies, Schumann; prelude, No. 25, Chopin; "Reflets dans l'eau," from the "Children's Corner," Debussy; "Bourree Fantastique," Chabrier.

* * *

LISZT CENTENARY PROGRAM

Mr. Fiedler, who is an admirer of Franz Liszt has arranged for the Symphony orchestra to share in the commemoration of the centenary of the great Hungarian. As the third concert of the current season falls within a day of Liszt's birthday, Oct. 22, 1811, Mr. Fiedler has arranged a program devoted entirely to his works and Rudolph Ganz, the pianist has been engaged as the soloist. The chief item on the program is the Dante symphony.

This work has been performed but twice in Symphony concerts, both times under Gericke. Its first performance was on Feb. 26 and 27, 1886, and its last on May 1 and 2, 1903. For a large part of the patrons of the Symphony concerts the symphony will be a novelty. The full title of the work is "Symphony After Dante's 'Divina Commedia.'" It is in two parts; the first is the "Inferno"; the second part is divided into the "Purgatorio" and the "Paradiso."

In the finale of the second part, the "Paradiso," the human voice is used as in the finale of the Faust Symphony; but in this women's voices are employed instead of men's for the "Benedictus." In this the orchestra will have the association of 60 voices from the Musical Art Club of Boston, of which Miss Berta Schoff is president.

The Dante symphony will be preceded by the symphonic poem "Les Preludes," and these two will make the first part of the program. The second part of the program will comprise the concerto for piano in E-flat, major No. 1, and the symphonic poem "Tasso's Lamento e trionfo."

POST, OCTOBER 15, 1911

Liszt Centenary to Be Observed—People's Choral Union Plans—Recitals to Come

At the Symphony concerts of this week the Liszt centenary (Liszt was born Oct. 22, 1811, and died July 31, 1886) will be observed in a significant fashion by the first performance in some years in this city of the great "Faust" symphony, with female chorus in the last part; of the symphonic poem, "Tasso's Lament and Triumph," of which certain pages strikingly foreshadow Cesar Franck; of the tone-poem, "Les Preludes," perhaps the most commonplace of all the tone-poems and of objectionable popularity; and the E-flat piano concerto, to be played by Rudolph Ganz.

This programme ought to revive thought of Liszt, his puissant personality and his picturesque career, his heroic achievements in the cause of art and his real position in musical history.

The last matter is all too debatable ground. It is hardly nearer solution to-day than it was in 1886, and it certainly offers one of the most interesting problems in the evolution of the musical art. And in the meantime, all opposition to the contrary, Liszt is performed more frequently every year, and seems to have been gaining the popular ear more generally with the passing of each season. Nor is it given to many men to be discussed so actively for a quarter of a century after death. If this discussion were coming to an end there would be nothing; but it seems to be only at the beginning. Every decade brings to our notice some new and surprisingly modern quality in Liszt's music which unfolds into singularly significant relation to the most advanced tendencies of the day.

Liszt as a youth landed in Paris when that city was a raging hotbed of ideas. Hugo was there, as well as Berlioz, Chopin, Lamartine, George Sand, Delacroix, Rossini, de Musset and dozens of other men of talent or genius who were adding to the flame. Liszt had appreciation and capacity for every one of them. There was no man so abreast and so at one with the spirit of his times and perhaps no man who advanced so eagerly along the paths opened by the Romanticists.

There were great composers in those days—Chopin, Berlioz, Schumann, Wagner, to name four of the biggest luminaries, and Liszt learned from them all. Think of a man who practised exercises in finger dexterity with Czerny and 9 years later commenced to write Hungarian Rhapsodies! Liszt heard Paganini play and then became the greatest pianist, according to report, that the world has ever seen. He listened to Chopin and incorporated many of Chopin's most original and characteristic effects in his transcendental piano studies, where they became only a part of the great tonal frescoes that he projected with an instrument that had been thought wholly impossible for such purposes. But Liszt had wisdom enough to know that for him the distinguished poetry of Chopin and the delicate aroma that clings about Chopin's smallest thing was not.

The Hungarian Rhapsodies, the B-minor piano sonata and the other later piano pieces have their origin of style far more in the principles imparted by the academic Czerny than in the works of the proudest of all musical poets. But how transformed! Think of Czerny's figures and then read for a single instance the second page of the piano concerto in A-major and wonder at the incredible magic of it. Liszt, after all, had a good deal that was entirely his own to say.

He encountered Berlioz, color-mad, and Wagner, the dramatic symphonist, and he created a form which embodied all the giddy dreams of Berlioz, and offered the means for an artistic unity in musical composition that was never attained by Wagner in his lifetime. The charge of plagiarism has been brought against Liszt, and, latterly, against Wagner, in harmonic matters. But who was the plagiarist? They say that Wagner helped himself with both hands to the ideas of Liszt. We know that Liszt was one of the first of Europe's great musicians to render the scores of Wagner. And who was it, please, who first got the idea of the leading motive of a theme which should represent some definite idea and serve to bind together a musical composition? Wagner has secured the credit for this, but how about Berlioz, with the Fantastic Symphony, in 1823? For that matter, how about Beethoven and the Fifth Symphony? It seems better to assume that the whole triumvirate, Liszt, Wagner and Berlioz, upon whose shoulders rest the firmament of modern music, were so affected by the Zeitgeist that they commenced simultaneously to express in tones the new potency that was at work, and that is only now unfolding itself in its fulness, in the scores of such men as Strauss and the late Mahler. Mahler, indeed, could never have existed without Berlioz, and Strauss tumbles from the laps of Wagner and Liszt.

And yet of all these men, it is questionable whether Liszt, possibly the least endowed with the musically creative talent of any of them, did not see the farthest. We must, also, in considering Liszt's development as a composer, remember the tremendous odds against which his spirit had to strive to achieve worthy expression. Liszt was born a virtuoso. From the earliest possible age he was adored by all the world. He had only to go on as a public hero, and forget all that he ever dreamed about the straight and narrow path of eternal truth. And it is easier for a camel to crawl through the eye of a needle than for such a temperament, under such circumstances, to put the leash on himself and his ideas and work great statues for posterity. One of these statues is, unquestionably, the Dante symphony. We are accustomed to think of Liszt as one of the most fortunate of musicians, but we must realize that [illegible] such as this would have proved the doing of any lesser man.

Liszt passed through his musical wheat oats period and kept sight of his goal shining very far away. With the faith of a true artist, and in spite of his own vanity and his weakness for the things of the flesh, he followed this goal, approaching constantly nearer to it, to the day of his death. In the last days at Weimar he was playing the music of Franck and others considered madmen at the time. Yet he could also find room in himself to encourage such a composer as Edward Grieg, and, in spite of Brahms' falling asleep to the tune of the B minor sonata, accelerate that retarded classic along his absolute musical path. Which is of the most value, the capacity for concrete achievement or the mystic vision? We think the latter. Liszt achieved much, as a composer as well as a virtuoso, but he wrote very little that can bear cold analysis and come out, unscathed, with the title, "Masterpiece." The quality that holds us, one is prone to believe, is the dream of Tomorrow that shines out, here or there, and often amid pages of musical waste, in the majority of the compositions of his second and third "periods."

The "Dante" symphony was first performed in Boston under Wilhelm Gericke, Feb. 26 and 27, 1886, and again under Gericke May 1 and 2, 1903. Mr. Gericke, who shied at much modern music—and what is more modern than this symphony?—had for the work a wholesome respect. For a large part of the Symphony audiences next week it will be an absolute novelty. Its two parts consist of the "Inferno," wherein Liszt is as picturesque as ever was Berlioz in his allusion to the cursé over the door of hell, and his motto for the trombones, and the last part, where he strives to reproduce the spirit of the "Purgatorio" and the "Paradiso." It is in this movement that the women's voices are employed instead of the male voices for the Benedictus. The Symphony Orchestra will have the assistance of 60 members of the Musical Art Club of Boston, Miss Bertha Schoff, president.

From STANDARD UNION,

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date OCT 13 1911

Max Fielder, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with an interesting bunch of news about his plans for the coming season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch, in Bavaria, almost next door neighbor to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work. The work will be in two movements, and now the first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called "The Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive and the second meditative. Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fielder, who was much impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of its being performed this year. He gave in Boston yesterday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new comedy overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Brooklyn ot one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score, of his "Cigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year. The soloists will be Mme. Homer, Mme. Schuman-Heink, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Josef Hofmann and Miss Bessie Collier. The five concerts this season will fall as usual on Friday evenings in the Academy of Music, the dates being Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 23 and March 22.

Estal 1884

From EVENING POST,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 18

Est 1884

Alma Gluck.

Few singers have so rapidly and so deservedly risen to fame as Alma Gluck. Her career is briefly sketched in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's programme book as follows:

Mme. Alma Gluck—her maiden name was Reba Fierson—was born at Bucharest, Rumania, May 11, 1886. She came to New York in her sixth year, and has since dwelt there. She studied with Buzzi-Peccia. Her first appearance on the stage was as Sophie in "Werther" at the New Theatre, New York, November 16, 1909. Her first appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House was as the Blessed Spirit in "Orfeo," December 23, 1909. She has also taken these parts at the Metropolitan: Leonora in "Stradella," Nedda in "Pagliacci," Freia in "Rheingold," Mimi in "La Bohème" (first appearance in this part at the Metropolitan March 20, 1911), Marguerite in "Faust," Lucinde in "Armide," Jane in "Germania," Esmeralda in "Verkaufte Braut," Gertrude in "Maestro di Cappella." Mme. Gluck sang for the first time in Boston as Mimi in Puccini's "La Bohème," performed by the Metropolitan Company at the Boston Opera House, March 30, 1910. She sang the solo soprano music in Verdi's "Requiem," performed by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall, February 12, 1911.

How much Mme. Gluck is in demand now is made obvious by the following dates: She sang with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra October 3, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston October 6 and 7, and at the Newark (N. J.) Auditorium October 9. This week Miss Gluck is in Maine to sing at the music festivals in Bangor and Portland. She appears as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra October 20 and 21. Then she goes to Milwaukee for a concert, October 24, and sings at the Peabody Institute, in Baltimore, October 27.

[39]

GLOBE—OCTOBER 15, 1911.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Symphony to Observe Liszt Centenary—"Divine Comedy" To Be Revived.

DELORES GALLI,
Prima Ballerina of Boston Opera Company, Soon to Arrive Here.

The Symphony Orchestra will observe at its concerts of Friday and Saturday the anniversary of Liszt's birth, which falls on Sunday, Oct 22. It is a century since Liszt was born; a quarter of a century since he died. Rarely does a man become known until his obituary is written, and the world begins to fit together his life and his works. They sometimes fit badly.

Twenty-five years is comparatively a short time to trace out the profile of a man's life and to measure its shadow. According to the eyes and mind which saw and comprehended, that of Liszt has been drawn in various aspects—with the halo of a god, the mantle and sword of a Don Juan, the cowl of a priest and the grand manner of a worshiped and feted virtuoso. His was not a personality to be easily encompassed. It was these multiplied and wide-ranging vicissitudes of his life, imprinted upon his keen nervous organism and kindling the fires of his imagination, that gave the thought and purpose of his musical speech a greater value than its phraseology always possessed.

To Liszt music was a transcript of life, as it was to be known through nature, poetry, legend, pictures, art, his fellow men, and every concept of a rich and varied experience. For him the confines of the pure symphonic formula were too restricted for the portrayal of emotional thought. He would have his tone poems for orchestra as intimate and spontaneous a creation of feeling as his marvelous improvisations at the piano. If at times they become prolix and overloaded, it is not due to his lack of mastery over the orchestra, more than to the very wealth of his imagery.

The ardent and fiery nature of the Magyar blazed through and illuminated his every effort. To repair the defects of his early education, his thirst for general knowledge of life and of men led him into orgies of omnivorous reading. When 21 he wrote Pierre Wolf: "Provided I do not go mad, you will find an artist in me. Homer, the Bible, Plato, Locke, Byron, Hugo, Lamartine, Chateaubriand, Beethovn, Bach, Mozart and Weber are all around me." He was practicing the piano meanwhile from four to five hours a day.

His youthful mind was stirred by the revolutionary spirit, fomenting in the State, in literature and music. He espoused it with fervor, for it was an expression of himself. His individuality made his genius as a pianist unrivalled and supreme, even after Thalberg had lured the ears of Paris for a time; but it denied him recognition as a creator of music. During the last 39 years of his life, he played the piano in public not more than half a dozen times. It was as a composer that he thirsted for recognition.

Eclipsed by Wagner.

To supply the temporal needs of Wagner and to bring his works to the light, he had contributed from a purse never closed, and had labored as a conductor at Weimar with tireless zeal, with love, and finally against the intrigues of a jealous intendant. The Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein was of keener vision to foresee and resent the rise of Wagner to the overshadowing of her knight of the Altenburg than was Liszt himself. With his characteristic generosity of heart, he would say, "I can wait."

Liszt had smiled when Schindler, whose cards bore the inscription "friend of Beethoven," said that, because of his rubato, his playing of the master's concertos was "the superlative of all aberrations of taste, a crime against the divine art." Indeed, even his playing was accepted by gradations. There was always one last reservation. At first he was a good, all-round pianist, but could not play Beethoven. Then his Beethoven was accepted, but the transcriptions were not. When he wrote original pieces, hearing was denied them but granted to the transcriptions. The symphonic poems and the choral works had to pass in review in similar fashion.

As a pianist, his influence must live by the attempts in words of those who heard to portray and describe. As a composer for the piano he extended and broadened the resources of the instrument without surpassing the limitations of a technic necessarily inferior to his own. Much that he wrote for piano is unquestionably mediocre, but there are songs to be treasured, and there are transcriptions which will not cease to add new lustre to the art of the lyre, as those of the 42 Schubert songs which, while embellishing the original, keep and illumine, rather than obscure or debase its spirit.

Dante's "Divine Comedy."

This week the symphonic poem after Dante's "Divine Comedy" is to be heard for the first time since 1903, and for the second since Mr Gericke played it in 1886.

Liszt began the study of Dante in 1837, while staying at Lake Como with the Countess d'Agoult. In a letter to Wagner from Weimar, June 2, 1855, he takes notice that his friend is reading Dante and adds: "I on my part shall furnish a kind of commentary to his work. For a long time I have had in my head a Dante symphony, and in the course of this year it is to be finished. There are to be three movements, Hell, Purgatory and Paradise, the first two purely instrumental, the last with chorus." He concludes by promising the dedication to Wagner, who replies with a prolix and solemn plea for a Buddhist Nirvana in place of Dante's Paradise, the illogical sequence of which in his mind, made the title of the whole a literally truthful one.

In a letter to Wagner written sometime between July 12 and 20, the next year, Liszt says the score was finished the day preceding, and that it takes a little less than an hour in performance.

Borodine, in a letter to his wife from Jena, July 18, 1877, told of his visit to Liszt at Weimar, and of his request for an autograph when Liszt took a sheet of music paper and wrote the last phrases of his "Divine Comedy," which "was not yet published."

On Friday and Saturday Rudolph Ganz will make his reappearance as soloist. He has chosen the first concerto in E flat. A long line of pianists have played it at these concerts, Paderewski, Rosenthal, de Pachman, Mark Hambourg, Samaroff, George Proctor, Germaine Schnitzer, Aus der Ohe, Mr Ganz once previously himself, and others.

The other orchestral numbers will be "The Preludes" and the symphonic poem, "Tasso."

From EVENING MAIL,

Address New York City.

Date

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony orchestra, which has just celebrated its thirtieth year of existence, in Boston, made its programme to include the numbers which have been played the most frequently during that period. These were the Beethoven "Eroica" symphony, which had its forty-seventh and forty-eighth performances, and the "Unfinished" of Schubert played for the forty-third and forty-fourth times. The programme this week will be devoted to Liszt in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary. Mr. Fiedler will present the Dante Symphony, which has not been given in eight years. Rudolf Ganz will be the soloist, and he will play the E flat concerto. At the first New York concert Thursday evening, Mr. Fiedler will give "Also Sprach Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss, and Mme. Schumann-Heink will be the soloist.

ork, 1884

From HALL NEW YORK City

Address

Date OCT 14 1911

Symphony Hall in Boston has been the scene of a gala music festival during the last week, which marked the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the two concerts presented were the 2,918th and 2,919th in the history of the redoubtable organization. The program at both performances was made up of the two symphonies that have been most frequently played in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the "Eroica" of Beethoven, which had its forty-seventh and forty-eighth performances, and the "Unfinished of Schubert," which was played for its forty-third and forty-fourth time, these performances counting the rehearsals and concerts.

With the first rendition in eight years of the great "Dante Symphony" of Franz Liszt, the centenary of the birth of the Hungarian composer will be observed next week. The other works on the program are "Les Preludes" and the "Lamento e trionfo di Tasso," with Rudolph Ganz as soloist.

Max Fiedler announces that he plans to give at the first concert in apin Plummer.

New York, on Thursday evening, November 9, the tone poem, "Zarathustra," of Richard Strauss.

rk, 1884

From TRIBUNE

Address New York City.

Date

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

This last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been celebrating in Boston its thirtieth birthday. The programme was made up of the two symphonies that have been most frequently played in Boston by the orchestra. The Liszt centenary will be celebrated this week with the first performance in eight years of the Dante Symphony. The other works on the programme are "Les Preludes" and "Tasso's Lamento e Trionfo," with Rudolph Ganz as soloist. Mr. Fiedler announces that he plans to give at the first concert in New York, on Thursday evening, November 9, the "Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss.

Establis

From

Address

Date

This last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been celebrating in Boston its thirtieth birthday, the concerts being the 2,918th and 2,919th that it has given since it was organized. The programme was made up of the two symphonies that have been most frequently played in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The symphonies were the "Eroica" of Beethoven, which was having its forty-seventh and forty-eighth performances, and the "Unfinished" of Schubert, which was being played for its forty-third and forty-fourth time, these performances counting the rehearsals and concerts.

The coming week will be celebrated the Liszt centenary, with the first performance in eight years of the "Dante Symphony." The other works on the programme are "Les Preludes" and "Tasso's Lamento e trionfo," with Rudolph Ganz as soloist.

Mr. Fiedler announces that he plans to give at the first concert in New York on Thursday evening, November 9, the "Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss.

, 1884

From

Address

Date OCT 7

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The season ticket holders of last year's Boston Symphony concerts in Infantry hall have until next Saturday, Oct. 14, in which to renew their subscriptions and hold their old seats. The general sale of season tickets will open on Monday morning, Oct. 16. All applications for renewals should be made to C. A. Ellis, care of Steinert & Sons, 327 Westminster street, and the sale will be at Steinert's store.

The concerts will be five in number and will fall on Tuesday evenings, Oct. 24, Nov. 21, Jan. 2, Feb. 13, and April 2. The soloists will be Mme. Schumann-Heink, whose only appearance here it will be this season; Miss Lilla Ormond, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Miss Katharine Goodson and Mr. Josef Hofmann. This will be Mr. Hofmann's only appearance here also.

Max Fiedler, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, reached Boston a week ago with an interesting bunch of news about his plans for the coming season. He has been spending the summer at Garmisch in Bavaria, almost next door neighbor to Richard Strauss, of whom he has seen a great deal. His one great disappointment is that he will not be able to play, as he had expected, the new symphony on which Strauss is at work.

The work will be in two movements, and now the first movement is in the form of a pencil sketch, while the second movement is entirely in the composer's mind. It will probably be called "The Alps Symphony," the first movement being descriptive, the second meditative. Strauss played over the first movement for Mr. Fiedler, who was much impressed with it, but there is absolutely no chance of its being performed this year.

He gave in Boston yesterday the first performance anywhere of Reger's new "Comedy" overture, the score and parts of which he brought over with him fresh from the printers. This is likely to be heard in Providence at one of the early concerts. Debussy has also promised to send him the first score of his "Gigue," a companion piece to "Rondes de Printemps" and "Iberia," which is expected to be off the press by the first of the year.

r, 1884

E

From EVENING WORLD,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 14 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra has been celebrating at home this week its thirtieth birthday. Beethoven's "Eroica" and Schubert's "Unfinished" symphonies, the compositions most frequently played by it since Major Higginson founded the orchestra, were the principal numbers of the programme. Every New York music lover wishes many happy returns of the day to this superb band of players, which the metropolis has grown to consider as its own. The first concert of the Boston men here this season is announced for Nov. 9.

Establi 884

From NEW YORK HERALD

Address BROOKLYN EDI

Date OCT 16 1911

Renewals of subscriptions for the five philharmonic concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music this winter are coming in rapidly and the prospects are favorable for even a larger subscription than last year. Holders of last year's season tickets have until next Saturday in which to renew subscriptions for the seats occupied by them last year. After this date ticket holders of last year who wish to change their seats will have the choice of such seats as are not already subscribed for. The general sale of seats will open on Friday, October 27, at four o'clock in the afternoon, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music building.

Establi 4

From EAGLE,

Address Brooklyn OCT 14 1911

Date

renewals of subscriptions for the five philharmonic concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music this winter are coming in rapidly and the prospects are favorable for even a larger subscription than last year. Holders of last year's season tickets have until next Saturday in which to renew subscriptions for the seats occupied by them last year. After this date, ticket holders of last year who wish to change their seats will have the choice of such seats as are not already subscribed for. The general sale of seats will open on Friday, October 27, at 4 p m., at the Brooklyn Academy of Music building.

Est 1884

[40]

From STANDARD UNION,

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date OCT 15 1911

Renewals of subscriptions for the five Philharmonic concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music this winter are coming in rapidly and the prospects are favorable for even a larger subscription than last year. Holders of last year's season tickets have until next Saturday in which to renew subscriptions for the seats occupied by them last year. The general sale of seats will open on Friday, Oct. 27, at 4 P. M., at the Academy of Music building.

Est 1884

From SUN,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 15 1911

This last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been celebrating in Boston its thirtieth birthday, the concerts being the two thousand nine hundred and eighteenth and nineteenth that it has given since it was organized. The programme was made up of the two symphonies that have been most frequently played in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The symphonies were the "Eroica" of Beethoven, which was having its forty-seventh and forty-eighth performances, and the "unfinished" of Schubert, which was being played for its forty-third and forty-fourth times, these performances counting the rehearsals and concerts. The coming week will be celebrated the Liszt cenrenary, with the first performance in eight years of the Dante symphony. The other works on the programme are "Les Preludes" and "Tasso's Lamento e Trionfo," with Rudolph Ganz as soloist. Mr. Fiedler announces that he plans to give at the first concert in New York on Thursday evening, November 9, the "Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss.

Es

From CITIZEN,

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date OCT 14 1911

Renewals of subscriptions for the five philharmonic concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music this winter are coming in rapidly, and the prospects are favorable for even a larger subscription than last year. Holders of last year's season tickets have until next Saturday in which to renew subscriptions for the seats occupied by them last year. After this date ticket holders of last year who wish to change their seats will have the choice of such seats as are not already subscribed for.

Es

From TIMES,

Address New York City.

Mme. Schumann-Heink sails for this country on Oct. 19, after a Summer abroad in both concert and opera performances. Mme. Schumann-Heink will open her season in this country with a tour of ten concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in November. Her New York recital will take place in Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of Tuesday, Nov. 28.

***

From TIMES,

Address New York City.

This last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been celebrating in Boston its thirtieth birthday, the concerts being the 2,918th and 2,919th that it has given since it was organized. The programme was made up of the two symphonies that have been most frequently played in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The symphonies were the "Eroica" of Beethoven, which was having its forty-seventh and forty-eighth performances, and the "Unfinished" of Schubert, which was being played for its forty-third and forty-fourth times, these performances counting the rehearsals and concerts.

The coming week will be celebrated the Liszt centenary with the first performance in eight years of the Dante Symphony. The other works on the programme are "Les Preludes" and "Tasso's Lamento e Trionfo," with Rudolph Ganz as soloist.

Mr. Fiedler announces that he plans to give at the first concert in New York on Thursday evening, Nov. 9, the "Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss.

***

From PRESS,

Address New York City.

Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra this week celebrated its thirtieth birthday. The concerts were the 2,918th and 2,919th that it has given since it was organized. The programme was made up of the two symphonies that have been most frequently played in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are "Eroica," by Beethoven, and "Unfinished," by Schubert. In the coming week the Liszt centenary will be celebrated with the first performance in eight years of the Dante Symphony. The other works on the programme are "Les Preludes" and "Tasso's Lamento e trionfo," with Rudolph Ganz as soloist. Fiedler announces that he plans to give at the first concert in New York, on Thursday evening, November 9, the "Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss.

Est 1884

From EVENING MAIL,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 14 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has just celebrated its thirtieth year of existence, in Boston, made its programme to include the numbers which have been played the most frequently during that period. These were the Beethoven "Eroica" symphony, which had its forty-seventh and forty-eighth performances, and the "Unfinished" of Schubert played for the forty-third and forty-fourth times. The programme this week will be devoted to Liszt in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary. Mr. Fiedler will present the Dante Symphony, which has not been given in eight years. Rudolf Ganz will be the soloist, and he will play the E flat concerto. At the first New York concert Thursday evening Mr. Fiedler will give "Also Sprach Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss, and Mme. Schumann-Heink will be the soloist.

Es k, 1884

From TIMES,

Address Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date OCT 14 1911

Renewals of the subscriptions for the five philharmonic concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music this winter are coming in rapidly and the prospects are favorable for even a larger subscription than last year. Holders of last year's season tickets have until next Saturday in which to renew subscriptions for the seats occupied by them last year. After this date ticket holders of last year who wish to change their seats will have the choice of such seats as are not already subscribed for. The general sale of seats will open Friday, October 27, at 4 P. M., at the Brooklyn Academy of Music building. An opportunity will be given to students in the various colleges, academies and high schools to obtain seats together as in previous years. Prices for the tickets have been placed within the reach of all, an dthe opening sale of tickets will be at the Academy of Music on the afternoon of October 17.

Esi 1884

From EVENING POST,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 14 1911

Good for Boston! It places Schubert in its symphonic affections right next to Beethoven, as will be seen from the following note received from the Hub: "This last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been celebrating in Boston its thirtieth birthday, the concerts being the two thousand nine hundred and eighteenth and nineteenth that it has given since it was organized. The programme was made up of the two symphonies that have been most frequently played in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The symphonies were the 'Eroica' of Beethoven, which was having its forty-seventh and forty-eighth performances, and the 'Unfinished' of Schubert, which was being played for its forty-third and forty-fourth time, these performances counting the rehearsals and concerts. The coming week will be celebrated the Liszt centenary, with the first performance in eight years of the Dante Symphony. The other works on the programme are 'Les Preludes' and 'Tasso's Lamento e Trionfo,' with Rudolph Ganz as soloist."

E , 1884

From STAATSZEITUNG,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 15 1911

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester veranstaltet in der laufenden Woche eine Liszt-Jubel-Feier in Boston, wobei des Meisters „Dante"-Symphonie, die „Préludes" und „Taffo" zur Wiedergabe gelangen. Für das erste New Yorker Konzert, am 9. November, verspricht Herr Fiedler u. A. Richard Strauß' „Zarathustra".

E 884

From EVENING WORLD,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 14 1911

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been celebrating at home this week its thirtieth birthday. Beethoven's "Eroica" and Schubert's "Unfinished" symphonies, the compositions most frequently played by it since Major Higginson founded the orchestra, were the principal numbers of the programme. Every New York music lover wishes many happy returns of the day to this superb band of players, which the metropolis has grown to consider as its own. The first concert of the Boston men here this season is announced for Nov. 9.

Kurt Schindler announces to members of the MacDowell Chorus the first rehearsal of Liszt's "St. Elizabeth" for Monday night at No. 108 West Fifty-fifth street.

Estab 1884

From EVENING STAR,

Address Washington, D. C.

Date OCT 15 191

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Season tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Washington will be placed on sale at Droop's music store, 13th and G streets northwest, Wednesday morning. Although a few of last year's subscribers have given up their seats, the local representative of the management has a long waiting list of new subscribers to take up what seats remain. There is every probability that the subscription will be larger than ever and that it will be difficult for non-subscribers to get seats for any of the single concerts.

The concerts will be given in the New National Theater on Tuesday afternoons at half-past 4 o'clock, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20 and March 19. The season is unusually interesting from the fact that it marks the close of Mr. Fiedler's engagement as conductor of the orchestra, which terminates next May.

The orchestra, itself, returns practically unchanged. This last week it has been celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of its first concert.

The plans for the five concerts in Washington call for the four distinguished soloists. A February concert will be devoted entirely to excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner.

At the first concert the soloist will be Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink. In December Washington will have its first opportunity to hear Kathleen Parlow, a young violinist. She is a native of the far Canadian northwest.

Josef Hofmann will be the soloist at the January concert. Mr. Hofmann had no intention of returning to America this year, but the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra persuaded him to come for fourteen concerts.

At the March concert, which will be Mr. Fiedler's farewell, the soloist will be Mme. Louise Homer of the Metropolitan Opera House.

Estab

From AMERICAN,

Address Baltimore, Md.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The general sale of subscription tickets for the Boston Symphony concerts in Baltimore will open tomorrow (Monday) morning, October 16, at Albaugh's ticket office, corner Charles and Fayette streets. The usual series of five concerts will be given on Wednesday evenings, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 21 and March 20. Mr. Fiedler will again be the conductor of the orchestra, but as his engagement ends at the close of the current season these last five concerts will be his final appearances in this city.

As is always the policy of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, efforts have been made to secure for Baltimore as brilliant soloists as are available for the season, and again these efforts have been successful. At the first concert the soloist will be Ernestine Schumann-Heink, the greatest of German contraltos. Madame Schumann-Heink appears with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a series of its concerts in the early part of November, and her appearance with the orchestra in Baltimore will be the only opportunity music lovers of this city will have to hear her.

For the December concert the management is glad to be able to announce the first appearance here of Kathleen Parlow, the young Canadian violinist.

Josef Hofmann, who was one of the soloists here last year, will again be the soloist this season, appearing at the January concert. Hofmann's success last year was so remarkable that Mr. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony, persuaded him to return to America this winter solely to play a series of fourteen concerts with the orchestra.

For the February concert no soloist has been engaged. The most successful concert of last year was the special Wagner program offered by Mr. Fiedler, and this year Mr. Fiedler has in mind another special program, probably of Russian music.

For the final concert in March, which will be Mr. Fiedler's farewell appearance here, Madame Louise Homer, the brilliant contralto of the Metropolitan Opera House, has been engaged. Madame Homer occupies among American singers the position held by Madame Schumann-Heink among the German singers, and her following is as large and as loyal.

The orchestra returns with very few changes in its membership. The orchestra has just been celebrating its 30th anniversary.

ork, 1884

[41]

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

From POST,

Address Washington, D. C.

Date OCT 15 [illegible]

Establis

SYMPHONY SEAT SALE.

Season Tickets for Boston Orchestra May Be Purchased Wednesday.

A limited number of season tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Washington will be placed on sale at Droop's music store, Thirteenth and G streets northwest, next Wednesday morning, October 18. The favor in which this organization is held in Washington shows no diminution. A few of last year's subscribers have given up their seats, and Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, the local representative of the management, has a long waiting list of new subscribers. Consequently there is every probability that the subscription will be larger than ever and that it will be still more difficult for nonsubscribers to get seats for any of the single concerts.

The concerts will again be given in the National on Tuesday afternoons at 4:30 o'clock, the dates being November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, and March 19. The season is unusually interesting from the fact that Mr. Fiedler's engagement with the orchestra terminates next May.

The plans for the five concerts in Washington call for the presence of four distinguished soloists and one concert devoted to Wagner.

At the first concert the soloist will be that most popular of contraltos, Ernestine Schumann-Heink.

In December Washington will have its first opportunity to hear Kathleen Parlow, the violinist, who in the three years of her brief career has risen to a point where she can safely endure comparison with the greatest violinists of our time. Miss Parlow, who is just out of her teens, is a native of the far Canadian Northwest. The greater part of her childhood was spent in San Francisco.

Josef Hofmann, who was heard with so much pleasure with the Boston Symphony a year ago, will be the soloist at the January concert.

At the March concert, which will be Mr. Fiedler's farewell, the soloist will be Mme. Louise Homer, of the Metropolitan Opera House, also a great favorite in Washington.

From POST,

Address Washington, D. C.

Date OCT 15 19

THE season has been opened with a keenness by the local musical societies and musicians that bodes well for one of good work and more than the usual interest. Several new clubs and choruses have been organized, including in their membership some of the leading singers and dramatic readers of the city. Those interested in a series of Sunday night concerts by the Washington Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Heinrich Hammer, may be encouraged in their efforts toward this end by learning that the Boston Symphony and New York Philarmonic orchestras probably will be the only visiting organizations this season, as a return of Herbert and his lighter programs is in doubt.

Esta 884

From EVENING STAR,

Address Baltimore, Md.

Dat

Boston Symphony Orchestra

With the possibility that the current season may be the last in some time in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to visit Baltimore, the five concerts this year take on a more than usually interesting prospect. The only question concerning this is the fact that next year there may be no suitable place in which the concerts may be given.

Es k, 1884

This year the usual five concerts will be given on Wednesday evenings in the Lyric Theater, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 21 and March 20. The general sale of season tickets opens at Albaugh's ticket office, at Charles and Fayette streets, Sunday morning, October 16.

From EVENING SUN,

Address Baltimore, Md.

Date

SYMPHONY SOLOISTS

May Be Last Season Here Of Boston Orchestra For Some Time.

With the possibility that the current season may be the last in some time in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to visit Baltimore, the five concerts this year take on a more than usual interesting prospect. This year the usual five concerts will be given on Wednesday evenings in the Lyric Theatre, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 21 and March 20.

E ork, 1884

At the first concert the soloist will be Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink. In December the soloist will be Kathleen Parlow, the young Canadian violinist. Josef Hofmann, the pianist, is to play at the January concert. At the February concert there will be no soloist, and Mr. Fiedler is planning a special program. For the last concert Mme. Louise Homer, the eminent contralto of the Metropolitan Opera House, has been engaged.

From AMERICAN,

Address Philadelphia, Pa.

Date OCT 15 19

SOLOISTS TO APPEAR HERE

Principals who will sing at concerts arranged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

MANY MUSICAL EVENTS SCHEDULED FOR WEEK

Alma Gluck, Soprano, First Soloist of Season With Philadelphia Orchestra

ACTIVITIES IN OPERA

By H. T. Craven

Alma Gluck, the gifted young soprano of the New York Metropolitan Company, will be the first soloist of the season with the Philadelphia Orchestra. This artist, although of Roumanian descent, is properly rated as an American. Her training and artistic education were obtained in New York, and it was been at the Metropolitan Opera House there that she has won her most conspicuous triumphs.

Madame Gluck sang many times in this city during the last season given by Mr. Gatti-Casazza, at the Academy of Music, and last year she appeared in "Orfeo" when that classical masterpiece was revived at Broad and Poplar streets. At the concerts which will be given by the Philadelphia Orchestra in the Academy of Music on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week Madame Gluck will be heard in the aria by Mozart, "Il Re Pastore."

Mr. Pohlig will offer for his leading orchestral feature the Symphony No. 1 in G Minor, by Kalinnow. This work was played in last season's symphony series. Its beauties won immediate acceptance, although the rather gunny quality of the score came as something of a surprise from a member of the Moscovite school of composition, usually distinguished by its insistence on the note of "weltschmerz" and melancholy. The orchestra will also be heard in Goldmark's very familiar "Sakuntala" overture and in Smetana's, sparkling overture to his charming Bohemian opera, "The Bartered Bride."

Special Opera Ballet

It was announced that a special ballet divertissement will be given at the Metropolitan Opera House in conjunction with the popular-priced English performance of "Haensel und Gretel" on the evening of November 11. This feature of the attractive double bill will be offered for Signorina Rosa Galli, the new premiere danseuse, who has been heralded as an artist of much personal comeliness. She will also lead the ballet when "Samson" is given, and she will appear first at the opera house in the opening performance of "Carmen," figuring the divertissement introduced into the fourth

The two conductors at the opera house have been busily engaged during the last week in preparations for the new operas and revivals for the coming season, which is so soon to open. Cleofonte Campanini has been working on "Samson" and also studying "I Gioielli della Madonna" (The Jewels of the Madonna), and "Cendrillon," while Alfred Szendrei has been at work on "Haensel und Gretel," "Die Walkuere," and "Lohengrin." Preparations the addition, well under way for the r "Il Nozze di Figaro" (The Marri garo), which is to be given at the inee under the baton of Mr. Ca

Mr. D general manager, is consideri uction of Verdi's exquisite o "The Mazoni Requiem," o Saturday night of the popular series. Some of the most noted singers of the company will be employed in the solo parts if this work is presented.

Artists for the company are arriving now almost daily from Europe. Minnie Saltzmann Stevens, who probably will be the Isolde when Wagner's music drama is revived, is expected in this country in a few days. Madame Stevens has been singing at Covent Garden and in the continental opera houses. Last summer she appeared in Bayreuth, where Mr. Dippel heard her and subsequently engaged her.

Newcomer Among Singers

Another newcomer who is soon to join the forces is Agnes Berry. She hails from Chicago, and all her artistic education has been derived in America. She is but 23 years old. Marcel Charlier, one of the assistant conductors for the French operas, is the last arrival at the opera house. He conducted many times here during the administration of Oscar Hammerstein, accomplishing his best results in "Louise" and "The Tales of Hoffmann."

The Boston Symphony has announced the distribution of its soloists for its twenty-seventh season in Philadelphia. At the opening concert, on November 6, in the Academy of Music, Ernestine Schumann-Heink will appear. Kathleen Parlow, the Canadian violinist, is engaged for the December concert, Josef Hofmann for January and Louise Homer for March. For the February concert Conductor Max Fiedler is preparing a special program, to be given without a soloist.

The Philadelphia Choral Society has begun rehearsals for its fifteenth season under the direction of Henry Gordon Thunder. Seventy-five new members of the organization have been already enrolled; but the society would like at least 125 more, in order to form a choral body of exceptional resources. The management has just secured the services of Nina Dimitrieff, the Russian soprano. She will sing in the production of Gounod's "Redemption," to be given in the Academy of Music on the evening of November 21. There will be 850 voices in the chorus under Mr. Thunder.

A Versatile Artist

Mme. Dimitrieff is coming to this country with recommendations from Europe. Her repertoire consists of the leading soprano roles of twenty-three operas, and her work as an interpreter of songs in French, German, English, Italian and Russian and the principal roles of all the standard oratorios stamp her as an artist of versatility. She is the daughter of a Russian general. At the age of 9 she entered the Smolna's Convent at St. Petersburg, where her voice attracted the attention of the Italian queen, Helene. She was decorated for her artistic piano playing at the convent by Maria Feodorovana, the former Russian empress, who heard her before she began her vocal studies. Madame Dimitrieff had won favor with her singing in grand opera and concerts in Europe and the United States. The Worcester Festival Committee last year selected her for the character of Marguerite in Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust." She has appeared in New York recital at Mendelssohn Hall, also as a soloist with the Russian Symphony in Carnegie Hall and the Hippodrome, and as soloist on the orchestra's transcontinental tour in about 100 concerts.

Many concerts are soon to enliven the musical atmosphere here. Ellis Clark Hammann, the pianist, will play selections from Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Chopin, Pugno, Liszt and an original "etude" at his recital to be given in Witherspoon Hall on Thursday evening of this week. The same artist will also furnish the accompaniments for Emily Stuart Kellog's song recital, which the contralto will give in Griffith Hall tomorrow evening. Miss Kellog will offer numbers by Debussy, Tosti, Schumann, Tschaikowsky and other composers. William Latta Nausslu's "Lecture Talks" on the Philadelphia Orchestra programs will begin on Thursday afternoon of this week in the New Century Drawing Rooms. On the following Thursday night John Braun, the tenor, will give his annual song recital in Witherspoon Hall, and on Tuesday night, October 31, David Bispham will be heard in Witherspoon Hall in songs and recitations to music. On Wednesday night, October 25, Walter Golz, a Philadelphia pianist, will give a recital in Griffith Hall. Mr. Golz has spent four years in study abroad. Evan Williams, the Welsh tenor, is scheduled for a song recital in Witherspoon Hall on November 2.

From

Address

Date OCT 15 19

at 8:15.

The soloist for the opening concert, on Oct. 24, will be Kathleen Parlow, the violinist, the only one of the five announced for the season who is new to this city. The programme will include the "Eroica" symphony, Saint-Saens's concerto for violin in B-flat, and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso."

The orchestra has practically the same personnel that it had last season. The viola section has two new members who take the place of older members who have retired, and an extra trombone has been added to the brass section.

* * *

Two of the [illegible] announced

Establ 4

From RECORD,

PHILADELPHIA

Address

Date OCT 15 19

The general sale of season tickets for the series of five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to give in Philadelphia in the course of the coming winter will open at No. 1119 Chestnut street tomorrow morning. The season will be the twenty-seventh successive year in which the orchestra has been coming to this city. Philadelphia, as it happens, is the first city outside of New England that the orchestra ever visited. As a matter of fact up to the spring of 1886, when the orchestra came here, it had given concerts only in Boston and some of the neighboring towns in New England. The orchestra was in its fifth year when it first came here, Gericke being in the second year of his first engagement. The orchestra itself is at the beginning of its thirty-first season. Madame Schumann-Heink will appear at the November concert, Kathleen Parlow at the December concert, Josef Hofmann in January and Louise Homer in March. For the February concert Conductor Fiedler contemplates a program of special character without a soloist. The concerts will be given in the Academy of Music, as usual, on Monday evenings, the dates being November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18. The coming season will be the third and last of Fiedler at his post, as his engagement terminates

Estab 884

[42]

From PUBLIC LEDGER
Address PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Date OCT 15 1911

SOLOISTS WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

KATHLEEN PARLOW — VIOLINIST

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK — CONTRALTO

LOUISE HOMER — CONTRALTO

JOSEPH HOFFMANN — PIANIST

For its twenty-seventh season in this city the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has secured four of the greatest artists now in this country as soloists. They are Madame Schumann-Heink, who will appear at the November concert; Miss Kathleen Parlow, who will appear at the December concert; Josef Hofmann, in January, and Madame Louise Homer, in March. For the February concert Mr. Fiedler contemplates a programme of special character without a soloist. The concerts will be given in the Academy of Music, as usual, on Monday evenings, the dates being November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18.

During the years in which this great orchestra has been making monthly visits to Philadelphia it has accomplished notable achievements in performances and has presented an illustrious list of conductors. Of the conductors it has had since its organization—and Philadelphia has been familiar with all except Georg Henschel, its first conductor—none has made more friends and warm admirers than Max Fiedler, who came to this country three years ago unheralded and unknown to all but those who follow the affairs of music closely. Mr. Fiedler's devoted enthusiasm has had not a little to do with the brilliant successes of the past three seasons. The coming season will be his last at this post, as his engagement with the Boston Symphony terminates next May.

From INQUIRER
Address PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Date OCT 15 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The general sale of season tickets for the series of five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to give in Philadelphia in the course of the coming winter will open at Miss Harris' ticket office in Heppe's piano rooms, 1119 Chestnut street, tomorrow (Monday) morning. The coming season will be the twenty-seventh successive year in which the orchestra has been coming to this city. Philadelphia, as it happens, is the first city outside of New England that the orchestra ever visited. As a matter of fact, up to the spring of 1886, when it came here, it had given concerts only in Boston and some of the neighboring towns in New England. The orchestra was in its fifth year when it first came here, Mr. Gericke being in the second year of his first engagement.

For its twenty-seventh season in Philadelphia the management has secured four of the greatest artists now in this country as soloists. They are Madame

Estabi 884

COPYRIGHT BY A DUPONT N.Y. 1909

MADAM LOUISE HOMER

Schumann Heink, who will appear at the November concert; Miss Kathleen Parlow, who will appear at the December concert; Josef Hofmann in January, and

AGNES BERRY

Madame Louise Homer in March. For the February concert Mr. Fiedler contemplates a program of special character without a soloist. The concerts will be given in the Academy of Music, as usual, on Monday evenings, the dates being November 6, December 4, Jannary 8, February 19 and March 18.

From REPUBLICAN,
Address Springfield, Mass.
Date DEC 15 1911

Reger and His New Overture.

Philip Hale thought poorly of Reger's comedy overture, which was performed a week ago in Boston by the Symphony orchestra, at its first concert of the season. Mr Fiedler brought the score with him when he returned from his vacation abroad, and the performance in Boston was the first. Mr Hale praised Reger's forbearance in the use of instruments, but little else:—

The overture is scored lightly as far as the number of instruments is concerned. The trombones are not employed, and there are two of each wood wind instrument, two trumpets and four horns; nor does Reger find it necessary to call in the aid of a large battery, for kettledrums and a triangle are the only pulsatile instruments. Notwithstanding this modesty in resources, the instrumentation is for the most part heavy, clumsy, and at times it is raw. The themes are without marked significance, nor do they gain in the elaborate contrapuntal treatment that characterizes Reger's music. There are animated pages; liveliness of tempo, and the frequent hurly-burly may persuade a hearer who is thus easily affected that the composer has really something to say and is fortunate in expression.

It would be folly to deny Reger's technical skill, but in this overture, as in the great majority of the pages of his orchestral works, he shows a lack of fine taste, hardly any appreciation of color or nuances, an inability to provide contrasts, and above all an absence of poetic spirit. This man is now nearly 40 years old, and it is high time for him to disclose an imaginative gift if he wishes to be accepted by a generation to come. Meanwhile the Regerites compare their idol to Bach and Beethoven and Reger festivals are held solemnly to the deep and abiding joy of the initiated.

Estal 84

From PRESS,
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date OCT 15 1911

The general sale of season tickets for the series of five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to give in Philadelphia in the course of the coming Winter will open at Miss Harris' ticket office, 1119 Chestnut Street, tomorrow morning.

The coming season will be the twenty-seventh successive year in which the orchestra has been coming to this city. Philadelphia, as it happens, is the first city outside of New England that the orchestra ever visited. As a matter of fact, up to the Spring of 1886, when it came here, it had given concerts only in Boston and some of the neighboring towns in New England. The orchestra was in its fifth year when it first came here, Mr. Gericke being in the second year of his first engagement.

For its twenty-seventh season in Philadelphia the management has been able to secure four of the greatest artists now in this country as soloists. They are Madame Schumann-Heink, who will appear at the November concert; Miss Kathleen Parlow, who will appear at the December concert; Josef Hofmann, in January, and Madame Louise Homer, in March. For the February concert Mr. Fiedler contemplates a program of special character without a soloist. The concerts will be given in the Academy of Music, as usual, on Monday evenings, the dates being November 6, December 4, January 8, February 19 and March 18.

Esta 1884

From

Address

Date

Josef Hofmann and his family arrived on Friday, December 22, to spend the winter at their home in Aiken, S. C. Mr. Hofmann finished his annual tour through Russia only a few days before taking the steamer at Cherbourg. His Russian tour included a number of cities on the Volga, and Hofmann and his party did all of their travelling on the steamers which ply this beautiful and famous river; but at Astrakhan, the ancient Tartar city, famed for its caviar and Armenian beauties and where the Volga empties its wealth of fish into the Caspian Sea they were forced to leave the steamers for railroad travel, owing to the forming of ice floes, which caused hours of delay. The first railroad trip was from Astrakhan to Saratof. Shortly after starting and while Hofmann was eating his dinner in the so-called dining car, which was of the American baggage car variety, painted a bright yellow with blue trimmings and lighted with two candles, he experienced the sensation of his first railroad accident. With the sudden stopping of the train it was discovered that the engine, of ancient design, had been derailed by hitting, not a cow but a herd of camel. After Hofmann sees his family settled in their winter home he will come North for the January tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, playing twice in New York city and Brooklyn, Hartford, Providence and Boston. Later he will give recitals in New York, Boston and Chicago. The date here will be Saturday afternoon, January 27, in Carnegie Hall. These are the only appearances Hofmann will make during his stay in this country.

Estab 884

From SUN,
Address Baltimore, Md.
Date

Boston Symphony.

Josef Hofmann, the pianist, will make his only appearance in Baltimore this year at the third Boston Symphony concert, which will be given at the Lyric Theatre Wednesday evening, January 10. Mr. Hofmann comes to America this season to fill a series of engagements with the Boston Symphony. After filling engagements early in January he will spend the rest of the winter at his country home in Aiken, South Caroline.

E rk, 18

From WORLD
Address New York City.
Date DEC 24 1911

The third pair of Boston Symphony concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 11 and 13 respectively. The soloist at both of these concerts will be Josef Hofmann, who comes to America this season for the sole purpose of filling a series of engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is likely at one of these concerts Mr. Hofmann will play his own fourth concerto.

E 84

From CALL
Address NEW YORK CITY
Date DEC 24 1911

Josef Hofman, the American pianist, will be the soloist of the third pair of concerts by the Boston Symphoney Orchestra, in Carnegie Hall, Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, January 11 and 13, respectively, and in the Brooklyn Academy, Friday evening, January 12. It is expected that at one of the concerts Mr. Hofmann will essay his own Fourth concerto for pianoforte and orchestra.

Estabi 84

[43]

LISZT'S "DANTE"

THE SYMPHONY TO BE REVIVED TOMORROW

The Few Performances of It Nowadays—Liszt's Preoccupation with Music Suggested by "The Divine Comedy" and Wagner's Counsels to Him—The Resulting Symphony—Its Course Through the Hell, Purgatory and Paradise—Liszt's Hints in the Score

LISZT wrote to Wagner, June 2, 1855: "Then you are reading Dante? He is excellent company for you. I, on my part, shall furnish a kind of commentary to his work. For a long time I had in my head a Dante symphony, and in the course of the year it is to be finished. There are to be three movements, 'Hell,' 'Purgatory' and 'Paradise,' the two first purely instrumental, the last with chorus.

Wagner wrote in reply a long letter from London: "That 'Hell' and 'Purgatory' will succeed I do not call into question for a moment, but as to 'Paradise' I have some doubts, which you confirm by saying that your plan includes choruses. In the Ninth Symphony the last choral movement is decidedly the weakest part, although it is historically important, because it discloses to us in a very naive manner the difficulties of a real musician who does not know how (after hell and purgatory) he is to describe paradise. About this paradise, dearest Franz, there is in reality a considerable difficulty, and he who confirms the opinion is, curiously enough, Dante himself, the singer of Paradise, which in his 'Divine Comedy' also is decidedly the weakest part. . . . But perhaps, you will succeed better, and as you are going to paint a tone picture, I might almost predict your success, for music is essentially the artistic, original image of the world. For the initiated no error is here possible. Only about the 'Paradise,' and especially about the chorus, I feel some friendly anxiety."

Liszt persisted in his design, since the idea of writing music suggested by "The Divine Comedy" had long preoccupied him. His mistress, the Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein—these were the Weimar days—encouraged him and even proposed that panoramic pictures of scenes from the "Inferno," the "Purgatorio" and the "Paradiso" should be unrolled as the music proceeded. Liszt made light of the suggestion, went his way and finished the symphony. It was performed for the first time in 1857 and Wagner, who was then in the full tide of his friendship with Liszt and who had forgotten his misgivings over Liszt's design, admired it in a flood of adjectives.

"It was a fresh hearing of Liszt's 'Dante' symphony that revived the problem where place in our art world should be allotted to a creation as brilliant as it is masterly. Shortly before I had been busy reading the 'Divine Comedy,' and again had revolved all the difficulties in judging this work which I have mentioned above; to me the tone-poem of Liszt's now appeared the creative act of a redeeming genius, freeing Dante's unspeakably pregnant intention from the inferno of his superstitions by the purifying fire of musical ideality, and setting it in the paradise of pure and blissful feeling. Here the soul of Dante's poem is shown in purest radiance. Such redeeming service even Michael Angelo could not render to his great poetic master; only after Bach and Beethoven had taught one music to wield the brush and chisel of the mighty Florentine could Dante's true redemption be achieved."

This "Dante" symphony Mr. Fiedler has made the chief item in the programme of the two concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, tomorrow and Saturday, that are to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Liszt. In his lifetime the symphony was seldom played, and nowadays it is performed still more rarely. (Only twice in thirty years has it stood on the programmes of the Symphony Concerts, and a reviewer of music in New York, of middle age and long experience, was saying only the other day that he had never heard it.) Perhaps the necessity of a chorus of women in the finale stands in the way of more frequent performance; for it is the custom to count the "Faust" symphony the more interesting and grateful of the two; while more and more the symphonic poems have come to represent Liszt in orchestral concerts. Thus, to many hearers at Symphony Hall, the "Dante" symphony will be virtually new music, but long ago the analysts and the commentators began their meticulous or their rhetorical exercise with it, and Liszt himself is not sparing in indications of its course and significance.

The formal title is a "Symphony after Dante's 'Divina Commedia.'" The score is dedicated to Wagner in extravagant terms: "As Virgil led Dante, so hast thou led me through the mysterious regions of tone-worlds drunk with life. From the depths of my heart I cry to thee: 'You are my master, my inspiration,' and dedicate in unalterable love this work." All of which, like the music itself, is in Liszt's hyperbolic, romantic vein. The required orchestra is numerous and strong, and Mr. Fiedler has assembled sixty women from the Musical Art Club for the singing of the Magnificat at the end. In a newly published, vivid and "impressionistic" book about Liszt [Franz Liszt. By James Huneker. Scribners.] Mr. Huneker sets to a description of the symphony as follows:

I. Inferno:

Through me the way is to the city dolent;
Through me the way is to eternal dole;
Through me the way among the people lost.

These words, read by Dante as he looked at the gate of hell, are thundered out by trombones, tuba, double basses; and immediately after trumpets and horn make the dreadful proclamation (C-sharp minor): "Lasciate ogni speranza, voi che entrate" ("All hope abandon, ye who enter in.") Liszt has written the Italian lines under the theme in the score. The two "Hell motives" follow, the first a descending chromatic passage in the lower strings against roll of drums the second given to bassoons and violas. There is illustration of Dante's lines that describe the "sighs, complaints, and ululations loud":

Languages diverse, horrible dialects,
Accents of anger, words of agony,
And voices high and hoarse, with sound of hands,
Made up a tumult that goes whirling on
Forever in that air forever black,
Even as the sand doth, when the whirlwind breathes.

The Allegro Frenetico, in the development, paints the madness of despair, the rage of the damned. Again there is the cry, "All hope abandon" (trumpets, horns, trombones, tuba). There is a lull in the orchestral storm. Quasi Andante. Harps, flutes, violins, a recitative of bass clarinet and two clarinets lead to the episode of Francesca da Rimini and Paolo. The English horn sings the lamentation:

There is no greater sorrow
Than to be mindful of the happy time
In misery.

Before the 'cello takes up the melody sung by the clarinet, the "Lasciate" theme is heard (muted horn, solo,) and then Andante amoroso, comes the love duet, which ends with the Lasciate motive. A harp cadenza brings the return to the first Allegro, in which the Lasciate theme in combination with the two Hell motives is developed with grotesque and infernal orchestration. There is this remark in the score: "This whole passage should be understood as sardonic, blasphemous laughter and most sharply defined as such." After the repetition of nearly the whole of the opening section of the allegro the Lasciate theme is heard triple forte.

II. Purgatorio and Magnificat. According to the composer there is the suggestion of a vessel that sails slowly over an unruffled sea. The stars begin to glitter, there is a cloudless sky, there is a mystic stillness. Over a rolling figuration is a melody first for horn, then oboe, the Meditation motive. This period is repeated a half-tone higher. The Prayer theme is sung by 'cello, then by first violin. There is illustration of the passage where the sinners call to remembrance the good that they did not accomplish. This remorseful and penitent looking back and the hope in the future inspired Liszt, according to his commentator, Richard Pohl, to a fugue based on a most complicated theme. After this fugue the gentle Prayer and Repentance melodies are heard. Harp chords establish the rhythm of the Magnificat (three flutes ascending in chords of E-flat). And now an unseen chorus of women, accompanied by harmonium, sings: "Magnificat anima mea Dominum et exultavit spiritus meus, in Deo salutari meo" ("My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour"). A solo voice, that of the Mater Gloriosa, repeats the song. A short choral passage leads to "Hosanna Halleluia." The final harmonies are supposed to illustrate the passage in the twenty-first canto of the Paradiso:

I saw rear'd up,
In color like to sun-illumined gold,
A ladder, which my ken pursued in vain.
So lofty was the summit; down whose steps
I saw the splendors in such multitude
Descending, every light in heaven, methought,
Was shed thence.

The "Hosanna" is again heard, and the symphony ends in soft harmonies with the first Magnificat theme.

A "Tribute" for Mr. Witek

Mr. Witek, the present concern-master of the Symphony Orchestra, was long the concert-master of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin. For seventeen years that ended last September, it has played for three months, at Scheveningen, the seaside spa in Holland, two miles from The Hague. The concerts are much sought by the townsfolk; they admired Mr. Witek and regretted, when he left the orchestra, a year ago, that they could take no formal farewell of him. They have now sent to him, in a richly bound book, duly inscribed, a testimonial with a thousand more or less distinguished signatories.

From PRESS,

Address New York City.

Date DEC 24 1911

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The third pair of Boston Symphony concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall on January 11 and 13 next, respectively. The soloist at both concerts will be Josef Hofmann, who comes to America this season for the sole purpose of filling a series of engagements with the Boston orchestra. It is likely that Hofmann will play his own Fourth Concerto at one of these concerts.

Es 1884

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

The Liszt Centenary—His "Dante" Symphony, a Piano Concerto and Two Symphonic Poems at the Symphony Concerts—Mr. Ganz to Reappear as the Pianist—The First Symphony Concert in Cambridge—Mr. de Pachmann's Recital

AT the Symphony Concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday next, Mr. Fiedler, the orchestra, and Mr. Ganz for the assisting pianist, will commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Liszt by a programme devoted wholly to his music and culminating in the infrequently performed "Dante" symphony. On the preceding Thursday evening, the orchestra will begin its annual series of concerts in Cambridge, with Mr. Ganz again assisting it and with Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony for the chief item of the programme. Finally, on Saturday afternoon, in Jordan Hall, Mr. de Pachmann, returning after three years of absence, will venture the first pianoforte recital of the year. By these triple tokens the season has begun.

/ / + / /

Symphony Hall: Symphony Concerts

Next Friday, Saturday and Sunday—the actual date of the anniversary—symphony orchestras, the world over, will celebrate the centenary of the birth of Liszt, with concerts of his music. His "Faust" and his "Dante" symphonies, his symphonic poems and his piano concertos await them. Mr. Fiedler for his commemorative programme has chosen from all three genres. The symphony will be "The Symphony After Dante's 'Divina Commedia,'" as Liszt called it, unheard here for eight years and played hitherto but twice in the whole course of the Symphony Concerts. The first part, "Inferno," and the beginning of the second part, "Purgatorio" require only the orchestra. At the end of the second part, "Paradiso," a choir of wonen's voices chants the Benedictus, and the Musical Art Club will provide the singers. From the symphonic poems, Mr. Fiedler has chosen the richly imagined "Tasso" and his beloved "Les Préludes." The concerto is the more familiar of the two—the first, in E-flat. In it Mr. Ganz will play the pianoforte part. He returns to America after some years of life and work in Berlin. By credible report they have ripened and refined an excellent pianist.

/ / + / /

Sanders Theatre: The Symphony Orchestra

By exception, the programme of the first Symphony Concert for the new year in Cambridge—at Sanders Theatre next Thursday at eight—contains no piece that has been recently played here in Boston. It comprises Beethoven's overture to Goethe's "Egmont"; Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony; Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso," and his less familiar concerto in A. Again Mr. Ganz will be the pianist, and they who will may hear, between the Symphony Concerts in Cambridge and Boston, Liszt's two concertos played on two successive days by the same virtuoso.

/ / + / /

From EVENING SUN,

Address New York City.

Date OCT 18 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

CONCERNING A 2,919TH CONCERT IN BOSTON.

Where Gericke Told B. J. Lang They'd Heard More Than Vienna Some Twenty-nine Years Ago—Tempests in the Teapot When Fries and Listmann Quit and Kneisel Came—Nearly Another "Boston Tea Party" There.

This last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been celebrating on its home stage its thirtieth birthday, the Saturday concert being the 2,919th that it has given. Apropos of this anniversary, the Transcript has some more stories to tell of the personnel of the orchestra in its early and growing years, recalled by the veteran W. F. Apthorp.

It is now retold how, shortly after Mr. Gericke's arrival in Boston, B. J. Lang asked him if he would not be interested to see the programmes of the past symphony concerts in that city, to which he replied that he had already seen them all and even studied them carefully. "All" sounded rather startling, so Lang asked him how many seasons of programmes he had seen. "Oh, there have been only three," answered Mr. Gericke.

"Ah, I see," said Lang, "you mean the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; but wouldn't you like to see the programmes for the seventeen years of concerts given here by the Harvard Musical Association before the Symphony Orchestra existed?" Mr. Gericke's eyes opened wide at this and he eagerly accepted the offer. So Lang gave him the two bound volumes of programmes, which he returned in a few days, saying: "I am completely dumfounded. I do not see what is left for me to do here. You seem to have had everything already; more, much more, than we ever had in Vienna."

Mr. Henschel's first step toward improving the personnel of his orchestra, after its establishment, had been singularly unlucky; removing Wulf Fries from his position of leading 'cellist, a position he had held honorably for many years in the orchestras of the Harvard Musical Association and the older Philharmonic and Germania. "Fries was universally beloved and respected, as man and artist, and his deposal was very generally resented; true, he was beginning to grow old, but not so old as all that. His removal came just before the seventh concert of the first season, and he resigned his membership in the orchestra before the fifteenth concert. Worst of all, his successor, young Mr. Carl Bayrhoffer, proved a flat failure. He, in turn, was replaced at the beginning of the second season by Wilhelm Müller (brother of Müller-Berghaus of orchestral transcription fame), a superb orchestral 'cellist, with a well-earned world-wide reputation as a quartet player, but rather heavy and uninteresting in solo work." But the real effective remodelling of the orchestra came after Henschel's retirement and the accession of Gericke in 1884.

If peace reigned in Mr. Gericke's relations with press and public, his relations with the orchestra were not quite so serene. "There were heart-burnings galore. Indeed, the situation was quite new to a large percentage of our Boston orchestral players, and to the liking of few of them. Here was a body of men, most of whom had for years been used to slip-shod methods and lax rule. It soon became evident enough that Mr. Gericke was not only a strict and careful but an excessively fatiguing rehearser. Listemann, who was a nervously impetuous player, with little sense for finish of style, found him particularly hard to stand. 'Ach, Sie wollen ja Alles so spitz-fein haben!' (Oh, you want everything so polished up to the nines!) was his continual complaint. The squabbles that arose were for some time of the sort historians call 'intestine'; they were kept well within the walls of the Music Hall. Some stray items of the tempest in that big teapot leaked out. I forget now how long it was before Mr. Gericke set his veto upon admitting outsiders to private rehearsals."

Mr. Gericke's second year saw another thundercloud burst. "He entered upon a course of weeding out and supplying new-made vacancies as he saw fit, that brought a fine hornet's nest about his ears. After the close of his first season he deposed Listemann from his concert-mastership; and of course Listemann forthwith resigned his membership in the orchestra, as Wulf Fries had done before him, under Mr. Henschel." Nor was Listemann's the only head that fell. For the season of 1885-86 Mr. Gericke brought Mr. Franz Kneisel with him from Vienna as his new concert-master, "a position to which the then young violinist soon proved himself, as it were, predestined by Heaven. A more admirable concert-master never drew bow." Fritz Giese, too, brought over some years before by the Mendelssohn Quintette Club, succeeded Wilhelm Müller as leading 'cellist. If Mr. Higginson, in 1881, had inaugurated the "system of importation" with Mr. Henschel, Mr. Gericke, in 1885, began applying that system unstintingly.

Of course, the decapitated ones growled, and their friends with them. "Yet, looking back upon the business from a distance of twenty-six years, one cannot but wonder at the hullabaloo it raised. People seemed to lose all sense of proportion. Some of the expressions of resentment had even a smack of trades union irritability." The reviewer would have thought Mr. Gericke was triyng to revive the "effete monarchies" in this country. Indignant patriots asked: "Is an orchestral conductorship an irresponsible dictatorship?" or "Are free-born American citizens to be subjected to the indignity of autocratic rule?" For a while there was an epidemic of writing to the newspapers.

Mr. Higginson fully grasped the idea, and backed up Mr. Gericke manfully. It took some courage; more than can well be appreciated nowadays. "As an instance of Mr. Higginson's readiness to do his share, let me relate a little incident that happened at the close of Mr. Gericke's third season. At an informal supper, given at the house of a Boston music-lover after the last concert, I was chatting with Mr. Higginson about the orchestra," says Mr. Apthorp in introducing his last story.

Mr. C. M. Loeffler, overhearing the word "oboe" as he was passing by, joined in and said: "Wouldn't you like to have the first oboe of the Opéra Comique in Paris?" "Yes, I should," replied Mr. Higginson, "and I shouldn't mind having the first flute, too!" "Do you know I think they could be had, both of them," went on Mr. Loeffler. "Then go and get them!" was Mr. Higginson's laconic answer. And sure enough, Messrs. Molé and Sautet were first flute and first oboe in the Symphony Orchestra next season. This is but one instance out of many.

[44]

TIGHT BINDING

From TIMES,
Address Washington, D. C.
Date OCT 15 1911

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA COMES IN FIVE CONCERTS

Has Just Celebrated the Thirtieth Year of Its Existence.

A limited number of season tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Washington will be placed on sale at Droop's music store, Thirteenth and G streets northwest, next Wednesday morning, October 18. The favor in which this great organization is held in Washington shows no diminution. A few of last year's subscribers have given up their seats, and Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, the local representative of the management, has a long waiting list of new subscribers to take up what seats remain. Consequently there is every probability that the subscription will be larger than ever and that it will be still more difficult for non-subscribers to obtain seats for any of the single concerts.

The concerts will again be given in the New National Theater on Tuesday afternoons at 4:30, the dates being November 7, December 5, January 9, February 20, and March 19. The season is unusually interesting from the fact that this year is the final one of Mr. Fiedler's engagement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra itself returns practically unchanged. This last week it has been celebrating mid scenes of great enthusiasm the thirtieth anniversary of its first concert, and it is starting on the fourth decade of its life more firmly established artistically and financially than ever before. Its supremacy in the United States is unquestioned, and more and more the belief gains that it is without a rival in the world. Certainly it has no superior.

The plans for the five concerts in Washington call for the presence of four very distinguished soloists, each one of them of great popularity, and one concert devoted entirely to excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner.

At the first concert the soloist will be that most popular of contraltos, Ernestine Schumann-Heink. In December Washington will have its first opportunity to hear Kathleen Parlow, the violinist. Miss Parlow, who is just out of her teens, is a native of the far Canadian northwest. Miss Parlow is nothing if not a magnificent musician. Her technique is extraordinary, but beyond that she has the solid elements of musical training.

Josef Hofmann, who was heard with so much pleasure with the Boston Symphony Orchestra a year ago, will be the soloist at the January concert.

At the March concert, which will be Mr. Fiedler's farewell, the soloist will be Mme. Louise Homer, of the Metropolitan Opera House, also a great favorite in Washington and a great artist.

* * *

Address [illegible] OCT 14 1911

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony orchestra announces its annual series of five concerts in Providence, to be given in Infantry hall on Tuesday evenings, the dates being Oct. 24, Nov. 21, Jan. 2, Feb. and April 2.

The general sale of season tickets for series opens at Stinert's music store, Westminster street, Monday morning, t. 16, and will continue there during the ek until Saturday, when such seats as not subscribed for will be placed on e for the first concert.

The orchestra announces an unusually illiant list of soloists. It comprises the eatest of living contraltos, Madame nestine Schumann-Heink; the extrainary Canadian violinist, Kathleen rlow, who is to be heard here for the t time with the orchestra; Lilla Orond, the charming mezzo-soprano, ose progress has been so rapid, and me. Schumann-Heink, with Symphony Orchestra.

whose achievements have been so great; Katharine Goodson, the eminent English pianist, gratefully remembered from her playing here with the orchestra some years ago, and finally Josef Hofmann, who with Paderewski shares the honor of being regarded as the greatest of living pianists.

Kathleen Parlow, who is to be heard here for the first time, is a personality of extraordinary interest. Just out of her teens, she easily stands comparison with the greatest of living violinists. She was born in the Canadian Northwest, spent her childhood largely in San Francisco, and later was sent by wealthy and influential people to London and studied with Leopold Auer of St. Petersburg, the teacher of Mischa Elman.

Last winter she appeared in New York, and such scenes of enthusiasm as she created have not been witnessed since Paderewski first played in New York 20-odd years ago.

Later in the season she played with the Boston Symphony orchestra in Boston and with a like success.

The appearances here with the orchestra of Madame Schumann-Heink and Mr. Josef Hofmann will be the only opportunities Providence has of hearing these great artists during the coming winter.

Mr. Fiedler, who is beginning his last year of service with the orchestra, is arranging a series of more than ordinarily attractive programs. With this he may be trusted, because few conductors of our day or any other day have his skill in the arrangement of such programs. So far as the orchestra is concerned, it returns to Providence with practically the same personnel it had last year.

From EVENING STAR,
Address Baltimore, Md.
Date

WILL APPEAR WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

Honor for Woman's Philharmonic Society—Season's Work.

Esta 1884

An event of first importance to the Woman's Philharmonic Society, which with the continued presidency and directorship of Mrs. Charles Morton and Joseph Pache, respectively, has just started its third season's work, will be its appearance this year with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This honor is regarded as being about the highest that can be paid in this country to any singing organization, and the ladies that constitute the membership of the chorus are not only highly enthusiastic over the invitation, but, moreover, look upon it as final confirmation of their ability as a body of singers devoted to the most finished form of vocal art.

Like all other musical organizations, great and small, the Boston Symphony will this year celebrate the centenary of Franz Liszt and at its March concert at the Lyric Director Fiedler will present the Hungarian master's Dante symphony. This work requires the assistance of voices and it is in it that the chorus will take part.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

From
Address
Date Oct 14/11 OCT 15

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that next Saturday is the last day on which subscribers of last year may renew their subscriptions for the coming season, retaining their old seats. The books will be opened for new subscribers next Monday by C. A. Ellis, care of Steinert's Music Store, 327 Westminster street.

Est 88

From EVENING STAR,
Address Baltimore, Md.
Date

WILL APPEAR WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

Honor for Woman's Philharmonic Society—Season's Work.

Est 1884

An event of first importance to the Woman's Philharmonic Society, which with the continued presidency and directorship of Mrs. Charles Morton and Joseph Pache, respectively, has just started its third season's work, will be its appearance this year with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This honor is regarded as being about the highest that can be paid in this country to any singing organization, and the ladies that constitute the membership of the chorus are not only highly enthusiastic over the invitation, but, moreover, look upon it as final confirmation of their ability as a body of singers devoted to the most finished form of vocal art.

Like all other musical organizations, great and small, the Boston Symphony will this year celebrate the centenary of Franz Liszt and at its March concert at the Lyric Director Fiedler will present the Hungarian master's Dante symphony. This work requires the assistance of voices and it is in it that the chorus will take part.

From TRIBUNE
Address PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Date OCT 15

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON.

Five Concerts in Infantry Hall, Beginning Oct. 24.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces a series of five concerts in Providence during the current season to be given in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evenings, the dates being Oct. 24, Nov. 21, Jan. 2, Feb. 13 and April 2. The general sale of season tickets will open to-morrow (Monday) morning at Steinert's Music Store and will continue until next Saturday, Oct. 21, when the sale of seats for the first concert will begin.

The patronage given to this great orchestra at Providence has shown in the past few years a most graitfying increase and last year each concert was practically a "sell-out." In the number of concerts this city gets it ranks with Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Brooklyn, New York being the only city outside of Boston which hears the orchestra oftener in the course of a winter.

MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK.
Greatest of Living Contraltos, to Sing With Boston Symphony Orchestra Here.

Moreover, practically the same soloists are heard in Providence as appear in the large cities that constitute the Southern circuit of the orchestra.

This year, for example, the list of soloists is more than usually attractive. It comprises Madame Schumann-Heink, the greatest of living contraltos; Miss Lilla Ormond, the American mezzo-soprano who in the last few years has reached the topmost rank of her profession; Miss Kathleen Parlow, the extraordinary violinist; Miss Katharine Goodson, the eminent English pianist, and finally Josef Hofmann, who shares with Paderewski the honor of being probably the greatest pianist of the present time.

So far as Madame Schumann-Heink and Mr. Hoffmann are concerned their appearances here with the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the only opportunities Providence will have to hear them this year. Both of these eminent artists are under special contracts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which prevents their appearance other than with the Orchestra.

In the case of Hofmann he comes to America solely for the purpose of playing a series of concerts with the Orchestra and Madame Schumann-Heink will appear in recital only in the far West. Both of these artists are supreme. Both of them have a large and loyal following and either of them alone is sufficient to lend distinction to any series of concerts.

The stronger among the soloists will be Kathleen Parlow, the extraordinary young Canadian violinist, who in the last years has passed from triumph to triumph, first in Germany then in England and now in America. A slip of a girl, scarcely out of her teens, she can bear comparison with the greatest violinists of her time.

She was born in the Canadian Northwest, spent her childhood chiefly in San Francisco and as a girl was taken to London where she won the friendship and admiration of wealthy and influential persons who sent her to St. Petersburg to study with Leopold Auer, the great Russian pedagogue, the teacher of Mischa Elman and Zimbalist.

Her modest beginning in New York last winter, when she came to this country practically unheralded and made her debut in that city under, to say the least, rather discouraging conditions, was notable in that she created greater enthusiasm than has been seen since Paderewski first came over here 20 years ago.

Miss Lilla Ormond and Miss Katharine Goodson, both of them having many admirers in this city, are artists whose skill, sincerity and musicianship must create admiration wherever they are heard.

The orchestra will return practically unchanged. Mr. Fiedler returns this year for the last time, for his engagement with the orchestra comes to an end next spring. He may be trusted to give another series of those excellent programmes for which he is famous.

JOSEF HOFFMANN.
Whose Only Local Appearance Will be With Boston Symphony Orchestra.

From
Address
Date OCT 12

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The management of the Boston Symphony orchestra announces that next Saturday, Nov. 14, is the last day on which subscribers of last year may renew their subscriptions for the coming season, retaining their old seats. The books will be opened for new subscribers on Monday, Oct. 16. All communications should be addressed to C. A. Ellis, care of Steinert's music store, 327 Westminster street, and the sale will be as in the past at Steinert's store.

Est 1884

From EAGLE,
Address Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date DEC 24 1911

Josef Hofmann, the eminent pianist, will make his only appearance in Brooklyn this season at the third Boston Symphony concert, which will be given in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, January 12. Mr. Hofmann comes to America for the sole purpose of filling a series of engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Aside from his appearances with the orchestra he will give one pianoforte recital in New York and one in Boston. After filling these engagements early in January he will spend the remainder of the winter with his family at his country home in Aiken, S. C.

New York, 1884

From EVENING POST,
Address New York City.
Date OCT 19

Symphony Hall, the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, has just been enriched by the placing in the foyer of a bronze bust of Mr. H. L. Higginson, the founder and sustainer of the orchestra. The bust is the work of the eminent Boston sculptor Bela Pratt, and it has been set in a rich placement of Sienna marble, designed by A. W. Longfellow. The donors are friends of Mr. Higginson, who have elected to remain anonymous. There were no ceremonies attending the presentation of the bust, but it was first seen at the time of the thirtieth anniversary of the first concert of the orchestra. The first pair of concerts in New York on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11, will present as soloist the eminent contralto, Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink.

Est 1884

[45]

TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1911

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

A BEGINNING WITH THE LISZT CENTENARY

Mr. Ganz Plays the Less Familiar Piano Concerto at Cambridge—The Music and Its Present Quality—A Dancer and Others Write of Dancing—The Liszt Fetes in Europe—The Advance of the Chicago Orchestra—Kubelik Says a Good Word for Paganini—Items as They Pass

AT Cambridge, last evening, Mr. Ganz and the Symphony Orchestra played Liszt's concerto for the pianoforte and orchestra in A major—the second and the less often heard of the pair. This afternoon, at Symphony Hall, Mr. Ganz and the orchestra will play the concerto in E-flat, the concerto of the much debated triangle—the first and the more familiar of the two. Rarely are the two concertos played in the same city (virtually) by the same pianist and the same orchestra on two successive days. Probably the circumstance was mere coincidence; but, if by some happy chance, Mr. Ganz and the orchestra could also play the variations for pianoforte and orchestra that Liszt called "The Dance of Death," we should hear together his three most characteristic pieces in their kind—Liszt at a glance as it were.

It is a pity that this concerto in A, always the second concerto in more senses than that of enumeration, is not played oftener. It can be played, as Mr. Joseffy used to play it, as though it were a handful of delicately chiselled precious stones, giving off new glints and glamor as the pianist turned soft lights upon them. Or it can be played, as Mr. Ganz played it yesterday, as something gorgeous, dazzling, fantastical, a wondrous kaleidoscope of tonal rhetoric. (It must have seemed so to the generation of thefifties that first heard it, with ears well attuned to the gentle graces of Thalberg and to the dry polish of (say) Mendelssohn's piano pieces. Mr. Joseffy was all for the loveliness of the tonal tints with which the concerto is spattered. Mr. Ganz is all for the brilliancy of them. Mr. Joseffy may have taken thought of the tender Liszt whose playing Schurmann so admired. Mr. Ganz remembers the rhapsodic Liszt with thunders of power.

With either pianist, the concerto in A recalls the old prints of David dancing before a train of chanting Hebrews. There is the piano, dancing, reeling even, before the attendant and assisting orchestra. At moments, the two become a whirling or a songful unity. Again, some instrument in the orchestra, like the 'cello, for an instant leads the rhapsody. But the piano is not long to be subdued. It dances its own dance, now to light, now to sharp, now to massive rhythms. Sometimes it poses plaintively as when it hears the bizarre chromatic melody. Again it skips lightly. Or it whirls half-delirious with its own rhapsody. Finally, it surrenders utterly to it—shatters form into a hundred flinders, tears its own musical vestments into a hundred glowing tatters, flings them into the wind and the sun, and at last stands rigid in the radiance and whirl of them.

Liszt, the romanticist; Liszt, the rhapsodist; Liszt, the multi-fold, and no other, wrote it. Of course, it is extravagant music, since Liszt was a romantic of romantics. Of course, it is rhapsodic music, for it was Liszt who, with Berlioz, taught his time to write music wildly, impulsively. Of course, it is sonorous, because Liszt was giving the pianoforte power. Of course, it has its moments of plaintive song, since there was a Liszt of tender, even saccharine, imaginings. Of course, its unity is a unity of theme, rather than of academic form, since Liszt practised what he preached. And of course, color and rhythm are the quest and the achievement of it, for color and rhythm are the life of Liszt's music for the piano. He has written few more characteristic pieces than this second concerto, few that so completely, vividly and compellingly gain their end. Emancipation is in it, and the glories of a romanticism that has not yet faded into our modern shadows of subtlety and introspection. Last evening, at Cambridge, it happened to follow Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony. The Russian seemed a heavy-handed barbarian searching out his soul in the dark places of introspection. Liszt was reeling and rhapsodizing in the sunshine of romance.

H. T. P.

The Cambridge Concerts

The Symphony Orchestra began last evening its annual series of concerts in Sanders Theatre at Harvard, and by way of innovation gave its hearers for the first time annotated programmes. Unusually, too some of the pieces that Mr. Fiedler chose have not been played at recent Symphony Concerts in Boston and one, Liszt's concerto in A for pianoforte and orchestra, is not likely to be played there during the current year. Of it there is a word in another column. Beethoven's overture to "Egmont," which Mr. Fiedler read largely and eloquently; Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony, in which he lost elasticity in his effort to force and amplify expressive tone; and Liszt's "Tasso," which he could have made more polished and pliant, filled the rest of the programme. The Cambridge public of the orchestra cherishes Mr. Fiedler and Liszt and Tschaikowsky are excellent musical tonics for a more or less academic audience. The Russian is not reticent; the Hungarian rhapsodizes.

HERALD, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1911.

LISZT HONORED BY SYMPHONY

Centenary of Great Composer Celebrated by Orchestra, Which Renders His Music.

RUDOLPH GANZ ASSISTS

Noted Musician's Work, Influence, Generosity and Nobility Carefully Reviewed.

By PHILIP HALE.

The Boston Symphony orchestra at its third public rehearsal yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, Mr. Fiedler, conductor, celebrated the centenary of Liszt (born Oct. 22, 1811). The orchestra was assisted by Rudolph Ganz, pianist, and the Musical Art Club (women's voices) of Boston. Mrs. Sundelius sang the short solo in the "Magnificat" at the end of the symphony. The program included these works of Liszt: "The Preludes," symphonic poem No. 3; symphony after Dante's "Divine Comedy"; pianoforte concerto in E flat major, No. 1; "Tasso: Lament and Triumph," symphonic poem No. 2.

This festival ceremony in honor of Liszt, like nearly all mortuary or memorial services, was too long, and many in the audience grew restless and thought of trains and tea and left the hall before the apotheosis of Tasso. And yet the program was an interesting one. While the "Dante" symphony is inferior to the "Faust," and "The Preludes" contains some of Liszt's most vulgar music, the "Dante" symphony is not too familiar, and there are pages of "The Preludes" that show the influence of the composer over the contemporaries and followers of the last half-century. The "Mephisto" waltz, the scene in the tavern from Lenau's "Faust," is in many respects a finer work of art and more imaginative than either of the symphonic poems performed yesterday, but on the whole the program was well designed to display the genius of Liszt and to give pleasure to the audience.

Mr. Ganz's interpretation of the concerto was not so brilliant as the one he gave five years ago. Yesterday he and Mr. Fiedler seemed possessed by the demon of unrest. There was the effect of hurry rather than fleetness. Mr. Ganz, as was to be expected, showed technical proficiency, but his reading of the Adagio section was not poetic; it had neither vaporous charm, nor emotional appeal; and in pages of sheer bravura and those of plumed and clanking heroism there was a lack of the aristocratic elegance that should characterize a performance of this concerto. When this elegance and a certain well-bred arrogance in the delivery of the high-flown rhetoric and not displeasing rhodomontade are missing the concerto may well seem trivial and bombastic. Nor was the orchestral accompaniment fully worthy of the occasion. The brass was over blown in announcements of the defiant theme, and the chief impression made by the whole performance was one of haste, hustle and bluster. Mr. Ganz was loudly applauded, but it is to be hoped that his interpretation tonight will be less perfunctory; less restless, one marked by the finer qualities that as a rule are displayed by him in solo work and in ensemble.

The chorus of women's voices sang with full rich tone, although in the first few measures the intonation was not perfect. The deviation, however, was slight and only for a moment, and the effect of the chorus was pronounced after the preceding instrumental waste that follows the highly poetic opening of the "Purgatory" movement. The beautiful quality of Mrs. Sundelius's voice and her pure delivery caused the audience to regret that the solo allotted to her by the composer was so short.

The orchestral pieces were on the whole performed brilliantly, and, as usual, there were frequent displays of entrancing solo work. But it is now more pertinent to say a few words about Liszt. His bust, representing him as the smiler sure of his rank, looking benignantly on the world, including the adoring women, who brightened and at times vexed his life, rather than as the all-conquering virtuoso or the composer trampling disdainfully on traditions, was on high, surrounded by plants and flowers, emblems of immortality.

Liszt suffered as a composer from foolish adulation and still more absurd denunciation. It was not so many years ago that otherwise fair-minded musicians, professors in conservatories, composers of smug, respectable music, pianists and violinists of nimble fingers and lukewarm blood, would leave the concert hall with an air whenever one of Liszt's works was about to be performed. Liszt also suffered from admiring friends who helped themselves to his musical thoughts, to his new forms of musical expression, and using them for their own advantage, were applauded by the crowd, while Liszt himself was ignored or flouted. How much of Liszt there is in Richard Wagner's best!

Program music has existed from the early days of the art. No doubt David's performance before Saul had some definite program; but the symphonic poem, as it is now known, was invented and shaped by Liszt, and he has influenced in this respect composers of every nation. The modern Russians all hark back to Berlioz and Liszt. The modern Germans and even the ultra-modern French were made possible by this Hungarian, who, in Paris, Weimar or Rome, was first of all a citizen of the world.

In the mass of his compositions there is mysticism that is vague and insignificant; there is affected simplicity that is as childish prattle; there is pathos that is bathos; eloquence sometimes degenerates into bombast; there is frequently the odor of tanbark, the vision of the ringmaster cracking his whip and the man in tights and spangles leaping through paper hoops or kissing his hand from the trapeze. Liszt was first famous as a virtuoso, and, as Edward MacDowell once said, in every virtuoso there is the possibility of the rope-dancer; it is in his blood.

The faults of Liszt as a composer are open to every one. When they lie in the music for the piano, they have been too often exaggerated by the "Liszt pupil." Some of his pupils, including those who studied with him and those who spent an afternoon in Weimar, have been able to recognize and bring out only formulas of past days, effective in their period, now frayed and outworn. They have made salient that which should have been concealed. Nor have orchestral conductors always been fortunate in the interpretation of the greater works; they have been intoxicated by the pomp or fury and were unable to draw the line between sonority and vulgarity.

We are all inclined to judge a master of years gone by as though he were a contemporary, and, forgetting that he, in his day, was a daring innovator, a revolutionary, we cry out against his music as trite and moribund. Certain forms of Liszt's expression, forms that recall the reign of Rossini or Meyerbeer, are now distasteful to us, as are certain formulas of Wagner. Excessive modernity contains the seeds of early death. But the architecture that Liszt devised is still strong and beautiful, and is today a model for others who delight in strange ornamentation. The world of music owes Liszt a debt that it will be long in paying, and as other debtors, it often forgets what it owes and abuses the creditor.

The years go by and the generosity, the loving kindness, the nobility of Liszt, the man, are more and more clearly revealed. His purse, advice, assistance were ever ready. He would not cringe or flatter. His art was a religion. He was one of the very few composers that stood at ease in the presence of the mighty and were not snobbish toward the unfortunate, the misunderstood, the unappreciated. As a man in the world of his art he is therefore to be ranked with Handel and Hector Berlioz.

CONCERT NOTES.

The program of the Symphony concerts next week will include Cherubini's overture to "Lodoiska" (first time at these concerts); Brahms' symphony No. 4; Glazounoff's violin concerto (first time in Boston); Bantock's "Dante and Beatrice" (first time in America); Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, will play for the first time in this country.

Vladimir de Pachmann will give a piano recital in Jordan Hall this afternoon at 3 o'clock, when he will play pieces by Weber and Liszt.

Miss Mary Garden will sing tomorrow night in Symphony Hall arias by Charpentier, Puccini, Massenet and Herbert and songs by Debussy and Hue. Paul Morenzo, tenor, and Herbert Sachs-Hirsch, pianist, will assist her.

GLOBE—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1911

POST, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1911

AT THE SYMPHONY.

Liszt Centenary Program With "Divine Comedy."

Rudolph Ganz Plays E Flat Piano Concerto With Fine Artistry.

At the third public rehearsal yesterday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave this program in commemoration of the centenary of Liszt's birth: "The Prelude," the "Divine Comedy" symphony after Dante, the 1st concerto in E flat for piano, Rudolf Ganz soloist, and the symphonic poem "Tasso." The Musical Art Club, Mrs Marie Sundelius, soloist, sang the music for women's voices in the second movement of the "Dante" symphony.

Yesterday, today and more particularly tomorrow—as at the Hungarian capital, Budapest—will yield more programs, more afternoons and evenings, devoted wholly to the works of Franz Liszt than have been common heretofore. For some this would have cost acute distress a generation ago. Even today two hours of Liszt may be called a fulsome baptism of the romantic thunders, terrors, passions and sighings.

Himself an evangel for Wagner, the Hungarian said he could wait for his own. While his mantle has been torn to bits to adorn the shoulders of a horde of "pupils," some scores genuine and hundreds spurious, he needed disciples, missionaries in his lifetime, but there were none with either his power, his understanding or his heart. It was too soon for eyes blinded either by the dazzling brilliance of his virtuosity as a pianist or by the superb daring of his career throughout Europe as a courtier, to behold his just merits as a composer, or as one who was to prepare the way for a new school and for a Strauss.

An artist, whose playing was an improvisation upon the phases of life, as man may know them through the senses, the mind, the spirit, he would make the orchestra a still more resourceful and eloquent instrument for such improvisation. When the tone poems cease to be extempore and rhapsodical and become notes merely, they lose their substance, quality and appeal. The calculated, measured and studied Liszt does not exist in his works more than it did in his performance, according to the word of those who heard it.

Portions of the "Dante" Prolix.

A more studious discernment might have curtailed or eliminated passages of the "Dante," as of the "Tasso," which an emotional inspiration spun out to excessive length. The repetition of the descending chromatic figure in the Inferno may seem prolix and without either melodic or rhythmical effect in picturing the imagined tortures of the damned. Liszt's was a copious imagery. He permitted it to run riot through many measures, and even so this portion of the work does not equal Berlioz' conjectures of Hell in his autobiographical "Fantastic" symphony and Berlioz traveled through many sorrows.

In the "Prayer" and "Repentance" of the "Purgatory," or second movement Liszt has given his fancy play with happier result. The far-sweeping antithesis of his nature never permitted the habit and manner of the practiced man of the world to efface the instinct of the priest as Mr Huneker in his timely and readable biography has pointed out.

Rarely in these pages of this movement does one feel a mere religious sentimentality. The scene is unduly prolonged, for Liszt could not have hastened the penitent's purging of his soul any more than the excursion into the tragic loves of Paola and Francesca, and there he has not sounded the almost unsupportable poignancy of Tschaikowsky's tone poem of the name, but in this movement he has led the hearer as into a sanctuary, wherein the hush and repose of a quiet, a devotional solemnity may possess the soul. In his richness of melodic phrase and of orchestral timbres he has spoken with a grave and exalted beauty.

Princess Wittgenstein Censor.

In his autobiography Wagner tells how he implored Liszt to leave the "Magnificat" with the illusion of a "shimmering" paradise with the voices of the women, and how Liszt agreed, but later succumbed to the dictum of the Princess Wittgenstein and restored the pontifical suggestion of deity. The Princess might have been jealous in later years with better reason.

Mr Ganz was welcome as an interpreter of Liszt. He was lyricist, romanticist, improvisationist and poet—yet without mannerism or excess and without bombast and sentimentality. The opening titanic declaration in octaves was superb in authority and in daring, yet the pianist played arabesque and embellishment with exquisite lightness and grace and sang the melodic phrases with admirable tonal purity, delicate nuance and true finesse of style. He was heartily applauded and repeatedly recalled.

The orchestra mastered the technical difficulties of the "Dante" with certainty and ease. The women's chorus sang acceptably, and the voice of Mrs Sundelius was of appropriate color in the few measures of solo. Mr Fiedler was recalled and applauded after the number.

At the back of the platform there was placed a bust of Liszt, surrounded and well set off by a framework of greenery. The audience filled the hall.

SYMPHONY PAYS HONOR TO LISZT

Rudolph Ganz and Musical Art Club Assist

BY OLIN DOWNES

Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by the Musical Art Club and Rudolph Ganz, pianist, honored the centenary of Franz Liszt, the wildest romanticist of them all. His music, heard today, is perhaps more astonishingly modern than on the day that it was written.

At the back of the stage stood a bust of the composer, surrounded by greenery, and if the eyes of this marble bust had suddenly flashed the old Promethean fire, it would not have been surprising with the flaming eloquence of the orchestra.

The programme was as follows: Symphonic Poem, No. 3, "Les Preludes;" Symphony after Dante's "Divina Commedia;" piano concerto in E flat, soloist, Rudolph Ganz; Symphonic Poem No. 2, "Tasso; Lamento e Trionfo."

These compositions, audaciously modern, and of singular brilliancy, carried away the majority of the audience. "Les Preludes" is becoming hackneyed, and yet, how it sounds! Mr. Fiedler got a deal of color from his scores. There are strange things in the Dante Symphony, things only to be found in the philosophy of Liszt, who, as James Huneker remarks in his new biography of the composer, waited and smiled during his lifetime for the recognition due him, and if he has reached heaven, is still waiting and smiling. Mr. Ganz gave an exceptionally exciting performance of the E-flat concerto, and even the bombast of the "Tasso" was stirring and titillating to the ears.

Picturesque Utterances

Mr. Fiedler showed unusual appreciation of the large rhetoric and the splurging color that are characteristics of most of Liszt's music, and characteristics which, rather surprisingly, do not pall on repeated hearings as much as we expect that they will. The composer fetches out effect after effect, like a master showman, which are seen to be of the flimsiest substance, and still one is caught up and swept away by his picturesque utterance. In the Dante symphony Liszt often attains true greatness, not only in the spirit of his message, but in the very letter of his potential musical ideas. This symphony is pictorial. It is like some tremendous old fresco. And even when the music halts and hobbles it is convincing. The first movement, as far as the end of the Paolo and Francesca episode, is fine coherent composition. Then for the rest of the movement the composer stumbles about and when he can say nothing, simply shouts, and still the music impresses. The gorgeousness of the final section is the same gorgeousness that we find in some of Caesar Franck, a direct heritage which Liszt left to his musical descendant, and as for color, the whole Catholic service can furnish nothing more sumptuous and mystical and rich in its imagery than the last part of this work. And the fugue, as Mr. Huneker has remarked elsewhere of the fugue in "Thus Spake Zarathustra," may not its measures present matter for whole schools to dissect in later years? In fact, Strauss' gigantic passage could hardly have been conceived, lacking this fugue of Liszt's as predecessor.

"The Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein," says Mr. Huneker in his biography, "averred that Liszt had launched his musical spear further into the future than Wagner. She was a lady of firm opinions, who admired Berlioz as much as she loathed Wagner. But could she have foreseen that Richard Strauss, Parsifal-like, had caught the whizzing lance of the Klingsor of Weimar, what would she have said? Put the riddle to contemporary critics of Richard II., who has, at least, thrown off the influence of Liszt and Wagner, although he too frequently takes snapshots at the sublime in his scores. Otherwise, you can no more keep Liszt's name out of the music of today than could good Mr. Dick the head of King Charles from the pages of his memorial."

Stood Test of Century

This truth descended upon the listener with additional force yesterday afternoon. One listened and said, "But I know that—and that—and that is Strauss, and that is Franck, and this—can it be some one else from Debussy?" Echoes, surely, but in the other way around! Nothing ages so quickly as music, but how superbly, and thus in spite of perfectly evident short-comings, did Liszt stand the test of a centenary yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall!

Mr. Ganz played both of the piano concertos in Boston, the A major as well as the one in E-flat. He played the E-flat concerto when he first appeared with the Symphony Orchestra in 1906. Then he was a very promising virtuoso. Yesterday he came, entered and conquered his audience in an astounding manner; in such a manner that in the uttis it seemed as if the orchestra itself were applauding his brilliant feats.

It is always a satisfaction to hear this vigorous old battle piece played with such sureness and elan, while, on the other hand, it would be possible to find fault with certain qualities of Mr. Ganz's performance. It was masterly enough, wonderfully clean cut, and it gave one the delightful sensation that the pianist could play, not only that concerto as it stood—a formidable enough set of difficulties—but that he could have successfully met the demands of the piece, if these demands had been ten times what they were. But there is more than swiftness and speed and physical excitement in this concert, and this glitter and wit and nervous, subtle play was for us missing in Mr. Ganz's playing. Nor, although he played the melodic or ornamental passages with most beautiful quality of tone, did he give these passages as much distinction as they might have had. Leaving aside these details, which may rest partly with personal taste, Mr. Ganz's performance, in popular parlance, was a triumph that swept the audience from its feet and Mr. Ganz was repeatedly recalled.

The singers of the Musical Art Club were those who took part in a previous performance of the Dante symphony, under Mr. Gericke, in 1903, under the title of the "Thursday Morning Club," when the Choral Art Society and other singers assisted. They had been coached for the performance by Mr. Chalmers Clifton, and they sang with admirable beauty and balance and gradation of tone. Mrs. Marie Sundelius sang the few measures for the voice soloist. Her voice is peculiarly adapted for such passages. For this concert the concert hall was filled to its capacity, and a number of applicants for seats turned away. There was unusual enthusiasm from the beginning to the end.

JOURNAL—SATURDAY,

OCTOBER 21, 1911.

LISZT SELECTIONS SYMPHONY FEATURE

Centennial of Composer Occasion for Hungarian Revival.

This week the Symphony Orchestra displays a gallery of Liszt tone paintings in honor of the centennial of the pianist and composer who played such a big part in the musical development of the nineteenth century.

The program played yesterday afternoon, and which will be repeated tonight, is made up of the symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," the "Dante Symphony," the piano concerto No. 1, in E-flat major, and the symphonic poem, "Tasso."

Rudolph Ganz has the solo part in the concerto. In the symphony the orchestra is assisted by the Musical Art Club, with Mrs. Sundelius as soloist.

Liszt holds a place in the symphony programs well up among the classic figures. Only two seasons have gone by since the orchestra was established without the presentation of some one of the great Hungarian's works, and one of these desert patches, strangely enough, came last season. But the works on this centennial program are all more or less well known. "Les Preludes" is in the nature of a biennial favorite, and the E-flat major concerto has been played more than any other in recent years. Mr. Ganz himself played it here five years ago, and Rosenthal, Miss Samaroff and Miss Schnitzer have played it since then. The "Dante Symphony" has not been heard for about eight years and the "Tasso" piece for five.

A bust of Liszt, surrounded with palms and yellow chrysanthemums, had a prominent place at the rear of the stage yesterday. The chorus was also prominent, though Liszt directs that it shall be unseen or in a gallery; but this vision of fair singers certainly did not mar the performance yesterday. The chorus sang beautifully, helping the orchestra to disperse the doubts that Wagner raised over the effect of a tone painting of the glories of Paradise. Mrs. Sundelius, however, sang her little solo too tremulously.

Mr. Ganz gave a brilliant performance of the concerto and he was recalled enthusiastically several times.

rom .....

ddress .....

ate .....

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

The third pair of Boston Symphony concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall on January 11 and 13 respectively. The soloist at both of these concerts will be Josef Hofmann, who comes to America this season for the sole purpose of filling a series of engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is likely that at one of these concerts Mr. Hofmann will play his own Fourth Concerto.

MONITOR, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1911

LISZT CENTENARY WIDELY OBSERVED

Program of the Third Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Honors the Great Hungarian Master

The program of the third Symphony concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra was in celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of Franz Liszt, a date that is being honored the world over, and with a louder chorus of praise than 10 years ago would have been dreamed of. This first great master of the symphonic poem is gaining in appreciation today, when the colossal figure of Wagner no longer overshadows the whole musical sphere. For it was Wagner's rising star that dimmed the glory of his brilliant sponsor.

The program yesterday was entirely of Liszt's works, as follows: "Les Preludes," symphonic poem No. 3, symphony after Dante's "Divina Commedia"; 1, Inferno: Lento, allegro frenetico, quasi andante, andante amoroso (Francesca), tempo primo; 2, a, Purgatorio: Andante con moto, lamentoso, poco a poco piu di moto; b, Magnificat. Concerto No. 1, E flat major, for pianoforte and orchestra; Allegro maestoso, attaca Quasi, Adagio, attaca Allegretto vivace, attaca Allegro animato, Allegro maziale animato. Tasso, Lamento e Trionfo, Symphonic Poem No. 2. Soloist, Mr. Rudolph Ganz. The Musical Art Club of Boston assisted in the symphony, the solo sung by Mrs. Sundelius.

To what great master of them all could one listen for nearly two hours unjaded? The first number came as a pleasure, with melody, and with the rich, full orchestra colors. Is not Liszt after all more French than anything else, French of a sort? If he does not read us the tender Lamartine in "Les Preludes" he centainly expresses the qualities of romanticism and brilliancy, of emotion and here and there banality, which a foreign thought at least finds in Victor Hugo, to whom "Les Preludes" is dedicated. Berlioz was Liszt's truest compatriot—and Meyerbeer was his cousin german.

The first part of the Dante symphony was altogether excellent. There is nothing that can more perfectly typify "chaos and old night" than musical instruments. No ruins left after a fire, no dash of storm-ridden surf, gives so effective an impression of that which would reverse order and harmony as an orchestra gone wrong. So Dante's Inferno was commented upon by harsh trumpets and wailing reeds and strings with what one felt to be a satisfactory degree of unpleasantness.

The episode of Francesca and Paolo, condemned to be forever floating toward each other, and forever unable quite to reach each other, is pathetically sweet and sorry, with the mingling of harps, flutes, violins, the clarinets and the exquisite solo by the English horn, punctuated by the stern "Lasciate" motive, (renounce thou). Sardonic laughter follows, as Liszt describes the passage, and then a tremendous "lasciate" is heard again. This was all graphic, lovely and moving or stirring, but none of it terrifying. Interesting as a splendid sound picture, it does not get deeply at one's remorses or regrets.

In the second part, purgatorial and prayerful, the interest flags. There be who say that the "Paradiso" is the least great part of Dante's "Commedia." This may be because such commentators do not feel quite so at home in Dante's pure, peaceful fields of joy and glory as in the troublous regions lower down. However, that may be, the Liszt commentary on the "Purgatorio" seems vague, uncentered, to lack that defined, splendid sense of form as well as beauty which his other works always show—free as his architecture always was. Perhaps we have Wolf-Ferrari in our ears and the picture of heavenly joys which he found in Dante's "Vita Nuova," and were so delicately beautiful in the Cecilia voices. The program told us that Liszt perferred a good chorus of boys to the woman's chorus, and the shrilling of the boyish soprano might very well have given a different quality to these vocal passages than was felt yesterday. Mrs. Sundelius sang purely and clearly her moment's phrase. One wanted more. The audience liked the piano player. He was swift and brilliant and strong.

Of the Tasso poem the scherzo seemed most perfectly right. The martial phrases of the conquering poet soul were frankly military, with red coats and brass buttons in full display. The last passages, expressive of the life-victory set the feet a-tapping and a picture of the popular barn dance of suburban balls today came flashing across.

What is music? Who shall say why the uproarious finales of Beethoven and Brahms which were heard at the last two concerts gave impression of greatness, of power and, in Beethoven, of grandeur, while Liszt's noisy climax was heard as the sound of brass and catgut? Why were the Schumann larghetto and the Schubert melodies poignantly songful, while not one melody of the program yesterday touched a heart string? What is there in the combinations of these 12 half tones of the scale, multitudinous in orchestral color and in key though they appear, that can reveal either the greatness of a man's thought or its sterility? How shall a critic do more than say what each stirs within him?

The working of musical criticim is not very carefully studied, either by critic or reader. The cruelty of the past in this profession, however, has been modified by today's perception that true criticism is constructive. The real critic is a teacher with something to give; not a mere engine of destruction. Liszt's teacher-quality was part of his greatness. Schumann is probably the founder of the modern school of criticism in music, and his sympathetic studies of music and composers, perhaps did as much for his art as his own compositions did. His words of the young Liszt may well have been a formative influence upon the sensitive temperament, which had allowed its gifts to suffer eclipse for a year or more during the vicissitudes of Paris. Schumann said: "I have never found any artist except Paganini to possess in so high a degree this power of subjecting, elevating and leading the public. It is an instantaneous variety of wildness, tenderness, boldness and airy grace." And we know that it was hearing Paganini and determining to become the Paganini of the pianoforte that had roused the young Liszt from his melancholy a year or so before.

An odd little note of the time, however, and one which must amuse today's pianists, for whom Liszt blazed the trail, is found in a remark of Moscheles, who said of Liszt: "His technique beats everything; he does what he likes and does it exceedingly well, and his hands thrown high into the air descend seldom, astonishingly seldom, on the wrong key." Fancy writing as high praise of a virtuoso today that his hands descend astonishingly seldom on the wrong key!

The date of the Liszt centenary, Oct. 22, is also, interestingly enough, the exact date of the first concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the thirtieth anniversary of which was celebrated last week. One wonders if it was recalled in 1881 that the first concert of the enterprise, which has so abundantly realized its early hopes, was set for Liszt's birthday. And thinking of the orchestra and all that Major Higginson has done not only for music in Boston, but also for every American community, whether the orchestra or the Kneisel quartet or any of the Boston players have been actually heard there or not, one is reminded of the princely houses of old who stood sponsor to such musicians as Frank Liszt, for example, and were content with their service to the artistic world if they sent a youngster to school for a year or so or paid a great genius a few hundreds to serve their court with music much as their cooks served the tables. We read much of what princely patronage did for this and that great master, but perhaps even musicians themselves today rarely stop to measure the enormous beneficence of Major Higginson to their art.

Prince Nicholas Esterhazy, patron of Liszt, came of a family of Hungarian generals and friends of art. It would appear that the warrior heart loves music, and we recall here the fact, too, of Major Higginson's eminent military service to his country. The Esterhazys appear to some advantage in biographical dictionaries, but it is evident that the name lives for the world today chiefly because one of the family sent the little Franz Liszt to school.

Then came the days when the boy was heralded as "The Little Liszt," a boy wonder; when he was kissed on the forehead by Beethoven, stooping his thunderous brow to the smooth brightness of the boy; when to emphasize his extreme youthfulness he was carried on to platforms, and when he at last rebelled a playing puppet.

Success all over the world came in due time. Then there was the dedication of the bronze statue to Beethoven at Bonn (for which Liszt raised money), and to which Queen Victoria of England came and where Liszt's playing of Beethoven's concerto in E flat was the crowning triumph.

It is well to remember that Liszt, settled at Weimar to do nobler things for his art than leading the flashing battalions of the keyboard to victory, did more for Wagner than any other man, even more than Wagner's royal patron could avail to do. Chopin, Berlioz, Raff, Franck, Saint-Saens, owed much to Liszt's critical discernment, encouragement and generous help—to say nothing of the long list of his piano students.

Of the works selected for the present commemorative concert, the Dante symphony was the earliest of the splendid group of Liszt's symphonic poems. Here is a significant choice, in many ways, for even as the ideal of womanhood led Dante, so Liszt seems to have been notably sensitive to woman's influence. Late in his career he seems to have found at last a true womanly help and sympathy which transformed the man and developed that higher, serener mastery which marks his later career. It was after the Countess Wittgenstein had been his friend and collaborateur that Liszt began to compose religious music and to turn his thought more steadfastly to religion—which was, however, a subject that had always interested him.

The prominence of Italian influence, as hinted in this program with both Dante and Tasso in evidence, is also a reminder of the splendid eclecticism of the composer of the Hungarian rhapsodies.

continued

Continued [47]

TRAVELER,

OCTOBER 21, 1911.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The fourth Symphony programme, to be played Friday afternoon, the 27th, and Saturday evening, the 28th, introduces Efrem Zimbalist to Boston audiences and to this country. Zimbalist, like Parlow and Elman, is a pupil of Auer of St. Petersburg. He is about the same age as Elman, and has been playing with remarkable success in Europe for the past three years. Many connoisseurs consider him superior to Elman. He will play a Russian concerto, new to this country, by Glazounoff. The symphony played on this programme will be Brahms' in F minor No. 4. The other two numbers are novelties, although one of them is 100 years old, the Cherubini overture to "Lodoiska," the other being Granville Bantock's symphonic poem, "Dante and Beatrice." This had its first performance in Germany a few weeks ago.

TRANSCRIPT,

OCTOBER 21, 1911

Symphony Hall: Symphony Concerts

Brahms's fourth symphony, in E minor—the symphony of the intricate finale of variations—is the only familiar number on the programme of the Symphony Concerts for next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. One, however, of the new pieces is 110 years old, Cherubini's overture to his opera, "Lodoiska," originally performed at Paris in 1791. For a few years it was a much-debated piece, since the harmonies and modulations were counted unusually daring—for those days—and the orchestration unusually rich. Before many years, "Lodoiska," the opera, died of neglect, but the overture still keeps an intermittent life at concerts. The second new piece is Glazounoff's concerto for violin, originally written for Auer, occasionally played by his most noted pupil, Mischa Elman, and now to serve another pupil, Mr. Zimbalist, who is to make with it his first appearances in America. He has been applauded in Europe for his distinctions of tone, style and just interpretation. The newest piece of all, to be played for the first time in America, is Mr. Bantock's tone-poem, "Dante and Beatrice," heard first and impressively in London last spring. In the course of the week more will be said in this place about it.

POST,

OCTOBER 22, 1911

Boston Symphony

The fourth Symphony programme, which will be played on Friday afternoon the 27th and Saturday evening the 28th respectively, brings to Boston for the first time the Russian violinist, Efrem Zimbalist. In fact, it is Zimbalist's first appearance in America. Zimbalist, like Parlow and Elman, is a pupil of Auer of St. Petersburg. He is about the same age as Elman and has been playing in Europe for the last two or three years with great success. There are many connoisseurs on the other side who consider him a greater artist than Elman himself. He brings with him a concerto for violin which is strange to Boston and to America. It is by the Russian, Glazounoff, and was played for the first time by Zimbalist last spring.

The symphony will be Brahms' in E-minor No. 4. The other two items on the programme will be novelties although one is a matter of 100 years old. This will be the Cherubini overture "Lodoiska." The opera "Lodoiska" belongs to Cherubini's very early years in Paris, having been performed for the first time in 1791 at the Theatre de la Foire St. Germain, Cherubini himself conducting. Although the overture to this opera is considered one of the best things Cherubini composed, curiously enough it has never appeared in a Symphony programme.

The other novelty is a symphonic poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice." This work was given its first performance in Germany a few weeks ago and its performance in Boston will be the first in America. Bantock is remembered as the composer of the delightful overture "Pierrot of the Minute," and of the "Omar Khayyam" that was given by the Cecilia last year.

GLOBE—

OCTOBER 22, 1911

Debut of Zimbalist, the Russian Violinist.

Efrem Zimbalist, the young Russian violinist, will make his first appearances in America next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at the Symphony rehearsal and concert. He will play Glazounoff's new concerto.

Zimbalist is 20 years old, a pupil of Auer, Miss Parlow's teacher at St Petersburg. He was graduated from the conservatory the winner of the gold medal donated by the Russian Government, and a special prize of 1200 rubles. It is said that his was the only diploma marked "incomparable."

In his first year as a public performer he was twice engaged within the same season by the London Philharmonic, a thing unprecedented. Through the intercession of Queen Elisabeth he has been released from military service.

The orchestral novelty will be Granville Bantock's tone poem, "Dante and Beatrice," which will be played for the first time in America. It was first performed May 24 last, at the third concert of the London music festival. The occasion was made doubly notable in British annals by the first production of Elgar's second symphony. Schattschneider, in a concert at Bluthner Hall, Berlin, the second of this month, introduced Bantock's new piece to Germany.

The overture to Cherubini's obsolete opera, "Lodoiska," produced July 18, 1791, at the Foire, Theatre, Paris, will be played as a novelty. The symphony will be the

JOURNAL—

OCTOBER 21, 1911.

RUSSIAN VIOLINIST SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Week in Musical Circles Offers Variety of Interesting Events.

The Symphony program for Friday afternoon and Saturday evening brings to Boston for the first time the Russian violinist, Efrem Zimbalist; in fact, it is Zimbalist's first appearance in America. Zimbalist, like Parlow and Elman, is a pupil of Auer of St. Petersburg. He is about the same age as Elman and many connoisseurs on the other side consider him the greater artist. He brings with him a concerto for violin which is strange to Boston and to America. It is by the Russian Glazounoff and was played for the first time by Zimbalist last spring. The symphony will be Brahm's in E-minor No. 4. The other two items on the program will be the Cherubini overture, "Lodoiska," which has never before been played at these concerts, and a symphonic poem by Granville Bantock, entitled "Dante and Beatrice," which had its first performance in Germany a few weeks ago. Its performance in Boston will be the first in America.

ADVERTISER,

OCTOBER 21, 1911

SYMPHONY CELEBRATES LISZT'S CENTENARY

GANZ BRILLIANT IN THE CONCERTO IN E FLAT

Concert for the Most Part Triumphant and Gloriously Exciting.

By Louis C. Elson.

PROGRAMME.

Symphonic Poem—"Les Preludes."
Symphony—"Dante."
Concerto in E flat, for Piano.
Symphonic Poem—"Tasso."
Soloist, Mr. Rudolph Ganz.

If the ghost of Hamlet's father had been present at yesterday's Symphony Rehearsal, he would have again sighed "Alas!"—"Liszt, Liszt, Oh Liszt!" for the entire programme was made up of numbers that Admirable Crichton of Music. It was a celebration of Liszt's centennial, the hundredth anniversary of his birth, two days in advance of the da greatness threw Liszt's pioneer work into the shadow, and it is the greatest tribute to Liszt as a man, that, knowing this, he yet worked heart and soul to make Wagner known to the world. Yesterday afternoon, in such a programme, one could calmly judge of the great merits of the composer, and the brilliant colorist, the exquisite melodist, the Hungarian rhapsodist, each charmed in his turn. A one-man programme, such as this, runs in deadly danger of dulness, but it at least focusses the attention better than with others crowding in with their different thoughts. Phillips Brooks once told the present writer that he disliked picture galleries; if he loved a picture he wanted to see it alone. On this occasion we wanted to hear Liszt alone. And he stood the ordeal only a little less than Wagner or Beethoven could have stood it.

We consider "Les Preludes" the best of Liszt's symphonic poems. Its broad sweeps of aspiration, its lofty chief melody, its orchestration and its figure treatment, all combine to make an ensemble that is glorious. And Mr. Fiedler was entirely in his element in the work, for he is eminently great in heroic work, as any one who heard the Beethoven symphony of the week before would concede. The horns too deserve great credit for their breadth and purity in their important melody.

It was refreshing to find melody going hand-in-hand with modern orchestration and advanced development. Only Tschaikowsky seems to succeed Liszt in this vein of combination.

We have praised the horns, but all of the brasses, the trombones and trumpets, too, had a field day, and even the kettle-drummer did his part finely. "Les Preludes" had a reading that was simply glorious and we were not surprised to see the enthusiasm that followed it. Mr. Fiedler was wildly applauded, and the public seemed to realize that it had heard one of the memorable interpretations of these concerts.

Only Tschaikowsky, among the moderns, could have given such dramatic power to the opening of the Dante symphony. The gates of hell portrayed by deep basses and strings, and the trumpets and horns giving the dreadful inscription upon the portal, are touches that show a kinship to the Russian composer who followed. The whole picture is wonderful, but it might be prosy to describe its many strokes of Genius.

The awful tumult and frenzy of hades, the tender episode of Francesca da Rimini and her unhappy lover, the melancholy reminiscences of former happiness (upon the English Horn), the fierce and horrible laughter that derides this, the final return of the mighty theme—"Leave Hope Behind All Ye Who Enter Here"—all these made the first movement memorable and great.

The second movement, the picture of Purgatory, is dull. It seems that one of the punishments of that place of torture is fugue-writing. Paradise scarcely offered any real rewards for this contrapuntal punishment. The fierce harmonies in hell may have sounded like it, but one does not study Richter with the thermometer at 300 in the shade, and the first movement was by far the most exciting part of the tone picture. Purgatory seemed dangerously near to boredom. And even in the first movement, the episode of Francesca and Paolo seemed rather long-drawn out. The final Magnificat, sung by female chorus (the Musical Art club), with a short solo by Mrs. Sundelius, was excellent, however, and again much applause followed. Yet just in such a work we find it emphasized that Liszt is not a Wagner. At many points of the work, and in the first and last numbers of the concert, too, one could pick out very definite Wagnerian themes. But Liszt does not achieve Wagnerian success with them. What would not Wagner have done with the music of Francesca and her lover! It would have been a more sombre Tristan and Isolde.

Therefore, Wagner had the right of eminent domain and might well crib his father-in-law's melodies for the advantage of art.

The number that appealed most directly to the "hoi polloi" (if any such are at the symphony rehearsals), was the E-flat concerto. We find the second concerto, in A, a nobler work than the first one, in E-flat. Nevertheless, the first concerto, the one here played, will always remain the more popular of the two. It is far more of a rhapsody than a concerto, and the triangle solo is probably the boldest touch that was ever attempted with that instrument. It may not be generally known, but Liszt polished and repolished this work, in spite of its seemingly spontaneous character, and in Weimar they preserve two (unprinted) versions which are strikingly different from the one used in our concert-rooms. That startling figure of seven notes which plays so prominent a part in the development (Liszt playfully used to sing the words—"Das versteh't ihr alle nicht!"—to it), is in all three.

It has been denied that Liszt, in his rhapsodies, really reflected the character of the gypsies, but this work certainly has both Magyar and Tsigany touches as we have heard them in Buda-Pesth.

Mr. Rudolph Ganz played the concerto with a bravura and an abandon that was electrifying. The instrument seconded him well in his thundering octaves and heavy chord work, and never once did he blur anything even in the midst of the tonal tempest. Yet there was nothing extravagant or meretricious in the performance. It was just as Liszt wished it, a wild and impetuous rhapsody, not a classical concerto. Again the enthusiasm burst forth and the artist was recalled at the close of the concerto over and over again. It is seldom that one sees such excitement in an afternoon rehearsal.

One must always remember that when Liszt named some of his works "Poemes Symphoniques," he did not imply an approach to the symphonic form, for "Symphoniques" sometimes means merely "orchestral." It would be futile to prescribe a set form for "Tasso" or "Les Preludes," but figure development, which is the chief point and the intellectual side of symphony, is in all of the so-called symphonic poems of this master. Liszt was more influenced by Byron than by Goethe in his setting of "Tasso," but he brought into it a bit of realism by using an actual gondolier's boat-song in the first part of his tone-poem.

The second portion of this first part, picturing Tasso at the court of Ferrara, was [illegible] with much daintiness and contrasted [illegible] with the mournful style of the first [illegible] the frenzied pictures of [illegible]trophe composer to give two hours [illegible] it sometimes causes the [illegible] thankful that he has got [illegible] posing and turned to decon[illegible] there was but little of this [illegible] reviewer yesterday. Liszt wa[illegible] versatile and was greater th[illegible] gave him credit for being, w[illegible] alive. Now, at last, when l[illegible] into his own, his disciples ove[illegible] for Strauss. Debussy and m[illegible] modern colorists are but follo[illegible]

LISZT COMMEMORATED

AN EXCEPTIONAL SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Ceremonial Touches—A Well-Designed Programme—The "Dante" Symphony, Two Symphonic Poems and a Piano Concerto, with Mr. Ganz—The General Excellence of the Performance—Liszt, the Composer, and Liszt, the Romanticist, as the Music Disclosed Him—His Old Innovations and His Enduring Influences

At the back of the stage, in Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon, above the orchestra and the choir of women, and duly surrounded with the honoring palm and laurel stood a bust of Liszt. Inevitably it represented the Liszt of the later years—the elderly and a little flabby face, the thin, drooping locks of what had once been the leonine mane. In pictures the world has nearly forgotten the youthful Liszt of the sloping shoulders, the tightly drawn stock, the thick, dark, curling hair, the aquiline and aristocratic profile, the intent face, half mystic, half worldling, half man of emotions, half man of intellect. Treasured prints of sixty and seventy years ago recall this Liszt and in an image that is far more romantic, far more suggestive of his imagination, power and personality than the familiar representations of Monsieur l' Abbé or of the patriarch of Weimar and Baireuth. As it happened, however, the lights so fell on the bust in Symphony Hall as to give it a queer mocking smile, an expression of amused cynicism. It was as though the cloven hoof were lifting the abbé'e soutane—for no churchly consecrations could purge Liszt's nature of the innate devilment that was in it; as though he had finished his work in the world and knew the magnitude, the originality and the fruitfulness of it and was smiling in amused resignation at the long and mocking indifference to it. He could mock in his turn, too. Perhaps even, in the Elysian fields, he is smiling at all this centenary homage of a world that once would have him only a monstrous pianist but now sets him high among its composers. For it knows now that he, perhaps beyond any other man of the nineteenth century, altered the course of its music for the pianoforte and of its music for the orchestra. Whatever Liszt's individual shortcomings as a composer, he was a transforming and a generative force to which the whole subsequent course of contemporary music through our own Strauss and Debussy still responds.

Programme and Performance

The Germans and the Hungarians are taking many days of many concerts to celebrate this Liszt centenary. They are traversing the whole course of his compositions—the piano pieces, the songs, the symphonies and the tone-poems, the choral fragments, the masses and the oratorios of his final years. Here in Boston, the choral societies stir not, being doubtful, perhaps, whether Liszt is really a classic, safe now for the bourgeoisie whom he cheerfully and wholesomely shocked through his whole life. Except Mr. de Pachmann, at his recital today, the pianists hereabouts have forgotten the master who almost invented their present artistry, while Liszt's songs are no longer the fashion in the concert-room. Mr. Fiedler and the Symphony Orchestra have not neglected their opportunity, but they have only two concerts, each two hours long and with a common programme, in which to recall the Liszt who could write magnificently and imaginatively, who also could write thinly and commonly, who excelled in many genres and who wrote too much in each.

As it was, Mr. Fiedler ordered his programme wisely. He could choose between the "Faust" and the "Dante" symphonies. The "Faust" seems now Liszt's most sustained and enduring symphonic piece, characteristic from beginning to end, the expression of the man and of a whole epoch in the arts, masterly of design and execution, clearly, boldly, richly and individually imagined, and as finely accomplished according to Liszt's ways and means. The "Dante" symphony, however, is less often played; it is hardly less characteristic, and being deficient in the sustained power of the "Faust," is only the more truthful of the composer who imagined and wrought it. Mr. Fiedler chose the "Dante" symphony and added two of the symphonic poems: "Les Préludes," the most generally liked and oftenest played of them all; and "Tasso" (curiously long unplayed here), the warmest in imagination, the most glowing in orchestral voice. Perhaps only one of the symphonic poems and, instead of the second, an orchestrated Hungarian Rhapsody might have better illustrated the range of Liszt and the new voice of improvisation that he sent ringi[illegible] through the music of his time. The fou[illegible]mber for the longish concert was ine[illegible] one or the other of Liszt's piano con[illegible] Between them Mr. Fiedler and Mr. [illegible]ho played the solo part) chose t[illegible] in E-flat—the piece by Liszt [illegible]at heard oftenest at the Symp[illegible]ion[illegible]s.

This programme was wel[illegible] ac[illegible]d and an applausive audience seemed to hear it gladly. It was particularly warm to "Les Préludes," which piece it plainly knew and liked, and to Mr. Ganz, after his Busonian performance of the concerto—large, big, propulsive, rhetorical of tone, but a little hard and coarse withal. (Because Liszt was so uniformly brilliant, it is difficult to remember that he was also sensitive.) Mr. Fiedler's accompaniments are not always things of beauty, pliancy and sympathy, but he conducted the orchestral part of the concerto with unusual adroitness of tonal color. Even the famous and much-debated triangle sounded subtle. If Mr. Ganz slipped over some of the half-tints, the strings and the woodwinds provided them.

The conductor and the band were very eloquent, too, and very graphic in the tonal picturing of the Inferno in the "Dante" symphony. Undoubtedly Mr. Fiedler languished over the episode of Francesca and Paolo in the midst of it, but some of the music Liszt wrote for it is also languishing No one could make the music of the Purgatorio interesting—it is Liszt alternately tepid and dry—but the conductor, the orchestra and the choir of women from the Musical Art Club united to give the Magnificat a golden beauty of clear, rhapsodic, soaring tone. The long and unusual symphony evidently taxed the attention of the audience and there were many departures before the final "Tasso" began. They that remained heard it performed in a large, rich-toned, emphatically contrasting fashion that might have pleased a listening Liszt. He, too loved sonorities, though he might have wished them, in this instance, somewhat less rigid.

Liszt the Composer

So went an interesting afternoon, with much room for curious—and vain— speculation. How much of the applause (in which the Friday audiences are becoming profuse) was intended for the commemorated composer and how much for conductor, pianist and band? How much did the audience heed of Liszt's achievements and singularities as the music represented them? Probably not much. To it the concerto in E-flat seemed pleasantly familiar. It has become almost a hackneyed piece in recent years at the Symphony Concerts, where so many pianists have elected to play it. Yet fifty and sixty years ago it sounded very daring. It was Liszt's emancipation of the concerto from the cramping rigidities of the old sonata form; the loud striking of the rhapsodic note in his pianoforte music; the fresh affirmation of his gospel of new sonorities, new power, new pliancy and new beauty. The audience heard the symphony and was interested. The music in itself and in the performance quickened imagination. Probably only the reviewers, and here and there a pedant, took thought that in the "Dante," as in the "Faust," symphony Liszt had preserved form, without which there can be no music, and yet made that form serve elastically his imaginative and expressive scheme. The eternal problem of "programme music" is to keep the musical development running side by side with the development of the poetic, the pictorial or the intellectual scheme. The one must not straiten or thin the other.

In both his symphonies, and especially in the "Faust," which contains no such waste place as the Purgatory of the "Dante," Liszt has so coördinated his musical and poetic purpose and material. He develops the music; he develops also and colors his picture. He is preparing the way (as he is matching the achievement) for the Strauss of "Don Juan" and "Death and Transfiguration," and for a multitudinous tribe that fail in this coördination where Liszt and Strauss succeed. The "symphonic poem" or the "tone-poem" is a commonplace of musical nomenclature nowadays. If Liszt did not exactly invent the form, he developed it out of an experimental stage and established it firmly upon its rational basis of imaginative contrasts—"Tasso" is a "lament" and a "triumph"; "Les Préludes" sets struggle against contemplation—upon its structural unity of well-knit but variously transformed melodic material, upon its freedom from academic restrictions. The idea conditions the form; the form exists because it best serves the composer's design; and Liszt's was a freely and widely ranging imagination.

The Romantic Liszt

The dullest listener must have felt, too, that this imagination was glowingly, puissantly romantic. Liszt was a pioneer with the changes that he wrought in the music and the technique of the pianoforte; he was a pioneer with programme music, with the modern form and voice that oratorio has gradually taken, with the music-drama even, though he wrote none himself. If his music ever passes from the concert-room, and it has gained larger and larger place there, a thousand pieces that succeed it will proclaim what the books call his "influence." Liszt opened the way to the music of our particular time. Yet, also, with Wagner, he was the end and culmination of a musical epoch. Our music nowadays may be very subtle, like Debussy's; very cerebral, like Reger's; very grave and deep, like d'Indy's; very puissant and graphic, like Strauss's, but it is very seldom romantic, except among belated Russians. Liszt's was of the full flowering of the romantic time into which, in the arts, he was born, and through which he lived. He loved magnificence of idea and of expression; he loved extravagance. In rhapsodic fashion, he wrote music that was now all glowing power and again all empty bombast. He courted atmosphere and could compass it usually with a few strokes. He wrote sensuous music, yet when the mood seized him or the purpose kindled him, he could make it austere or mystical, grotesque, ugly, ironic. He had the romanticist's passion for the unusual, intricately expressed; for he knew that the essence of romance is strangeness. In his own time and ours he did not touch the Chatauquan imagination.

Liszt loved color and rhythm, opulent and varied sound, for the lust of the ear and the imagination of it. Yet he required literary, poetic, pictorial, ecclesiastical suggestion for almost all his music. He wrote too much, but he also wrote masterpieces. He invented melodies, struck off phrases too easily; yet some of them still pierce the listening imagination and stir the answering emotion. Many of his tonal pomps ring very hollow nowadays; a few of his colors have faded pitifully; but enough remains to keep the voice of romance still sonorous, the lights of romance still glowing, the rhythm of wildness still beating in his music. Much that was played yesterday, that will be played for a few days the world over, needs no serum of a centenary to quicken its vitality.

"Dante" and "Tasso"

So far as it might within the narrow limits of a single concert, the music that Mr. Fiedler played yesterday assembled and illustrated these traits. Liszt went for inspiration to no mightier source than "The Divine Comedy"; stretched no larger canvas than he stretched in the "Dante" symphony. The tone-picturing of Inferno, from the thundering brasses of the beginning through the screeching strings or the anguished wood-wind, through all the hints of devil-dances and devil torture, is huge, graphic, grotesque, panoramic, yet wholly musical. The melodic ideas, the orchestral handling, the imaginative design, the pictorial result, are one. The melancholy transition to the episode of Francesca and Paolo is as though the winds of hell were stilled and its lights unclouded. At moments the music of the pair is more saccharine than sensuous; but again the tones make them seem as ghosts of lovers pursuing the phantoms of their passion, singing its elegy. In the "Purgatorio," Liszt's imagination forsakes him, as it often did when he was striving most to kindle it. He would be mystically sensuous, and he is only pallid and dull. And when imagination failed, technical lagged. If ever there was an inept pedant's fugue, it is the fugue of this "Purgatorio." Instrumentally, even, it is a dull and stupid place except when the oboe and the horn sing their songs. For even in this limbo Liszt could write beautiful and searching melody. He goes on to the Magnificat and attains almost perfectly the mystic sensuousness, the pungent voluptuousness of ecclesiastic modes sopped with fleshly ecstasy that was his perverse and romantic goal. He loved the Magnificat; he could write for voices in glowing crescendos; and he liked to open a romantic heaven full of throbbing harps and pealing trumpets. His is no white and still Paradise; it is colorful, rhythmical.

